THE EDITOR'S PREFACE

TO THE FIFTEENTH EDITION

THE Fifteenth Edition of "Men and Women of the Time" contains 1560 new biographies. Very many of the old lives have been re-written or greatly extended, and the volume is longer than its predecessor by nearly three hundred pages. It is, therefore, no exaggeration to speak of it as almost one half new.

The Editor in his long labour of love has had much encouragement from his many correspondents, notably from experts in biography, whose candid estimate of "Men and Women of the Time," especially in its connection with the "Dictionary of National Biography," has been in the nature of a vote of confidence in the book. He desires to offer his sincere thanks to these gentlemen, and to couple with them all those who have assisted in the work of production. Especially is the Editor indebted to the late Mr. Edmund Routledge, whose sudden and pathetic death occurs on the eve of publication, and who in 1898 gave him much advice and assistance, particularly in the compilation of lists of new biographies, and allowed him to make use of his well-known "Book of the Year," and the materials employed in its compilation; to his venerable friend Sir John Simon, K.C.B., for permission to use a privately circulated pamphlet; to Mr. Auberon Herbert, ex-Governor Eyre, Dr. Haffkine, Mr. James Knowles, and a number of others, for important but hitherto unpublished matter; to Mr. Mackenzie Bell for a revision, from personal knowledge, of the life of Mr. Swinburne; to the Rev. R. C. Fillingham for personally interviewing Count Okuma on behalf of the book; to his American Editor, Dr. Winkelmann, for Transatlantic memoirs and additions; to Mr. Payen-Payne, and his collaborator, Mr. Holford Knight, for undertaking all lives, both new and old, of foreign celebrities; to Mr. C. R. Hewitt, of the Royal College of Surgeons' Library for memoirs of soldiers, sailors, and such statesmen as Lords Salisbury and Rosebery, of Mr. Cecil Rhodes, Dr. Jameson, and leading members of the Royal Family; and to Mr. F. W. Walton, M.A., Librarian of King's College, London, for various biographies and considerable sub-editorial assistance.

The book has necessarily been long in the press, and it has been found impossible to note some of the changes of the months in their proper places. Among these mention should be made of Mr. Justice Bucknill's elevation to the Bench, and Sir Joseph Russell Bailey's elevation to the Peerage as Lord Glanusk, under which title he should properly appear. Sir Henry Hawkins also should be under "Baron Brampton," Sir L. Alma-Tadema, R.A., should appear as a Knight, and Prof. Sir Michael Foster as a K.C.B. (both created June 1899). Sir David Barbour's recent services and honour should have been mentioned, as also Sir Godfrey Lushington's G.C.M.G. (June 1899), and the G.C.B.'s of General Sir Robert Biddulph, Admiral the Hon. Sir E. R. Fremantle, and Admiral Sir John Ommaney Hopkins (June 1899), while to the name of Sir F. M. Hodgson the birthday honour of K.C.B. should have been added, and Earl Beauchamp's appointment to be Governor and Commander-in-Chief of New South Wales in succession to Viscount Hampden (January 1899), and his creation to be K.C.M.G. should also have been recorded. Dr. William Selby Church became President of the Royal College of Physicians, London, in March 1899, Dr. Lewis-Lloyd of Bangor is deceased, the young Duke of Albany, as heir-apparent to the Grand-Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, was taken by his mother, H.R.H. the Duchess of Albany, to complete his education in Germany (August 1899), and Maître Labori was dangerously wounded on his way to the daily sitting of the Rennes court-martial (August 15).

A short Appendix at the end of the book contains lives unavoidably omitted in the body of the work, in which the memoir of Jules Ferry should not, of course, appear. The List of Assumed Names has been doubled, and the Classified Index has been entirely re-cast, care having been taken to repeat individual names under all the necessary categories. A Subject Index, such as that attached to Mr. Boase's dictionary of deceased celebrities, would undoubtedly have added to the value of a work which is a storehouse of historical details as well as of biographies. The Editor sometimes thought of compiling such an Index, but found that even a scanty one would have proved inordinately long. The reader who is in search of movements rather than of men will doubtless know under what names to look for his facts, e.g., for "Lancet Commission" see "Twining, Louisa," and for "Jamaica Revolt" see "Eyre."

During the passage of "Men and Women of the Time" through the press the following have died:—Latimer Clark, F.R.S. (Oct. 30, 1898), Prof. George James Allman, F.R.S. (Nov. 24, 1898), John Barrow, F.R.S. (Dec. 1898), William Black (Dec. 10, 1898), Sir William Anderson, K.C.B. (Dec. 11, General M. Annenkow (Jan. 22, 1899), Harry Bates, A.R.A. (Jan. the Rev. C. A. Berry (Jan. 31, 1899), Count Caprivi (Feb. 6, 1899), the Right Hon. Sir J. W. Chitty (Feb. 15, 1899), the Right Hon. Sir George F. Bowen, G.C.M.G. (Feb. 21, 1899), Dr. A. K. H. Boyd (March 1, 1899), J. R. Bulwer, Q.C. (March 4, 1899), Hon. S. J. Field (April 9, 1899), Major-General Sir J. Alleyne, K.C.B. (April 23, 1899), the Duke of Beaufort (April 30, 1899), F. K. C. L. Büchner (May 1, 1899), Emilio Castelar (May 25, 1899), Prof. W. G. Blaikie (June 11, 1899), H. Wollaston Blake (June 27, 1899), Victor Cherbuliez (July 1, 1899), Sir William H. Flower, K.C.B. (July 1, 1899), Sir Alex. Armstrong, K.C.B. (July 4, 1899), Prof. Banister Fletcher (July 5, 1899), Richard Congreve (July 5, 1899), P. C. Chesnelong (July 1899), the Right Rev. C. Graves (July 17, 1899), and the Right Rev. Daniel Lewis-Lloyd (Aug. 1899).

PREFACE

Mention of these names will be found in the Obituary, which has been brought down to the end of July 1899. Some 370 biographies have, in fact, lapsed out of Edition Fifteen. But though the average of distinguished mortality in the period 1895-99 has been less than in that between 1891-95, scantier losses have been well-nigh counterbalanced by the importance of those lost. One need only cite at random such names as Bismarck, Gladstone, Alphonse Daudet, Lord Leighton. The death of Mr. Gladstone, whose biography was the lengthiest in the book, removes one of the survivors of the 1st Edition of "Men of the Time," published in 1852. These survivors now only number seven. They are Queen Victoria, the Emperor of Austria, the Prince de Joinville, the Duke of Argyll, Mr. T. Sidney Cooper, R.A., Mr. Frederick Goodall, R.A., and Mr. Philip James Bailey, author of "Festus."

MEN AND WOMEN OF THE TIME

ABBAS PACHA, Khedive of Egypt, K.G.C.B., is the eldest son of the late Ismail Pacha. He was born on July 14, 1874, and succeeded his father in January 1892, when he was eighteen years of age. He had previously studied with his brother, Ismehemet Ali, at the Theresianum Academy, in Vienna, and was still there at the time of his father's death. He studied law and politics, for which he displayed great aptitude. Prince Abbas Pacha was made Hon. K.G.C.B. by the Queen in 1892. His attitude towards Great Britain is not considered a friendly one, he having early in 1893 substituted statesmen of anti-English sympathies for those appointed by England. Lord Cromer remonstrated with him, and the Khedive was persuaded to compromise; but he is still not really friendly towards England. In July 1893 he paid a visit of homage to the Sultan of Turkey. In 1895 a daughter was born to him in his harem, and he afterwards married the mother.

ABBE, Cleveland, born in New York City, Dec. 3, 1838, is the son of George Waldo Abbe and Charlotte Colgate, both natives of the United States of America, and of purely English ancestry. The earliest American ancestry of this family was John Abbey, of Salem, Massachusetts, in 1637. Mr. Cleveland Abbe graduated in 1857 at the College of the City of New York, studied astronomy under Brünnow at the University of Michigan, 1859-60, also under Gould at Cambridge, Massachusetts, 1860-64, and under Struve at Poulkova, 1865 and 1866. He took the degree of A.B. 1857, A.M. 1860, LL.D. (Michigan University) 1889, Ph.D. 1892; was Director of the Cincinnati Observatory, 1868-74, Professor of Meteorology in the Signal Service, and Assistant to the Chief Signal Officer, 1871 to 1891, and is now (1893) Senior Professor of Meteorology in the "Weather Bureau of the Department of Agriculture." He is a Member of the National Academy of Sciences, and of numerous other scientific societies in America and Europe; author of "The Weather Bulletin of the Cincinnati Observatory," 1869; "Annual Summary and Review of Progress in Meteorology," 1873 annually to 1889; "Report on the Signal Service Observations of the Total Eclipse of 1878"; "Treatise on Meteorological Apparatus and Methods," 1887; "Preparatory Studies for Deductive Methods in Storm and Weather Predictions," 1890; "The Mechanics of the Atmosphere," 1891; and numerous smaller memoirs. He was Delegate to the International Convention of 1893 in Washington on Prime Meridian and Standard Time; and to the International Conference of Meteorologists in Munich, 1891. As Meteorologist to the United States Scientific Expedition to the West Coast of Africa, 1889-90, he made the first extensive set of accurate observations at sea of the movements of upper and lower clouds—using a marine nephroscope devised by him for this purpose.

ABBEY, Edwin Austin, R.A., R.I., was born April 1, 1852, at Philadelphia, U.S.A., and was a pupil of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts. In 1871 he began drawing for the publications of Harper Brothers. In 1876 he became a Member of the American Water-Colour Society. In 1878 he removed to England. He has illustrated the following works: "Selections from the Hesperides and Noble Numbers of Robert Herrick," 1882; "She Stoops to Conquer," 1887; "Old Songs," 1889; "Sketching Rambles in Holland," 1885 (in conjunction with G. H. Broughton, A.R.A.); "The Quiet Life," 1890 (in conjunction with Alfred Parsons). The following are his colour pictures: "The Sea," 1881; "The Evil Eye," 1878; "The Widow Reading," 1884; "The March Pa," 1884. His oil-day Morning," exhibited at the Royal Academy, 1890; "Fiametta's Song," Royal Academy, 1894; "Richard III. and the Lady Anne," Royal Academy, 1896; "Hamlet," 1897; "King Lear," "The Bridge," and "Rebecca and Rowena," 1898. Mr. Abbey was elected an Academician in July 1898. He was elected Member of Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours in 1883, and received a second-class medal at the Munich International Exhibition in 1883, and a first-class medal at the Paris Exposition Universelle, 1889. Address: Morgan Hall, Fairford, Gloucestershire.

ABBOT, Lyman, D.D., son of the late Jacob Abbot, was born at Roxbury, Massachusetts, Dec. 18, 1835. He graduated at the University of New York in 1858; studied law, and was admitted to the Bar in 1856. After practising that profession for a short time he abandoned it for the study of theology, and was ordained a Congregational Minister in 1860. He was pastor of various churches until 1865, when he was appointed Secretary of the American Union (Freedmen's) Commission, a position retained by him until 1868. For a portion of this time he was also pastor of the New England Church in New York, but he resigned in 1869 to devote himself to literature and journalism. He had charge of the "Literary Record" in Harper's Magazine for several years, at the same time conducting the Illustrated Christian Weekly. Subsequently he was associated with Mr. Beecher in editing the Christian Union, now called The Outlook, of which he later became (and still is) the senior editor. On Mr. Beecher's death he was invited to fill temporarily the pulpit of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, and in 1889 was settled permanently over that church. In conjunction with his brothers Austin and Benjamin he wrote two novels, "Cone-cut Corners," 1855, and "Matthew Caraby," 1858, which were published under the pseudonym of "Benauly," formed from the initial syllables of the authors' names. He is the author also of "Jesus of Nazareth, His Life and Teachings," 1869; "Old Testament Shadows of New Testament Truths," 1870; "A Dictionary of Bible Knowledge," 1872; "A Layman's Story," 1872; "Illustrated Commentary on the New Testament," 4 vols., 1875-87; "Life of Henry Ward Beecher," 1883; "For Family Worship," 1883; "In Aid of Faith," 1886; "Signs of Promise," 1889; "The Christian Workers," "Illustrated New Testament Commentary," 1895; "Christianity and Social Problems," 1896; "The Theology of an Evolutionist," 1897; in addition to which he has published a number of pamphlets, among them "The Results of Emancipation in the United States," 1867; and has also edited two volumes of sermons of Mr. Beecher, and a selection from Mr. Beecher's writings, entitled "Morning and Evening Exercises," as well as "The Soul's Quest after God." The degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by the University of the City of New York in 1876, and by Harvard University in 1890.

ABBOTT, The Rev. Edwin Abbott, D.D., son of Edwin Abbott, Head Master of the Philological School, Marylebone Road, N.W. Born on Dec. 20, in London, in 1838, he was educated at the City of London School (1850-57), and at St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he became a Fellow (B.A., 7th Senior Optime and Senior in the Classical Tripos, 1861; first-class in Theological Tripos, 1862; M.A. 1864). He was Assistant Master in King Edward's School, Birmingham, from 1862 to 1864, and subsequently at Clifton College till 1865, when he was appointed Head Master of the City of London School. This school was at this time in Milk Street, Cheapside; it now possesses sumptuous new buildings on the Embankment at Blackfriars, and under the Head Master's guidance has taken a position as one of the most efficient day schools in England. Dr. Abbott was twice Select Preacher at Cambridge; Hulsean Lecturer in that University, 1876; also Select Preacher at Oxford, 1877. The Archbishop of Canterbury conferred on him the degree of D.D. in 1872. Dr. Abbott has published the following theological works: "Bible Lessons," 1872; "Cambridge Sermons," 1875; "Through Nature to Christ," 1877; "Oxford Sermons," 1879; the article on "Gospels" in the ninth edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica; and (in conjunction with Mr. W. G. Rushbrooke) "The Common Tradition of the Synoptic Gospels," 1884. His other works are a "Shakespearean Grammar," 1870; "English Lessons for English People" (written in conjunction with Professor J. R. Seeley), 1871; "How to Write Clearly," 1872; "Latin Prose through English Idiom," 1873; "The Good Voices; or, A Child's Guide to the Bible," and "Parables for Children," 1875; an English Grammar, in two parts, entitled "How to Tell the Parts of Speech," and "How to Parse," 1875; an edition of Bacon's "Essays," 1876; "Bacon and Essex," 1877; a First Latin Book, entitled "Via Latina," 1880; "Hints on Home Teaching," 1883; "Francis Bacon, an Account of His Life and Work," 1885; and a First Latin Translation Book, entitled "The Latin Gate," 1889. Other works published anonymously, but subsequently acknowledged by Dr. Abbott, are "Philochristus," 1878; "Onesimus," 1882; "Flatland; or, a Romance of Many Dimensions," 1884; and "The Kernel and the Husk," 1886. Dr. Abbott resigned the Head Mastership of the City of London School in 1889, and received a pension from the Corporation in 1890; since which he has published "Philomythus," 1891; "The Anglican Career of Cardinal Newman," 1892; a First Latin Construing Book, entitled "Dux Latinus," 1893; and "The Spirit of the Waters," 1897. Address: Wellside, Well Walk, Hampstead, N.W.

ABBOTT, The Rev. Professor Thomas Kingsmill, M.A., B.D., Litt. D., Librarian of Trinity College, Dublin, was born in Dublin on March 26, 1829, and educated at Trinity College, of which he became a Fellow in 1854, where he has held successively the Professorship of Moral Philosophy from 1867 to 1872, of Biblical Greek from 1875 to 1888, and, since 1879, of Hebrew. He is the author of various theological and philosophical works, having published, amongst others, "Sight and Touch; an Attempt to Disprove the Berkeleyan Theory of Vision," in 1864; "The Elements of Logic," in its third edition, in 1895; "Essays chiefly on the Original Texts of the Old and New Testaments," and "Short Notes on Some Epistles of St. Paul," in 1892; a "Commentary on Ephesians and Colossians," 1897; and a translation of Kant's "Ethics," with a Memoir and Kant's "Introduction to Logic." In 1880 he published a bibliographical work, "Par Palimpsestorum Dublinensium." He married in 1859 Caroline, daughter of the Rev. Joseph Kingsmill. Address: Trinity College, Dublin.

ABD-UL-HAMID II., Sultan of Turkey, was born Sept. 22, 1842, being a younger son and the fourth child of Abd-ul-Medjid, the Sultan, who died in 1861. On August 31, 1876, he succeeded his brother, Mourad V., who was deposed, on proof of his insanity, after a reign of three months. Abd-ul-Hamid was solemnly girt with the sword of Othman in the Eyoub Mosque, Constantinople, on Sept. 7. He is a Turk and a Mussulman of the old school, and though without allies, he fought Russia rather than submit to any conditions which should bring about a disintegration of the Ottoman Empire. On April 21, 1877, Russia declared war against the Porte, and in February 1878, after the fall of Plevna and the passage of the Balkans, the Turks were compelled to sue for peace. Since the Treaty of Berlin, in 1878, the Sultan has shown no great anxiety to carry out the reforms, either in Europe or in Asia, which were therein stipulated, though in regard to Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia he has been fairly loyal to that treaty. He was often praised by Lord Beaconsfield for his courage and ability; but of late years he has been given over to the fear of assassination, and his distrust of his ministers is proverbial. He has been at various times under English, German, and Russian influence; the last seems to be now prevailing, although his conduct towards Sir Philip Currie has been most flattering. The Sultan has never ceased to protest against the proceedings of England in Egypt, and is believed to have secretly stimulated the rebellion of Arabi. His treatment of his Christian subjects in Armenia and Crete during the past three years has stirred up against him an almost universal feeling of contempt and execration. In August 1896 an outbreak took place in Constantinople itself, which resulted in the murder of thousands of Armenian Christians in the city. The Sultan was directly accused by the ambassadors of the Powers of having instigated the perpetration of this massacre. No further steps, however, were taken, and he succeeded in emptying the city of nearly 30,000 Armenians by expulsive measures. Amongst his own Turkish subjects the successful issue of the war with Greece, in the early part of 1897, has placed him on a more secure footing. On the occasion of the marriage of his daughter, the Princess Naime, in March 1898, the Sultan arranged that dinners should be given at his expense at different points throughout Constantinople, in order that rich and poor should share in the festivities.

ABDULRAHMAN or ABDUR-RAHMAN KHAN, Ameer of Afghanistan, is a Barakzai, and was born about 1830. He is the eldest son of Afzul Khan, and nephew of the late Ameer Shere Ali. During the civil war in 1864 Abdurrahman played a leading part on the side of his father against his uncle, and gained several battles. The great victories of Shaikhbad and Khelat-i-Ghilzai were mainly due to his ability. He was entrusted with the Governorship of Balkh, where he made himself popular by his moderation, and by marrying the daughter of the chief of Badakshan. In 1868 he was unable, however, to offer a successful resistance to his cousin, Yakoub Khan, son of Shere Ali, who defeated him at Bajjah, near Bamain, and also finally at Tinah Khan. Abdurrahman then fled from the country, ultimately reaching Russian territory. General Kaufmann permitted him to reside at Samarcand, and allowed him a pension of twenty-five thousand roubles a year. He remained in Turkestan 1879, when he slowly made his way through Balkh to the Cabul frontier, and in July of the following year he was formally chosen by the leading men of Cabul, and acknowledged by the British Indian Government, as Ameer of Afghanistan. It has been pointed out by an eminent orientalist, "that he not only occupies the throne by right of heredity and national election, but that he is also a religious Sunni ruler, who reigns over a 'God-given' country by the consensus fidelium." He has still further strengthened this strong position by the firmness and vigour of his administration. From the British Government he receives a regular subsidy of £160,000 a year, with large gifts of artillery, rifles, and ammunition to improve his military force. On Dec. 26, 1888, he was shot at by a Sepoy at Mazar-i-Sherif, but without injury. In September 1893 the Ameer cordially received a British mission headed by Sir Mortimer Durand. His sympathies are British rather than Russian, and in letters written both before and after the Durand mission, to his friend Dr. Leitner, and published by the latter, he has expressed warm friendship for England. He suffered from a serious illness in the autumn of 1894, which caused considerable anxiety in England and India. He was made a G.C.S.I. in January 1894, and was invited by the Queen to visit England. Being, however, unable to come himself, he sent his second son, the Shazada Nasrullah Khan, who received a warm welcome, in 1895. He was suspected of conniving at the rising of the tribes along the Indo-Afghan frontier in July 1897, and he was requested by the Indian Government to prevent his subjects from participating in these revolts. His answer showed him to be thoroughly friendly to the British Government, and he gave further proof of this disposition when he refused in September to receive a deputation of Afridis which had set out for Cabul in order to beg for his aid against the English.

ABDY, John Thomas, LL.D., son of Lieut.-Colonel James Nicholas Abdy, was born July 5, 1822, and educated at the Proprietary School, Kensington, whence he proceeded to Trinity Hall, Cambridge, where he graduated as Senior in the Civil Law Tripos in 1844. In 1847 he took the degree of LL.B., and was created LL.D. in 1852. In 1860 he was elected a Fellow of his college, and in January of that year was called to the Bar by the Inner Temple. For a short time he went the Home circuit, but subsequently chose the Norfolk circuit. In 1854 he was appointed Regius-Professor of Civil Law at the University of Cambridge, and he held that office till the close of the year 1873. He is Lecturer on Law at Gresham College, London. In 1870 he was appointed Recorder of Bedford, and in the following year was promoted to be County Court Judge of Circuit No. 38. Judge Abdy has published "An Historical Sketch of Civil Procedure among the Romans," 1857; and an edition of "Kent's Commentary on International Law," 1866. In collaboration with Mr. Bryan Walker, M.A., he edited, translated, and annotated "The Commentaries of Gaius," 1870, and the "Institutes" of Justinian. He has retired from his judgeship, and in June 1898 was succeeded in the Recordership of Bedford by Mr. W. Russell Griffiths.

A BECKETT, Arthur William, youngest surviving son of the late Gilbert Abbott A Beckett, the well-known metropolitan police magistrate and man of letters (a descendant of an old West country family), by his wife Mary Anne, daughter of the late Joseph Glossop, Esq., of the Hon. Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms, was born at Portland House, Hammersmith, Oct. 25, 1844, and educated at Honiton and Felstead schools. He entered the War Office, but left the Civil Service after three years' experience of it to become, at the age of twenty, editor of the Glowworm, a London evening paper. During ten years he edited with much success several weekly periodicals and monthly magazines. In 1870-71 he was special correspondent to the Standard and Globe during the Franco-German War. For the next two years he was private secretary to the Duke of Norfolk. Since 1874 he has been on the staff of Punch, to which periodical he has contributed, amongst other series, "Papers from Pump-handle Court, by A. Briefless, Junior"; published in a separate volume in 1889. From 1891 to 1894 he was the editor of the Sunday Times. In 1897 he accepted the editorship of the Naval and Military Magazine. After serving for two years as Vice-President of the Newspaper Society, he was elected President for 1893-94 in succession to Sir Algernon Borthwick, Sir Charles Cameron, and Sir Edward Lawson. In 1898 he was elected Chairman of the London District of the Institute of Journalists. He is also a Member of the Council and Committee of Management of the Society of Authors, and an Hon. Member, "for distinguished services to journalism," of the Foreign Press Association. He is also a Captain (retired) of the 4th Battalion (Militia) of the Cheshire Regiment. Mr. A Beckett is author of several novels and of two three-act comedies, "L. S. D." and "About Town"; a domestic drama in one act, "On Strike"; "Faded Flowers"; and "Long Ago. He has also dramatised (in conjunction with the late Mr. J. Palgrave Simpson) his novel "Fallen among Thieves," under the title of "From Father to Son." In 1887 he edited and in some parts re-wrote his father's "Comic Blackstone," originally published in 1845, bringing it up to date. Having, in 1881, been called to the Bar by the Hon. Society of Gray's Inn, in 1887 he was appointed Master of the Revels of that Society by H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, Treasurer, and the other Masters of the Bench, and in that office edited and produced "The Maske of Flowers" in the Hall of Gray's Inn, in honour of Her Majesty's Jubilee. The performance was repeated in 1891 at the Inner Temple, when Mr. à Beckett had the unique honour of being licensed by the Lord Chamberlain (the Earl of Lathom) "sole and responsible manager of the Inner Temple Hall Theatre" for the purpose. Mr. à Beckett married in 1876 Susannah Frances, daughter of the late Forbes Winslow, Esq., M.D., F.R.C.P., D.C.L. (Oxon.), and granddaughter of the late Captain Thomas Winslow, of the 47th Regiment, first cousin of Singleton Copley, Esq., R.A., the father of Lord Chancellor Lyndhurst. Mr. and Mrs. à Beckett have had four sons, two of whom survive.

ABEL, Charles Nicolas, archæologist and politician of Lorraine, was born at Thionville, Dec. 2, 1824, and was educated at the Lycée of Metz and at Paris, where he obtained the degree of Doctor of Laws in 1847. After the annexation of Lorraine in 1871, he was elected to the Reichstag in 1874, and protested with the other French deputies against the German occupation. Knowing little of German, he retired from Parliament in 1878, and in 1882 devoted himself entirely to his work on the local history of Lorraine, especially of the Moselle department. His chief works are: "Séjour de Charles IX. à Metz," 1866; "Rabelais, médecin stipendié de la ville de Metz," 1870; "La Bulle d'Or à Metz," 1875; and in 1881 a collection of his speeches was published.

ABEL, Sir Frederick Augustus, K.C.B., D.C.L., F.R.S., was born in London in 1827, and is known principally in connection with chemistry and explosives. His published works are: "The Modern History of Gunpowder," 1866; "Gun Cotton," 1866; "On Explosive Agents," 1872; "Researches in Explosives," 1875; and "Electricity Applied to Explosive Purposes," 1884. He is also joint-author with Colonel Bloxam of a "Handbook of Chemistry." Sir Frederick Abel has been President of the Institute of Chemistry, the Society of Chemical Industry, and the Society of Telegraph Engineers and Electricians. He was Professor of Chemistry at the Royal Military Academy from 1851 to 1855, and was Chemist of the War Department from 1854 to 1888. In 1883 he was one of the Royal Commissioners on Accidents in Mines, and President of the Committee on Explosives from 1888 to 1891. He has been Organising Secretary of the Imperial Institute from 1887, and is at present also its Honorary Secretary and Director. He was President of the British Association at the Leeds meeting, 1890. He has also been President of the Iron and Steel Institute, Chemical Society, Institute of Chemistry, Society of Chemical Industry, Institute of Electric Engineers, and Chairman of the Society of Arts. He is Albert, Royal, Telford, and Bessemer Medallist. He was created C.B. in 1877, and Hon. D.C.L., Oxford, in 1883, and was made a K.C.B. in the same year. Addresses: 2 Whitehall Court, S.W.; and Athenæum.

ABERCORN (Duke of), James Hamilton, K.G., Chairman of the British South Africa Company, was born in 1838, and succeeded his father, the first Duke, in 1885. He was educated at Harrow and Christ Church, Oxford (M.A.). He represented Donegal in the House of Commons for twenty years, 1860-80, and was Lord of the Bedchamber to the Prince of Wales from 1866 to 1886. Since the latter year he has been Groom of the Stole in the same household. He married in 1869 Lady Mary Anna Curzon, daughter of the first Earl Howe. Addresses: 61 Green Street, W.; Baronscourt, Newton Stewart, Ireland; and Duddingston House, Edinburgh.

ABERDEEN AND ORKNEY, Bishop of. See DOUGLAS, THE HON. AND RIGHT REV. ARTHUR GASCOIGNE.

ABERDEEN, Earl of, the Right Hon. Sir John Campbell Hamilton-Gordon, G.C.M.G., born Aug. 3, 1847, is the grandson of the Earl of Aberdeen who was Prime Minister in 1854. He was educated at the College Hall, in connection with the University of St. Andrews, and at University College, Oxford, where he graduated M.A. in 1871. He was made LL.D. of St. Andrews in 1883, Hon. LL.D. of Queen's University (Ontario), McGill University, Ottawa, Toronto, and Laval in 1894, Hon. D.C.L. of the University of, Bishops College, Lennoxville, in 1895, LL.D. of Princeton University in 1898, LL.D. of Harvard in June 1898. He succeeded to the title on the death of his brother, Jan. 27, 1870. House of Lords as a Co

the session of 1876 he disagreed with some of the principal measures of his party, and in 1878, when the Earls of Derby and Carnarvon resigned their offices, Lord Aberdeen heartily supported the views of these statesmen. In the debate on the Afghan war he voted against the government of Lord Beaconsfield. In 1875 he was a Member and subsequently Chairman of a Royal Commission to inquire into the subject of Railway Accidents. In 1877-78 he was a Member of the Committee of the House of Lords on Intemperance. In 1880, having by that time become a recognised member of the Liberal Party, he was appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Aberdeenshire, and High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1881 and four succeeding years. In 1885 he was Chairman of the Royal Commission on Loss of Life at Sea. In January 1886 he was appointed by Mr. Gladstone Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, with the mission of carrying out the Home Rule policy of the Government. In this capacity he was immensely popular in Ireland, and the scene in Dublin on the occasion of the "leave-taking" after the fall of the Gladstone Cabinet in July, is said to have been such as had never been witnessed there before, at least not since the departure of Lord Fitzwilliam in 1795. He was sworn of the Privy Council in 1886. Subsequently Lord and Lady Aberdeen made a trip round the world, visiting India and the principal British Colonies. In May 1893 Lord Aberdeen was appointed Governor-General of Canada. Lord Aberdeen has been largely connected with various religious and philanthropic associations, and is president of not a few such societies. Since 1891 he has been Vice-President of the Royal Colonial Institute. He was married in 1877 to Ishbel Maria, second and youngest daughter of the 1st Lord Tweedmouth, and has four children. Lady Aberdeen is well known for the interest she takes in all movements affecting the welfare of women and of the Irish peasantry. In July 1898 his retirement from the Governor-Generalship was announced. Addresses: Government House, Ottawa; Haddo House and Tarland Lodge, Aberdeenshire.

ABERGAVERN (Marquis of), Sir William Nevill, K.G., was born in 1826, and is the son of the fourth Earl of Abergaurny. He succeeded as fifth Earl in 1868, and was created Marquis in 1876. He is Lord-Lieutenant of Sussex. He married in 1848 Caroline, daughter of Sir J. V. B. Johnstone. Addresses: 64 Eccleston Square, S.W.; and Bridge Castle, Bridge Wells.

ABNEY, Captain William de Wiveleslie, C.B., D.C.L., F.R.S., was born at Derby on July 24, 1844, and is the eldest son of Canon Abney. He was educated at Rossall, and privately, and at the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich. He was appointed lieutenant in the Royal Engineers in 1861, and captain in 1873. He was formerly Instructor in Chemistry to the Royal Engineers, Chatham, and is now Director for Science in the Science and Art Department. He was President of the Royal Astronomical Society from 1893 to 1895, and of the Physical Society from 1895 to 1897. He was one of the scientific observers of the transit of Venus in 1874. His works are: "Instruction in Photography," 1870; "Treatise on Photography," 1875; "Colour Vision, Colour Measurement and Mixture," 1893; "Thebes and its Five Greater Temples," 1876; and "The Pioneers of the Alps," written in conjunction with C. D. Cunningham, 1888. He is the author also of many papers in the Philosophical Transactions, and the Proceedings of the Royal Society and the Philosophical Magazine. He obtained the Rumford Medal of the Royal Society in 1883 for his researches in photography and spectrum analysis. Addresses: Measham Hall, Leicestershire; Rathmore Lodge, Bolton Gardens, South, S.W.; and Athenæum.

ABRAHAM, Miss M. See TENNANT, MRS.

ABRAHAM, William ("Mabon"), M.P. for the Rhondda Valley Division of Glamorganshire, was born in 1842, and is son of the late Mr. T. Abraham, a working miner, collier, and copper smelter. Educated at Carnarvon village school, he has been a miners' agent from 1873 onwards, and in 1885 was returned to Parliament for the Rhondda Valley, retaining his seat ever since. He is Vice-President of the Monmouth and South Wales Mining Association, J.P. for Glamorganshire, and Member of the Royal Commission on Labour and Mining Royalties. He is prominently identified with Labour questions, especially as they affect Welsh miners, and is a warm supporter of the Eistedfodd and all that it implies in the literary and social life of the Welsh. "Mabon" is Mr. Abraham's bardic name. Addresses: 6 Llewellyn Street, Pentre, Pontypridd; and 8 Suffolk Street, S.W.

ACLAND, The Right Hon. Arthur Herbert Dyke, M.A., M.P., late Vice-President of the Council of Education, is the third son of the late Right Hon. Sir Thomas Dyke Acland, Bart., and was born in 1847. He was educated at Rugby and Christ Church, Oxford, matriculating at the University in May 1866, and taking his B.A. degree in 1870 and his M.A. in 1873. He was ordained about this time, but afterwards retired under the Clerical Disabilities Relief Act of 1870. At Oxford he was for long a prominent don, having been appointed, successively Hon. Fellow and Senior Bursar of Balliol and Steward of Christ Church. His interest in economic questions and politics was always keen, and when at Christ Church, he gathered round him a group of similarly-minded dons and undergraduates, who were known as "The Inner Circle." From 1875 to 1877 he was Principal of the Oxford Military School at Cowley. In 1885 he entered Parliament as Liberal member for the Rotherham Division of Yorkshire, and has, since 1886, continued to represent that constituency as a Gladstonian. He has been very prominent, in Parliament and out of it, in promoting the cause of Intermediate and Technical Education, and in August 1892 was appointed Vice-President of the Council of Education, a position which he held till the change of Government in 1895. He is author of a "Hand-book Political History of England" and of "Working-men Co-operators." He married, in 1873, Alice Sophia, eldest daughter of the Rev. Francis Cunningham. Addresses: 28 Cheyne Walk, S.W.; Westholme, Scarborough; and Athenæum.

ACLAND, Sir Charles† Thomas Dyke, M.A., son of the late Right Hon. Sir Thomas Dyke Acland, 11th Baronet, was born July 16, 1842, and succeeded to the baronetcy in May 1898. He was educated at Bradfield, Eton, and Christ Church, Oxford, where he obtained third-class honours in Classics in 1866. He is a barrister, a Deputy Warden of the Stannaries, and was formerly Lieut.-Colonel of the 1st Devon Yeomanry Cavalry. He sat in Parliament as member for East Cornwall from 1882 to 1885, and represented North Cornwall from 1885 to 1892. He was appointed a Church Estates Commissioner in 1886, and was Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade from February to August of the same year. He is a Justice of the Peace for Devon, Somerset, and Cornwall, is an Alderman of the Devon County Council, and has been Chairman of the Technical Education Committee of the Devon County Council from its beginning. He is besides a Vice-President of the Bath and West of England and Southern Counties Agricultural Society, and has acted on various occasions as chairman of the different committees of this society. In 1879 he was married to Gertrude, daughter of Sir John Walrond Walrond, Bart. Addresses: Holincote, Taunton; Killerton, Exeter; 50 Lennox Gardens, S.W.; and Athenæum.

ACLAND, Sir Henry Wentworth, Bart., K.C.B., F.R.S., Emeritus Regius-Professor of Medicine in the University of Oxford; Radcliffe Librarian, Oxford; Hon. D.C.L. of Cambridge, Edinburgh, Durham, and Hon. M.D. Dublin, C.R. Empire of Brazil, Member of various Medical and Scientific Societies in Athens, Christiania, and the United States, is the fourth son of the late Sir Thomas Dyke Acland, tenth baronet. He was born in 1815, and educated at Harrow and Christ Church, Oxford, and was elected, in 1841, to a Fellowship at All Souls. He took the degree of M.D. at Oxford in 1848, having been appointed Lee's Reader in Anatomy in 1845. In that capacity, with several able assistants, especially Professors Beale, Victor Carus, Melville, and Mr. Charles Robertson, he made the extensive Christ Church Physiological Series, on the plan of John Hunter, now in the Oxford University Museum—an institution to the foundation of which Dr. Acland's labours contributed not a little, his aim being to lay the foundation, on the widest basis, of a complete study of the Kosmos in the old classical university. He published, in 1859, with Mr. Ruskin, a short account of the aims of the Museum in "The Oxford Museum," republished in 1894, with additions by Mr. Ruskin and himself. He became Regius-Professor of Medicine in 1858, and Radcliffe Librarian, and is Curator of the Oxford University Galleries and of the Bodleian Library. He was appointed a member of Mr. Gathorne Hardy's Cubic Space Commission in 1866, and of the Royal Sanitary Commission from 1869 to 1872. He represented the University of Oxford on the Medical Council from 1858 to 1875; has been President of the British Medical Association, of the Physiological section of the British Association, and of the Public Health section of the Social Science Association. He published a treatise on "The Plains of Troy" in 1839, with a large careful drawing made on the spot in 1838. He has written several works on medical, scientific, and educational subjects, including an important sanitary work under the title of "Mémorial on the Visitation of Cholera in Oxford in 1854," and another, called "Village Health," in 1884. He accompanied the Prince of Wales to America in 1860, and on his return was appointed honorary physician to his Royal Highness. Sir Henry Acland was also Physician to H.R.H. Prince Leopold during his Oxford career. From 1870 to 1872 he was member of the Sanitary Commission, was President of the General Medical Council from 1871 to 1877, and was

K.C.B. in 1884. He retired from the Regius-Professorship of Medicine in 1894. He married Sarah, daughter of the late William Cotton, D.C.L., F.R.S. She died in 1878, and the Sarah Acland Nursing Home at Oxford is founded in her memory. Addresses: Broad Street, Oxford; and Athenæum.

ACTON (Lord), The Right Hon. Sir John Emerich Edward Dalberg Acton, Bart., D.C.L., son of Sir Ferdinand Richard Edward Acton, Bart., of Aldenham, Shropshire, by the only daughter of the Duke of Dalberg (afterwards wife of the second Lord Granville), was born at Naples in 1834, and when about three years of age succeeded to the baronetcy on the death of his father. For a few years he was a student in the Catholic College of St. Mary's Oscott, at the time when Dr. (afterwards Cardinal) Wiseman was at the head of that institution; but his education was mainly due to the renowned ecclesiastical historian Dr. Dollinger, of Munich, with whom he lived for a considerable time. Sir John Acton represented Carlisle in the House of Commons from 1869 to 1865. In the latter year he stood as a candidate for the borough of Bridgnorth, when he announced in a speech delivered to the electors that he represented not the body, but the spirit of the Roman Catholic Church. He was successful at the poll by a majority of one, but on a scrutiny was unseated. In 1869, on the recommendation of Mr. Gladstone, he was created a peer of the United Kingdom by the title of Baron Acton of Aldenham. In the same year he repaired to Rome, on the assembling of the Œcumenical Council, and while there rendered himself conspicuous by his hostility to the definition of the doctrine of Papal Infallibility, and by the activity and secrecy with which he rallied, combined, and urged on those who appeared to be favourable to the views entertained by Dr. Dollinger. It is believed that he was in relation with the Allgemeine Zeitung, and that much of the news published by that journal on the subject of the Council was communicated by his lordship. Lord Acton may be regarded as the leader of the "Liberal Roman Catholics," who are more or less out of accord with the traditions of the Holy See. He was the editor of the Home and Foreign Review, a trimestral periodical, commenced in 1862, and carried on till 1864, when it ceased to appear, having been condemned by the English Roman Catholic hierarchy. At a later date he edited the Chronicle, a weekly newspaper, which for want of adequate support had but a brief existence; and still more recently he conducted the North British

Review, formerly an organ of the Congregationalists, which expired under his management. His lordship also published in September 1870 "A Letter to a German Bishop present at the Vatican Council" (Sendschreiben an einen Deutschen Bischof des Vaticanischen Concils, Nördlingen, September 1870). This elicited from Bishop Ketteler, of Mayence, a spirited reply, which has been translated into English. His lordship zealously advocated the cause of Dr. Dollinger, his former preceptor, and of the "Old Roman Catholic" party; and, consequently, upon the occasion of the Jubilee of the University of Munich, in August 1872, the Philosophical Faculty conferred upon him the honorary degree of Doctor. In 1874 he rendered himself conspicuous by the prominent part he took in the controversy which was raised by the publication of Mr. Gladstone's pamphlet on the Vatican Decrees. His lordship, in a series of letters to the Times, brought grave charges against several of the Popes, although he said that there was nothing in life which he valued more than communion with the Roman Catholic Church. Lord Acton is the author of the article on "Wolsey and the Divorce of Henry VIII." in the Quarterly Review for January 1877. A French translation of Lord Acton's two letters on Liberty was published with a preface by M. de Laveleye, under the title of "Histoire de la Liberté dans l'Antiquité et le Christianisme," 1878. One of his most recent publications is a reprint, entitled "Lecture on the Study of History," 1895. In 1887 Lord Acton was made D.C.L. at Oxford, and in 1890 was elected to an honorary fellowship at All Souls' College, Oxford—a distinction shared only by Mr. Gladstone. He was made an Hon. LL.D. of Cambridge in 1888. In 1892 Lord Acton was appointed a Lord-in-Waiting, and remained so until 1895. Lord Acton married Countess Marie Arco-Valley in 1865. Addresses: Aldenham Park, Bridgnorth; and Athenæum.

ADAM, Mme. Edmond, née Juliette Lamber, was born at Verberie Oct. 4, 1836, the daughter of a doctor. She started writing in 1858 under her maiden name. She first married M. la Messine and afterwards M. Edmond Adam, deputy for the Department of the Seine; he was Préfet de Police at the time of the Franco-German war, and during the siege of Paris remained in the city; he was created a life Senator, but died in 1877. Mme. Adam was with him, and afterwards recorded her experiences in "Le Siège de Paris: Journal d'une Parisienne," published in 1873. Mme. Adam has published a number of works on political and social subjects, especially the position of women. Amongst her other works are "Garibaldi," 1859; "Le Mandarin," "Mon Village," 1860; "Récits d'une Paysanne," 1862; "Voyage autour du Grand-Père," 1863; "Récits du Golfe Juan," 1865; "Dans les Alpes," 1867; "Saine et Sauve," 1870; "Laidie," 1878; "Painne," 1879; "Postes Grecs Contemporains," 1881; "La Patrie Hongroise; Souvenirs Personnels," 3rd edit., 1884; "Le Général Skobeleff," 1886; "Jalousie de Jeune Fille," 1889. She is also credited with having written the studies of foreign nations — Berlin, Vienna, London, St. Petersburg, Madrid, and Rome — published under the pseudonym of "Count Paul Vasil," which appeared within the years 1884–87. In 1879 Mme. Adam started the Nouvelle Revue, which she continues to conduct with great ability, and personally contributes the fortnightly articles on Foreign politics. Her "Mémoires," begun in 1895, are promised us. Her address in Paris is 190 Boulevard Malesherbes, where, under the Empire, she kept up her famous political salon.

ADAM (Lord), James Adam, Judge of the Court of Session and Commissioner of Justiciary, Scotland, was born in Edinburgh on Oct. 31, 1824, and is the son of James Adam, S.S.C. He was educated at the Academy and University, Edinburgh. He was Advocate-Depute from 1858 to 1859, from 1866 to 1867, and in 1874. In the latter year he was also Sheriff of Perthshire. In 1876 he rose to the Bench. Addresses: 34 Moray Place, Edinburgh; and Athenæum.

ADAMS, Charles Francis, great-grandson of John Adams, the second President of the United States, born in Boston, May 27, 1835, graduated at Harvard College in 1856, and admitted to the Bar in 1858. At the breaking out of the War of the Rebellion in 1861 he entered the army, in which he served until June 1865, attaining the rank of Colonel of Cavalry. At the close of the war he was breveted Brigadier-General. Subsequently he identified himself with questions connected with the development of the railroad system, and in 1869 was appointed one of the Board of Railroad Commissioners of Massachusetts, which position he resigned in 1879. In June 1884 he became President of the Union Pacific Railway Company, resigning therefrom in November 1890. He has contributed a number of articles to the North American Review, and in connection with the subject of railroads is the author of "A Chapter of Erie," 1869; "The Railroad Problem," 1875; "Railroads, their Origin and Problems," 1878; and "Notes on Railroad Accidents," 1879. He delivered at Cambridge, in 1883, the Phi Beta Kappa oration, entitled "A College Fetish." Since resigning the Presidency of the Union Pacific he has devoted himself to literature and historical research, publishing the "Life of Richard Henry Dana," in 1890; "Three Episodes of Massachusetts History," in 1892; and "Massachusetts, its Historians and its History," in 1893. In addition to the above he has contributed a number of papers on historical topics to the Proceedings of the Massachusetts Historical Society, of which society he is a Vice-President.

ADAMS, Charles Kendall, LL.D., was born at Derby, Vermont, Jan. 24, 1835. A.B. (Univ. of Michigan), 1861. He was appointed Assistant Professor of History and Latin at the University of Michigan in 1863, becoming full Professor in 1868. In 1881 he was made Non-Resident Professor of History at Cornell University, where, in July 1885, he succeeded to the Presidency on the resignation of President White. While at the former university he reorganised the methods of instruction in history substantially in accordance with the German system, and in 1869–70 founded an historical seminary, which was very efficient in promoting the study of history and political science. He was also made Dean of the School of Political Science on its establishment at the University of Michigan. In 1890 he was elected President of the American Historical Association. In 1892 he resigned the Presidency of Cornell University and accepted the Presidency of the University of Wisconsin. He has published "Democracy and Monarchy in France," 1874; "Manual of Historical Literature," 1882, 3rd edit., 1889; "Representative British Orations," 3 vols., 1884; "Christopher Columbus: His Life and Work," 1892; and in 1892 became editor-in-chief of "Johnson's Universal Cyclopædia." He is also the author of a large number of pamphlets and papers on historical and educational subjects.

ADAMS, William, F.R.C.S., was born in London Feb. 1, 1820, his father being a surgeon in Finsbury Square. He was educated at Mr. W. Simpson's, Hackney, and afterwards at King's College, London. He was appointed in 1842 Demonstrator of Morbid Anatomy at St. Thomas's Hospital; in 1851 Assistant Surgeon; and in 1857 Surgeon to the Royal Orthopædic Hospital; in 1854 Lecturer on Surgery at the Grosvenor Place School of Medicine; in 1855 Surgeon to the Great Northern Hospital; and in 1874 Surgeon to the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic. Mr. Adams was elected Vice-President of the Pathological Society of London in 1867; President of the Harveian Society of London in 1873; and President of the Medical Society of London in 1876. He is the author of "A Sketch of the Principles and Practice of Subcutaneous Surgery," 1857; "On the Reparative Process in Human Tendons after Division," 1860; "Lectures on Pathology and Treatment of Lateral Curvature of the Spine," 1865, 2nd edit. 1882; "On the Pathology and Treatment of Club-foot," 1866 (being the Jacksonian Prize Essay of the Royal College of Surgeons for 1864), 2nd edit. 1873; "Subcutaneous Division of the Neck of the Thigh Bone for Bony Ankylosis of the Hip-Joint," 1871; "On the Treatment of Dupuytren's Contraction of the Fingers; and on the Obliteration of Depressed Cicatrices by Subcutaneous Operation," 1879, 2nd edit. 1890; "On Congenital Displacement of the Hip-Joint," 1890; "Congenital Wry-Neck," in the Trans. of the Amer. Orthop. Assoc., 1896, &c. Address: 7 Loudoun Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

ADAMS, William Davenport, author, critic, and journalist, son of the late well-known author W. H. Davenport Adams, was born in 1851, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School and Edinburgh University. He contributed to boys' magazines at an early age, and began regular journalistic work in 1870. He has been editor of five newspapers, daily and weekly, and since 1885 has been on the editorial staff of the Globe as head of its Reviewing Department, besides contributing much to the press at large. As a literary and dramatic critic he is well known. His chief publications include "A Dictionary of English Literature" and "English Epigrams," 1878; "The Witty and Humorous Side of the English Poets," 1880; "By-Ways in Bookland," 1888; "A Book of Burlesque," 1891; "With Poet and Player," 1891; "A Dictionary of the Drama," and several anthologies in prose and verse. ADLER, Felix, Ph.D., was born at Alzey, Germany, Aug. 13, 1851. He went to America when young, and graduated at Columbia College (N.Y.) in 1870, and subsequently studied at Berlin and Heidelberg, where he obtained the degree of Ph.D. in 1873. He was Professor of Hebrew and Oriental Languages and Literature at Cornell University from 1874 to 1876, and since then has been at the head of the Ethical Society of New York (the first of a number of similar societies now spread over the United States and other countries), a new religious society established by him, which he addresses every Sunday, and which maintains a number of charities. His principal works are "Creed and Deed," 1877, and "The Moral Instruction of Children," 1892; in addition to which he has contributed many papers to periodical literature.

ADLER, The Rev. Hermann, Ph.D., M.A., son of Dr. Nathan Marcus Adler, was born in Hanover on May 29, 1839, and in 1845 accompanied his father to London when the latter received his call as Chief Rabbi. He studied at University College, London, and subsequently at the Universities of Prague and Leipzig. He obtained his B.A. degree at the University of London in 1859, and that of Doctor of Philosophy at Leipzig in 1861. In 1862, having completed his theological studies under his father and the famous Rapoport, Chief Rabbi of Prague, he was ordained as Rabbi by the latter. In 1863 Dr. Adler was appointed Principal of the Jews' College in London, and in the following year Chief Minister of the Bayswater Synagogue. When the health of his father, the Chief Rabbi, began to fail in 1879, he was appointed his coadjutor, with the title of Delegate Chief Rabbi. In 1891 he served as a Member of the Mansion House Committee constituted for the relief of the persecuted Jews of Russia. In this capacity he attended, in conjunction with Sir Julian Goldsmid, M.P., conferences of representatives of the principal Hebrew congregations in Europe and the United States, held in Paris and Berlin. In 1885 he went to the Holy Land, and visited several of the colonies founded there by Russian refugees. In 1888 he gave evidence before the Select Committee of the House of Lords on the sweating system. After the death of his father he was elected Chief Rabbi of the United Hebrew Congregations of the British Empire by the unanimous vote of the Delegates of the various committees, and was installed at a solemn service held at the Great Synagogue on June 23, 1891. Dr. Adler has aided in the establishment of many benevolent and educational institutions in his community. He was one of the founders of the Bayswater Jewish Schools, has assisted in establishing religious classes in connection with the Board Schools in the East of London, and helped to start a fund for subventioning poor ministers in the provinces. He is President of the Jews' College for the Training of Ministers and Teachers, founded by his father, and one of the Vice-Presidents of the Anglo-Jewish Association, of the Jewish Religious Education Board, and of numerous other institutions. He is also a member, and was in 1897 President, of the Jewish Historical Society of England, founded during recent years. Dr. Adler is one of the Vice-Presidents of the Mansion House Council for the Dwellings of the Poor, and in this capacity he has formed a local branch for Paddington. He is an active member of the Hospital Sunday Fund, and of the Prince of Wales's Hospital Fund, a member of the Mansion House Committee to consider the best means of dealing with the distress in London caused by lack of employment, and is one of the administrators of the People's Palace. He has also written much on religious, social, and literary themes. He is the joint author of "A Jewish Reply to Dr. Colenso's Criticism on the Pentateuch," 1865. He has published "Sermons on the Passages in the Bible adduced by Christian Theologians in Support of their Faith," 1869; "The Jews in England"; "The Chief Rabbis of England"; "Ibn Gabirol, the Poet Philosopher"; "The Purpose and Methods of Charitable Relief"; "Hebrew, the Language of our Prayers"; "A Pilgrimage to Zion: A Father's Barmitzvah Exhortation"; "The Sabbath and the Synagogue"; Sermons in memoriam of Sir George Jessel, Master of the Rolls, Sir Moses Montefiore, and the Baroness de Rothschild; "Is Judaism a Missionary Faith?" in answer to Professor Max Müller; "The Ideal Jewish Pastor"; "The Functions of the Jewish Pulpit"; "The Nation's Lament for the Duke of Clarence"; "The Loss of H.M.S. Victoria"; "The Jews in the Victorian Era," &c. The Chief Rabbi has published also "Comments in Hebrew on the Passover Ritual," and many lectures and articles which have appeared in various periodicals, more especially in the Nineteenth Century, in which review he conducted a vigorous polemic against Professor Goldwin Smith, and vindicated his co-religionists against the charge of "incivism." He has taken part in Symposia on the Foundation of Belief in Immortality; on Irresponsible Wealth; and delivered lectures on the Wisdom and Wit of the Talmud; Sanitation as taught by the Mosaic Law; Jewish Wit and Humour; Menasse ben Israel; Moses Mendelssohn, &c. In 1867 he married Rachel, elder daughter of the late S. Joseph, by whom he has issue one son and two daughters. His City residence and office are at 22 Finsbury Square; his West End residence at 6 Craven Hill.

ADYE, General Sir John Miller, G.C.B., son of the late Major James P. Abye, R.A., was born on Nov. 1, 1819, at Sevenoaks, Kent, and entered the Royal Artillery at the close of the year 1836. Throughout the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny he was Adjutant-General of the Royal Artillery. He also served in the Sitana Campaign of 1863-64, for which he received a medal; and he has received besides, the Crimean, Turkish, and Indian Mutiny medals, and the 4th Class of the Medjidieh. He was created a C.B. in 1855, and a K.C.B. in 1873. In February 1874 the Queen granted to Sir J. M. Abye her royal licence and authority to accept and wear the insignia of Commander of the Order of the Legion of Honour conferred upon him by the President of the French Republic as a promotion from the class of Officer of the same Order which he received for his services during the Crimean War. He was Director of Artillery from 1870 to 1875, and was appointed Governor of the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich in July 1875. He became a Lieutenant-General in the army in 1879. In 1880 he resigned the post of Governor of the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich on being appointed Surveyor-General of Ordnance. The following year he became Colonel-Commandant of the Royal Artillery. He was Chief of the Staff and second in command of the expeditionary force sent to Egypt in 1882, and for his services he received the Egyptian medal and Khedive's star, the thanks of Parliament, the Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath, and the 1st Class of Medjidieh. In January 1883 he was appointed Governor of Gibraltar, in succession to Lord Napier of Magdala, from which appointment he retired in November 1886. Sir John Abye is the author of "The Defence of Cawnpore by the Troops under the Orders of Major-General G. A. Windham in Nov. 1857," 1858; "A Review of the Crimean War to the Winter of 1854-55," 1860; "Sitana: a Mountain Campaign on the Borders of Afghanistan in 1863," 1867; "Recollections of a Military Life," 1895; "Indian Frontier Policy," 1897. He married in 1856 Mary Cordelia, eldest daughter of the late Vice-Admiral the Hon. Sir Montagu Stopford, K.C.B. Residence, 92 St. George's Square, S.W.

AFLALO, Frederick George, was born in London on the 17th of August 1870. He was educated at Clifton College and at Rostock University, Mecklenburg, and during 1891 he pursued his studies in Italy. In 1895 he travelled in Australia, giving his attention more especially to Queensland. He founded the British Sea Anglers' Society in 1893; and he is editor of the Encyclopedia of Sport, and of the Angler's Library. He is the author of "Sea Fishing on the English Coast," 1891; "The Sea, and the Rod, and Myamma" (in conjunction), 1892; "Sunny Dover" (in conjunction), 1893; "Hints and Wrinkles on Sea-Fishing," 1894; "A Sketch of the Natural History of Australia," 1896; "A Sketch of the Natural History (Vertebrates) of the British Islands," 1897; "Sea Fish," 1897. Amongst his publications may be mentioned: "Rita," "The Marstons," "Mr. and Mrs. Faulconbridge," "Morals and Mysteries," "A Voyage of Discovery," "Poet and Peer," &c. In 1872 he wrote a play, "Philip," which was produced by Sir Henry Irving, and in 1874 the Kendals and John Hare played his "A Nine Days' Wonder." He has also written "A Great Catch," and has adapted "Doctor Bill" from the French. Mr. Aidé is, moreover, known as a ballad writer, his best-known songs being perhaps "The Danube River" and "Remember or Forget." Addresses: Ascot Wood Cottage, Ascot; and Athenæum.

AIKINS, The Hon. James Cox, a Canadian statesman, was born in the township of Toronto, county Peel, Ontario, March 30, 1823. He was educated at Victoria College, Cobourg, and entered public life in 1854 by representing his native county in the Canadian Assembly, which he continued to do until 1861. In the following year he was elected a Member of the Legislative Council for the "Home" Division, comprising the counties of Peel and Halton. He continued to sit in the Council until it was abolished by Confederation, after which he was raised to the Senate. In December 1869 he became a Member of the Privy Council, and entered the Macdonald Government as Secretary of State, remaining in that office until the fall of the Government in 1873. In 1872 he framed and carried through Parliament the Public Lands Act of that year, and subsequently organised the Dominion Lands Bureau, a department of government entrusted with the management of the lands acquired in the North-West, chiefly from the Hudson's Bay Company, a department which is now controlled by the Canadian Minister of the Interior. On the return of the Macdonald Government to power in 1878 Senator Aikins resumed the portfolio of

Secretary of State, exchanging it two years later for the office of Minister of Inland Revenue. In 1882 he was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Manitoba and district of Keewatin, an office which he retained until his term expired in 1888, when he returned to Toronto, and in 1896 was again called to the Senate. He received the degree of LL.D. from Victoria College in 1892.

AINGER, Canon Alfred, M.A., LL.D., Master of the Temple, was born in London on Feb. 9, 1837, and is the son of Alfred Ainger, architect. A.K.H.B. See BOYD, THE REV. A. K. H.

ALBANI, Madame. See GYE, MADAME.

ALBANY (Duchess of), H.R.H. Hélène Fredrica Augusta, the daughter of the Prince and Princess of Waldeck-

Pyrmont, and sister of the Queen of the Netherlands, was born on Feb. 17, 1861. She married H.R.H. the late Prince Leopold, Her Majesty's youngest son, on April 27, 1882, and became a widow by his sudden death at Cannes on March 28, 1884. The Princess lost her mother in 1888. She has two children, one of whom was born after the Prince's death; the Princess Alice Mary Victoria Augusta Pauline, born at Windsor Castle, Feb. 25, 1883; and the Prince Leopold Charles Edward George Albert, Duke of Albany, born at Claremont, July 19, 1884. The Princess receives a pension of £6000 a year from the British Government.

ALBERT, King of Saxony, K.G., born April 23, 1828; succeeded his father Oct. 29, 1873. He received a thorough military education, and took part in the Danish war of 1848. He fought also on the side of the Austrians in the disastrous battle of Sadowa in 1866, and likewise in the Franco-German war in the operations before Metz, and in the operations which terminated in the surrender of Napoleon at Sedan, and the siege of Paris, when he held the right bank of the Seine. On the conclusion of the war he was made Field-Marshal and Inspector-General of the German Army. He married Caroline, the daughter of Prince Gustavus Vasa of Sweden. His heir is his brother, Prince George.

ALBERT (Archduke of Austria), Frederick Rodolph, born Aug. 3, 1817, is the son of the late Archduke Charles and the Princess Henrietta of Nassau-Weilburg. He married in 1844 the Princess Hildegard of Bavaria, who died April 2, 1864, leaving two daughters. At an early age he entered the army, commanded a division in Italy in 1849, took an important part in the battle of Novara, received at the end of the campaign the command of the 3rd Corps d'Armée, and was afterwards appointed Governor-General of Hungary. During a leave of absence accorded to Field-Marshal Benedek in 1861 he was appointed to the command of the Austrian troops in Lombardy and Venetia. During the campaign of 1866 he gained a victory over the Italian army at Custozza, and after the battle of Sadowa he was made (July 13, 1866) Commander-in-Chief of the Austrian Army, which title he retained till March 1869, when he exchanged it for that of Inspector-General of the Army. He published in 1869 a work on "Responsibility in War" (Über die Verantwortlichkeit im Kriege). This has been translated into French by L. Dufour, captain of artillery, and an English translation of it is given in Captain

W. J. Wyatt's "Reflections on the Formation of Armies, with a View to the Reorganization of the English Army," 1869.

ALDEN, William Livingston, was born in the United States on Oct. 9, 1837, and is the son of the Rev. Joseph Alden. He was educated at Jefferson College and at La Fayette College, both in the States, and practised as a barrister at New York from 1860 to 1865. He was then occupied as a journalist in the same city from 1865 to 1885; and in the latter year was appointed U.S. Consul-General at Rome, a position which he held until 1889. Since then he has been engaged in novel writing. Amongst his publications there may be mentioned: "Domestic Explosives," 1877; "Shooting Stars," 1878; "Life of Christopher Columbus," 1881; "Moral Pirates," 1881; "Cruise of the Canoe Club," 1883; "Adventures of Jimmy Brown," 1885; "New Robinson Crusoe," 1888; "A Lost Soul," 1892; "The Mystery of Elias G. Roebuck," 1896; "His Daughter," 1897. Address: 61 Cloudesdale Road, S.W.

ALDRICH, Nelson Wilmarth, American statesman, was born at Foster, Rhode Island, Nov. 6, 1841, and received an academic education. He was President of the Common Council of the city of Providence, R.I., 1871-73; was a member of the Legislature of the State of Rhode Island, 1875-76, serving the latter year as Speaker of the House of Representatives in that State. He was elected to the Forty-sixth and re-elected to the Forty-seventh Congresses. Elected to the United States Senate, he took his seat Dec. 5, 1881, and was re-elected in 1886 and in 1893.

ALDRICH, Thomas Bailey, an American author, was born at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, Nov. 11, 1836. He has contributed prose and verse to various periodicals, most of which has subsequently been published separately. Among the collected volumes of verse are: "The Bells," 1855; "The Ballad of Baby Bell, and other Poems," 1856; "The Course of True Love Never Did Run Smooth," 1858; "Pampinea, and other Poems," 1861; a volume of "Poems," 1865; "Cloth of Gold, and other Poems," 1874; "Flower and Thorn," 1876; "Lyrics and Sonnets," 1880; "Friar Jerome's Beautiful Book," 1881; "Mercedes, and Later Lyrics," 1884; "Wyndham Towers," 1889; and "The Sisters' Tragedy, and other Poems." Pesth," 1883. From 1881 to 1890 he was the editor of the Atlantic Monthly, Boston, but he resigned that position in order to devote himself entirely to writing. Since his retirement from editorship he has published "Two Bites at a Cherry, with other Tales," and "An Old Town by the Sea," 1893; "Unguarded Gates, and other Poems," 1894; "Later Lyrics," 1895; "Judith and Holofernes," 1896.

ALEXANDER, Mrs. See HECTOR, MRS. ANNIE ALEXANDER.

ALEXANDER I. (Obrenovitch), King of Serbia, was born on Aug. 14, 1876, and succeeded his father, the ex-King Milan, who abdicated in favour of his son, March 6, 1889, after divorcing his consort, Queen Natalie (q.v.). He was under the guardianship of two Regents till 1893 (April). When Crown Prince he accompanied his mother, Queen Natalie, into exile after her separation from the King, but was forcibly removed from her at Berlin, and conveyed back to Belgrade. In 1893 the Prince suddenly dismissed his Regents, and assumed the reins of power. Under his rule Serbia has suffered less from civil dissensions than during the Regency. In 1894, at his request, his father returned to Belgrade, for the purpose of assisting him in the government of the country. In 1897 he paid a visit to the Austrian Emperor at Vienna; this incident may possibly indicate closer relations between the two countries.

ALEXANDER, George (George Alexander Gibb Samson), was born at Reading in 1858, and is the son of an Ayrshire man who married an English wife. He was educated at the school of Dr. Benham, Clifton, then at the High School at Stirling, and subsequently studied medicine at Edinburgh; but after a short time went to London to take up a commercial life. Finally, however, after a good deal of amateur acting, he adopted the stage as his profession, first appearing in 1879 in Mr. Sydney Grundy's "The Snowball," at Nottingham. In 1881 Mr. Alexander joined Mr. Henry Irving at the Lyceum to play Caleb Deecie in "Two Roses," and afterwards Paris in "Romeo and Juliet." Then for a time he joined the Hare and Kendal Company at the St. James's and on tour. In 1883 he again joined Mr. Irving, and went with him to America, and then remained at the Lyceum until 1888, making his chief successes as Faust and Macduff; after that he went to the Adelphi. On Feb. 1, 1890, he opened the Avenue Theatre as manager with "Dr. Bill." The other productions at this theatre were "The Struggle for Life" and "Sunlight and Shadow." With the last-named play Mr. Alexander proceeded to the St. James's, which, under his management, has since been famous for such successes as "The Idler," "Lady Windermere's Fan," "Liberty Hall," "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray," "The Masked-players," "The Prisoner of Zenda," "As You Like It," "The Princess and the Butterfly," "The Tree of Knowledge," "Much Ado About Nothing," and "The Conquerors." In 1882 Mr. Alexander married Miss Florence Theleur. Address: 57 Pont Street, S.W.

ALEXANDER, The Most Rev. William, D.D., D.C.L., Archbishop of Armagh and Primate of All Ireland, son of a clergyman beneficed in the north of Ireland, and nephew of Dr. Alexander, late Bishop of Meath, and cousin of the Earl of Caledon, was born at Londonderry, April 13, 1824. He was educated at Tunbridge School and at Exeter and Brasenose Colleges, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. and M.A. He graduated in classical honours (Honorary 4th, 1847). He won the Theological Prize Essay in 1850, and the Sacred Prize Poem in 1860, and was selected to recite a congratulatory ode to Lord Derby in the Sheldonian Theatre, 1853. Having entered Holy Orders, he served a curacy in the north of Ireland, and was preferred to one or two livings in the gift of the Bishop of Derry. He was formerly Rector of Camusjuxta-Morne, co. Tyrone, and Chaplain to the Marquis of Abercorn, Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. In 1864 he was nominated to the Deanery of Emly, and in 1867 was an unsuccessful candidate for the chair of poetry at Oxford. He was appointed to the Bishopric of Derry and Raphoe, rendered vacant by the death of Dr. Higgin, July 12, 1867, being consecrated in Armagh Cathedral, October 13 following; and enthroned as Archbishop of Armagh, March 24, 1896. Before his elevation to the episcopal Bench he was created D.D. by diploma, and subsequently D.C.L. at the Encænna, 1876, at Oxford. The Bishop has been Select Preacher before the Universities of Oxford (1870-72 and 1882), Cambridge (1872 and 1892), and Dublin (1879). He is author of Commentaries on Colossians, 1st and 2nd Thessalonians, Philemon, and the three Epistles of St. John; vols. iii., iv., "Speaker's Commentaries"; of "The Witness of the Psalms, Bampton Lectures," 1876; of "The Great Question, and other Sermons," 1885; of "Epistles of St. John, Twenty-one Discourses," 3rd edit., 1892, and of other works of a similar character. In 1887 he published a volume of poems, entitled "St. Augustine's Holiday, and other Poems." He is also the author of a large series of single sermons, charges and reviews, essays and poems, in periodicals of the day. The Bishop has endowed his See permanently with £2000 a year and the See House, for which he has received the thanks of the Diocesan Synod of Derry and Raphoe, and a recognition from the Diocesan Council of "gratitude for his large sacrifice of income." He was married to Miss Cecil Frances Humphreys, who was herself well known as the author of "Moral Songs," "Hymns for Children," and "Poems on Old Testament Subjects," and who died Oct. 15, 1895.

ALEXANDER, William Henry, a Hampshire country gentleman, was born in 1842. He became a barrister in 1863, and since 1890 has been a Trustee of the National Portrait Gallery, towards the building fund of which he subscribed £80,000.

ALEXANDRA, Princess of Wales.
See WALES, PRINCESS OF.

ALFONZO XIII., King of Spain, was born (posthumously) May 17, 1886; his mother, Maria Christina, being appointed Queen Regent. In August 1897 Queen Victoria made him an Hon. Knight Grand Cross of the Royal Victorian Order.

ALFORD, The Right Rev. Charles Richard, D.D., formerly Bishop of Victoria, Hong-kong, was born Aug. 13, 1816, at West Quaxtonhead, Somersetshire, of which parish his father was rector. From St. Paul's School he was sent to Trinity College, Cambridge, with a Camden Exhibition (B.A., 1839; M.A., 1842; D.D., 1867). After taking orders he became Incumbent of St. Matthew's, Rugby, in 1841; Incumbent of Christ's Church, Doncaster, in 1846; Principal of the Metropolitan Training Institution at Highbury in 1854; and Incumbent of Holy Trinity, Islington, in 1865, where he had a high reputation as an Evangelical preacher. He was consecrated Bishop of Victoria, Hong-kong, Feb. 2, 1867, in place of Dr. George Smith, who had resigned that See in the previous year. He himself resigned the See of Victoria in 1872. He was Vicar of Christ Church, Cloughton, near Birkenhead, from June 1874 till September 1877, when he accepted the incumbency of the new district of St. Mary, Sevenoaks, Kent. He was appointed Acting-Commissary of the diocese of Huron, Canada, in 1880, and retired in 1881. Dr. Alford is the author of "First Principles of the Oracles of God"; a "Charge" on China and Japan; and various sermons and pamphlets. Address: 30 Wilbury Road, West Brighton.

ALGER, Russell Alexander, American soldier and political leader, was born in Medina County, Ohio, Feb. 27, 1836, and comes of New England stock, his ancestry being Scotch and English. He was educated at the Richfield Academy in Summit County, Ohio, attending the autumn and winter terms, and working on a farm the remainder of the year. He studied law at Akron, Ohio, during 1857 and 1858, and in 1859 was admitted to the Bar. He practised law but a short time, removing to Michigan on Jan. 1, 1860. He entered the Army, Oct. 2, 1861, as Captain in Second Michigan Cavalry; Major of same regiment from April 17, 1862; Lieutenant-Colonel Sixth Michigan Cavalry, Oct. 30, 1862; and Colonel of Fifth Michigan Cavalry, June 11, 1863. He was severely wounded at the battle of Boonsboro, Maryland, July 8, 1863, and received brevet commissions as Brigadier-General and Major-General of Volunteers for gallant and meritorious services during the war between the States. He resigned from the army, and was discharged Sept. 20, 1864. He was Governor of Michigan in 1885 and 1886, and was appointed Secretary of War in President McKinley's Cabinet on March 5, 1897.

ALGER, William Rounsville, was born in Freetown, Massachusetts, Dec. 28, 1822. He graduated at the Cambridge Divinity School, 1847, and became pastor of a Unitarian Church in Roxbury. In 1855 he removed to Boston, and in 1874 became Minister of the Unitarian Church of the Messiah in New York, where he remained until 1879. Since then he has resided in Boston, engaged in literary work. He has published "A Symbolic History of the Cross of Christ," 1851; "The Poetry of the Orient," 1856 (five editions); "A Critical History of the Doctrine of a Future Life," 1861 (14 editions); "The Genius of Solitude," 1866 (11 editions); "Friendships of Women," 1867 (10 editions); "Prayers Offered in the Massachusetts House of Representatives," 1868; "Life of Edwin Forrest," 1877; "The School of Life," 1881; and "Sources of Consolation in Human Life," 1892.

ALING. See LIEBLING, ALICE.

ALISON, General Sir Archibald, Bart., K.C.B., son of Sir Archibald Alison, the first baronet, author of "The History of Europe," was born at Edinburgh, Jan. 21, 1826, and received his education in the Universities of Glasgow and Edinburgh. Entering the military service of his country in 1846, he became a Captain in the 72nd Highlanders in 1853, Brevet-Major in 1856, Lieutenant-Colonel in 1858, and Colonel in 1867. In the latter year he succeeded to the baronetcy on the death of his father. He served in the Crimea, in the expedition to Kertch, and at the siege and fall of Sebastopol; in India during the Mutiny as Military Secretary on the staff of the late Lord Clyde; and on the Gold Coast as Brigadier-General of the European Brigade, and second in command of the Ashantee Expedition in 1873-74. He commanded his brigade at the capture of Requah, the battle of Amoafu, the action of Ordashu, and the fall of Coomassie. He lost an arm at the relief of Lucknow. Sir Archibald was Assistant Adjutant-General at Aldershot from October 1870 to October 1874, and Deputy Adjutant-General in Ireland from October 1874 to October 1877, when he was promoted to the rank of Major-General. Subsequently he was appointed Commandant of the Staff College in January 1878, and Chief of the Intelligence Department at the War Office from May 1878 till 1882. A few days after the bombardment of Alexandria by Sir Beauchamp Seymour (now the Right Hon. Baron Alcester) a small body of British troops was landed (July 27) under the command of Sir Archibald Alison. He confined his proceedings at first to securing a position covering Alexandria, and occupying the line of railway which connected Alexandria with the suburb of Ramleh. After the arrival of the expeditionary force from England he commanded the 1st (the Highland) Brigade, 2nd Division, and at the decisive battle of Tel-el-Kebir, where it fought so gallantly on that memorable occasion. The Salabijah army laid down its arms to him at Puntah, and after Arabi's surrender a British army of occupation, consisting of 12,000 men, under the command of Sir Archibald Alison, was left in Egypt to restore order and protect the Khedive. Sir Archibald was included in the thanks of Parliament for his energy and gallantry, and was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant-General (November 1882). In May 1883 he relinquished the command of the army of occupation of Egypt and returned home. In August 1883 he was appointed to the command at Aldershot, and in February 1885 he became Adjutant-General. In October 1885 he resumed the command at Aldershot on the return of the force for the relief of Gordon at Khartoum. He was appointed Military Member of the Council of India at Whitehall in 1889, and was promoted to the rank of General Feb. 20, 1889. He published an able treatise "On Army Organization" in 1869, and has contributed at various times articles in Blackwood's Magazine. Address: 98 Eaton Place, S.W.

ALLBUTT, Thomas Clifford, M.A., LL.D., M.D., F.R.C.P., F.R.S., F.L.S., J.P., D.L., is the son of the Rev. Thomas Allbutt, sometime Vicar of Dewsbury, in Yorkshire, and afterwards Rector of Debach-cum-Boulge, in Suffolk. He was born at Dewsbury in 1836, and was educated by a private tutor at Ryde, in the Isle of Wight, and afterwards under Archdeacon Hey, at St. Peter's School, York. He went up to Caius College in 1856, took a scholarship in his first year, and subsequently three other scholarships in the college. Soon afterwards, however, he decided to enter the medical profession, and after a pass degree in Arts, went out in the Natural Science Tripos in the first class, with distinctions in chemistry and geology. On leaving Cambridge he entered at St. George's Hospital, and afterwards spent some time in the hospitals of Paris, and graduated in due course as M.A. and M.D. of Cambridge. After a brief stay in London Allbutt removed to Leeds, where he was soon after elected physician to the Leeds Infirmary, and rapidly obtained a large consulting practice in medicine, and for the last fifteen years of his residence in Yorkshire had perhaps the largest purely consulting physician's practice ever carried on in the provinces. During the same time he contributed largely both to medical and general literature. His earliest works were concerned with the bodily temperature in health and disease, and by devising the "Short Clinical Thermometer," he did much to forward clinical thermometry in hospital and general practice. His friendship with G. H. Lewes and Lockhart-Clarke engaged him in the study of the pathology of the nervous system, and in the "Pathological Transactions" and elsewhere he published researches on this subject, among which his demonstrations of the pathology of tetanus and hydrophobia are best known, the latter being the first observations of the kind. Dr. Clifford Allbutt was also an early worker in the field of medical ophthalmoscopy, and published a work on that subject in 1868, which included investigations on insanity, and the first demonstration of changes in the optic nerve in general paralysis and meningitis. Other researches were published at various dates on diseases of the nervous system, of the stomach and kidneys, and on the nature and treatment of consumption, in which latter attention was drawn to the value of the climate of the high Alps in the cure of phthisis, then little recognised in England. In 1884 Dr. Clifford Allbutt delivered the Gulstonian Lectures at the Royal College of Physicians on Visceral Neuroses, which were published in the same year; and in 1885, in conjunction with Mr. Teale, he published a volume on the "Treatment of Scrofulous Neck." In 1888 he delivered the Address on Medicine to the British Medical Association at Glasgow, his subject being the Classification of Disease, and received the honorary degree of LL.D. of that University. In 1889 he was appointed a Commissioner in Lunacy, an office which he held for three years, when he was appointed by the Crown to be Regius-Professor of Physic in the University of Cambridge in succession to the late Sir George Paget. He was elected a Fellow of the Linnean Society and of the Society of Antiquaries in 1867, and a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1880. He is editor of the "System of Medicine," in course of publication by Messrs. Macmillan, the first volume of which appeared in the spring of 1895. He acted for some years as a Justice of the Peace for the West Riding of Yorkshire, is a Deputy-Lieutenant for the West Riding and the city and county of York, and Justice of the Peace for Cambridgeshire. Permanent address: St. Radegund's, Cambridge.

ALLCHIN, William Henry, M.D., was educated at University College, London, and took the degree of M.D. at the University of London in 1892. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of London in 1878, and is a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He is at the present time Senior Physician to the Westminster Hospital, and Examiner in Medicine for both the London University and the Army Medical Services. Dr. Allchin is the author of "Duodenal Indigestion" (Bradshaw Lectures of 1891 at the Royal College of Physicians), "The Breaking Strain" (oration at the Medical Society of London in 1896). Articles: "Disorders of Digestion, and of Digestive Organs," and "Diseases of Intestines," in Quain's "Dictionary of Medicine"; "Chronic Peritonitis," "Tuberculous Peritonitis," and "New Growths of the Peritoneum," in Clifford Allbutt's "System of Medicine," and other articles in various medical journals. Address: 3 Chandos Street, Cavendish Square, W.

ALLCOCK, Rev. Arthur Edmund, M.A., is the son of the late Thomas Allcock, and was born at Harborne, Staffordshire, on Feb. 16, 1851. He was educated at King Edward's School, Birmingham, and at Emmanuel College, Cambridge. Appointed an Assistant-Master at his old school in Birmingham in 1874, he became an Assistant-Master at Wellington College in 1880, and was ordained in 1889. Mr. Allcock was, in 1893, appointed Head Master of Highgate School. Address: The School House, Highgate, N.

ALLEN, Charles Grant Blairfindie, B.A., best known as Grant Allen, the second son of Joseph Antisell Allen, Incumbent of Holy Trinity, Wolfe Island, Canada, was born at Kingston, Canada, Feb. 24, 1848, and educated in the United States and France, at King Edward's School, Birmingham, and at Merton College, Oxford; matriculated Oct. 19, 1867; B.A. 1871. Mr. Allen began to write early, and soon established a reputation as one of the most popular of scientific authors. He has been called "The Darwinian St. Paul"; his expositions of the Darwinian theory being particularly vivid, clear, and captivating. Besides a multitude of contributions to periodical literature, he has written the following books on more or less serious subjects: "Physiological Aesthetics," 1877; "The Colour Sense," 1879; "The Evolutionist at Large," 1881; "Anglo-Saxon Britain," 1881; "Vignettes from Nature," 1881; "Colours of Flowers," 1882; "Colin Clout's Calendar," 1883; "Flowers and their Pedigrees," 1884; and "Charles Darwin" (in Mr. Andrew Lang's series of "English Worthies"), 1885. In 1883 Mr. Allen began to attempt fiction, his first attempt in which line was "Strange Stories." Since that date he has produced the following works: "Philistia," 1884; "Babylon," 1885; "For Maimie's Sake," 1886; "In All Shades," 1887; "The Devil's Die," 1888; "This Mortal Coil," 1888; "The Tents of Shem," 1889; "Dr. Palliser's Patient"; "Force and Energy"; "Dumarescq's Daughter"; "The Attis of Catullus"; "Science in Arcady"; "The Woman Who Did," a novel which stirred up a storm of controversy, 1895; "The British Barbarians" in the same year; and in 1898 a novel dealing with missionaries in the South Seas. He has also contributed a series of papers ("Post-prandial Philosophy") to the Westminster Gazette, re-published in book-form in 1894; and in 1897 he published "Historical Guides" to Paris, Florence, and Belgium, and "The Evolution of the Idea of God." Address: The Croft, Hind Head, Haslemere.

ALLEYNE, Major-General Sir James, K.C.B., was educated at Cheltenham College and at the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich. Entering the Royal Artillery in 1862, he was present at the Red River Expedition of 1870, where he was in command of the Artillery. He next took part in the Zulu campaign, was present at the battle of Ulundi, was mentioned in despatches, and received a medal and clasp. In the Egyptian Expedition of 1882 he served as Deputy Assistant-Adjutant-General, witnessed the action of Tel-el-Mahuta, and the battle of Tel-el-Kebir, was again mentioned in despatches, and received a medal and clasp, and the bronze star of the Osmanieh. During the years 1884-85 he was employed in the Soudan Expedition, was Director of River Transport, and Assistant-Adjutant-General at headquarters; he commanded a separate contingent at the battle of Kibbekan, was mentioned in despatches, received two clasps, and obtained his colonelcy. He served as Commissioner for the Sub-division of Zululand in 1879, and was again employed in that capacity to delineate the Transvaal-Swazi boundary in 1880. Colonel Alleyne was created C.B. in 1891, and became Major-General in 1895. He received the Queen's Jubilee Medal in 1897, and in the same year was created K.C.B. He now commands the Royal Artillery in the Aldershot district. Address: Aldershot.

ALLIES, Thomas William, the son of a gentleman of Bristol, was born in 1813, and educated at Eton, where he obtained the Newcastle Scholarship. He afterwards became in succession Scholar and Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1832, taking a first-class in classics. He became examining chaplain to Dr. Blomfield, Bishop of London, who appointed him in 1842 to the rectory of Launton, Oxfordshire, which he resigned in 1850, on becoming a Roman Catholic. He had previously published a volume of sermons, a work entitled "The Church of England Cleared from the Charge of Schism, upon the Testimonies of Councils and Fathers of the First Six Centuries," 1846, 2nd edit., 1848; and "Journal in France in 1845 and 1848," with "Letters from Italy in 1847—of Things and Persons concerning the Church and Education," 1849. To give the grounds of his conversion he wrote "The See of St. Peter, the Rock of the Church, the Source of Jurisdiction and the Centre of Unity," 1850, 4th edit., 1896; preceded by "The Royal Supremacy viewed in reference to the Two Spiritual Powers of Order and Jurisdiction," 1850. He has since written "St. Peter, his Name and Office as set forth in Holy Scripture," 1852, 4th edit., 1895; "Dr. Pusey and the Ancient Church," 1866; "Per Crucem ad Lucem, the Result of a Life," 5 vols., 1879; "A Life's Decision," 1880, 2nd edit., 1894; and several other works. His great work is entitled "The Formation of Christendom," and is in 8 vols. (1865-96), which sell as ten, viz.: Vol. 1, "The Christian Faith and the Individual"; vol. 2, "The Christian Faith and Society"; vol. 3, "The Christian Faith and Philosophy"; vol. 4, "Christendom as seen in Church and State"; vol. 5, "The Throne of the Fisherman built by the Carpenter's Son"

vol. 6, "The Holy See and the Wandering of the Nations"; vol. 7, "Peter's Rock in Mohammed's Flood"; and vol. 8, "Monastic Life from the Fathers of the Desert to Charlemagne." Mr. Allie was appointed Secretary to the Catholic Poor School Committee for Great Britain in 1853, and continued to 1890. He was created Knight Commander of St. Gregory by Leo XIII. in 1885. Address: 3 Lodge Place, St. John's Wood, N.W.

ALLINGHAM, Mrs. Helen, eldest child of Alexander Henry Paterson, M.D., was born near Burton-on-Trent, Sept. 26, 1848. The family removed to Altrincham, Cheshire, and after Dr. Paterson's death, to Birmingham. At the beginning of 1867 Miss Paterson came to reside in London under the care of her aunt, Miss Laura Herford, who was an artist, and who, about seven years previously, had practically opened the schools of the Royal Academy to women. Miss Paterson herself entered the Royal Academy schools in April 1867. She afterwards drew on wood for several illustrated periodicals, and eventually became one of the regular staff of the Graphic. She also furnished illustrations to novels running in the Cornhill Magazine: "Far from the Madding Crowd," and "Miss Angel." In the intervals of drawing on wood she produced several water-colour drawings. "May," "Dangerous Ground," &c., were exhibited at the Dudley Gallery; "The Milkmaid," and "Wait for Me," at the Royal Academy, 1874. "Young Customers," 1875, attracted much attention; as did also "Old Men's Gardens, Chelsea Hospital," at the Old Water-Colour Exhibition, 1877. In 1875 she was elected an Associate of the Royal Society of Painters in Water-Colour, and in 1890 to the honour of full membership. Mrs. Allingham has also exhibited "The Harvest Moon," "The Clothes-Line," "The Convalescent," "The Lady of the Manor," "The Children's Tea," "The Well," "Lessons," and many scenes of English rural life. Among her later works are several portraits of Thomas Carlyle. Special exhibitions of Mrs. Allingham's drawings were held in 1886, 1887, and 1889, also in 1891, 1894, and 1898, at the rooms of the Fine Art Society, and had great success. Miss Paterson was married, Aug. 22, 1874, to the late Mr. William Allingham, the poet. Address: Eldon House, Lyndhurst Road, Hampstead, N.W.

ALLISON, William B., American statesman, was born at Perry, Ohio, March 2, 1829, was educated at Western Reserve College, Ohio, and studied law and practised his profession in Ohio, until he removed to Iowa in 1857. He served on the staff of the Governor of Iowa, and aided in organising volunteers in the beginning of the war between the Northern and Southern States, was elected a Representative in the Thirty-eighth, and re-elected to the Thirty-ninth, Fortieth, and Forty-first Congresses, and was elected to the United States Senate, taking his seat March 4, 1873. He was re-elected in 1878, 1884, 1890, and 1897. He is leader of the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

ALLMAN, Professor George James, M.D., LL.D., F.R.C.S.I., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., M.R.I.A., F.L.S., Corr. M.Z.S.L., Hon. F.R.M.S., Hon. Fellow Royal Geological Society of Cornwall, Member of the Royal Dublin Society, and Hon. Member of various British and foreign societies, and Emeritus Regius-Professor of Natural History in the University of Edinburgh, is the eldest son of James Allman, Esq., of Bandon, and was born at Cork in 1812, and educated at the Belfast Academical Institution. Warmly attached to the principles of civil and religious liberty, he threw himself actively into the agitation which led to Catholic Emancipation; and, believing he could best promote its object by engaging in the profession of the law, he resolved on studying for the Irish Bar. The love of natural science, however, which had at a very early age taken possession of him, caused him, before he had completed the required number of terms, to give up the profession of law for that of medicine. He graduated in Arts and Medicine in the University of Dublin in 1844; and in the same year was appointed to the Regius-Professorship of Botany in that university, when he relinquished all further thought of medical practice. In 1854 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society; and in 1855 he resigned his professorship in the University of Dublin on his appointment to the Regius-Professorship of Natural History and Keepership of the Natural History Museum in the University of Edinburgh, which he held until 1870. Shortly after this the honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred on him by the University of Edinburgh. His chief scientific labours have been among the lower organisms of the animal kingdom, to the investigation of whose structure and development he has specially devoted himself. For his researches in this department of biology the Royal Society of Edinburgh awarded to him in 1872 the Brisbane Prize; in the following year a Royal Medal was awarded to him by the Royal Society of London; in 1878 he received the Cunningham Gold Medal from the Royal Irish Academy, and in 1896 the Linnæan Gold Medal from the Linnæan Society of

London. He was one of the Commissioners appointed by Government in 1876 to inquire into the state of the Queen's Colleges in Ireland. Soon after his election to the Edinburgh chair he was nominated one of the Commissioners of Scottish Fisheries, an honorary post which he continued to hold until the abolition of the Board in 1881. On the resignation of Mr. Benthall he was elected to the presidency of the Linnean Society, a post which he held until 1883, when he resigned it in favour of Sir J. Lubbock. In 1879 he was President of the British Association for the Advancement of Science. On the completion of the exploring voyage of the Challenger, the large collection of Hydroids made during that great expedition was assigned to him for determination and description—a service which he had already performed for the Hydroids collected during the exploration of the Gulf Stream under the direction of the United States Government. He has served on the Council of the Royal Society of London, and on those of the Royal Society of Edinburgh and of the Royal Irish Academy, and has filled the post of Examiner in Natural History for the Queen's University in Ireland, for the University of London, for Her Majesty's Army, Navy, and Indian Medical Services, and for the Civil Service of India. Results of his original investigations are contained in memoirs published in the Philosophical Transactions, the Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, and the Transactions of the Linnean and Zoological Societies of London; as well as in reports presented to the British Association for the Advancement of Science, to the Mus. Comp. Zool. Harvard University, and to the Commission of the Challenger Exploration; and in communications to the Annals of Natural History, the Quarterly Journal of Microscopic Science, and other scientific journals. His more elaborate works are "A Monograph of the Freshwater Polyzoa," fol., 1856, and "A Monograph of the Gymnoblatic Hydroids," fol., 1871-72, both published by the Ray Society, and largely illustrated with coloured plates. Dr. Allman is a member of the Athenæum Club, to which he was elected by the Committee. He married Hannah Louisa, third daughter of Samuel Shaen, Esq., of Crix, J.P. and D.L. for the county of Essex. Addresses: Ardmore, Parkstone, Dorset; and Athenæum.

ALLMAN, Emeritus Professor George Johnston, LL.D., D.Sc., F.R.S., Senator of the Royal University of Ireland, younger son of William Allman, M.D., Professor of Botany in the University of

Dublin (1809-44), born in Dublin Sept. 28, 1824, was educated at Dr. Wall's School and Trinity College, Dublin. He graduated in the University of Dublin, B.A. 1844, and LL.D. in 1853, and in the same year he was appointed Professor of Mathematics in Queen's College, Galway, and a Professor of the Queen's University in Ireland. He was also appointed Bursar of the Queen's College in 1864, Member of the Senate of the Queen's University in Ireland in 1877, and in 1880 he was nominated by the Crown one of the first Senators of the Royal University of Ireland. He was a Member of the Council of Queen's College, Galway, 1863-93, and in 1888 he was sent by the Corporate Body of the Queen's College as delegate to the University of Bologna on the occasion of the celebration of the Octocentenary of that University. He is LL.D. ad eundem of the Queen's University (1863), and D.Sc. honoris causa (1882). In 1884 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and in 1893 he resigned his professorship and the bursarship of Queen's College, Galway. In 1853 Dr. Allman communicated to the Royal Irish Academy "An Account of the late Professor MacCullagh's Lectures on the Attraction of Ellipsoids," which he compiled from his notes of the lectures (Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, vol. xxii.). He has since published "Some Properties of the Paraboloids" (Quarterly Journal of Mathematics, 1874); also "Greek Geometry from Thales to Euclid" (Hermathena, vol. iii., No. V., 1877; vol. vi., No. XIII., 1887), and has collected these articles and published them in a volume with the same title ("Dublin University Press Series," 1889). He has also contributed "Ptolemy" (Claudius Ptolemæus) and other articles to the last edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." Permanent address: St. Mary's, Galway.

ALMA-TADEMA, Lawrence, R.A., R.W.S., H.R.S., F.S.A., painter, was born at Dronryp, in the Netherlands, Jan. 8, 1836. His father was Pieter Tadema, a notary. He was intended for one of the learned professions, and in training for it the works of the ancient classical writers of course engrossed much of his attention. In 1852 he went to Antwerp, and entered the Academy there as a student. Afterwards he placed himself with the late Baron Henry Leys, whom he assisted in painting several of the large pictures with which the Baron's name is associated. Subsequently he came to London, where he has resided for many years. He obtained a gold medal at Paris in 1864; a second-class medal at the International

Exhibition at Paris in 1867; a gold medal at Berlin in 1872, and the grand medal in 1874. Mr. Alma-Tadema became a member of the Academy of Fine Arts at Amsterdam in 1862; Knight of the Order of Leopold (Belgium) in 1866; Knight of the Dutch Lion in 1868; Knight First Class of the Order of St. Michael of Bavaria in 1869; Member of the Royal Academy of Munich in 1871; Knight of the Legion of Honour (France) in 1873; Member of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours in 1873; and Member of the Royal Academy of Berlin in 1874. In January 1873 he received letters of denization from the Queen of England, having resolved to reside permanently in this country. He was nominated a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour in 1873; and elected an Associate of the Royal Academy of London, Jan. 26, 1876. In the latter year he was also elected a Knight of the Third Class of the Golden Lion of Nassau; in 1877 a Knight of the Third Class of the Crown of Prussia, and an Hon. Member of the Royal Scottish Academy; in 1878 he obtained a first-class medal at the Paris International Exhibition, and he was nominated an Officer of the Legion of Honour in the same year. Mr. Alma-Tadema was elected a Royal Academician June 19, 1879. He is an Hon. Member of the Royal Academies of Madrid, Vienna, Stockholm, and Naples. The Emperor of Germany, in January 1881, appointed him a foreign Knight of the Order Pour le Mérite (Art and Sciences Division); and in the following month the French Academy of Fine Arts elected him its London correspondent in the section of Painting. His principal paintings are: "Entrance to a Roman Theatre," 1866; "Agrippina visiting the Ashes of Germanicus," 1866; "A Roman Dance," 1866; "The Mummy," 1867; "Tarquinius Superbus," 1867; "The Siesta," 1868; "Phidias and the Elgin Marbles," 1868; "Flowers," 1868; "Flower Market," 1868; "A Roman Amateur," 1868; "Pyrrhic Dance," 1869; "A Negro," 1869; "The Convalescent," 1869; "A Wine Shop," 1869; "A Juggler," 1870; "A Roman Amateur," 1870; "The Vintage," 1870; "A Roman Emperor," 1871; "Une Fête intime," 1871; "The Greek Pottery," 1871; "Reproaches," 1872; "The Mummy" (Roman period), 1872; "The Improvisatore," 1872; "A Halt," 1872; "Death of the Firstborn," 1872; "Greek Wine," 1872; "The Dinner," 1873; "The Siesta," 1873; "The Cherries," 1873; "Fishing," 1873; "Joseph Overseer of Pharaoh's Granaries," 1874; "A Sculpture Gallery," 1874; "A Picture Gallery," 1874; "Autumn," 1874; "Good Friends," 1874; "On the Steps of the Capitol," 1874; "Water Pets," 1875; "The Sculpture Gallery," 1875; "An Audience at Agrippa's," 1876; "After the Dance," 1876; "Cleopatra," 1876; "The Seasons" (4 pictures), 1877; "Between Hope and Fear," 1877; "A Sculptor's Model" (Venus Esquilina), "A Love Missile," 1878; "A Hearty Welcome," "Down to the River," "Pamona Festival," "In the Time of Constantine," 1879; "Spring Festival," "Not at Home," "Fredegonda," 1880; "Sappho," 1881; "An Oleander," and "The Way to the Temple" (his diploma work), 1883; "The Emperor Hadrian visiting a British Pottery," 1884; "A Reading from Homer," 1885; "An Apodyterium," 1886; "The Roses of Heliogabalus," 1888; "At the Shrine of Venus," and "A Dedication to Bacchus," 1889; "Comparisons," 1893; "At the Close of a Joyful Day," 1894; "Spring," 1895; "Whispering Noon," and "The Coliseum," 1896; "Watching," and "Her Eyes are with her Thoughts," &c., 1897; and "The Conversion of Paula," 1898. At the Grosvenor Gallery in 1876 he exhibited a series of three pictures: "Architecture," "Sculpture," and "Painting," also "Cherries." A special exhibition of his pictures was held at the Grosvenor Gallery in 1883. He received the Fine Art Medal of Honour at the Paris Exhibition, 1889. By his first wife he had two daughters, one of whom, Miss Laurence Alma-Tadema, is the author of "Love's Martyr," a novel; "The Wings of Icarus," a novel; a translation of Maeterlinck's "Pelleas et Mélisandre"; and a volume of poems, "Realms of Unknown Kings"; and the other, Miss Anna Alma-Tadema, has made a brilliant début as a water-colour painter, gaining the second medal at the Paris Exhibition in 1889. His second wife, whom he married in 1871, was Miss Laura Theresa, youngest daughter of Dr. George Epps. This lady is an accomplished artist, and has exhibited several pictures at the Royal Academy, at the Society of French Artists, at the Grosvenor Gallery, and New Gallery. She won the gold medal at Berlin in 1896. Addresses: 17 Grove End Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.; and Athenæum.

ALMOND, Hely Hutchinson, M.A., LL.D., was born at Glasgow on Aug. 12, 1832, and is the son of the Rev. George Almond. He was educated at Glasgow University and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he obtained first-class Honours in both Classical and Mathematical Moderations, and second-class Honours in both the final schools of Lit. Hum. and Mathematics. He is an Hon. LL.D. of Glasgow. He was appointed Second Master of Merchiston Castle School in 1858, and became Head Master of Loretto School in 1862. Mr. Almond is also the author of the following: "Sermons by a Lay Headmaster," 1886 and 1892; "Edinburgh Health Lectures," 1884; "Football as a Moral Agent," published in the December 1893 number of the Nineteenth Century, "English Prose Extracts," 1895. He was married in 1876 to Eleanor Frances, daughter of Canon Tristram. Address: North Esk Lodge, Musselburgh.

AMAGAT, Emile Hilaire, was born in 1841 at St. Satur, near Sancerre, a village in the Department of Cher. His first intention was to become a manufacturing chemist, which calling, however, he soon abandoned, and made up his mind to enter the profession of teaching. His early struggles were hard, and it was under difficult circumstances that he obtained the various degrees which the University of France grants. He was for some years assistant to the celebrated chemist Berthelot, at the College of France. He lived in Switzerland, and was a master at the Lycée of Fribourg from 1867 to 1872, using this opportunity for composing his Doctoral thesis, which he presented at Paris in 1872. He taught chemistry for five years at the old normal school of Cluny, and in 1877 he became Professor of Physics in the free university of Lyons. This institution was then in course of formation, and he created there the department of Physics, in which he carried out his principal experiments, and recorded their results. He returned to Paris in 1891, and became an assistant at the École Polytechnique, where he is at the present time occupied in examining candidates for admission to the school. He has been a Member of the Institute of France since 1889, was elected a Member of the Royal Society of London and of that of Edinburgh in 1897, and is a Member of the Dutch Society of Sciences, an Hon. Member of the Philosophical Society of Manchester and of the Scientific Society of Brussels. His principal experiments are connected with the study of the elasticity and expansion of fluids, which he observed under such conditions of temperature, and especially of pressure, as had hardly been reached up till that time in recent investigations. His most important memoir is the one which he published in 1893, and which recapitulates the whole of the laws relating to the statics of liquids and gases. These laws were the outcome of his experiments. He has also published several memoirs relating to the elasticity of solids. Since 1894 he has particularly endeavoured to deduce the logical inferences resulting from his experimental investigations; he has published, with this idea, his researches on the variation of the specific heats of fluids under the influence of temperature and pressure, and his researches on the internal pressure of fluids. All his writings have been published in the "Comptes Rendus" of the Academy of Sciences, and most of his memoirs have been given in full in the "Annales de Chimie et de Physique." Address: École Polytechnique, Paris.

AMPTHILL, Lord, Oliver Arthur Villiers Russell, B.A., J.P., son of the 1st Lord Ampthill, the well-known ambassador, was born in Rome on Feb. 19, 1869. He was educated at Eton and New College, Oxford, and was President of the University Union Society in 1891. In politics he is a Liberal Unionist, and he contested Fulham in the L.C.C. election of 1895 as a Moderate. He was Assistant Private Secretary to the Right Hon. J. Chamberlain, Colonial Secretary, from 1895 to 1897, and in the latter year was appointed Private Secretary to that statesman. At the present time (June 1898) he is engaged on the Sugar Bounties Conference, which is sitting in Brussels. Lord Ampthill has a very considerable rowing reputation, inasmuch as he was a member of the Eton Eight from 1886 to 1888, and was their captain from 1887 to 1889; whilst at Oxford he rowed in the University Eight from 1889 to 1891, and was the President of the O.U.B.C. in 1891; he is, moreover, at the present time President of the London Rowing Club. He was formerly a Lieutenant in the Royal 1st Devon Yeomanry Cavalry, and is now a Captain in the 3rd Battalion of the Bedfordshire Regiment. In 1894 he was married to Margaret, daughter of the 6th Earl Beauchamp, and has a son and heir, John Hugo, born in 1896. Address: 109 Park Street, W.

ANCASTER, Earl of, The Right Hon. Gilbert Henry Heathcote Drummond Willoughby, was born in 1830, and succeeded his father as 2nd Baron Aveland in 1867, and his mother as 24th Baron Willoughby de Eresby in 1888. He was educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge. From 1852 to 1856 he represented Boston in the House of Commons as a Conservative, and also sat for Rutland in the same interest from 1856 to 1867. He is Joint Hereditary Lord Great Chamberlain of England, and was created Earl of Ancaster in 1892. He is married to Evelyn Elizabeth, second daughter of the 10th Marquis of Huntly, and has a son and heir, Lord Willoughby de Eresby, M.P. for the Horncastle Division of Lincolnshire. Addresses: Normanton Park, Stamford; Drummond Castle, Crieff, Perthshire; and 12 Belgrave Square, S.W.

ANDERSON, Mrs. Elizabeth Garrett, M.D., daughter of Newson Garrett, Esq., of Aldeburgh, Suffolk, was born in London in 1836, educated at home and at a private school. Miss Elizabeth Garrett began to study medicine at Middlesex Hospital in 1860, completed the medical curriculum at St. Andrews, Edinburgh, and the London Hospital, and passed the examination at Apothecaries' Hall, receiving the diploma of L.S.A. in October 1865. She was appointed General Medical Attendant to St. Mary's Dispensary in June 1866, obtained the degree of M.D. from the University of Paris in 1870, and in the same year was appointed one of the visiting physicians to the East London Hospital for Children and Dispensary for Women. On Nov. 29, 1870, Miss Garrett was elected a Member of the London School Board, being returned by a large majority at the head of the poll for Marylebone. She was married Feb. 9, 1871, to Mr. J. G. S. Anderson, of the Orient line of steamships to Australia. In 1872 Mrs. Anderson aided in the establishment and organisation of the New Hospital for Women, then at 222 Marylebone Road, and now at 144 Euston Road, of which the acting medical staff is composed entirely of women. Mrs. Anderson has been for some years its Senior Visiting Physician. For twenty-three years she was Lecturer on Medicine at the London School of Medicine for Women, Brunswick Square. She is still Dean of the school. She was for many years on the Councils of the North London Collegiate School for Girls, and of Bedford College. Mrs. Garrett-Anderson continues to practise in London as a physician for women and children. She has written various papers on medical and social questions, and is a Member of the British Medical Association. In 1897 Mrs. Anderson was elected President of the East Anglian Branch of this Association. She was also for some years President of the Association of Registered Medical Women. Permanent addresses: 4 Upper Berkeley Street, Portman Square; and Westhill, Aldeburgh, Suffolk.

ANDERSON, Dr. John, LL.D., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., F.R.G.S., &c., son of the late Mr. Thomas Anderson, Secretary to the National Bank of Scotland, Edinburgh, was born in that city on Oct. 4, 1833; educated at the George Square Academy and the Hill Street Institution and finally at the Edinburgh University. He took the degree of M.D. in 1861, and received a gold medal for his thesis, entitled

"Observations in Zoology." Immediately after his graduation he was appointed Professor of Natural Science in the Free Church College, Edinburgh, but he resigned the office in 1864, having been offered the Curatorship of a Museum which the Government of India intended to found in Calcutta, and of which the collections of the Asiatic Society of Bengal were to form the nucleus. He arrived in India in July 1864, and in the following year was appointed Superintendent of the Indian Museum, and two or three years afterwards he was also given the Chair of Comparative Anatomy in the Medical College, Calcutta. In 1868 he was selected by the Government of India to accompany an expedition to Western China, via British and Independent Burmah, in the capacity of Scientific Officer. Again, in 1874, he was chosen by the Government of India to proceed once more to Western China in the same capacity as on the former expedition, and with instructions to advance from Bhamó to Shanghai. This expedition was attacked by the Chinese, and was obliged to retreat to Burmah; Augustus Raymond Margary having been treacherously murdered at Manwyne. In 1881 Dr Anderson was sent by the Trustees of the Indian Museum, Calcutta, to investigate the Marine Zoology of the Mergui Archipelago, off the coast of Tenasserim. In 1887 he retired from the service of the Government of India. Besides numerous papers on zoology, a list of which is to be found in the Royal Society's Catalogue of scientific papers, Dr. Anderson is the author of the following independent works: "A Report on the Expedition to Western China via Bhamó," published by the Government of India, 1871; "Mandalay to Momien," an account of the two expeditions to Western China, the first under Major (afterwards Colonel Sir Edward) Sladen, and the second under the command of Colonel Horace Browne, 1875; "Anatomical and Zoological Researches," including an account of the zoological results of the two expeditions to Western China, 1868-69 and 1875, 4to, with 1 vol. plates, 1878; "Catalogue of the Mammalia in the Indian Museum," Part I. published by the Trustees of the Indian Museum, 8vo, 1879; "Handbook to the Archaeological Collections of the Indian Museum, Calcutta," 2 vols., 8vo, published by the Trustees, 1881 and 1882. The scientific results of his researches in the Mergui Archipelago were published by the Linnean Society of London in vols. 21 and 22 of their Journal, which were devoted exclusively to the subject, the various animal groups having been worked out by specialists. Dr. Anderson described the Mammals, Birds, Reptiles, and Batrachia, and gave an exhaustive account of the Selungs, the human inhabitants of the islands, adding a vocabulary of their language. And in connection with the same expedition to Mergui, a town which was once in Siamese territory, he published in 1890, in Trübner's Oriental Series, a full account of "English Intercourse with Siam in the Seventeenth Century." Dr. Anderson is a Fellow of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh, of the Linnean Society, and the Zoological Society of London, of the Royal Geographical Society of London, of the Society of Antiquaries of London and of Edinburgh, of the Royal Physical and Botanical Societies of Edinburgh, and of the Asiatic Society of Bengal. He is also a Fellow of the Calcutta University, and is a Corresponding Fellow of the Ethnological Society of Italy. In 1885 the University of Edinburgh conferred on him the honorary degree of LL.D. In 1896 Dr. Anderson published a small volume on "The Herpetology of Arabia," and he is now engaged issuing a work on "The Fauna of Egypt." The first vol., on "The Reptiles and Batrachians of Egypt," is illustrated by fifty-two 4to plates, the majority of the subjects having been drawn from life.

ANDERSON, Mary. See NAVARRO, MADAME ANTONIO DE.

ANDERSON, William, F.R.C.S., born in London on Dec. 18, 1842, is the son of Mr. William Henry Anderson. He was educated at the City of London School, St. Thomas's Hospital, and in Paris. After passing through his medical career at St. Thomas's Hospital, where he became Cheselden Medallist, he was appointed in 1873 Professor of Anatomy and Surgery at the Japanese Naval and Medical College at Tokio. In the following year he became Medical Officer to the British Legation at Tokio, and an adviser to the Sanitary Department of the Japanese Home Office. While organising the Naval Medical Service, and studying the diseases peculiar to the country, he devoted his leisure to investigating the history and technique of the pictorial Arts of China and Japan, forming a large collection of illustrative paintings and engravings, which were afterwards acquired by the British Museum. Returning to England in 1880 to take the appointment of Assistant-Surgeon and Lecturer on Anatomy at St. Thomas's Hospital, he practised as a consulting surgeon, and was elected full Surgeon to the Hospital in 1891, Hunterian Professor of Surgery and Pathology at the Royal College of Surgeons in the same year, and Professor of Anatomy in the Royal Academy of Arts in 1892. In the same year he took part in the formation of the Japan Society, and was elected its first Chairman of Council. He became an Examiner in Surgery at the University of London and at the Royal College of Surgeons of England in 1894, and Vice-President of the Anatomical Society of Great Britain and Ireland in 1895. He is a member of several learned societies, and an Hon. Member of the American Society of Anatomists, and of the Japanese Society for the Advancement of Medical Science (Sei-I-Kwai). In 1895 he was honoured by the Emperor of Japan with the decoration of the Third Class Order of the Rising Sun for services in connection with medical education in Japan and with the literature of Japanese Art. His published works include numerous standard contributions to the medical press, and to various literary and artistic Magazines and Reviews; a short essay on the history of Japanese painting in the Transactions of the Asiatic Society of Japan for 1875 (the first outline of the subject in any European language); a "Treatise on the Pictorial Arts of Japan" (1886); a descriptive and historical catalogue of the collection of Japanese and Chinese pictures in the British Museum (1886); and a monograph on Japanese wood engravings (1895). His collection of Japanese and Chinese paintings was exhibited in the White Gallery of the British Museum in 1888-89, and a collection of engravings and illustrated books at the Burlington Fine Arts Club in 1890. Address: 2 Harley Street, Cavendish Square, W.

ANDERSON, General William Warden, second son of the late Sir George Anderson, K.C.B., Governor of the Mauritius and of Ceylon, was born at Surat, in India, 1824, and appointed Cornet in the 2nd Bombay Lancers in 1840. He served through the Punjab campaign of 1848, and was present at the siege and capture of Mooltan, as well as the siege of Awah and of Kotah, 1857. He served throughout the Indian Mutiny, 1857, and was severely wounded in the engagement with the rebels at Gwalior. From 1858 to 1867 he acted as Assistant-Political Resident, and Superintendent of the Guicowar's contingent of horse in Katywar. From 1867 to 1874 he was Political Agent in that province. He was promoted to Brevet-Major for services at Gwalior against the rebels, 1857 (medal with clasps); Major-General, 1878; Lieutenant-General, 1882; General, 1888. He more than once received the thanks of the Governor-General of India for the efficient manner in which he had discharged the duties of Political Agent in Katywar.

ANDERSON, Sir William, K.C.B., F.R.S., D.C.L., J.P., Director-General of Royal Ordnance Factories, was born at St. Petersburg on Jan. 5, 1835. He obtained his early education at the High Commercial School in his native city, and when he left in 1849 he was head of the school, silver medallist, and, although a British subject, he had conferred upon him the freedom of the city of St. Petersburg. In 1849 Mr. Anderson became a matriculated student in the Applied Sciences Department of King's College, London, and went through the complete three years' course, taking many prizes, and leaving in 1851 with the degree of Associate, to become a pupil of the late Sir William Fairbairn at Manchester. He remained with Messrs. William Fairbairn and Sons for three years, and during that time was much employed in looking after important outwork. In 1855 Mr. Anderson entered into partnership with Messrs. Courtney & Stephens, of Dublin, and remained with them till 1864, being engaged chiefly in the construction of bridges, cranes, signals, and other fittings for railways. He devoted much attention to the theory of diagonally braced girders, then but little understood, and contributed several papers to the Institution of Civil Engineers of Ireland, of which body he became President in 1863. In the autumn of 1864 Mr. Anderson removed to London, joining the old-established firm of Easton and Amos, with the object of building new works on the Thames at Erith, the old premises in Southwark Street having been found inconvenient for large and heavy work. Mr. Anderson, under whose direct management the Erith works have been since their erection, became eventually the head of the firm of Easton & Anderson. He is a Member of Council of the Institute of Civil Engineers, a Vice-President of the Institute of Mechanical Engineers, a Visitor of the Royal Institution, a Vice-President of the Society of Arts, and has contributed numerous papers on a variety of subjects to these bodies. His knowledge of the Russian language has enabled him to abstract many interesting papers for the "Foreign Abstracts" published by the Institution of Civil Engineers. He has also translated the remarkable works of Chernoff on steel, and the researches of the late General Kalakontsky, on the internal stresses in cast-iron and steel. He was selected by the Institute of Civil Engineers to deliver one of the heat series of lectures, namely, that on the "Generation of Steam"; by the School of Military Engineering at Chatham, to lecture on "Hydraulic Machinery and on Hydro-pneumatic Moncrieff Gun-Carriage"; and delivered for the Society of Arts, under the Howard Trust, a course of lectures on the "Conversion of Heat into Work." In August 1889 he was appointed by Mr. Stanhope (Secretary of State for War) Director-General of the Royal Ordnance Factories, which comprise the laboratory, the carriage departments, and the gun factory at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, the Royal Gunpowder Factory at Waltham Abbey, and the small-arms factories at Enfield and Birmingham. The University of Durham has conferred on him the honorary degree of D.C.L., and he was in 1889 elected President of section G of the British Association. In June 1895 he was made C.B., and in May 1897 K.C.B. He is married to Emma, daughter of the Rev. J. R. Brown, Knighton, Radnorshire. Address: Royal Arsenal, Woolwich.

ANDRÉE, Dr. S. A., Swedish aeronaut, began studying air currents in 1877 when on a voyage to the United States, with the idea of crossing the Atlantic in a balloon. Since 1892 he experimented in Sweden with the help of King Oscar. His now famous balloon, in which he and his two companions, Dr. Strindberg and Herr Fraenkel, started, was constructed under the superintendence of M. Henri Lachambre, and was taken to the N.W. corner of Spitzbergen, with the object of crossing the North Polar area. Herr Andrée went there in 1896, when he did not consider the atmospheric conditions favourable enough for his enterprise; but on July 11, 1897, he started on his hazardous voyage, and only once has reliable information reached the expectant civilised world since that date, when the balloon disappeared behind the ice hummocks of the Frozen Sea. As in the case of Franklin, we consider Herr Andrée to be alive till we have positive proof of his death. His balloon was so constructed as to be capable of remaining in the air for over fifty days, but he took provisions for only four months. He also took thirty-two carrier-pigeons, and told his friends not to be alarmed if they did not hear from him for a year. Of these pigeons, only one has brought a message; it was shot near Spitzbergen on July 22, 1897, and carried a message dated July 13, stating that all was well. It was sent off in 82° 2' N. lat., 15° 5' E. long., and so in two days the balloon had advanced 187 miles in a N.N.E. direction. He hoped to make land in Siberia or Alaska, but if he descended on the ice N. of 82° it is doubtful whether he would be able to secure a sufficiency of food by means of his gun. Several rumours have reached Europe of his having arrived at the Pole, but as yet none have received confirmation (August 1898).

ANDREWS, Thomas, F.R.S., F.R.S.E., M.Inst.C.E., F.C.S., &c., was born Feb. 16, 1847, in Sheffield, and is the only son of the late Mr. Thomas Andrews of the same town. He was educated at Broomhank School by the late Rev. Thomas Howarth, M.A., and subsequently by private tuition, and was carefully trained in metallurgy, mining, and engineering by his father. On the death of his father in 1871 he succeeded him as proprietor of the Wortley Iron-works (one of the oldest-established iron-works in England), and the Wortley Silkstone Colliery. In addition to conducting and managing the ironworks, Mr. Andrews has rendered excellent service to metallurgical, physical, and engineering science, by a series of original researches, extending over many years, and connected with various branches of the above sciences. He has determined the relative corrobidity of wrought iron and modern steels in sea-water and in tidal streams, and shown that iron corrodes much less than steels. He has made elaborate researches, published by the Institute of Civil Engineers, on the "Effects of Temperature on the Strength of Railway Axles, in an Investigation extending over Seven Years," and has therein determined, on a large experimental scale, the resistance of metals to sudden concussion at varying temperatures down to zero Fahrenheit; and indicated the influence of climatic temperature changes on the strength of railway material, and at the same time has ascertained some of the causes leading to accidental fractures on railways. He has also studied the influence of sudden chilling on the physical properties of metals. He has conducted numerous other original investigations on the electromotive force between vessels at high temperatures, &c., and also an intricate research on "Electro-chemical Effects on Magnetising Iron," Parts I., II., III.; the results of the latter research have shown that magnetised iron or steel is electro-positive to unmagnetised in certain chemical solutions. In another part of this research Mr. Andrews observed that a current was produced when the opposite poles of two electrically connected magnets of approximately equal strength were immersed in solutions of various chemical substances, the north pole being generally positive to the south pole. Mr. Andrews has written papers on the "Passive State of Iron and Steel," discovering in these researches that the passive state of iron was influenced by magnetism; and he also determined the relative passivity of the various modern steels, and the influence of chemical composition, physical structure, &c., on the passivity of the metals. Mr. Andrews has also experimented on the "Heat Dilatation of Metals from Very Low Temperatures." In the course of another research he has made determinations of the plasticity of ice, and also on the relative conductivity of ice and snow, and on the contractibility of ice at low temperatures. He has also contributed various articles to Iron, The Engineer, Chemical News, Nature, Poggendorff's Annalen, and other periodicals. The results of these numerous researches are embodied in about thirty-three papers, published in the Proceedings of the Royal Society, London; Transactions and Proceedings of the Royal Society, Edinburgh; Proceedings of the Institute of Civil Engineers; Transactions of the Society of Engineers; Transactions of the Midland Mining Institute; British Association Reports; Transactions of the Institute of Marine Engineers, &c. For some of these papers Mr. Andrews was awarded at different times by the Institute of Civil Engineers a Telford Medal and three Telford Premiums successively, and also a premium by the Society of Engineers. In 1895 the Society of Engineers awarded him the Bessemer Premium. He was in 1888 elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, London, and has also been elected Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, Member of the Institute of Civil Engineers, Fellow of the Chemical Society, &c. Numerous quotations are made from his metallurgical researches in the recent valuable standard work on the "Metallurgy of Steel," by Henry M. Howe, Boston, U.S.A. He is patentee of an invention for hydraulic machinery in connection with the manufacture of iron. Mr. Andrews takes a practical interest in all Christian and educational labour, and has conducted large night-schools. In 1870 he married Mary Hannah, eldest daughter of the late Mr. Charles Stanley, of Rotherham. Address: Ravenscrag, Wortley, near Sheffield.

ANDREWS, The Right Hon. William Drennan, is a Judge in the Exchequer Division of the High Court of Justice, Ireland, and was sworn a Member of the Irish Privy Council in 1897.

ANGELL, James Burrill, American educator and statesman, was born at Scituate, Rhode Island, Jan. 7, 1829. He graduated at Brown University in 1849, and spent some time in Europe studying and travelling. On his return to America in 1853 he was appointed Professor of Modern Languages and Literature at Brown University, where he graduated. In 1860 he became editor of the Daily Journal of Providence, and retained that position until called to the Presidency of the University of Vermont in 1866. In 1871 he became President of the University of Michigan, an office he has since continued to fill, except during the years 1880-81, which he spent in China as Minister from the United States, and in 1897-98, when he was United States Minister to Turkey. In 1880-81 he was also chairman of a special commission to negotiate a treaty with China. This commission made a treaty in commercial matters, and also one on Chinese immigration.

ANGUS, Joseph, D.D., was born Jan. 16, 1816, at Bolam, Northumberland, and educated at King's College, Stepney College, and Edinburgh, where he graduated in 1836, taking the first prizes in nearly all his classes, and at the close of his course gaining the University Prize for an essay on "The Philosophy of Lord Bacon," open to all students, both literary and medical. In 1840 he was appointed Secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, and visited the West Indies on the churches in that island becoming independent of the Society. In 1849 he became President of Stepney College, which College was removed to Regent's Park in 1857. Dr. Angus, who was for several years English Examiner to the University of London and to the Indian Civil Service, is the author of the "Handbook of the Bible," "Handbook of the English Tongue," "English Literature," "Christ our Life," and several other works. He has also edited Butler's "Analogy and Sermons," with notes, and Dr. Wayland's "Moral Science." He was a member of the New Testament Company for the Revision of the Scriptures, and for ten years a member of the London School Board. In recent years the College at Regent's Park has made provision for largely extending its work; and, in addition to the foundation of several scholarships, the sum of £30,000 has been contributed to it, through Dr. Angus, for increasing its efficiency. Special chairs were founded, and more than one lectureship has been established.

ANHALT, Grand Duke of, Leopold Frédéric François Nicolas, was born at Dessau on April 29, 1831, and succeeded his father in 1871. He is a General of Prussian infantry, and a Knight of the Order of the Black Eagle. He was married to Antoinette, Princess of Saxe-Altenburg, in 1854, and his heir is the Hereditary Prince Leopold Frédéric, born in 1856, and married to Marie, Princess of Baden. The fifth son of the Grand Duke, Prince Aribert, was married at Windsor Castle in 1891 to the Princess Louise of Schleswig-Holstein, daughter of the Princess Christian, and granddaughter of Queen Victoria.

ANNANDALE, Charles, M.A., LL.D., was born in Kincardineshire on Aug. 6, 1843, and was educated at Aberdeen University. He is engaged in all kinds of literary work, and has edited several important works of reference, among which may be mentioned: "The Imperial Dictionary," Blackie's "Modern Cyclopædia," "The Popular Cyclopædia," "The Student's Dictionary," Burns's Works, &c. He was married in 1877. Address: 35 Queen Mary Avenue, Glasgow.

ANNANDALE, Professor Thomas, F.R.S.E., M.D., F.R.C.S. London and Edinburgh, and Member of many Foreign Societies, was born at Newcastle-on-Tyne, Feb. 2, 1838, and educated at the Newcastle Infirmary and the University of Edinburgh. He became private assistant to the late Professor Syme, Demonstrator of Anatomy in the University of Edinburgh, and Surgeon and Lecturer on Surgery to the Edinburgh Royal Infirmary. Dr. Annandale's high reputation as a practical and operating surgeon and teacher of surgery led to his appointment in October 1877 as Regius-Professor of Clinical Surgery in the University of Edinburgh. He is Senior Surgeon to the Royal Infirmary, Consulting Surgeon to the Royal Sick Children's Hospital and to the Royal Maternity Hospital; and is the author of "The Malformations, Diseases, and Injuries of the Fingers and Toes, and their Surgical Treatment," 1865, being the Jacksonian Prize Essay of the Royal College of Surgeons of London for 1864; "Abstracts of Surgical Principles," 1868-70, 2nd edit., 1876; "Clinical Surgical Lectures," 1874-75, reported in the Medical Times and British Medical Journal; "On the Pathology and Operative Treatment of Hip Disease," 1876; author of articles "Diseases of the Breast," "Internal Derangements of the Knee-joint, and their Treatment by Operation," "On the Removal of Bone to Promote Healing of Wounds," and numerous contributions to professional periodicals. Address: 34 Charlotte Square, Edinburgh.

ANNENKOW, General Michael, son of General Michael Annenkow, and constructor of the Russian Central Asian Railroad, was born in 1838, and educated in St. Petersburg. He received his first commission in 1863, in the mounted Pioneers of the Guard. He afterwards entered the Russian Staff College; and served as a staff-captain during the Polish insurrection; at the end of which he became colonel, though only twenty-eight years of age. He spent four years in Poland, in police service, and in 1870 was attached to the German armies during the campaign in France; and was afterwards given the chief direction of troops in Russia, and organised the railway battalions. Subsequently he was one of Skobloff's staff officers in the Merv campaign. Not only the Samarqand line, but several other Russian strategic lines are due to him. To him is due a project for the creation of a Trans-Siberian Railway, which is to extend from Moscow to the borders of China. During a sojourn in Paris in 1891 General Annenkow made his latest plans in this direction known to the French press. Since then his ideas have taken concrete shape in the greatest railway scheme in the world, being over 4700 miles long, and costing over £55,000,000 sterling. By means of this line Russia will soon be connected with Vladivostock and Port Arthur, on the Pacific Ocean. The Trans-Siberian Railway has now reached the Manchurian frontier, and the length in Chinese territory will be 950 miles.

ANSON, Sir William Reynell, D.C.L., son of the late Sir John W. H. Anson, 2nd Bart., and Elizabeth Catherine, second daughter of General Sir Denis Park, K.C.B., was born on Nov. 14, 1843, at Avisford House, Walberton, Sussex. He was educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford, where he obtained a first-class in the school of Lit. Hum. He graduated B.A. in 1866, M.A. in 1869, B.C.L. in 1875, and D.C.L. in 1881. He was a Fellow of All Souls' College from 1867 to 1881, and in the latter year was elected Warden of that society. He was called to the Bar in 1869, and held the appointment of Vinerian Reader in English Law at Oxford from 1874 to 1881. He was an Alderman for the city of Oxford in 1892, was appointed a Justice of the Peace for Oxfordshire in 1883, and was Chairman of the Quarter-Sessions in 1894. He was elected a Fellow of Eton College in 1883. Sir W. Anson is the author of "Principles of the English Law of Contract," and "Law and Custom of the Constitution," Part I. "Parliament," Part II. "The Crown." Addresses: All Souls' College, Oxford; and Athenæum.

ANSTRUTHER, Henry Torrens, M.P., second son of the late Colonel Sir R. Anstruther, Bart., M.P., was born in 1860, and was educated at Eton and at the University of Edinburgh. He was called to the Scotch Bar in 1885, and was elected Liberal-Unionist Member for the St. Andrews Burghs in 1886. He was re-elected for that constituency in 1895, and in the same year, on the formation of the present administration, he was appointed a Lord of the Treasury, and second Whip. He now, however, fills the office of principal Liberal-Unionist Whip. Mr. Anstruther was at one time a Lieutenant in the Fife Light Horse Volunteers. He was married in 1889 to Eva, daughter of the 4th Baron Sudeley. Addresses: 6 Chester Street, S.W.; and Gillingshill, Pittenweem, Fife.

ANTHOPOULO, Pasha. See COSTAKI ANTHOPOULO PASHA.

ARABI, Ahmed, the leader of the military insurrection in Egypt, 1882, was born of a fellah family, resident in a small village in the province of Charkîh, in the eastern portion of Lower Egypt, nearly on the borders of the Desert. He was enlisted in the army during the reign of Saïd Pacha, who initiated the system of replacing the foreign officers by native Egyptians. Arabi was one of those thus selected, and he rose rapidly in rank; but the Viceroy was capricious, and one day he had Arabi punished with some hundred blows of a stick, and relegated him to half-pay. Arabi, who had learned to read and write, and had compatriots at Ezher, the religious university of Cairo, went thither to study science, and although he could not complete a course which requires about twenty years to accomplish, he learnt sufficient to enable him to pass for a savant among his colleagues in the army. Ismail Pacha restored him to the army, and from this time Arabi was regarded by his Egyptian colleagues as a pious and learned man, his conduct being, according to Mussulman morality, irreproachable. He married the daughter of the nurse of El Hami Pacha, son of Abbas Pacha, who had been brought up in the Prince's palace; this afforded him somewhat of a competence. During the Abyssinian campaign he managed to have the charge of the transport, and remained at Massama to forward the convoys. After the campaign he was employed in the transport of sugar from the Khedive's factories in Upper Egypt, and, having a quarrel with the manager of the Khedive's property, he returned to Cairo, and was again replaced in the army, being at the time lieutenant-colonel. He became the intimate counsellor of Ali Bey El Roubi, who was the means of raising Arabi from his obscurity. During the years 1876-78 he organised a sort of secret society among the fellah officers, which was not noticed in consequence of the events that were then engaging the attention of the Khedive and the State. Some weeks previous to the coup d'état of Ismail Pacha against the European Ministry, several officers, among whom were Arabi and El Roubi, went to Ali Pacha Moubarek, a fellah of Charkieh, and proposed to place him at their head to overthrow the Khedive and the European Ministry. Ali Pacha Moubarek, who was a member of the Ministry of Wilson and Blignières, related the whole to the Khedive, who had an interview with the society of El Roubi and Arabi, and with their aid made the famous revolution which brought about the fall of the European Ministry of 1879. Ismail Pacha would, doubtless, have suppressed the society had he remained a week or a fortnight longer in Egypt. At the accession of Tewfik, the bulk of the public were yet ignorant of the name of Arabi. In a short time afterwards the Khedive made him colonel, and entrusted him with a regiment. Ali Bey El Roubi was sent to Mansourah as President of the Tribunal of First Instance; but the conspiracy could not be destroyed, especially because no one in the Government, except perhaps the Khedive himself, considered that it had any real importance. At this time began the intrigues of the ex-Khedive, of Halim Pacha, and the Porte, and each party endeavoured to get hold of the only power that appeared to remain in Egypt, that is to say, this conspiracy of officers, which had drawn to it a large number of non-commissioned officers, and even of soldiers, by promising them an increase of pay, with better clothing and rations. The tactics of Arabi were to awaken the interest of the people in the movement which he was preparing, and to which he gave the name of "The Awakening of the National Party." In September 1881 Arabi appeared at the head of a military and popular revolt, compelling the Khedive, Tewfik Pacha, to dismiss his former Ministry, and to convene a sort of Parliament called the Assembly of Notables, which met about the beginning of 1882. The affair of September 8 resulted in the overthrow of Riaz Pacha's Administration, which was unpopular because it was supposed to be too deferential to certain foreign interests. Cherif Pacha, who was thereupon appointed Prime Minister, pledged the Khedive to establish a Parliamentary Government. A manifesto was issued by the "National Party" on Dec. 18, 1881, containing an exposition of their views and purposes. They professed loyalty to the Sultan both as Imperial Suzerain and as Caliph of the Mussulman community, but would never suffer Egypt to be reduced to a Turkish Pachalic, and they claimed the guarantee of England and of Europe for the administrative independence of Egypt. They also professed loyalty to the Khedive, but would not acquiesce in a despotic rule, and they insisted upon his promise to govern by the advice of a representative assembly. At the beginning of 1882 the Khedive and Cherif Pacha called together the Assembly of Notables. Arabi was then appointed Under-Secretary for the War Department, and was raised to the rank of Pacha. The Assembly of Notables wanted to vote the Budget. This claim was refused by the Khedive's Government on account of the financial Controllers, and hence arose the Egyptian crisis. Arabi and the army had, however, a monopoly of power. The Khedive was forced to accept a National Ministry, and the Organic Law, adopted in defiance of the protests of the Controllers, placed the Budgets in the hands of the Notables, thus subverting the authority of England and France embodied in the Control. Arabi, now substantially Dictator, and supported almost undisguisedly by the Sultan, proceeded to more daring measures. Eventually the English Government felt obliged to intervene by armed force. Then followed the bombardment of Alexandria by the fleet under the command of Sir Beauchamp Seymour (July 11, 1882), and subsequently (Sept. 13) the decisive defeat of Arabi and his army at Tel-el-Kebir by the British troops under Sir Garnet Wolseley. Arabi and his lieutenant, Toulba Pacha, fled to Cairo, where they surrendered to General Drury Lowe. It was intended at first to charge Arabi with murder and incendiarism, but he was actually brought to trial on the simple charge of rebellion (December 3). He pleaded guilty, and was condemned to death, but immediately afterwards the sentence was commuted by the Khedive to perpetual exile from Egypt and its dependencies. Ceylon having been chosen as the place of banishment, Arabi, with other leaders in the rebellion, were landed at Colombo, Jan. 16, 1883.

ARBUTHNOT, Sir Alexander J., K.C.S.I., C.I.E., son of the then Bishop of Killaloe, was born in Ireland on Oct. 11, 1822. He was educated at Rugby and at the old East India College at Haileybury, and entered the Madras Civil Service in 1842. Appointed a Member of the Council of Madras in 1867, he filled that position until 1872. Subsequently he was a Member of the Governor-General's Council from 1875 to 1880; and eventually he became a Member of the Council of India in 1887. He published in 1881 "Selections from the Minutes, and other Official Writings, of Major-General Sir Thomas Munro, Governor of Madras," with an introductory Memoir and Notes. He was created a K.C.S.I. in 1873; is Vice-Chancellor of Madras and Calcutta Universities; and is a Fellow of the Royal Historical Society. Sir A. Arbuthnot is married to Frederica, daughter of Major-General Fearon, O.B. Addresses: Newtown House, near Newbury; and Athenæum.

ARCH, Joseph, leader of the agricultural labourers' movement, was born at Barford, Warwickshire, on Nov. 10, 1826. His father was a labourer, and he himself had, from an early age, to work in the fields for his living, beginning life, like Cobbett, as a scarer of birds. He married the daughter of a mechanic, and at her suggestion he added to his slender stock of book-learning. He used often to sit up late at night reading books, whilst smoking his pipe by the kitchen fire. In this way he contrived to acquire some knowledge of logic, mensuration, and surveying. He likewise perused a large number of religious works, and for some years he occupied a good deal of his spare time in preaching among the Primitive Methodists. When the movement arose among the agricultural labourers, he became its recognised leader. In 1872 he founded the National Agricultural Labourers' Union, of which he became President. He went through the principal agricultural districts of England, addressing crowded meetings of the labouring classes, and afterwards he visited Canada to inquire into the questions of labour and emigration. Having once or twice offered himself unsuccessfully as a candidate for a seat in Parliament, Mr. Arch was elected in 1885 Liberal member for North-west Norfolk, but after the dissolution of 1886 he was defeated by his former Conservative opponent, Lord Henry Bentinck. At the 1892 election he was returned for North-west Norfolk, and again in 1895. He has described himself as "The Prince of Wales's own M.P." In January 1898 appeared "The Life of Joseph Arch," edited by the Countess of Warwick. In this remarkable autobiography Mr. Arch describes his life and early home, and takes up his position in the following sentence: "I am all in favour of fostering the local spirit. Make a man proud of, and interested in, his birthplace or locality—make him feel he has a part in it—and you have started him on the road to good citizenship. Some will remain strongly local all their lives; others will broaden and widen from the local basis. The right and natural development is from home to neighbouring homes; then to the homes of the parish, the district, the county, the country, the empire, the world. But everything depends on individual effort; the man must help himself if he is to help others." Address: The Cottage, Barford, Warwick.

ARCHDALL, The Right Rev. Mervyn, D.D., Bishop of Killaloe, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin. Becoming Vicar of Templebreedy in 1863, he was appointed successively Rector of St. Luke's, Cork, in 1872; Dean of Cork in 1894; and Bishop of Killaloe in 1897. During the years 1872 to 1897 he acted as Examining Chaplain to Bishops Meade and Gregg of Cork, was Archdeacon of Cork from 1878 to 1894, and was made a Canon of St. Patrick's Cathedral in 1891. Address: Killaloe, Limerick.

ARCHER, James, R.S.A., was born in Edinburgh, June 10, 1824, and educated at the High School in that city. He received his art education in the school founded by the Honourable Board of Trustees for Manufactures in Scotland, and was appointed an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1850, and a full Academician in 1858. Mr. Archer, who left Scotland for London in 1862, first exhibited in the Royal Academy in the year 1850 a cartoon of a design of the Last Supper, followed by an oil picture of the same the year after. He made a series of pictures from the "Mort d'Arthur," of which one was exhibited in the Royal Academy, "The Mystic Sword Excalibur," and painted a series of pictures of children in costume, exhibited in the Royal Academy, of which "Maggie, you're Cheating," is the chief. He became a portrait painter in 1871, exhibiting a portrait of Colonel Sykes, M.P., from which time he painted many portraits, one of the principal being that of Sir Charles O. Trevelyan, and another that of Professor Blackie. Since that he has painted four large subject pictures: the first "The Worship of Dionysus"; "Dieu le vult, Peter the Hermit Preaching the First Crusade"; "In the Second Century, You! a Christian?" and the fourth, "St. Agnes, a Christian Martyr." In 1884 he went for a few months to the United States, where he painted James G. Blaine, who that year was the defeated candidate for the Presidency; and also Andrew Carnegie, the well-known Pittsburgh millionaire. In 1886 he went to India, where he remained for three years, spending the winters always in Calcutta. There he painted several of the native Rajahs, chiefly members of the well-known family of Tagore, one branch of which is an adherent to the reformed religious movement of the Brahmo Somaj. In Simla he painted Lady Dufferin in her silver-wedding dress, as well as her son, then Lord Clandeboye. There he also painted a posthumous portrait of Sir Charles Macgregor, and designed his commemorative medal. He returned to London in 1889. Among the portraits he painted after 1889 was one of Sir Charles U. Aitchison, just returned to England from his Governor-ship of the Punjab, the portrait being commissioned by the Rajah of Capurthala; and a posthumous portrait of the Earl of Dalhousie, painted for the city of Dundee, for whom he also painted their member, Sir John Leng. Among the pictures he has since painted are, "Music in the Gloamin'," "From the Ballad of Sir Patrick Spens," and "St. Bernard Preaching the Second Crusade." Permanent address: Haslemere, Surrey.

ARCHER, William, was born in 1856 at Perth, Scotland, and is the son of Thomas Archer, C.M.G., late Agent-General for Queensland in London. Educated mainly in Edinburgh, he took the M.A. degree, Edinburgh University, in 1876. He commenced journalism as leader-writer on the Edinburgh Evening News from 1875 to 1878, with an interval of a year, during which he visited Australia. He published in Edinburgh "The Fashionable Tragedian," 1877; a pamphlet written in collaboration with Mr. Robert W. Lowe. He subsequently became dramatic critic of the London Figaro, then edited by Mr. James Mortimer, 1879-81. He is best known as a translator of Ibsen. He translated from the Norwegian, with slight alterations, Henrik Ibsen's "Pillars of Society," produced at the Gaiety Theatre, London, by Mr. W. H. Vernon, Dec. 15, 1880. This was the first production of a play by Ibsen in England. He was called to the Bar (Middle Temple), 1883. In 1884 he succeeded the late Dutton Cook as dramatic critic of the World, a post still retained in April 1898. He translated "A Doll's House," by Henrik Ibsen, produced by Mr. Charles Charrington and Miss Janet Achurch at the Novelty Theatre, London, June 7, 1889, a production which excited general interest in Ibsen in England. He has also translated, in collaboration with Mr. Edmund Gosse, "The Master Builder," by Henrik Ibsen, produced at Trafalgar Square Theatre by Mr. Herbert Waring and Miss Elizabeth Robins, Feb. 20, 1893, and "A Visit," from the Danish of Edvard Brandes, produced by the Independent Theatre Society (Royalty Theatre), March 4, 1892. His principal publications are "English Analyses of French Plays represented at the Gaiety Theatre," 1879; "English Dramatists of To-day," London, 1882; "Henry Irving, Actor and Manager: a Critical Study," 1883; "About the Theatre: Essays and Studies," 1886; "Masks or Faces? a Study in the Psychology of Acting," 1888; "William Charles Macready; a Biography" (Vol. 1 of Eminent Actors Series), 1890; "Henrik Ibsen's Prose Dramas, Edited by W. A.," 5 vols., 1890-91; "Tales of Two Countries, from the Norwegian of A.

Kjelland," 1891; "Peer Gynt, Dramatic Poem by Henrik Ibsen, Translated by William and Charles Archer," 1892; "Eskimo Life, by Frithjof Nansen," 1893; "Hannele: a Dream Poem by Gerhart Hauptmann," 1894; "Dramatic Essays of Leigh Hunt, William Hazlitt, John Forster, and George Henry Lewes" (3 vols.), edited by William Archer, and Robert W. Lowe, 1894; a yearly re-issue of criticisms contributed to the World, published under the title of "The Theatrical 'World,'" of which 5 vols. have appeared, for 1893, '94, '95, '96, '97; translations of Ibsen's "Little Eyolf" (1895) and "John Gabriel Bonkman" (1897); a translation of Brøgger and Rolsen's "Life of Frithjof Nansen." He also translated two-thirds of Dr. G. Brandes's "William Shakespeare." Address: World Office, 1 York Street, Covent Garden.

ARDAGH, Major-General Sir John Charles, K.C.I.E., C.B., son of the Rev. W. J. Ardagh, was born in August 1840. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, entering the Royal Engineers as Lieutenant in April 1859. He was promoted Captain in August 1872, Major in September 1880, and reached the rank of Colonel in June 1885. In 1869 he accompanied General Sir W. Jervois on a mission to Nova Scotia and Bermuda. His first staff appointment was that of Dept. Assist. Quartermaster-General of the Intelligence Department of the Army, in which capacity he was employed on missions to Holland, Austria, Italy, and Turkey. He was also present at the Conference at Constantinople in 1876, and the Congress at Berlin in 1878, and was appointed Chief Commissioner for the Delimitation of the Turco-Greek Frontier in 1881. For a short time he was the Instructor in Military History at the School of Military Engineering. He went to Egypt in October 1882 as Assistant Adjutant-General, and served through the campaign. He was present at the operations at Alexandria and the battle of Tel-el-Kebir, was mentioned in despatches, and received the brevet of Lieut.-Colonel and the Osmanieh of the Fourth Class. In March 1884 he went to the Sudan as Commanding Royal Engineer and Chief of the Intelligence Department, and was present at the battles of El Teb and Tamai. He was several times mentioned in despatches, and received a C.B. Sir John Ardagh also accompanied the expedition up the Nile, and was afterwards appointed Commandant of the Base at Cairo. As Colonel on the Staff of the Frontier Field Force he took part in the action of Ginnis. He returned to England in November 1887 to take over the duties of Assistant Adjutant-General at headquarters, when he was also appointed an extra A.D.C. to the Duke of Cambridge. He went to India in March 1889 as Private Secretary to the Viceroy. In April 1895 he became the Commandant of the School of Military Engineering, which appointment he vacated in April 1896 on being appointed Director of Military Intelligence at headquarters. Major-General Sir John Ardagh married Susan, Countess of Malmesbury, widow of the third Earl, in 1896. In 1897 the degree of LL.D. honoris causa was conferred on him by Trinity College, Dublin. Addresses: 25 Sloane Gardens, S.W.; Athenæum.

ARDILAUN, Lord, Arthur Edward Guinness, was born on Nov. 1, 1840, and succeeded his father as 2nd Baronet in 1868. He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Dublin. He represented Dublin as Conservative member of the House of Commons from 1868 to 1869, and again from 1874 to 1880. In the latter year he was raised to the Peerage under the title of Baron Ardilaun. He is the head of the great brewing firm of Arthur Guinness & Co., is President of the Royal Dublin Society, and is Lord Mayor of Dublin. To Lord Ardilaun belongs the credit of having restored St. Patrick's Cathedral at Dublin. He is married to Olivia Charlotte, daughter of the 3rd Earl of Bantry, but there is no heir to the Peerage, his brother, Benjamin Lee Guinness, born in 1842, being heir to the Baronetcy. Addresses: 11 Carlton House Terrace, S.W.; St. Anne's, Clontarf, co. Dublin; and Ashford Cong, Galway.

ARGYLL AND THE ISLES, Bishop of. See CHINNERY-HALDANE, THE RIGHT REV. JAMES ROBERT ALEXANDER.

ARGYLL, Duke of, His Grace The Right Hon. George Douglas Campbell, K.G., K.T., only surviving son of the 7th Duke, was born at Arding Castle, Dumbartonshire, on April 30, 1823, and before he had succeeded his father, in April 1847, had become known as an author, politician, and public speaker. As Marquis of Lorne he took an active part in the controversy in the Presbyterian Church of Scotland relating to patronage, and was looked upon by Dr. Chalmers as an important and valuable adherent. As early as 1842 he published a pamphlet which exhibited considerable literary ability, under the title of "A Letter to the Peers from a Peer's Son." His brochure, "On the Duty and Necessity of Immediate Legislative Interposition in behalf of the Church of Scotland, as determined by Considerations of Constitutional Law," was a historical view of that Church, particularly in reference to its constitutional power in ecclesiastical matters. In the course of the same year he published "A Letter to the Rev. Thomas Chalmers, D.D., on the Present Position of Church Affairs in Scotland, and the Causes which have led to it." In this pamphlet he vindicated the right of the Church to legislate for itself; but condemned the Free Church movement then in agitation among certain members of the General Assembly; maintaining the position taken up in his "Letter to the Peers," and expressing his dissent from the extreme view embodied in the statement of Dr. Chalmers, that "lay patronage and the integrity of the spiritual independence of the Church have been proved to be, like oil and water, immiscible." In 1848 the Duke published an essay, critical and historical, on the ecclesiastical history of Scotland since the Reformation, entitled "Presbytery Examined." It was a careful expansion of his earlier writings, and was favourably received. His Grace was a frequent speaker in the House of Peers on such subjects as Jewish Emancipation, the Scottish Marriage Bill, the Corrupt Practices at Elections Bill, the Sugar Duties, Foreign Affairs, the Ecclesiastical Titles Bill, the Scottish Law of Entail, and the Repeal of the Paper Duties. During the administration of Lord John Russell he gave the Government a general support, at the same time identifying his political views with those of the Liberal Conservatives. His Grace actively interested himself in all questions affecting Scottish interests brought before the Legislature, especially in the affairs of the Church of Scotland. In 1851 he was elected Chancellor of the University of St. Andrews. In 1852 he accepted office in the Cabinet of the Earl of Aberdeen as Lord Privy Seal. On the breaking up of that Ministry in February 1855, in consequence of the secession of Lord John Russell, and the appointment of Mr. Roebuck's Committee of Inquiry into the state of the British Army before Sebastopol, his Grace retained the same office under the Premiership of Lord Palmerston. In the latter part of 1855 he resigned the Privy Seal and became Postmaster-General. In Lord Palmerston's Cabinet of 1859 the Duke resumed the office of Lord Privy Seal, which he exchanged for that of Postmaster-General on Lord Elgin being sent, in 1860, on his second special mission to China. He was reappointed Lord Privy Seal in 1860, was elected Rector of the University of Glasgow in November 1854; presided over the twenty-fifth annual meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, held at Glasgow in September 1855; and was elected President of the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1861. On the formation of Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet in December 1868 he was appointed Secretary of State for India, and he held that position till the downfall of the Liberal Government in February 1874. In the ensuing session he warmly supported the measure introduced and carried by the Conservative Government for the transfer of the patronage in the Church of Scotland from individuals to congregations. He was appointed Lord Privy Seal for the third time in May 1880, on Mr. Gladstone returning to power. That post he held till April 1891, when he resigned it in consequence of a difference with his colleagues in the Cabinet concerning some of the provisions of the Irish Land Bill. In announcing the circumstance to the House of Lords (April 8), he stated that in consequence of certain provisions of the Bill which, in his view, put the ownership of Irish property in commission and abeyance, he had felt obliged to resign his office in the Government, and his resignation had been accepted by Her Majesty. Since that time the Duke has taken an important part, by speech and pen in political controversy, taking the Whig side, especially on the questions of Home Rule and those arising out of the Crofter agitation. His Grace is Hereditary Master of the Queen's Household in Scotland, Chancellor of the University of St. Andrews, a Trustee of the British Museum, and Hereditary Sheriff and Lord-Lieutenant of Argyllshire. In 1866 his Grace published "The Reign of Law," which has passed through numerous editions; in 1869, "Primeval Man; an Examination of some Recent Speculations"; in 1870, a small work on the History and Antiquities of Iona, of which island his Grace is proprietor; in 1874, "The Patronage Act of 1874 all that was asked in 1843, being a reply to Mr. Taylor Innes"; in 1877 (for the Cobden Club) observations "On the Important Question Involved in the Relation of Landlord and Tenant"; in 1879, "The Eastern Question from the Treaty of Paris to the Treaty of Berlin, and to the second Afghan War," 2 vols.; and in 1884, "The Unity of Nature," a work on the Philosophy of Religion; being a sequel to the "Reign of Law"; "An Economic History of Scotland," 1884; "Scotland as it Was, and as it Is," 1887; "The New British Constitution," 1888; "The Highland Nurse," 1889; "Unseen Foundations of Society," and "Irish Nationalism," 1893; "Poems," 1894; and "Philosophy of Belief," 1896. He is a frequent contributor to scientific journals, chiefly on Geology, the Darwinian Theory, &c. He married, first, in 1844, the eldest daughter of the 2nd Duke of Sutherland (she died May 25, 1878); secondly, in 1881, Amelia Maria, eldest daughter of Dr. Claughton, Bishop of St. Albans, and widow of Colonel Augustus Henry Archibald Anson; and, thirdly, in 1895, Ina Erskine, youngest daughter of the late Archibald M'Neill, of Colonsay, Argyllshire, and Woman of the Bedchamber to Her Majesty the Queen. His Grace's eldest son, the Marquis of Lorne, married in 1871 the Princess Louise. (See LORNE.) Addresses: Inverary Castle, Argyllshire; Argyll Lodge, Kensington; and Athenæum.

ARIA, Mrs. David B., journalist, was born in London, Aug. 11, 1864. She is the third daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hyman Davis, and was married in March 1884. Educated privately by Madame Paul Lafargue (eldest daughter of Karl Marx) and by Mr. Gilmore, she began writing for the press in January 1889, making the subject of costume her specialty, and endeavouring to bring to the description and criticism of the passing modes a more picturesque and lively style than had hitherto been adopted. When the Gentlewoman was started in 1890 Mrs. Aria was engaged upon the staff as principal fashion writer, designer of original costumes, and contributor of light social articles, a position in which she has continued to the present time. In 1891 she commenced her well-known "Diary of a Daughter of Eve" in the newly-published Black and White, remaining on the staff of that paper until 1897, when she transferred her "Diary" to the pages of the Sketch, where it now appears. In 1892 she was writing also the fashion articles in the Pictorial World and St. Stephen's Review. She joined the staff of the Queen, writing chiefly the "Vista of Fashion," and became the editress of the pages devoted to dress in Hearth and Home, resigning that post in 1895. For some time Mrs. Aria contributed the Dress column to the Illustrated London News, and for the last two years she has written the Saturday column on "Frocks and Fashions" in the Daily Chronicle. She also writes "The Diary of Madame Sans Gêne" in Country Life, and discourses monthly of the modes in The Woman at Home. Numerous are the periodicals, in addition to those named, in which her pen has been employed in connection with costume, theatrical criticism, or social causerie and satirical sketches. In April 1898 Mrs. Aria made her most ambitious journalistic venture, initiating, as editress, the publication of an illustrated monthly journal entitled The World of Dress, a Survey of the Fashions of To-day and To-morrow. In the autumn of 1897 a new field of industry was opened to her; she was engaged to design and arrange the numerous dresses for an elaborate spectacular melodrama at Drury Lane Theatre. Mrs. Aria's address is 7 Brunswick Place, Regent's Park, W.

ARMAGH, Archbishop of. See ALEXANDER, THE MOST REV. WILLIAM.

ARMSTEAD, Henry Hugh, R.A., sculptor, was born in London, June 18, 1828, and received his artistic education at the School of Design, Somerset House, Leigh's School, Maddox Street, Mr. Carey's School, and the Royal Academy. Among his masters were Mr. M'Manus, Mr. Herbert, R.A., Mr. Bailey, R.A., Mr. Leigh, and Mr. Carey. As a designer, modeller, and chaser for silver, gold, and jewellery, and a draughtsman on wood, he has executed a large number of works. Among those in silver, the most important are the "Charles Kean Testimonial," the "St. George's Vase," "Doncaster Race Plate," the "Tennyson Vase" (Silver Medal obtained for that and other works in Paris, 1855), and the "Packington Shield." His last important work in silver (for which the Medal from the 1862 Exhibition was obtained) was the "Outram Shield," always on view at the South Kensington Museum. His works in marble, bronze, stone, and wood include the south and east sides of the podium of the Albert Memorial, Hyde Park, representing the musicians and painters of the Italian, German, French, and English Schools, and some of the greatest poets. There are also four large bronze figures on the Albert Memorial by Mr. Armstead, viz., Chemistry, Astronomy, Medicine, and Rhetoric. He also designed the external sculptural decorations of the New Colonial Offices - reliefs of Europe, Asia, Africa, America, Australasia, Government, and Education; statues of Earl Grey, Lord Lytton, Duke of Newcastle, Earl of Derby, Lord Ripon, Sir W. Molesworth, Lord Glenelg; and on the façade, reliefs of Truth, Fortitude, Temperance, and Obedience. Mr. Armstead designed the whole of the carved oak panels (beneath Dyce's Frescoes) in her Majesty's Robing Room in New Palace, Westminster, illustrating the life of King Arthur and the history of Sir Galahad; also the external sculpture of Eaton Park, Warwickshire, the large Fountain in the fore court of King's College, Cambridge, the marble reredos of the "Entombment of our Lord" at Hythe Church, Kent, and other works, including the effigies of the late Bishop of Winchester in Winchester Cathedral, of Dean Howard and Archdeacon Moore in Lichfield Cathedral, of Dean Close in Carlisle Cathedral, and of Lord Thynne in Westminster Abbey. The marble doorway in the crush-room of the Holborn Restaurant, including the wrought-iron screens for the fireplaces, &c., are also by him, as well as the exterior stone doorway and corbel of the Hôtel Métropole. One of his most important works is the "Street Memorial," now in the central hall of the Law Courts, including life-size marble statue and alto rilievo of the "Arts and Crafts required for the erection and due enrichment of a great public building." Mention should also be made of his "Applied Mechanics" on the eastern side of the Albert Hall frieze, the subject beginning with Archimedes and ending with Watt; two sculptural reliefs in the Guards' Chapel, S.W., one of David struggling with the Lion, to represent "Courage," and the other Joshua with the Angel, to represent "Obedience." He has also executed certain ideal works, such as "Ariel," "Hero with the dead Leander," and his Diploma work, "The Ever Reigning Queen," as also "Playmates," shown in the Academy Exhibition of 1897. Other works executed by him are the effigy of Bishop Ollivant, now in Llandaff Cathedral, in marble, the bronze statue of Lieutenant Waghorn, R.N., the "Overland Route," erected at Chatham, and the memorial to Mrs. Craik in Tewkesbury Abbey; also the marble monument in St. Paul's Cathedral (in the crypt) containing the effigy of the late Rev. B. Webb, and a reredos for the St. Mary's Church, Aberavon, containing statuettes of Our Lord and the four Evangelists, erected in memory of the late Mr. Llewellyn of Baglan Hall. Mr. Armstead was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, Jan. 16, 1875, and an Academician, Dec. 18, 1879. His studio is now at his residence, 52 Circus Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

ARMSTRONG, Sir Alexander, K.C.B., F.R.S., LL.D., J.P., is a son of the late A. Armstrong, Esq., of Crahan, co. Fermanagh, and Elizabeth, daughter of the late Hugh Stephens, Esq., of co. Donegal, Ireland. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and at the University of Edinburgh, where he graduated. Having entered the Royal Navy, he served in various parts of the world, including the Mediterranean, South America, North America, West Indies, Pacific Stations, Africa, Asia Minor, in the exploring expedition to Xanthus in Lycia, and elsewhere, and for five years continuously in the Arctic regions in the search for Sir John Franklin's Expedition. He is one of the few surviving officers who have circumnavigated the continent of America, and was frequently mentioned in the despatches connected therewith. He was present in H.M.S. Investigator at the discovery of the North-West Passage, having entered the Polar Sea via Behring's Strait, and returned to England through Baffin's Bay, with the surviving officer and crew of this vessel. During the Russian War he served in the Baltic, was present at the bombardment of Sweaborg, the blockade of Cronstadt River, and other operations, as also in two night attacks with a flotilla of rocket boats, for which he was gazetted. He has been Deputy Inspector-General of the Mediterranean Fleet and the Naval Hospitals at Malta, Haslar, and Chatham; and he was promoted to be Inspector-General for special services in 1866. Three years later he became Director-General of the Medical Department of the Navy, from which office he retired in 1880. He was created a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath, Military Division, in 1871 for his services. Sir Alexander Armstrong has received the Arctic, Baltic, and Jubilee medals, with clasp, 1887 and 1897; also Sir Gilbert Blane's gold medal. He is a Naval Honorary Physician to the Queen, and also Honorary Physician in the Household of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. He is a Justice of the Peace for Middlesex, City and Liberties of Westminster, and County of London; and is the author of "A Personal Narrative of the Discovery of the North-West Passage," 1857; and "Observations on Naval Hygiene, particularly in connection with Polar Service." Married in 1894 Charlotte, Lady King Hall, daughter of the late S. Campbell Simpson, Esq., of 23rd Light Dragoons, and granddaughter of the late Thomas and Lady Charlotte Giffard of Chillington Hall, Staffordshire, and also of William, 10th Earl of Devon. Addresses: The Elms, Sutton Bonnington, Loughborough; and Athenæum.

ARMSTRONG, Captain Sir George Carlyon Hughes, Bart., was born at Lucknow in 1836, and was educated privately. He entered the army in 1855, and, after joining Stokes' Pathan Horse, served during the whole period of the Indian Mutiny, receiving the Mutiny Medal and Clasp. On Sept. 18, 1857, he was severely wounded at Mooradnuggar, near Delhi, and was consequently obliged to retire with a pension. He was then appointed Orderly Officer at the Royal Military College at Addiscombe, a position which he held until the abolition of the college; on this occasion he received a Sword of Honour from the cadets. In 1872 he joined the staff of the Globe newspaper, and subsequently became its proprietor and editor. He is now sole proprietor of the Globe, and part proprietor of the People. He was created a Baronet in 1892, and was married in 1865 to Alice, daughter of the Rev. C. J. Furlong. Address: 4 Ashburn Place, South Kensington.

ARMSTRONG, George Elliot, is the eldest son of Sir George Armstrong, Bart., and after undergoing the usual training on H.M.S. Britannia he entered the Navy in December 1878. Appointed Lieutenant in 1890, he has served on the Mediterranean, North America, West Indies, Channel, and China stations. During the manœuvres of 1891 he was in command of a torpedo boat, but he retired from the service in November 1891. He then joined the staff of the Globe, of which paper his father is proprietor, and was at that time editor, and in 1895 he became himself the editor. He is the author of "Torpedoes and Torpedo Vessels," 1896. Address: Cornerways, Weybridge.

ARMSTRONG, Professor George Frederick, M.A., F.R.S.E., F.G.S., M.Insts.C.E. and M.E., J.P., is the elder son of Mr. George Armstrong and of Mary Ann, daughter of Thomas and Phoebe Knowles, of Doncaster, Yorkshire, and was born May 15, 1842. He received his general education at private schools and at Jesus College, Cambridge. Having from an early age developed a strong taste for mechanical pursuits and a more than ordinary skill in constructive art, it was naturally thought that engineering would afford him a suitable career. He was accordingly educated professionally in the Engineering Department of King's College, London, in the Plant Works and Locomotive Shops of the Great Northern Railway, and in the office of the Engineer-in-Chief, Mr. R. Johnson, M.Inst.C.E., on whose staff he was subsequently employed for several years in the design and execution of many important works, and generally in the maintenance of the line. He was afterwards engaged in private practice in London, and in 1869 became Engineer to the promoters of the Isle of Man Railways, for whom he made all the requisite plans and surveys, and prepared designs for ways and works, and for the necessary rolling stock in connection with the lines then projected. In 1871 he was appointed first Professor of Engineering in the New Applied Science School at McGill University, Montreal; five years later he was offered, and accepted, the corresponding chair in the newly established Yorkshire College of Science at Leeds; and in 1885 was selected by the Crown to succeed the late Professor Fleeming Jenkin, F.R.S., as Regius-Professor of Engineering in the University of

Edinburgh; which appointment he still holds. He is also Engineering Adviser, under the Public Health Act, to the Local Government Board for Scotland. During his residence in Canada Professor Armstrong served for some time in the Canadian Militia, being senior Captain of the University Companies of the 1st (Prince of Wales) Regiment. For many years Professor Armstrong has taken an active part in the promotion of technical education at home and in the colonies, and has been closely identified with its progress. His Inaugural Address at Edinburgh (which is published) was devoted to a consideration of the question in special relation to the education of engineers, and attracted considerable attention at the time of its delivery. He has at other times publicly dealt with the question in lectures, and in the columns of the Times. By intimately associating himself with the work of each of the International Exhibitions held in Edinburgh since 1885 (filling, in the Exhibition of 1890, the positions of Convener of the Engineering and Machinery Committee, and Vice-Chairman of the Executive Council), he has rendered acceptable service in the cause of industrial enterprise. He was President of the Sanitary Engineering Section of the British Institute of Public Health in Edinburgh in 1893, and delivered an address; and from 1895 to 1897 he was President of the Royal Scottish Society of Arts. He has also, in connection with their meetings in Edinburgh, acted as Local Secretary of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, the Institute of Mechanical Engineers, and the Iron and Steel Institute. Professor Armstrong is the author of a number of papers on professional as well as on general science subjects which have been read before various learned societies, or contributed to scientific publications. During the summer and autumn of 1879 he undertook an extensive series of observations and experiments with a view of determining the diurnal variation in the amount of carbon dioxide in the air, the results of which were communicated in a paper to the Royal Society, and have since been accepted as a standard of reference on the Continent as well as in this country. In 1889 the Council of King's College, London, elected Professor Armstrong to the Fellowship of the College, the highest distinction the College is empowered to bestow on its alumni. He is an Examiner for Science Degrees in the Departments of Engineering, Public Health, and Agriculture in the University of Edinburgh; Hon. President of the East of Scotland Engineering Association; and a member of most of the professional institutes and societies. Addresses: The University, Edinburgh; and St. Oswald's, Grasmere, R.S.O., Westmorland.

ARMSTRONG, Henry E., Ph.D., LL.D., F.R.S., is Professor of Chemistry at the City and Guilds of London Central Institute at South Kensington. He is the author of "Introduction to the Study of Organic Chemistry," 1880. Address: 55 Granville Park, Lewisham, S.E.

ARMSTRONG, Walter, the son of Walter Armstrong, of Ennismore Gardens, was born in 1850 in Roxburghshire, and was educated at Harrow and Exeter College, Oxford. From 1880 to 1892 he was engaged as an art critic in connection with the Pall Mall Gazette and the St. James's Gazette, and in the latter year was appointed Director of the National Gallery of Ireland. He has written largely in connection with art subjects, and is the author of the following works: "Life of Alfred Stevens," "Life of Peter de Wint," "Life of Thomas Gainsborough," "Life of Velasquez," "Notes on the National Gallery," "Scottish Painters"; he is also co-editor of Bryan's "Dictionary of Painters." Mr. Armstrong is married to Emily Rose, daughter of J. C. Ferard, J.P., of Ascot Place, Berks. Address: 41 Fitzwilliam Square, Dublin.

ARMSTRONG, Lord, formerly Sir William George, C.B., LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.S., son of the late Mr. William Armstrong, a merchant and alderman of Newcastle-on-Tyne, by the daughter of Mr. William Potter, formerly of Walbottle Hall, Northumberland, was born in 1810. He was educated at the school of Bishop Auckland, and afterwards articled to an eminent solicitor at Newcastle, who subsequently adopted him as a partner; but a strong bent for scientific pursuits eventually diverted him from the law. Early in life he began investigations on the subjects of electricity, which resulted in the invention of the hydro-electric machine, the most powerful means of developing frictional electricity yet devised. For this he was elected, whilst a very young man, a Fellow of the Royal Society. He then invented the hydraulic crane, and between 1845 and 1850 the "accumulator," by which an artificial head is substituted for the natural head gained only by altitude; and he extended the application of hydraulic power to hoists of every kind, machines for opening and closing dock gates and spring bridges, capstans, turntables, waggon-lifts, and a variety of other purposes. For the manufacture of this machinery he and a small circle of friends founded the Elswick Engine Works, near Newcastle. There, in December 1854, he constructed the rifled ordnance gun that bears his name. In 1858 the Rifle Cannon Committee recommended the adoption of the Armstrong gun for special service in the field, and Mr. Armstrong, on presenting his patents to the Government, was knighted, made a C.B., and appointed Engineer of Rifled Ordnance, with a salary of £2000 a year. Between the years 1858 and 1870 the Armstrong gun and the position of Sir W. G. Armstrong in reference to the Government underwent many changes; but the leading feature of the gun, whether rifled or smooth, muzzle-loading or breech-loading, is in the coiling of one wrought-iron tube over another until a sufficient thickness is built up. The Armstrong gun has been largely adopted by foreign Governments. Sir William Armstrong extended the system to guns of all sizes, from the 6-pounder to the 600-pounder, weighing upwards of twenty tons, and within three years introduced three thousand guns into the service. The Committee of Ordnance of the House of Commons, in their report, July 1863, state that they "have had no practical evidence before them that even at this moment any other system of constructing rifled ordnance exists which can be compared to that of Sir W. Armstrong." In February 1863 Sir William resigned his appointment, and rejoined the Elswick manufacturing company, which has since expanded to one of the largest and most important manufacturing establishments in Europe, and has taken a leading part in the further development of artillery and other implements of war. In the same year he acted as President of the British Association meeting held at Newcastle-on-Tyne. In that capacity he drew attention to the gradual lessening of our supply of coal, and the probability of actual exhaustion at some future time. The discussion suggested by this important address led to the appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into all the circumstances connected with our national coal supply, and he was nominated a member of this Commission. He received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the University of Cambridge in 1862, and the honorary degree of D.C.L. from the University of Oxford in 1870, and the honorary degree of "Master of Engineers" from the University of Dublin in 1892. Lord Armstrong is a Knight Commander of the Danish Order of the Dannebrog, of the Austrian Order of Francis Joseph, of the Spanish Order of Charles III., and of the Brazilian Order of the Rose. He was nominated a Grand Officer of the Italian

Order of SS. Maurice and Lazarus in 1876. He received in 1895 the 2nd Class of the Imperial Order of the Rising Sun of Japan, in 1897 the 2nd Class of the White Elephant of Siam, and in 1898 the 1st grade of the 2nd Class of the Imperial Order of the Double Dragon of China. Lord Armstrong has taken an active part in the inquiries concerning the operation of the Patent Laws, he being very hostile to them in their present forms. He has been thrice President of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, as well as President of the British Association (1863), of the Inst.C.E. (1882), and of the Newcastle Literary and Philosophical Society. At the general election of 1886 Sir William Armstrong stood as a Unionist Liberal candidate for Newcastle in opposition to Mr. John Morley, but was defeated. He was raised to the Peerage under the title of Baron Armstrong in 1887, the year of the Queen's Jubilee. He is a J.P. for Northumberland, of which county he was High Sheriff in 1873. Address : Crag-side, Rothbury.

ARNAUD, Arsène. See CLARETIES, JULES.

ARNOLD, Sir Arthur, K.B., 1895, Hon. LL.D. Cambridge, J.P. and D.L. Co. of London, third son of Robert Coles Arnold, Esq., of Whartons, Framfield, Sussex, and Heath House, Maidstone, was born May 28, 1833. On the passing of the Public Works (Manufacturing Districts) Act, 1863, to meet the necessities of the cotton famine, Sir Arthur Arnold was appointed Assistant-Commissioner, and in that capacity resided in Lancashire till 1866, during which time he wrote "The History of the Cotton Famine," of which the original edition was published in 1864, followed by a cheaper one in 1865. After two years of subsequent travel in the south and east of Europe and in Africa Sir Arthur Arnold returned to England in 1868, when he published "From the Levant," in 2 vols., containing letters descriptive of his tour. He then became the first editor of the Echo, which, under his direction and control, attained a great success. In 1873 the King of Greece conferred the Golden Cross of the Order of the Redeemer upon Sir Arthur, with special reference to his work "From the Levant." In the same year, upon the death of Mr. Baring, Sir Arthur Arnold was an unsuccessful candidate for the representation of Huntingdon. He resigned his connection with the Echo in 1875, and passed a year in travelling through Russia and Persia. The notice of this journey appeared in 1877, under the title of "Through Persia by Caravan." In 1879-80 he issued two works, one entitled "Social Politics," and the other "Free Land." At the general election of 1880 he was returned to Parliament for Salford. In the same year, in succession to Sir Charles Dilke, Sir Arthur Arnold was elected Chairman of the Greek Committee which was actively concerned in promoting the enlargement of the Hellenic kingdom in accordance with the suggestions of the Treaty of Berlin. In 1882 Sir Arthur Arnold proposed in the House of Commons resolutions in favour of uniformity of franchise throughout the United Kingdom, and the redistribution of political power, and upon a motion for adjournment the policy of the resolution was, for the first time, sanctioned by a large majority. In 1883 he moved for an elaborate return of electoral statistics, which the Government adopted in connection with the Reform Bill of 1884. In 1885 Sir Arthur Arnold established and was elected President of the Free Land League, which quickly obtained the support of a large number of members of Parliament. At the general election of that year and of 1886 he unsuccessfully contested the Northern Division of Salford. Upon the formation of the London County Council in 1889 Sir Arthur Arnold was elected a County Alderman for the double term of six years. He was Chairman of the Council for two years, 1895-96. In 1898 he was re-elected, by 67 votes, Alderman for another term of six years. In May 1890 he accepted an invitation from the North Dorset Liberal Association to contest that division at the next election, but was defeated at the election in 1892. In 1867 he married Amelia, only daughter of Captain H. B. Hyde, 96th Regiment. Addresses: 45 Kensington Park Gardens, W.; Reform Club; and Hyde Hill, Dartmouth.

ARNOLD, Sir Edwin, K.C.I.E., C.S.I., second son of Robert Coles Arnold, Esq., J.P. for the counties of Sussex and Kent, and brother of the above, born June 10, 1832, was educated at the King's School, Rochester, and King's College, London, and was elected to a scholarship at University College, Oxford. In 1852 he obtained the Newdigate Prize for his English poem on the "Feast of Belshazzar," and was selected in 1853 to address the late Earl of Derby on his installation as Chancellor of the University. He graduated in honours in 1854. Upon quitting college he was elected second master in the English Division of King Edward the Sixth's School, Birmingham, and subsequently appointed Principal of the Government Sanskrit College at Poona, in the Bombay Presidency, and Fellow of the University of Bombay, which offices

he held during the Mutiny, and resigned in 1861, after having twice received the thanks of the Governor in Council. He had then contributed largely to critical and literary journals, and was author of "Griselda, a Drama," and "Poems, Narrative and Lyrical"; with some prose works, among which are "Education in India," "The Euterpe of Herodotus," a translation from the Greek text, with notes, and "The Hitopadesa," with Vocabulary in Sanskrit, English, and Murathi. The last two were published in India. Sir Edwin Arnold has published also a metrical translation of the classical Sanskrit work "Hitopadesa," under the title of "The Book of Good Counsels," a "History of the Administration of India under the late Marquis of Dalhousie," 1862-64, as well as a popular account, with translated passages, of "The Poets of Greece." Since 1861 he has been upon the editorial staff of the Daily Telegraph. On behalf of the proprietors of that journal he arranged the first expedition of Mr. George Smith to Assyria, as well as that of Mr. Henry Stanley, who was sent by the same journal, in conjunction with the New York Herald, to complete the discoveries of Livingstone in Africa. He is a Fellow of the Royal Asiatic and the Royal Geographical Societies of London, and Hon. Correspondent of that of Marseilles. He published in 1874 "Hero and Leander," a translation in heroic verse from the Greek of Musæus; and in the following year "The Indian Song of Songs," being a metrical paraphrase from the Sanskrit of the Gita Govinda of Jayadeva. Upon the occasion of the proclamation of the Queen as Empress of India on Jan. 1, 1877, he was named a Companion of the Star of India. In 1879 he produced "The Light of Asia," an epic poem upon the Life and Teaching of Buddha, which has since passed through more than sixty editions in England, and eighty in America. For this work the King of Siam decorated him with the Order of the White Elephant. In 1881 he published a volume of oriental verse under the title of "Indian Poetry," and he has printed several translations from the Sanskrit epic the Mahābhārata, and in 1883 "Pearls of the Faith; or, Islam's Rosary; being the ninety-nine beautiful names of Allah, with comments in verse." Sir Edwin received the Second Class of the Imperial Order of the Medjidieh from the Sultan in 1876, and the Imperial Order of Osmanie in 1886. In January 1888 he was created Knight Commander of the Indian poem founded on the 3rd chapter of the Bôstân of the Persian poet Sa'di, for which he subsequently received from the Shah of Persia the Order of the Lion and Sun. He also published in 1888 a volume comprising most of his previous English poems and some new ones, under the title of "Poems National and Non-Oriental." In recent years there have appeared from his pen another epic, "The Light of the World"; "The Tenth Muse"; a volume entitled "Potiphar's Wife, and other Poems"; two books of travel, "India Revisited" and "Seas and Lands"; as well as "Japanica," a work on Japanese manners and customs, and "Adzuma," a Japanese tragedy. During his sojourn in Japan the Emperor conferred on him the Order of the Rising Sun, giving him the dignity of "Chokunin" of the Empire; and the King of Siam has recently created him Grand Officer of the Crown of Siam. He was elected President of the Birmingham and Midland Institute for the year 1893. Address: 31 Bolton Gardens, S.W.

ARNOLD, Thomas, M.A., is the second son of the late Dr. Arnold, of Rugby, and was born at Laleham, Staines, Nov. 30, 1823. Educated at Winchester, Rugby, and University College, Oxford, he took his degree (First Class Classics) in 1845. After serving for some time in the Colonial Office he went to New Zealand; passed thence to Tasmania in 1850, with the appointment of Inspector of Schools; and, on becoming a Roman Catholic, returned to this country in 1856. He became a Professor in the Roman Catholic University at Dublin, thence moved to the Oratory School, Birmingham, and thence to Oxford. He is a Fellow and an Examiner in the English Language and Literature at the Royal University of Ireland. He is the author of several works on English Literature, and editions of old texts, among them, "A Manual of English Literature" (now in a sixth edition); an edition of "Select English Works of Wyclif," 3 vols., 1869; "Selections from the Spectator"; "Clarendon, Book VI.," "Beowulf," text, translation, and notes; and, for the Master of the Rolls' Series, editions of "Henry of Huntingdon," and "Symeon of Durham." He is now engaged upon the "Chronicles of the Abbey of Bury St. Edmunds." On the establishment of the Royal University of Ireland Mr. Arnold was appointed a Fellow. He married in Tasmania Julia Sorell, granddaughter of a former Governor of the Colony. She died in 1888, and he has since married Josephine, daughter of the late James Benison, of Slieve Russell, co. Cavan. Mrs. Humphry Ward (q. v.) is his daughter. Address: Royal University of Ireland, Dublin.

ARNOLD-FORSTER, Hugh Oakeley, M.P., the son of William Delafield Arnold, Director of Public Instruction in Punjab, and the adopted son of the late Right Hon. W. E. Forster, M.P., was born in 1855. He was educated at Rugby and University College, Oxford, where he obtained first-class Honours in the Final School of Modern History. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1879, and went the North-Eastern Circuit. He was elected Liberal Unionist member for West Belfast in 1892, and still represents that constituency. He is the author of "How to Solve the Irish Land Question"; "The Citizen Reader"; "The Laws of Everyday Life"; "This World of Ours"; "In a Conning Tower"; "Things New and Old"; "Our Home Army"; "A History of England," 1897. Mr. Arnold-Forster is married to Mary, daughter of Professor Story-Maskelyne. Address: 9 Evelyn Gardens, S.W.

ARNOTT, Sir John, Bart., was born in 1817, and is the proprietor of the Irish Times. He sat in the House of Commons as member for Kinsale from 1859 to 1863, and was knighted in 1859; a baronetcy was conferred upon him in 1896. He married, first, a daughter of J. J. Mackinlay in 1852, and, second, a daughter of the Rev. E. L. Fitzgerald in 1872, and he has a son and heir, John, born in 1854. Address: Woodlands, Cork.

ASHBOURNE, Lord, The Right Hon. Edward Gibson, Lord Chancellor of Ireland, was born in Dublin on Dec. 4, 1837, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where, on taking his degree, he obtained first gold medal. In 1875 he entered Parliament as member for Dublin University, and in 1877 was made Attorney-General for Ireland. He held his post until 1880, when he went out of office with his party, but continued to sit for Dublin University. During the Liberal rule from 1880 to 1885, Mr. Gibson was the chief spokesman of the Opposition on Irish questions, and the chief critic of the Irish Land Bill of 1881. On the accession of Lord Salisbury to office in 1885 Mr. Gibson was raised to the peerage with the title of Baron Ashbourne, and was made Lord Chancellor of Ireland, with a seat in the Cabinet, a post which he again filled under Lord Salisbury's second administration in 1886, and has now held from 1895 onwards. He is responsible for Lord Ashbourne's Act (1885) for facilitating the sale of Irish holdings to tenants. He married in 1868 Frances, daughter of H. C. Cokes. Addresses: 5 Grosvenor Crescent, S.W.; 12 Merrion Square, S. Dublin; and Athenæum.

ASHBURNHAM, Bertram, 5th Earl of, Viscount St. Asaph, and Baron of Ashburnham, Knight Grand Cross of the Sovereign Order of Malta and of the Pontifical Order of Pius, was born at Ashburnham, Oct. 28, 1840, being the son of Bertram, 4th Earl, by his wife Katherine Charlotte, daughter of George Baillie, Esq., of Mellerstain and Jerviswood, and sister of George, 10th Earl of Haddington. He was educated at Westminster School, and at Fontainebleau in France. He was attached to the Marquis of Bath's special embassy to convey the Order of the Garter to the Emperor of Austria in 1867. He succeeded his father as 5th Earl in 1878. He presided over the first meeting held in England to advocate "Home Rule" for Ireland, and was elected Chairman of the British Home Rule Association in 1886, but since then has taken no active part in politics. Lord Ashburnham is the chief representative of the Ashburnham family, which, in a direct male line, has continued at Ashburnham, in Sussex, from before the Norman Conquest, and is described by Fuller in the early part of the seventeenth century as a "family of stupendous antiquity wherein the eminence hath equalled the antiquity." Lord Ashburnham was the owner of the collection of MSS. and printed books formed by the late Earl, some portions of which had at different times previous to 1895 been sold to the British and Italian Governments. In 1898 occurred the great sale of the Ashburnham Library. The library was divided into three portions, the final sale taking place at Messrs. Sotheby & Wilkinson's on May 14. The sale, as a whole, lasted three weeks, and realised nearly £63,000, many of the lots being unique. This famous dispersion of priceless books has been described as one of the four of the century, the others being the Roxburghe, Heber, and Beckford sales. Addresses: 30 Dover Street, W.; Ashburnham Place, Battle, &c.; and Athenæum.

ASHCOMBE, Lord, George Cubitt, is the eldest son of the late Mr. Thomas Cubitt. He was born on June 4, 1828, and graduated M.A. at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1854, where he was three terms a Prizeman. He was elected M.P. for West Surrey in 1860, and continued to represent it until 1885, when he was elected for the Mid or Epsom division. He filled the unpaid post of Second Church Estates Commissioner from 1874 to 1879, and has served on other Royal Commissions. In 1880 he was sworn a Member of the Privy Council, and in 1892 was raised to the peerage as Lord Ashcombe. He has taken special interest in church and educational questions, is Chairman of the House of Laymen of the province of Canterbury, and was one of the founders of the large middle-class schools at Bramley and Cranleigh, Surrey. He passed the Act 41 & 42 Vict., c. 42, enabling all clerical improPRIATORS to redeem tithe-rent charge, and a speech delivered by him in 1872 on "Non-conformist Endowments," is among the publications of the Church Defence Institution. He is Vice-Chairman of the Surrey County Council, and Honorary Colonel of the 4th V.B. of the Queen's West Surrey Regiment, &c. His son, the Hon. Henry Cubitt, has represented the Reigate division of Surrey since 1892. He married in 1853 Laura, daughter of the Rev. James Joyce. Addresses: Denbies, Dorking; and 17 Princes Gate, S.W.

ASHLEY, The Right Hon. Anthony Evelyn Melbourne, son of the late Earl of Shaftesbury by his marriage with Lady Emily Cowper, eldest daughter of the 4th Earl Cowper, was born on July 24, 1836, and educated at Harrow and at Trinity College, Cambridge, graduating M.A. in 1858. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in Trinity Term, 1863, and joined the Oxford Circuit. Mr. Ashley, who is a magistrate for Dorset, for Hampshire, and for the county of Sligo, unsuccessfully contested the Isle of Wight in February 1874; he was, however, elected for Poole in May of the same year, and continued to represent that borough down to 1880, when he was elected for the Isle of Wight. Mr. Ashley was formerly private secretary to the late Lord Palmerston, and from 1863 to 1874 he was a Treasurer of County Courts. When the Liberals returned to power in April 1880 Mr. Ashley was appointed Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade, and in May 1882 was chosen by Mr. Gladstone to succeed Mr. Courtney in the office of Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies. He was also second Church Estates Commissioner from 1880 to 1885. He is official Verderer of the New Forest. At the general election of 1885 Mr. Ashley was defeated in the Isle of Wight contest by Sir Richard Webster, Conservative. In 1891 he was made a Privy Councillor. Mr. Ashley is the author of "The Life of Henry John Temple, Viscount Palmerston." He married in 1866 Sybella Charlotte, daughter of Sir Walter Rockliffe Farquhar, Bart., who died in 1886, and since then he has married Lady Alice Cole, daughter of the 3rd Earl of Enniskillen. Addresses: 13 Cadogan Square, S.W.; and Athenæum.

ASHMEAD-BARTLETT, Sir Ellis, M.P., eldest son of the late Mr. Ellis Bartlett, a minister of Plymouth, Massachusetts, and Sophia, daughter of J. K. Ashmead of Philadelphia, was born at Brooklyn in 1849, and educated at Torquay and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took a first-class in the final schools, and was President of the Oxford Union. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1877, and was for some time an Examiner in the Education Department and in the Privy Council Office. In 1880 he entered Parliament as member for Eye; and in 1885, 1886, 1892, and 1895 was returned for the Eccleshall Division of Sheffield. At the last election he was returned unopposed. He received the honour of knighthood in 1892. In Lord Salisbury's first two administrations Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett held the post of Civil Lord of the Admiralty. He has been a frequent and copious speaker in the House and on public platforms, especially on questions of foreign policy. He has published "The Battlefields of Thessaly," 1897, and was taken prisoner, on Tuesday, May 4, of that year, during the Græco-Turkish war, by a Greek warship, the commander of which mistook him for a spy, but the Greeks liberated him when it was discovered that he was a member of Parliament. His brother is married to Baroness Burdett-Coutts. He is married to Frances, daughter of H. E. Walsh. Addresses: 6 Grosvenor Street, W.; and Grange House, Eastbourne.

ASQUITH, The Right Hon. Herbert Henry, Q.C., M.P., second son of the late J. Dixon Asquith, Esq., of Croft House, Morley, Yorks, was born at Morley, Sept. 12, 1852, and was educated at the City of London School and Balliol College, Oxford, of which he was Scholar, and afterwards Fellow. B.A. 1874; first-class Classics, and Craven Scholar. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, June 1876; appointed a Queen's Counsel, February 1890; elected M.P. for East Fife in July 1886, and again in 1892. Together with the Lord Chief-Justice (then Sir C. Russell) he was engaged on behalf of the late Charles Parnell, M.P., during the Parnell Commission. In August 1892 he was mover of the Amendment to the Queen's Speech which led to the division fatal to Lord Salisbury's Government, and when Mr. Gladstone formed his Ministry he was appointed Home Secretary and was sworn of the Privy Council, and placed on the Ecclesiastical Commission, on which he remained till 1895. It was during the Home Rule Debates that he became famous, and rose to the most prominent position in the House. During the Labour disputes of 1893 he took up a consistent attitude which commanded the approval of Parliament, and in 1894 acted as arbitrator in the London cab strike, his award being considered satisfactory. He introduced the Disestablishment of the Church of Wales Bill in 1894, and conducted the same till it was rejected by the House. In February 1893 he was nominated for the Lord Rectorship of Glasgow. In 1895 he was again returned for East Fife, the constituency he now represents. He has made many important speeches in Scotland on the policy of Lord Salisbury's Government, and was designated by Lord Rosebery, in a speech delivered in 1896 at Edinburgh, shortly after his lordship's resignation of the leadership of his party, as destined in future to high office. At present he has returned to his practice at the Bar. He married in 1877 Helen, daughter of F. Melland, Esq., of Manchester (who died in 1891), and in May 1894 Miss Margot Tennant, daughter of Sir Charles Tennant, Bart. Addresses: 20 Cavendish Square, W.; and Athenæum.

ASTOR, William Waldorf, was born in New York on March 31, 1848, and is the only son of John Jacob Astor and Charlotte Augusta Gibbes. He received his education privately. He succeeded to the vast family estate in 1890, having for many years helped his father in the management of it. He was admitted to the Bar in 1875, after which he devoted three years to politics, having been in the Legislature of the State of New York in 1878 and 1881. In 1882 he was appointed United States Minister to Italy, and remained in that position till 1885. He came to London in 1891, and in October 1893 effected the purchase of the Pall Mall Gazette and Budget, which was the event of the journalistic year. (See COOKE.) During the same year he bought Cliveden, the Duke of Westminster's estate on the Thames. His estate office is a prominent feature on the Thames Embankment. Address: Cliveden, Taplow.

ATHERTON, Mrs. Gertrude Franklin, authoress, was born on Rincon Hill, San Francisco, and is the daughter of Thomas L. Horn and Gertrude Franklin, a grand-niece of Benjamin Franklin. She was educated at St. Mary's Hall, Benicia, California, and at the Sayre Institute, Lexington, Kentucky. She was long in finding her first publisher, who, in 1888, brought out her novel "What Dreams May Come." This was followed by her popular book "Hernia Suydam," 1889; "Los Cerritos," 1890; "The Dooms-Woman," 1892; "Before the Gringo Came," 1894; "A Whirl Asunder," 1895; "Patience Sparhawk, and her Times," 1897, perhaps her best-known book; "His Fortunate Grace," 1897. All these were American successes. Her two English novels are, "The Americans of Maundrell Abbey" and "The Great Black Oxen," 1898. Mrs. Atherton is the widow of George H. Bowen Atherton, of Menlo Park, California. She travels much. Address: c/o Hampstead Branch, National Provincial Bank, N.W.

ATHOLE. See ATHOLL, DUKE OF.

ATHOLL, Duke of, Sir John James Hugh Henry Stewart Murray, K.T., was born on Aug. 6, 1840, and succeeded his father, the 6th Duke, in 1864. He was educated at Eton, and afterwards held a commission in the Scots Guards, of which he was captain. He is Hereditary Sheriff and Lord-Lieutenant of the county of Perth, where he owns enormous estates. He married in 1863 Louisa, daughter of Sir Thomas Moncrieff, Bart. Addresses: Blair Castle, Blair Atholl and Dunkeld, Perthshire; and 84 Eaton Place, S.W.

ATKINSON, Rev. Edward, D.D., was Senior Optime and third Classic at Cambridge in 1842. He was ordained in 1844, and subsequently became Fellow and Tutor of Clare College. He became Master of Clare College in 1856, a position which he still continues to hold. Dr. Atkinson has served the office of Vice-Chancellor on three separate occasions, viz., from 1862 to 1863, from 1868 to 1870, and from 1876 to 1878.

ATKINSON, Edward Tindal, was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1870, and was appointed a Queen's Counsel in 1886. He is Solicitor-General for the county Palatine of Durham, is engaged on the North-Eastern Circuit, and became Recorder of Leeds in 1897. Address: 2 Tanfield Court, Temple, E.C.

ATKINSON, The Right Hon. John, Q.C., M.P., was born in 1845, and joined the Irish Bar in 1865. He sits for North Londonderry as a Conservative; was Solicitor-General for Ireland from 1889 to 1892, and Attorney-General for Ireland in 1892, and again since 1895. Address: 68 Fitzwilliam Square, North, Dublin.

ATKINSON, The Rev. John Christopher, D.C.L., was born at Goldhanger, in Essex, in 1814, and received his education at Kelvedon, in that county, and at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1838). He was appointed Vicar of Danby, in the North Riding of Yorkshire, and Domestic Chaplain to the late Viscount Downe in 1847, and Chaplain to the High Sheriff of Yorkshire in 1851. Dr. Atkinson is the author of "Walks, Talks, &c., of Two Schoolboys," 1859; "Playhours and Half-holidays," 1860; "Sketches in Natural History," 1861; "Eggs and Nests of British Birds," 1861; "Stanton Grange; or, Life at a Private Tutor's," 1864; "A Glossary of the Cleveland Dialect," 1868; "Lost; or, What Came of a Slip from Honour Bright," 1869; besides many papers on archaeological and philological subjects in the Proceedings of various learned societies. For some time he was engaged on "The History of Cleveland, Ancient and Modern," partly published, and he has since edited the Chartularies of Whitby, in two volumes, for the Surtees Society, the Chartulary of Rievaulx Abbey, for the same series, and the Furness Coucher Book, in three volumes. Previous to the completion of the Furness and Rievaulx Chartularies he had issued "A Handbook of Ancient Whitby and its Abbey." In the year 1887 he had the honorary degree of D.C.L. conferred upon him by the University of Durham "in recognition of his many services to literature." Dr. Atkinson, who is now an Hon. Canon of York, has recently had a pension of £100 a year granted to him from the Civil List, on the recommendation of Mr. Balfour, in recognition of his services to philology and scholarship. In 1897 he celebrated the jubilee of his appointment to the parish of Danby. Address: Danby Vicarage, Yorks.

ATTFIELD, Professor John, M.A. and Ph.D. of the University of Tübingen, F.R.S., Professor of Practical Chemistry to the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain from 1862 to 1896, was born near Barnet, Hertfordshire, on Aug. 28, 1835, and is the descendant of an ancient Hertfordshire family, and son of the late John and Anne Winifred Attfield. In 1850 he was articled to Mr. W. F. Smith, manufacturing pharmaceutical chemist, London. In 1853-54 he was a student in the Pharmaceutical Society's School, and First Prizeman in all subjects—chemistry, botany, pharmacy, and materia medica. From 1854 to 1862 he was Demonstrator of Chemistry at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, and lecture-assistant and research-assistant to the Professors of Chemistry there, namely, to Dr. Stenhouse, F.R.S., for three years, and afterwards for five years to Dr. Frankland, F.R.S., at the hospital, and concurrently at the Addiscombe Military College and the Royal Institution. During the same period he wrote most of the chemical articles in "Brande's Dictionary of Art, Science, and Literature," and in the Arts and Sciences Division of the "English Cyclopædia," besides being a frequent scientific contributor to several journals and newspapers. In 1862 he took his University degrees, his thesis being an account of an original research "On the Spectrum of Carbon," a paper read before the Royal Society, and published in the Philosophical Transactions. In 1862, also, he was appointed to the Chair of Practical Chemistry in the Pharmaceutical Society's School, where he was the first Dean, and, 1887 to 1896, senior Professor. From 1860 onwards he wrote frequently on the subject of "Fire," both in scientific treatises and in a series of long letters to the Times, resulting in useful legislation and other public action, and in many appeals to him as an authority on the origin and causes of conflagrations. Dr. Attfield has always advocated the displacement of our existing system of weights and measures by the metric decimal system. He was for some time on the Council of the Metric Decimal Association. He is a Fellow, and was for several years on the Council, of the Chemical Society; is a Fellow, was one of the founders, and was for several years on the Council, of the Institute of Chemistry of Great Britain and Ireland; is a Life Member, and on the General Committee, of the British Association for the Advancement of Science; is a Fellow of the Society of Chemical Industry; was for two years President of the Hertfordshire Natural History Society; was one of the five founders, for seventeen years Senior Secretary, and for two years President of the British Pharmaceutical Conference, an organisation for the encouragement of original research in pharmacy, each of his presidential addresses "On the Relations of Pharmacy and the State" drawing supporting editorial articles from the Times and from twenty or thirty other leading newspapers; the members, on his retirement, presenting him with an illuminated address on vellum and five hundred specially bound volumes of general literature. He was Secretary of the Food Jury at the International Health Exhibition in 1884, and, as some recognition of his services, the Council of the Exhibition presented him with eighteen bound volumes of their collected literature. He also wrote the Exhibition Handbook on "Water and Water Supplies," which has now reached a third edition. He has written largely on pharmaceutical education, and the relation of education to examination, his views, especially as regards compulsory public curricula, having gradually won the support of all leading pharmacists. The present chemical nomenclature of the Pharmacopœias of Great Britain and the United States was adopted on his recommendation and long advocacy. His great work is "A Manual of Chemistry; General, Medical, and Pharmaceutical," of which there have been published seventeen large editions in thirty-one years, nine being adapted to British and eight to American medical and pharmaceutical requirements. For this book he was awarded a gold medal at the first Pharmaceutical Exhibition in Vienna in 1883, and the still higher prize of a diploma of honour at the similar Exhibition at Prague in 1896. He was the author of published lectures on the first (1864) "British Pharmacopœia"; was appointed by the General Council of Medical Education and Registration of the United Kingdom one of the three editors of the "British Pharmacopœia of 1885"; and was editor of the 1890 Addendum to the "Pharmacopœia." In the production of the latter he successfully brought about the recognised co-operation of the followers of medicine on the one hand and pharmacy on the other, the General Medical Council representing the medical practitioners of Great Britain, while the Pharmaceutical Society represented the body of chemists and druggists. This service has been gracefully and publicly recognised both by the Medical Council and by the Council of the Pharmaceutical Society. The Medical Council appointed him editor of the fourth "British Pharmacopœia," and adopted his suggestion to give the work imperial extension of usefulness in the Colonies and India. In the Preface to this work the following paragraph occurs: "The 'Pharmacopœia' has been edited by Dr. John Attfield, F.R.S., who has been since 1885 Annual Reporter to the Council on the progress of pharmacy, and who has advised it on all matters relating to pharmaceutical chemistry. The Council is much indebted to him, both for his scientific and for his literary services." On May 31, 1898, the General Medical Council, on motion from the chair, passed a vote of thanks "to the Editor, Dr. Attfield, for all he has done to make the 'Pharmacopœia' complete and accurate." In the Royal Society's Catalogue Dr. Attfield appears as author of thirty-seven original scientific papers, mostly of pharmaceutical interest, published in the Transactions of the Royal, Chemical, and Pharmaceutical Societies. His scientific and educational work has gained for him not only the much-coveted honour of being a Fellow of the Royal Society, but also the following twenty-three honorary distinctions: Hon. Member of the Pharmaceutical Societies of Great Britain, Paris, St. Petersburg, Austria, Denmark, East Flanders, Switzerland, Australasia, New South Wales, and Queensland; of the American Pharmaceutical Association; of the Colleges of Pharmacy of Philadelphia, New York, Massachusetts, Chicago, Maryland, and Ontario; and of the Pharmaceutical Associations of New Hampshire, Virginia, Liverpool, Manchester, Georgia, and the Province of Quebec. At the Chicago College the chief lecture theatre was named "Attfeld Hall," and his portrait in oils was hung on the College walls "in recognition of his aid in raising the College from its ashes after the great fire of 1871, and of his unselfish devotion to the cause of education." Professor Attfeld in 1896 retired into private practice as a chemical analyst and consultant. He is the Hon. Consulting Chemist and Analyst to the London Orphan Asylum and the Ventnor Consumption Hospital. He has laboratories at Temple Chambers, London, and at Watford. On the resignation of his post at the Pharmaceutical Society, after thirty-four years of uninterrupted educational labours, for services rendered as a Professor, the Council of the Society, each of the twenty-one members being present, accorded him unanimously the great and, to a retiring teacher, unusual honour of a vote of thanks, complimentary speeches being made by the ex-President and President. On July 10, 1897, a grand testimonial was presented to him on his retirement by large numbers of grateful pupils and by many public friends or former associates. It comprised an elaborate silver tea service and an album of autographs, which included the signatures of over a thousand pupils, and of two or three hundreds of Professors and other colleagues in the Universities and Colleges of Europe and America. His son, Dr. Donald Harvey Attfeld, M.A., M.B., B.C., Cantab., and holding the diploma of Public Health of the same University, was born on June 9, 1866, and was for three years, 1894 to 1897, English Quarantine Medical Officer at the Port of Suez and the adjacent Sanatorium of Moses' Wells. During that period he was Sub-Director of the Mecca and Medina Pilgrim Encampment at El Tor, on the Gulf of Suez, and the Director of a similar encampment at Ras Mallap. He voluntarily resigned this appointment in 1897, and is now Medical Officer of Health for Watford, and a consulting hygienist and bacteriologist. He is the author of published papers on "An Investigation of the Natural Solidified Sodium Sulphate Lakes of Wyoming, U.S.A.," "The Destruction of Bacteria in Polluted River Water by Infusoria," "The Treatment of Chronic Gastric Affections by aid of the Siphon Stomach Tube." Address: "Ashlands," Watford, Herts.

AUDIFFRET-PASQUIER, Edmé Armand Gaston, Duc d', a French politician, was born in October 1823. His father, the Comte d'Audiffret, under the Restoration, was Director of Customs, Director of the National Debt, Councillor of State, and afterwards Receiver-General. His uncle, the Marquis d'Audiffret, was a Peer of France, and President of the Cour des Comptes. The name of d'Audiffret is that of an old family of Dauphiné, and their armorial bearings were to be seen in the Crusades. The Comte d'Audiffret, father of the present Duke, married the daughter of M. Pasquier, Director-General to the Tobacco Manufactories, and brother to the Chancellor Pasquier. It is from the latter, who died without issue, and who had adopted him in 1844, that the subject of this memoir derives his ducal title. In 1845 young d'Audiffret, scarcely twenty-two years old, entered the Council of State as Auditor, and married Made-moiselle Fontenillat, daughter of the Receiver-General of the Gironde. Successive family afflictions deprived him of his children and induced him to wish for a retired life; and M. d'Audiffret went to live in Normandy on an estate which belonged to him. Here he passed twenty years of his life, occupied with agriculture and with political studies, in the midst of his books, the old library of the d'Audiffret family being one of the most ample literary collections which any individual could possess. In 1858 he presented himself for election to the Council-General, and in 1866 and 1869 to the Corps Législatif. On every occasion the battle was strongly contested. Victorious the first time, the candidate was beaten on the two other occasions by the efforts of official pressure. After the fall of the Empire he was elected to the National Assembly in the Conservative interest by the Department of the Orme (Feb. 8, 1871), and voted with the Right Centre. He was nominated President of the Commission on Purchases, and in this capacity acquired sudden renown by the masterly way in which he encountered in debate M. Rouher, the champion of the fallen dynasty. By his eloquence he soon acquired a great and strong position in the Assembly. He was one of the principal originators of the downfall of M. Thiers, but he had assumed an attitude which would not permit of his being included in a ministry of which Bonapartists were members. After the check given to the proposed Monarchical Restoration, the Duke, as President of the Right Centre, was among those who supported the Septennate, and who powerfully contributed, in conjunction with his brother-in-law, M. Casimir-Perier, to the solution of Feb. 25, 1875. On the formation of the Buffet Ministry he was elected President of the National Assembly. On Dec. 9, 1875, the Duc d'Audiffret-Pasquier, who, a few days previous, had joined the Left Centre, was the first person who was elected a Life Senator by the Assembly, by a majority amounting to four-fifths of all the votes recorded. In the sitting of March 13, 1876, he was elected President of the Senate. He continued to hold that office till January 1879, after the Senatorial elections, which gave the Republicans a majority in the Upper Chamber. On Dec. 26, 1878, he was elected to the seat in the French Academy lately filled by Mgr. Dupanloup. Of the twenty-seven members present, twenty-two voted for him, and five abstained from voting. He is one of the few Academicians who have published no important works. For some years past he has lived in complete retirement. Address: 25 Rue Fresnel, Paris.

AUFRECHT, Professor Theodor, LL.D., M.A., an Orientalist, was born at Leschnitz, Silesia, Jan. 7, 1821, and educated in the University of Berlin. He was appointed Professor of Sanskrit and Comparative Philology in the University of Edinburgh in 1862. On April 21, 1875, that university conferred on him the degree of LL.D., and shortly afterwards he left Scotland for Bonn, where he had been appointed Professor of Sanskrit. Professor Aufrecht has published "A Complete Glossary to the Rig Veda, with constant reference to the Atharva Veda"; "De Accentu Compositorum Sanskritorum," 1847; "Halayudha's Abhidhanaratnamala; a Sanskrit Vocabulary, edited with a complete Sanskrit-English Glossary"; "The Hymns of the Rig Veda, transcribed into English letters," 2 vols.; "Ujvaladatta's Commentary, the Unadistras," from a manuscript in the Library of the East India House, 1859; and "The Ancient Languages of Italy" (Oxford, 1875).

AUSTEN-LEIGH, Rev. Augustus.
See LEIGH, REV. AUGUSTUS AUSTEN—.

AUSTIN, Alfred, poet, critic, and journalist, was born at Headingley, near Leeds, May 30, 1835. His father was a merchant and magistrate of the borough of Leeds, and his mother was the sister of Joseph Locke, the eminent civil engineer and M.P. for the borough of Honiton, of which he was lord of the manor. Both his parents being Roman Catholics, he was sent to Stonyhurst College, and afterwards to St. Mary's College, Oscott. From Oscott he took his degree at the University of London in 1853, and in 1857 he was called to the Bar of the Inner Temple. But the publication, though anonymously, of a poem called "Randolph," at the age of eighteen, showed the bent of his disposition; and it may be stated on the authority of Mr. Austin himself, that he ostensibly embraced the study of the law only in deference to the wishes of his parents, and from his earliest years was imbued with the desire and the determination to devote his life mainly to literature. The expression of this resolve may be found in a novel written and published while he was yet a minor. On the death of his father, in 1861, he quitted the Northern Circuit, and went to Italy. His first acknowledged volume of verse, "The Season: a Satire," appeared in 1861. A third and revised edition of "The Season" appeared in 1869. His other poetical productions are: "The Human Tragedy: a Poem," 1862, republished in an amended form 1876, and again finally revised in 1889; "The Golden Age: a Satire," 1871; "Interludes," 1872; "Madonna's Child," 1873; "The Tower of Babel," a drama, 1874; "Leszko the Bastard: a Tale of Polish Grief," 1877; "Savonarola," a tragedy, 1881; "Soli loquies in Song," "At the Gate of the Convent," "Love's Widowhood, and other Poems," "Prince Lucifer," and "English Lyrics," all published between the years 1881 and 1890. He has published three novels: "Five Years of It," 1858; "An Artist's Proof," 1864; and "Won by a Head," 1866; also "The Poetry of the Period," reprinted from Temple Bar, 1870; and "A Vindication of Lord Byron," 1869, occasioned by Mrs. Stowe's article, "The True Story of Lord Byron's Life." He has written much for the Standard newspaper and for the Quarterly Review. During the sittings of the Ecumenical Council of the Vatican he represented the Standard at Rome, and he was a special correspondent of that journal at the headquarters of the King of Prussia in the Franco-German War. His political writings include "Russia before Europe," 1876; "Tory Horrors," 1876, a reply to Mr. Gladstone's "Bulgarian Horrors"; and "England's Policy and Peril: a Letter to the Earl of Beaconsfield," 1877. In 1883, in conjunction with Mr. W. J. Court-hope, he founded The National Review, and continued to edit that periodical till the summer of 1893. In 1892 Messrs. Macmillan issued a collected edition of his poems in six volumes. "Fortunatus the Pessimist" was next published. In 1894 was published "The Garden that I Love," and in the following year, "In Veronica's Garden," both of which volumes have rapidly passed through several editions. On New Year's Day 1896 Mr. Austin was appointed Poet Laureate in succession to Lord Tennyson, since which date Messrs. Macmillan have issued two volumes of poetry by him, entitled "England's Darling" and "The Conversion of Winckelmann." Mr. Austin is a deputy-lieutenant for the county of Hereford. Addresses: Swinford Old Manor, Ashford, Kent; and Athenæum.

AUSTIN, Louis Frederic, journalist, only son of Captain Thomas Austin, master mariner, of Dublin, was born in Brooklyn, U.S.A., Oct. 9, 1852, educated at the Merchant Taylors' School, Great Crosby, near Liverpool, came to London in 1875, and entered journalism. He was for some years editor of the National Press Agency, has contributed to many periodicals, chiefly in the department of literary criticism and several essays, and is connected with the Daily Chronicle, the Illustrated London News, the Sketch, and the Speaker. In 1884, under the name of Frederic Daly, he published a biographical sketch entitled "Henry Irving in England and America"; and in 1896 a volume called "At Random: Essays and Stories." Address: Devonshire Club, St. James's, S.W.

AUSTRIA, Emperor of. See FRANCIS JOSEPH I.

AUWERS, Professor Arthur, German astronomer, was born Sept. 12, 1838, at Göttingen, and was connected successively with the observatories of Königsberg (1859), Gotha (1862), and Berlin (1866). He became in 1881 the Director of the New Observatory of Physical Astronomy at Potsdam. He is Perpetual Secretary of the Mathematical Sciences Section of the German Academy of Sciences. He has continued Herschell's observations on nebulae, which he terminated in 1857. He has written a number of important papers on astronomical subjects. He took part in the new observations on stars of the first nine magnitudes of the northern hemisphere in the revision of Argeländer's maps. In 1874 he was in charge of the observations of the Transit of Venus at Luxor, and in 1882 at Punta Arenas.

AVORY, Horace Edmund, was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1875, and is engaged on the South-Eastern Circuit, and at the Surrey Sessions. Address: 4 Crown Office Row, Temple, E.C.

AXON, William Edward Armytage, was born in Manchester in 1846, and after thirteen years' service in the Manchester Free Library, resigned the position of Sub-Librarian to devote himself to literature and journalism. He is the author, among other volumes, of "Stray Chapters in Literature, Folk-Lore, and Archaeology," 1888; "Annals of Manchester," 1886; "Lancashire Gleanings," 1883; "Cheshire Gleanings," 1884; "Bygone Sussex," 1896; "Life of William Lloyd Garrison," 1890; and "The Ancoats Skylark," 1894. The last-named includes translations from the French, Italian, German, Spanish, and other languages. Mr. Axon has contributed to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," the "Dictionary of National Biography," "Johnson's American Cyclopædia," "Notes and Queries," the Academy, and other periodicals. He was one of the founders of the Library Association, and of the Lancashire and Cheshire Antiquarian Society, is a Fellow of the Royal Society of Literature, and a member of various learned societies at home and abroad. He has edited a reprint of "Caxton's Game and Playe of the Chesse," and has printed many pamphlets, some for private circulation, in advocacy of temperance and food reform, or in elucidation of obscure points of bibliography and literary history. Address: 47 Derby Street, Moss Side, Manchester.

AYRTON, Professor W. E., F.R.S., born in London 1847, is the son of the late Mr. E. N. Ayrton, M.A., barrister. He was educated at University College School, where he gained numerous prizes, and entering subsequently into the College, gained the Andrews Exhibition in 1865 and the Andrews Scholarship in 1866. Passing the examination with honours for his first B.A. in 1867, Mr. Ayrton in the same year came out first in the Entrance Examination for the Indian Government Telegraph Service. He was then sent by the Secretary of State for India to study electrical engineering with Prof. Sir William Thomson (now Lord Kelvin), coming out first at the Advanced Examination for the Indian Government Telegraph Service, and won the Scholarship. When in India Prof. Ayrton acted first as the Assistant Electrical Superintendent, and subsequently as the Electrical Superintendent in the Government Telegraph Department, introducing, with the late Mr. Schwendler, throughout British India a complete system of immediately determining the position of a fault in the longest telegraph line by electrically testing at one end. In 1872-73 Prof. Ayrton was on special duty in England on behalf of the Indian Government Telegraph Department, and in charge of the Great Western Telegraph Manufactory in London on behalf of the engineers, Prof. Sir William Thomson and the late Prof. Fleeming Jenkin. From the latter year until 1879 Prof. Ayrton was the Professor of Natural Philosophy and of Telegraphy at the Imperial College of Engineering, Japan, the largest English-speaking Technical University in existence at that date. In 1879 he was appointed Professor of Applied Physics at the City and Guilds of London Technical College, Finsbury, and in 1884 the Chief Professor of Physics at the Central Technical College, South Kensington, of the City and Guilds of London Institute, of which he now also is the Dean. In 1880 a Secretary of the Mathematical and Physical Section of the British Association, in 1881 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. Prof. Ayrton is a Past President of the Physical Society, a Past President of the Institution of Electrical Engineers, and the President of Section A of the British Association for 1898; he has been a Juror in the majority of the Electrical Exhibitions in England and abroad; was a Judge in the Electrical Department at the Chicago Exhibition; and one of the British Government Delegates to the Electrical Congress there; is joint editor of Cassell's "Manuals of Technology," and the author of "Practical Electricity," the most recently published work in this series, but already in its seventh edition. His lecture on the "Electric Transmission of Power," given at the meeting of the British Association at Bath in 1888, was so much appreciated that, at the request of the town, this lecture was repeated to an audience of 3000, the only time in the annals of the British Association that one of their lectures has been repeated. With Prof. Perry he is the joint inventor of the well-known Ammeters, Voltmeters, Electric Power Meter, Ohmmeter, Dispersion-Photometer, Transmission-Dynamometer, Dynamometer Coupling, Governed Electric Motor, Oblique Coiled Dynamo Machine, and Secohmmeter; and with the late Prof. Fleeming Jenkin and Prof. Perry, of the system of Automatic Electric Transport known as "Telpherage." Over 100 papers published in the Proceedings and Transactions of the Royal Society, Physical Society, Institution of Electrical Engineers, and other societies have been contributed by Prof. Ayrton conjointly with Prof. Perry and others, of which some of the most important are: "The Specific Inductive Capacity of Gases"; "The Contact Theory of Voltaic Action"; "A New Determination of the Ratio of the Electromagnet to the Electrostatic Unit of Quantity"; "A Duplex Partial Earth Test"; "Electricity as a Motive Power"; "Experiments on the Heat Conduction of Stone"; "On a Neglected Principle that may be Employed in Earthquake Measurements"; "The Magic Mirror of Japan"; "Electric Railways"; "Measuring Instruments used in Electric Lighting and Transmission of Power"; "Economic Use of Gas Engines"; "Electromotors and their Government"; "A New Form of Spring for Electric and other Measuring Instruments"; "The Gas Engine Indicator Diagram"; "The Most Economical Potential Difference to use with Incandescent Lamps"; "The Winding of Voltmeters"; "Economy in Electrical Conductors"; "Uniform Distribution of Power from an Electrical Conductor"; "Modes of Measuring the Co-efficients of Self and Mutual Induction"; "The Driving of Dynamos with Very Short Belts"; "Portable Voltmeters for Measuring Alternate or Direct Potential Differences"; "The Magnetic Circuit in the Dynamo"; "The Efficiency of Incandescent Lamps with Direct and Alternate Currents"; "Measurement of the Power given by any Current to any Circuit"; "Quadrant Electrometers"; "The Thermal Emissivity of Thin Wires"; "The Efficiency of Transformers and the Regulation of Transformers at Different Frequencies"; "Variation of the P. D. of the Electric Arc with Current, Size of Carbons and Distance Apart"; "The Design and Construction of Electrostatic Instruments." Prof. Ayrton, with Prof. Perry, has also taken out twenty-six patents in Great Britain, several of them also in France, Germany, America, and other foreign countries, and he is also a co-patentee with Mr. Mather of their well-known Electrostatic Voltmeters and Moving Coil Galvanometers. Address: 41 Kensington Park Gardens, W.

B.A.B. See GILBERT, WILLIAM SCHWENCK.

BADENI, Count Casimir, ex-Chancellor of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, is a Pole by birth, and was born in 1846. His family was originally Italian, and migrated to Poland with Queen Bona, wife of Sigismund I. He studied law, entered the Austrian Civil Service, and became Governor of Austrian Poland, and was nicknamed "The Mikado of Galicia" because of his gorgeous ceremonials. In September 1895, he became Prime Minister of a non-party Cabinet, and he was chiefly supported by the Poles, the German Moderate Liberals, and the Young Czechs. His concession with regard to the official use of the Czech language in Bohemia brought down upon him the angry opposition of the German element in Austria. On April 2, 1897, he resigned, but the Emperor refused to accept his resignation. Violent and discreditable scenes occurred in the Reichsrath between the Poles and Czechs on one side, and the Germans, Socialists, and Anti-Semites on the other. The session was forcibly closed on June 3, and an attempt at an understanding made, which came to nought owing to the abstention of the Germans. When the session reopened in September the same scenes occurred, and owing to an insult from Herr Wolf, Count Badeni fought a duel with him on September 26, in which he was wounded. The Emperor accepted his resignation early in 1898, and he was succeeded by Count Goluchowski (q.v.).

BAEYER, Adolf von, German chemist, born at Berlin, Oct. 31, 1835, is the son of a general renowned for his geodesic work. After having finished his studies at the Gymnasium Friedrich Wilhelm, he went to the Universities of Berlin, Heidelberg, and Ghent. He took his degree in 1860, and became Demonstrator in Chemistry at the Applied Sciences Academy of Berlin. He successively became Assistant Professor at the Military Academy in 1869, Professor at Strassburg in 1872, and finally was called to fill the chair at Munich, vacant on the death of Liebig. He has acquired fame by his work of organic chemistry, above all by his researches on the action of the aldehydes, which led him to the discovery of a green colouring matter, coralline, a red colouring matter, eosine, and lastly, to the discovery of indol, the base of indigo.

BAGGALLAY, Ernest, M.A., son of the late Lord Justice Baggallay, was born July 11, 1850, and was educated at Marlborough and Caius College, Cambridge. He was called to the Bar in 1873, and acted as Counsel to the Post Office from 1877 to 1887. He sat in the House of Commons as Conservative member for Brixton from 1885 to 1887. In the latter year he was appointed Police Magistrate at the West Ham Court, a position which he continues to hold. Mr. Baggallay was married in 1876 to Emily, daughter of Sir W. W. Burrell, Bart. Addresses: 106 Elm Park Gardens, S.W.; and The Moat, Cowden, Kent.

BAILEY, Sir Joseph Russell, Bart., V.D., was born in 1840, and is the eldest son of the late Joseph Bailey, M.P., of Easton Court, Tenbury. He was educated at Harrow and Christ Church, Oxford. He represented Herefordshire in the House of Commons from 1865 to 1885, and Hereford from 1886 to 1892. In 1864 he acted as High Sheriff of Breconshire, and was appointed Lord-Lieutenant in 1875. He is a J.P. and D.L. for Radnorshire and Herefordshire. In 1867 he was appointed Hon. Colonel of the Brecon Rifle Volunteers. He succeeded his grandfather, the 1st Baronet, in 1858, and was created a Peer in recognition of his services to the Conservative party at New Year 1899. He married in 1861 Mary Ann, daughter of Henry Lucas. Addresses: Glanusk Park, Crickhowell, Breconshire; Easton Court, Tenbury, Worcestershire, &c.

BAILEY, Joseph W., American political leader, was born in Copiah County, Mississippi, Oct. 6, 1863. He studied law, and was admitted to the Bar in 1883; removed to Texas in 1885, and settled at Gainsville. He served as Presidential Elector for the State at large in 1888, and was elected to the Fifty-second Congress, and re-elected to the Fifty-third, Fifty-fourth, and Fifty-fifth Congresses. He is one of the active and prominent leaders of the Democratic party in the United States House of Representatives.

BAILEY, Philip James, author of "Festus," son of Thomas Bailey, author of the "Annals of Notts," who died in 1856, was born at Nottingham, April 22, 1816. Having been educated at various schools in his native town, he in 1831 matriculated at the University of Glasgow, where he studied for two sessions under Professors Buchanan, Sir D. K. Sandford, Thomson, and Milne. In 1833 he began to study the law, was admitted a member of Lincoln's Inn in 1835, and called to the Bar in 1840. Having little inclination for legal pursuits, Mr. Bailey before this time had carried on an extensive and varied course of reading in the libraries of the British Museum and Lincoln's Inn, as well as at home. He was accustomed to the composition of verse from early years. "Festus," conceived and planned originally in 1836, and published in 1839, was well received in this country, where it has passed through eleven editions, and in America, where it has passed through upwards of thirty. The 11th, or Jubilee edition (so called from the fact that it was issued fifty years after the first edition), with a prose preface explanatory of the purpose of the poem, was published by Messrs. Routledge in 1889. Interviewed of late years by a contributor to The Young Man, Mr. Bailey is reported to have spoken of the inception of his famous work as follows: "I began in the most natural way imaginable. I merely started to write. From the time I was ten years old I had always been writing verse, more or less. But I had time at my disposal—in those days I did pretty much as I liked—and I soon found myself making progress with 'Festus.' I had the theory of the poem in my mind, and the plan of working it out, as well as the conception of the main characters. I knew the theology was not popular, and that was probably why I embodied it in the work. The doctrine of Universalism has never been introduced into poetry, and in that aspect 'Festus' was different from anything that had previously appeared. That was the novel characteristic of the poem." At the same interview he explained that "the work has doubled in size since I closed the book for the first time. Many lyrics have been introduced, and the scope of the work has been considerably enlarged. Besides the additions, moreover, there have been deductions and many alterations." "The Angel World," 1850; "The Mystic," 1855; "The Universal Hymn," 1867; all since mainly incorporated with "Festus"; "The Age," a Satire, 1858; and a prose work on the international policy of the Great Powers, with a few minor and miscellaneous poems, comprise nearly the whole of Mr. Bailey's contributions to contemporary literature. Address: The Elms, Ropewalk, Nottingham.

BAIN, Professor Alexander, LL.D., born at Aberdeen in 1818, entered Marischal College in 1836, where he took the degree of M.A. in 1840. From 1841 to 1844 he taught, as deputy, the class of Moral Philosophy in Marischal College; from 1844 to 1845 the Natural Philosophy Class. In 1845 he was elected Professor of Natural Philosophy in the Andersonian University, Glasgow, but retired at the end of a year. In 1847 he was appointed by the Metropolitan Sanitary Commissioners their Assistant Secretary, and in 1848 became Assistant Secretary to the General Board of Health, which post he resigned in 1850. From 1857 to 1862 he was Examiner in Logic and Moral Philosophy in the University of London. In 1858, 1859, 1860, 1863, 1864, 1868, and 1870 he acted as Examiner in Moral Science at the Indian Civil Service Examinations. In 1860 he was appointed by the Crown Professor of Logic in the University of Aberdeen. In 1864 he was re-elected Examiner in the University of London, and continued to hold that position till 1869. His first literary production was an article, in 1840, in the Westminster Review, to which he has since contributed at various times. In 1847-48 he wrote text-books on Astronomy, Electricity, and Meteorology in Messrs. Chambers's school series, several of Chambers's "Papers for the People," and the articles on Language, Logic, the Human Mind, and Rhetoric in the "Information for the People." In 1852 he published an edition of the "Moral Philosophy of Paley," with dissertations and notes. "The Senses and the Intellect" appeared in 1855, and "The Emotions and the Will," completing a systematic exposition of the human mind, in 1859; both works have passed through several editions. "The Study of Character, including an Estimate of Phrenology," was published in 1861, an English Grammar in 1863, and a "Manual of English Composition and Rhetoric" in 1866. His more recent works are: "Mental and Moral Science," 1868; "Logic, Deductive and Inductive," 1870; "Mind and Body; Theories of their Relation," 1873; a collection of "The Minor Works of George Grote, with Critical Remarks on his Intellectual Character, Writings, and Speeches," 1873; "A Companion to the Higher English Grammar," 1874; "Education as a Science," 1879; "James Mill, a Biography," "John Stuart Mill, a Criticism, with Personal Recollections," 1882; and "Practical Essays," 1884. In 1880 he retired from the Logic chair of Aberdeen University. In 1881 he was elected by the students Lord Rector of the University, and again elected in 1884. In 1887 appeared Part I. of a revised and enlarged edition of the "Manual of Rhetoric," being devoted to the "Intellectual Qualities of Style"; accompanying which was a volume on "Teaching English." The year following, 1888, was published Part II. of the "Rhetoric," on the "Emotional Qualities." In 1894 was brought out the fourth edition of "The Senses and the Intellect," revised for the last time. Address: Ferryhill Lodge, Aberdeen.

BAIRD, Lieut.-Colonel Andrew Wilson, R.E., F.R.S., A.I.C.E., F.R.G.S., born at Aberdeen, April 26, 1842, is the son of the late Mr. Thomas Baird, of Woodlands, Cults, and was educated at Marischal College and University, and was for some years a pupil of Dr. Rennet, LL.D., the Mathematical Tutor in Aberdeen. Entering Addiscombe College as a cadet of the Hon. East India Company's service in the beginning of 1860, he was transferred to the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, at the end of the year, and obtained a commission in the Corps of Royal Engineers in December 1861. After having finished his course of military engineering studies at Chatham, Lieutenant Baird proceeded to India in February 1864, and served under the Bombay Government. He was employed as Special Assistant in the Harbour Defences at Bombay, and held charge of the construction of the Middle Ground and Oyster Rock Batteries at various times between April 1864 and December 1865, when he was appointed as Special Assistant Engineer in the Government Reclamations which were being carried out on the foreshore of the harbour. From January till July 1868 Lieutenant Baird was employed as Assistant Field Engineer with the Abyssinian Expedition (medal), during which time he held the charge of Traffic Manager of the railway, and he was mentioned in despatches for zeal and management in bringing safely and expeditiously troops and baggage for embarkation. Shortly after his return to Bombay, Lieutenant Baird was appointed to the Great Trigonometrical Survey of India (in December 1868). Employed successively on the triangulation in Kottiyar and Guzerat, Lieutenant Baird suffered considerably from the trying work in the very hot weather, and was obliged to go on furlough to England in May 1870, and while on furlough he was selected by General Walker, R.E. (then chief of the Great Trigonometrical Survey), and employed by order of the Secretary of State for India to study the practical details of tidal observations, and their reductions by harmonic analysis as carried on under the superintendence of Sir William Thomson for the British Association. On his return to India, in April 1872, Lieutenant Baird carried out a reconnaissance of the Gulf of Cutch, with a view to selecting sites for three Tidal Observatories, one at the mouth, and one at the head and as far into the "Runn" as possible, and one about the middle of the gulf. The tidal observatories, and the levelling operations in connection therewith, were carried out for special reasons in connection with the question of the depression of the great tract called the Runn of Cutch; and Captain Baird was sent to England to carry out the calculations for reducing the tidal observations. Returning to India in June 1877, Captain Baird was appointed to the general superintendence and control of tidal observatories on the Indian coasts; these operations were gradually extended, until twenty tidal observatories (in India, Burmah, Ceylon, the Andaman Islands, and Aden) were working simultaneously, and as five years' work was completed at minor stations the observatories were removed to other places, and now over thirty stations have been observed at. In August and September 1881, Captain Baird was sent as one of the Commissioners from India to the Venice Geographical Congress and Exhibition. Here the Survey of India exhibited a complete set of tidal and levelling apparatus, diagrams, &c., and was awarded a Diploma of Honour; and the Congress awarded Captain Baird a medal of the First Class for his works on tidal observations; the Secretary of State for India and the Government of India recorded their thanks to Captain Baird for his services at this Congress. After furlough in England, Major Baird returned to India in April 1883, and resumed charge of the tidal and levelling operations until he was appointed to officiate as Mint Master of Calcutta in July 1885. Since then he has acted several times as Mint Master of Calcutta and Bombay, and in the intervals held the appointment of Assistant Surveyor-General. He was promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel in December 1888, and was confirmed as Mint Master, Calcutta, in August 1889. For his services in the tidal research, Colonel Baird was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in May 1885. The following are the works of a public or official character which Colonel Baird has written: Articles on the Gulf of Cutch, Little Runn, and Gulf of Cambay, for the Bombay Gazetteer; Notes on the Harmonic Analysis of Tidal Observations, published by order of the Secretary of State, 1872; Paper on the Tidal Observations of the Gulf of Cutch, read before the British Association, 1876; Account of the Tidal Disturbances caused by the Volcanic Eruption at Krakatoa (Java) in August 1883, presented to the Royal Society; Auxiliary Tables (two pamphlets) to facilitate the calculations of Harmonic Analysis of Tidal Observations, published in India, 1879 and 1882; Joint Report with Professor G. H. Darwin, F.R.S., &c., of the results of the Harmonic Analysis of Tidal Observations, presented to the Royal Society and reprinted from their Proceedings, March 1885; Account of the Spirit-Levelling Operations of the Great Trigonometrical Survey of India, read before the British Association in 1885, and afterwards printed among the supplementary papers of the Royal Geographical Society; Manual of Tidal Observations, published at the expense of the British Association; Tide Tables for India Ports, prepared annually by Major Baird and Mr. Roberts of the Nautical Almanac Office by order of the Secretary of State for India. Colonel Baird is also an Associate of the Institute of Civil Engineers, and a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society.

BAKER, Sir George Sherston, Bart., J.P., was born in London, May 19, 1846, and succeeded to the baronetcy in 1877. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1871, and in 1889 he was appointed Recorder of Barnstaple and Bideford. He has published "Halleck's International Law," 2nd edit. 1878, and 3rd edit. 1893; "The Laws Relating to Quarantine," 1879; "The Office of Vice-Admiral of the Coast," 1884; and he has been editor of the Law Magazine and Review since 1895. He is married to Jane, daughter of the late F. J. Fegen, R.N., C.B., of Ballinlonty, Tipperary, and has a son and heir, born in 1877. Addresses: 18 Cavendish Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.; and 1 The Cloisters, Middle Temple, E.C.

BAKER, John Gilbert, F.R.S., F.L.S., born at Guisborough, in Yorkshire, Jan. 13, 1834, was educated at schools belonging to the Society of Friends at Ackworth and York. He was appointed Assistant-Keeper of the Herbarium of the Royal Gardens;

Kew, in 1866; appointed Keeper of the Herbarium in 1891; and Lecturer and Demonstrator of Botany to the Apothecaries' Company in 1882. He was for many years Lecturer on Botany to the London Hospital, and one of the assistant editors to Seemann's Journal of Botany. Formerly Mr. Baker was Curator, and afterwards Secretary, of the London Botanical Exchange Club. His works on descriptive botany are as follows: "Synopsis Filicum," a descriptive catalogue of all known ferns, with plates of the genera—a work planned and commenced by the late Sir W. Hooker, 1868, 2nd edit. 1874; "Monograph of the Ferns of Brazil," in folio, 1870, with fifty plates; and since of the "Compositæ, Ampelidæ, and Connaracæ," of the same country; "Revision of the Order Liliacæ," 7 parts, 1870-80; "Monograph of the British Roses," 1869; "Monograph of the British Mints," 1865; Monographs of Papilionacæ and other Orders in Oliver's "Flora of Tropical Africa," 1861-71; Descriptions of the Plants figured in Vols. I, III., and IV. of Saunders' "Refugium Botanicum," 1869-1871; "Popular Monographs of Narcissus, Crocus, Liliun, Iris, Crinum, Aquilegia, Sempervivum, Epimedium, Tulipa, Nerine, and Agave," 1870-77; "Monograph of the Papilionacæ of India," 1876; "Systema Iridacearum," 1877; "Flora of Mauritius and the Seychelles," 1877; "A Monograph of Hypoxidacæ," 1879; "A Monograph of Selaginella," 1884-85; "On the Tuber-bearing Species of Solanum," 1884. The following are the titles of Mr. Baker's works on geographical botany, &c.: "An Attempt to Classify the Plants of Britain according to their Geographical Relations," 1855; "North Yorkshire: Studies of its Botany, Geology, Climate, and Physical Geography," 1863; "A New Flora of Northumberland and Durham, with Essays on the Climate and Physical Geography of the Counties" (aided by Dr. G. R. Tate), 1868; "On the Geographical Distribution of Ferns through the World, with a Table showing the Range of each Species," 1868; "Elementary Lessons in Botanical Geography," 1875; many papers on the "Botany of Madagascar," containing descriptions of above 1000 new species, 1881-1890; "A Flora of the English Lake District," 1885. In 1883 he edited, in conjunction with the Rev. W. Newbould, the first published edition of Watson's "Topographical Botany," 1887; "A Handbook of the Fern Allies," 1888; "A Handbook of the Amaryllidæ," 1892; and "A Handbook of the Bromeliacæ," 1890; "Synopsis of Petaloid Monocotyledons of South Africa," 1896, formerly vol. vi. of the "Flora Capensis," now edited by his chief at Kew, Mr. W. T. Thiselton-Dyer.

BAKER, The Rev. William, D.D., Head Master of Merchant Taylors' School, youngest son of the late George Baker, Esq., of Reigate, was born at Reigate in December 1841, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School and St. John's College, Oxford, of which he was sometime Fellow and Tutor, and of which he was appointed Hon. Fellow in 1895. He obtained a first-class in classics at Moderations in 1862, and a second-class in the Final Classical School in 1864, and was elected Denyer and Johnson Theological Scholar in 1866. He was appointed Head Master of Merchant Taylors' School on the retirement of Dr. Hessey at Christmas, 1870, and Prebendary of St. Paul's in 1880. He is the author of "A Manual of Devotion for School Boys," published in 1876; "Lectures on the Historical and Dogmatical Position of the Church of England," 1882; "A Plain Exposition of the Thirty-nine Articles," 1883; "Daily Prayers for Younger Boys," 1886; "Latin and Greek Verse Translations," 1895.

BALDISSERA, General Antonio, Commander-in-Chief of the Italian army in Africa since 1896, is by birth a Venetian, and in 1866 held a commission in the Austrian army. Venice being ceded to Italy, Baldissera took service under the government of Florence. He was a member of the San Marzano Expedition to Africa, and afterwards was for three years in command of the Italian troops in Erythrea. During this command he won for Italy Keren and Asmara without bloodshed. As a diplomat he divided the Abyssinian leaders, outmanœuvred Menelik himself, and thus expanded and solidified the Italian colony. He was recalled at the instance of Count Antonelli, and in the absence of his strong hand the Italians suffered constant reverses. Reappointed to his old post in 1896, in succession to the defeated General Baratieri, he has had to struggle with limited resources against victorious enemies and a hostile public opinion in Italy.

BALFOUR OF BURLEIGH, Lord, The Right Hon. Alexander Hugh Bruce, son of R. Bruce, of Kennet, Alloa, N.B., was born on Jan. 13, 1849, and was educated at Loretto, Eton, and Oriel College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. with honours in 1871, and proceeded to the degree of M.A. in 1872. The title, originally granted in 1607, was attained in 1716, on account of the "rising" of 1715, and was only restored to the present possessor in 1869. Lord Balfour is a Conservative in politics, and has served on the following important commissions during the past twenty-three years, viz.: Member of the Factory Commission, 1874-75; Member of the Endowed Institution (Scotland) Commission, 1878-79; Chairman of the Educational Endowments Commission, 1882-1889; Chairman of the Welsh Sunday Closing Commission, 1889; Chairman of the Metropolitan Water Supply Commission, 1893-94; and Chairman of the Rating Commission, 1896. He acted as Lord-in-Waiting to the Queen from 1888 to 1889, was Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade from 1889 to 1892, and in 1895 he was appointed Secretary for Scotland, with a seat in the Cabinet. He is a member of the Church of Scotland, a Privy Councillor, and was elected Lord Rector of the University of Edinburgh in November 1896. He was married to Katherine Gordon, sister of the Earl of Aberdeen, in 1876, and has a son and heir, Robert, Master of Burleigh, born in 1880. Addresses: Kennet, Alloa, N.B.; 47 Cadogan Square, S.W.; and Athenæum.

BALFOUR, The Right Hon. Arthur James, M.P., LL.D., F.R.S., &c., eldest son of the late James Maitland Balfour, Esq., of Whittinghame, N.B., and Lady Blanche Mary Harriet, daughter of the 2nd Marquis of Salisbury, was born July 25, 1848. He was educated at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge, taking his B.A. degree with second class Honours in Moral Science in 1869. He entered Parliament in 1874 as M.P. for Hertford, which constituency he represented until 1885, when he was elected for East Manchester, for which he still sits. He acted as Private Secretary to the Marquis of Salisbury at the Foreign Office during the critical period 1878-80, when the Berlin treaty was negotiated. In June 1878 he accompanied a special mission to Berlin. In 1879 Mr. Balfour published his work, "A Defence of Philosophic Doubt." It attracted much attention, and gave promise of abilities which could hardly have failed to win recognition even had the writer not been a Conservative politician connected by family ties with Lord Salisbury. The publication was commonly taken to be an argument in favour of theological scepticism, but he himself has declared the very opposite, and that his design was to strengthen revealed religion. In the early portion of his parliamentary career Mr. Balfour acted for a time with the so-called "Fourth Party," a name facetiously given to a small number of Conservative members led by Lord Randolph Churchill. He did not come into prominent notice until 1885, when he became a Privy Councillor and President of the Local Government Board. From July 1886 to March 1887 he was Secretary for Scotland, with a seat in the Cabinet. In November 1887 he was appointed Chief Secretary for Ireland. The appointment was undoubtedly a great experiment, but the task of the pacification of Ireland, which had proved too much for such trained officials as Sir George Trevelyan and Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, was more or less successfully coped with by Mr. Balfour, and he soon checked the torrent of intimidation and crime which had flooded Ireland for so long. At one time, during his tenure of the Chief Secretaryship, his unpopularity with the Irish Home Rulers was extreme, but he has since abandoned that cynical and almost contemptuous manner towards them which was one of the causes of their hostility. His Irish policy, however unwise some may think it, was that which was considered by most people in England as the only means of effectively dealing with the Irish question. His treatment of political prisoners and his extreme eviction policy will probably come to be regarded as errors which he would not now repeat, but on the whole Mr. Balfour has been throughout a conscientious friend to Ireland, and, after the ten years of the "resolute government" which he desired in 1887, he now has the satisfaction of seeing his brother a popular Chief Secretary and active co-operator in the cause of Irish reform. Among the measures brought forward by Mr. Balfour was the Bill for the Improvement of Ireland by the drainage of Bann, Barrow, and Shannon, and by the construction of light railways. The New Purchase of Land Bill, which had been dropped for some time after its first introduction, was passed in August 1891. The Act provides further funds for the purchase of land in Ireland, and makes permanent the Land Commission; it also creates a Congested Districts Board, which has power to relieve congested districts by providing seed potatoes, &c. During October 1890 he made a tour through the western districts of Ireland, visiting Mayo, Donegal, and other places threatened with famine. In January 1891, in conjunction with Lord Zetland, the Lord-Lieutenant, Mr. Balfour issued an appeal to the public for funds to relieve the distress caused by the failure of the potato crop. Large contributions were received, and a sum of nearly £60,000 was distributed. Upon the death of Mr. W. H. Smith, Mr. Balfour was unanimously elected leader of the House of Commons and First Lord of the Treasury, and throughout the session of 1892 he continued to show increased ability in leading the Unionist party. In the following year his speeches against the Home Rule for Ireland Bill greatly added to his reputation. In April 1893 he visited Belfast on the occasion of the great Ulster demonstration held there, taking the place of Lord Salisbury, whom illness prevented from attending. On the return of the Unionist party to power in 1895, Mr. Balfour again became leader of the House. The various crises through which the country has passed since that date have called for a good deal of tact and patience, as well as skilful leadership, on the part of Mr. Balfour. The Jameson Raid, affairs in Egypt, West Africa, and China, have all brought their load of anxiety to the Government, which was subjected during 1897-98 to some sharp criticism, even from Conservative members, especially with regard to a supposed want of vigorous action in Chinese affairs. During the recent illness of the Prime Minister practically the whole business of the Foreign Office has been in the hands of Mr. Balfour. He has been the recipient of many university honours. He was elected Lord Rector of St. Andrews University in November 1886 and also of Glasgow University in 1890, and Chancellor of Edinburgh University in 1891. In 1888 he was appointed Member of the Senate of London University, in which year he was also admitted to the Freedom of the City. Mr. Balfour is an Hon. LL.D. of nearly all the universities of the United Kingdom, a D.C.L. of Oxford, and F.R.S. He has been President of the Committee of the Council of Education for Scotland, and Keeper of the Privy Seal in Ireland. In 1887 he was appointed member of the Gold and Silver Commission; and mention should be made of his bias in favour of bimetalism, with regard to which he has said, "That if bimetalists could by international arrangement fix some ratio of exchange between gold and silver coin, they would create an automatic system by which the demand and supply for gold and silver respectively would maintain that ratio at the point they fixed it." In July 1898 Mr. Balfour was elected Vice-President of the London Library to succeed the late Mr. Gladstone. He is a D.L. for East Lothian and Ross-shire, and a late Captain of the East Lothian Yeomanry. In 1894 he was chosen captain of the Royal and Ancient Golf Club of St. Andrews, and is also President of the National Cyclists' Union. Besides his "Defence of Philosophic Doubt," he has published "Essays and Addresses," 1893; and "The Foundations of Belief, being Notes Introductory to the Study of Theology," 1895. He also wrote the volume on "Golf" in the Badminton series. Addresses: 10 Downing Street, S.W.; Whittinghame, Prestonkirk; and Athenæum.

BALFOUR, The Right Hon. Gerald William, M.A., M.P. for Central Leeds, and Chief Secretary for Ireland, was born in 1853, and is the fourth son of the late James Maitland Balfour of Whittinghame and Lady Blanche Cecil, daughter of the second Marquis of Salisbury. He was educated at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a first-class in the Classical Tripos. He was afterwards appointed Assistant Tutor, and elected Fellow in 1878. He entered Parliament in 1885 as Conservative member for Central Leeds, and retains the seat. Since 1895 he has been Chief Secretary for Ireland. From 1885 to 1886 he was private secretary to his brother, the Right Hon. A. J. Balfour, at the Local Government Board. He was a Member of the Royal Commission on Labour in 1891, and became a Privy Councillor in 1895. In the last session of Parliament he successfully introduced an Irish Local Government Bill, similar to Mr. Ritchie's, which has done much to conciliate the Home Rulers. Some financial points in the bill were contested by the Irish landlords, but, on the whole, it gave universal satisfaction. The Act establishes County Councils and District Councils, and provides for the propertied classes not being "rated out of existence" by the distribution each year out of the Imperial Exchequer of a sum equal to one-half of the county cess and one-half of the poor-rate. It is this provision which differentiates it from the English and Scotch Acts. He married in 1887 Lady Elizabeth, daughter of the 1st Earl of Lytton. Addresses: 24 Addison Road, W.; and Chief Secretary's Lodge, Phoenix Park, Dublin.

BALFOUR, Professor Isaac Bayley, Botanist, M.D. (Edin.), D.Sc. (Edin.), M.A. (Oxon.), F.R.S., F.R.S.E., F.L.S., F.G.S., and member of other British and foreign scientific societies, was born in Edinburgh March 31, 1853, being the second son of John Hutton Balfour, Professor of Botany in the University of Edinburgh, 1845-79. He was educated at the Edinburgh Academy and at the University of Edinburgh, where he was Baxter Natural Science Scholar, and graduated with honours in Science and Medicine. In 1879 he was appointed Regius Professor of Botany in the University of Glasgow, which chair he resigned on being elected in 1884 Sherardian Professor of Botany in the University of Oxford. This chair he resigned in 1888 on his receiving the appointment of Queen's Botanist in Scotland, Keeper of the Royal Botanic Garden in Edinburgh, and Regius Professor of Botany, having previously been elected Professor of Botany in the University of Edinburgh. These positions he now holds. In 1874 he was appointed by the Royal Society

Naturalist to the Transit of Venus Expedition to Rodriguez. The natural history results of the Expedition are published in the Philosophical Transactions, vol. clxiii. (1879). In 1880 he undertook, on behalf of the Royal Society and the British Association, the exploration of the island of Socotra. Reports upon the results of the Expedition have appeared in publications of the British Association and of the Royal Institution. The botany of the island constitutes vol. xxxi. (1888) of the Transactions of the Royal Society, Edinburgh. Professor Balfour has contributed papers, chiefly on botanical subjects, to the various botanical journals and publications of scientific societies. He is editor of the "Annals of Botany." He is married to Agnes, daughter of Robert Balloch, a Glasgow merchant. Addresses: Inverleith House, Edinburgh; and Athenæum.

BALFOUR, The Right Hon. John Blair, Q.C., M.P., LL.D., P.C., is the son of the late Rev. Peter Balfour, minister of Clackmannan, by Jane Ramsay, daughter of Mr. John Blair of Perth. He was born at Clackmannan on July 11, 1837, and was educated at the Edinburgh Academy and the University of Edinburgh. He was called to the Scottish Bar in 1861, and was appointed Solicitor-General for Scotland on the formation of Mr. Gladstone's Administration in 1880. Mr. Balfour entered Parliament as M.P. for the counties of Clackmannan and Kinross in November 1880, in the place of the late Mr. W. P. Adam, on the appointment of the latter as Governor of Madras, and was again elected in November 1885, in July 1886, in July 1892, and in July 1895. In August 1881 he was appointed Lord Advocate for Scotland, and held that office till the resignation of Mr. Gladstone's Administration in June 1885; was re-appointed Lord Advocate in February 1886, when he held office till August 1886; and a third time in August 1892, when he held office till July 1895; was made Privy Councillor and a Member of the Committee of Council on Education in Scotland 1883; elected Dean of the Faculty of the Advocates July 1885, and again May 1889, and Deputy-Lieutenant for the County of the City of Edinburgh. He is also Hon. LL.D. of the Universities of Edinburgh and St. Andrews. Mr. Balfour has been twice married—first, in 1869, to Lillias Oswald, daughter of Lord Mackenzie, a Judge of the Court of Session (Supreme Court) of Scotland; and, secondly, in 1877, to the Hon. Marianne Eliza Wellwood Moncreiff, younger daughter of the Right Hon. Lord Moncreiff, late Lord Justice Clerk of Scotland. Addresses: 6 Rothesay Terrace, Edinburgh; and Glacelune, North Berwick, N.B.

BALL, Sir Robert Stawell, LL.D., F.R.S., was born at 3 Granby Row, Dublin, on 1st July 1840, and is the eldest son of the late Robert Ball, LL.D., a distinguished naturalist, and Director of the Museum in Trinity College, Dublin. He was educated at Tarvin Hall and Abbots Grange, Chester, by Dr. Brindley, and entered Trinity College, Dublin, in 1857, graduating there as University Student in Mathematics in 1861. He was appointed Astronomer to the late Earl of Rosse at Parsonstown, King's County, Ireland, in 1865, Professor of Applied Mathematics and Mechanism at the Royal College of Science for Ireland in 1867, Fellow of the Royal Society in 1873, Andrews Professor of Astronomy in the University of Dublin, and Royal Astronomer of Ireland in 1874, Scientific Adviser to the Commissioners of Irish Lights in 1883, Lowndean Professor of Astronomy and Geometry in the University of Cambridge, and Director of the Cambridge Observatory, and Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, in 1892, President of the Royal Astronomical Society in 1897. He is Hon. Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He has published a long series of Memoirs on Dynamics in the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, for which he has been awarded the Cunningham Gold Medal of the Academy. He has been a Member of Council of the Royal Zoological Society of Ireland since 1869, and was President of the Society 1890-92. He is author of the following works among others: "Experimental Mechanics" (Macmillan), "Theory of Screws" (Hodges & Figgis), "The Story of the Heavens" (Cassell), "Starland" (Cassell), "In Starry Realms" (Isbister), "In the High Heavens" (Isbister), London Science Class-books in Astronomy and Mechanics (Longmans), and "Time and Tide," besides many papers on Mathematics, Astronomy, and Physical Science in various publications. He is the editor of the "Admiralty Manual of Scientific Inquiry." Several of his works have been translated into foreign languages. Sir Robert Ball has also lectured frequently on astronomy at the leading institutions in the United Kingdom. He was married on Aug. 5, 1868, to Frances Elizabeth, daughter of the late William E. Steele, Esq., M.D., Director of the National Science and Art Museum, Dublin, and he has six children. He is a member of the Athenæum Club, Pall Mall, and his residence is at the Observatory, Cambridge. He was knighted on Jan. 25, 1886. Addresses: The Observatory, Cambridge; and Athenæum.

Gloucestershire and Wiltshire family, is the daughter of the late Mr. Robert Pleydell Wilton. After acting from early childhood in the provinces, chiefly at the old Theatre Royal, Bristol, she first appeared in London in September 1856 at the Lyceum Theatre, as the boy in "Belphegor" and "Perdita the Royal Milkmaid." Subsequently she fulfilled various engagements at London houses, notably making the fortune of the celebrated burlesques at the Strand Theatre. Miss Wilton, in partnership with Mr. H. J. Byron, became manager of the Prince of Wales's Theatre, London, at Easter 1865. Shortly afterwards she gave up burlesque acting, and devoted her entire attention to the production of English comedies, chiefly written by the late T. W. Robertson. She was married to Mr. (now Sir) S. B. Bancroft in December 1867. Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft continued their successful career at the Prince of Wales's Theatre until January 1880, when they migrated to the Haymarket, of which Theatre they had become the lessees. The characters with which Lady Bancroft's name is best associated are Polly Eccles, Naomi Tighe, Mary Netley, Peg Woffington, Jenny Northcote, Nan, Lady Franklin, and Lady Teazle. Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft retired from theatrical management in July 1885, the occasion being a remarkable tribute to their popularity both before and behind the curtain. Lady Bancroft has since shown considerable power as a writer by her important share in the book of reminiscences called "Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft on and off the Stage." Except for occasional charitable morning performances Lady Bancroft did not again appear upon the stage until February 1893, when she took part in the revival of "Diplomacy" at the Garrick Theatre. On the occasion of the performance of "Diplomacy" before the Queen, Mrs. Bancroft was honoured by special marks of her Majesty's favour.

BANCROFT, Sir Squire Bancroft, K.B., actor and theatrical manager, born in London, May 14, 1841, made his first appearance on the stage at the Theatre Royal, Birmingham, in January 1861. He afterwards accepted engagements in Dublin and Liverpool, playing almost every line of character, including important Shakesperian parts, with Charles Kean, Phelps, and G. V. Brooke. He made his début in London on the occasion of the opening of the Prince of Wales's Theatre, under the management of Mr. Byron and Miss Marie Wilton, April 15, 1865. Mr. T. W. Robertson's popular comedies, "Society," "Ours," "Caste," "Play," "School," and "M.P." were brought out at this theatre, and in each of them Mr. Bancroft created one of the leading characters. In 1867 Mr. Bancroft married Miss Marie Wilton, and a large share of the management of the Prince of Wales's Theatre thenceforward devolved upon him. Among other parts subsequently performed by him at that house were Sir Frederick Blunt in "Money," Joseph Surface in the "School for Scandal," Triplet in "Masks and Faces," Sir George Ormond in "Péril," Dazzle in "London Assurance," Blenkinsop in "An Unequal Match," Count Orloff in "Diplomacy," and Henry Spreadbrow in "Sweethearts." Mr. Bancroft's successful career at the Prince of Wales's Theatre was brought to a close on Jan. 29, 1880. In September 1879 he had become lessee of the Haymarket, and after expending £20,000 on its internal rebuilding and decorations, he began his management of that theatre on Jan. 31, 1880. The first performance was Lord Lytton's comedy, "Money." "Odette" was produced in April 1882, Mr. Bancroft taking the part of Lord Henry Trevene, with Madame Modjeska as Odette. This was followed by the "Overland Route" (September 1882), and the farewell revival of "Caste" in 1883. M. Sardou's "Fédora" was produced with marked success in May of the same year, which was followed by Mr. Pinero's comedy "Lords and Commons," and an elaborate revival of "The Rivals." Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft having realised a large fortune, retired from their exceptionally successful career of management on July 20, 1885. Mr. Bancroft reappeared on the stage in the autumn of 1889 at the Lyceum Theatre with Mr. Irving, acting with great success the part of the Abbé Latour in "The Dead Heart." Mr. Bancroft subscribed £1000 towards General Booth's scheme for alleviating distress, foregoing his stipulation that ninety-nine others should subscribe the same amount. The Earl of Aberdeen was the first to follow suit. In February 1893 Mr. Bancroft appeared at the Garrick Theatre in a revival of "Diplomacy," which had a notable success, being also acted before the Queen. Sir Squire Bancroft, who received the honour of knighthood in 1897, has since devoted much time to "Readings" throughout the country in aid of hospitals and similar institutions, to which he has given large sums. Permanent address: 18 Berkeley Square, W.

BANFFY, Baron, was born in 1842 at Klausenburg, in Transylvania, and was educated at the Universities of Leipzig and Berlin. After spending some time in travel he became a provincial prefect in Transylvania, and spread ideas of reform throughout his district. On the reformation of the Upper Chamber in Hungary he was elected a life peer. He was returned to the Reichstag in 1892, and immediately became its President. On the retirement of Dr. Wekerle he succeeded him as Premier, on the distinct understanding that he should carry out his Liberal programme. He caused Count Kalnoky's resignation in 1895 by standing out against his high and dry Conservatism, and at the general elections of 1896 he was supported strongly throughout the country.

BANGOR, Bishop of. See LLOYD, THE RIGHT REV. DANIEL LEWIS.

BANKES, John Eldon, was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1878, and is a Special Pleader on the North Wales and Chester Circuits. Address: 3 Hare Court, Temple, E.C.

BANKS, William Mitchell, M.D., F.R.C.S., was born at Edinburgh in 1842, and was educated at the Edinburgh Academy and at the University of Edinburgh. In 1864 he took the degree of M.D. with honours, gaining the University Gold Medal for an anatomical thesis on the Wolffian Bodies. After graduating, he acted as Demonstrator of Anatomy in the University of Glasgow under the late Professor Allen Thomson for two years, and then settled in Liverpool as a consulting and operating surgeon. Mr. Banks has contributed numerous surgical papers to various journals and societies, but his name has been more especially associated with the advocacy of extensive operative measures for the removal of cancer of the breast, and with attempts to find the most suitable operation for the radical cure of rupture. His chief work, however, has been in connection with the resuscitation of the Medical School of Liverpool, and with the origination of the University College of that city, now one of the three colleges of the Victoria University. In the laying down of the original constitution of the college, and in the arrangements of the regulations for the medical degrees of the University, Mr. Banks's work has been of acknowledged service. He has also devoted much time and labour to the building of the new Liverpool Royal Infirmary, having endeavoured, by the introduction of the latest forms of construction and the most recent improvements in building materials, to render this hospital a model of sanitary science. Mr. Banks is Senior Surgeon to the Liverpool Royal Infirmary, and Emeritus Professor of Anatomy in University College, Liverpool. He has been President of the Liverpool Medical Institution and of the Lancashire and Cheshire branch of the British Medical Association. He has been Vice-President and President of the Surgical Section of that Association, and delivered the address in surgery at Montreal in 1897, when the Association visited that city. On the formation of the Liverpool Biological Society in 1886 Mr. Banks was appointed its first president, and in 1893 he gave the annual oration before the Medical Society of London. He was the first representative of the Victoria University on the General Medical Council, and has been a Member of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons. He is a Justice of the Peace for the city of Liverpool. Address: 28 Rodney Street, Liverpool.

BARATIERI, General, ex-Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Italian colony in East Africa, is the son of a district judge in the Tyrol, and was born at Condino in 1841. Studying at Roveredo, Trient, and Meran, he finished his classical education under the Franciscans at Circo. Settling in Italy in 1859, he joined Garibaldi, and was a volunteer in the "Thousand of Marsala." Subsequently entering the regular army, he soon rose to be captain, and was wounded at Custozza, where he fought with distinguished bravery. Joining an exploring expedition, he visited Khartoum. He was then for several years editor in Rome of the Rivista Militare, and was employed by Government as Military Attaché to Berlin and Vienna. He had risen to be a Colonel of Bersaglieri when Italy began to become a colonising power. He accompanied General Gandolfi to Africa, and fought with distinction in the campaigns against the Abyssinians, Somalis, and Dervishes, succeeding his chief as Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Italian colony. In 1895 he distinguished himself against Ras Mangascia, moving his troops and gaining victories with astonishing rapidity. In March 1896, however, his troops were overwhelmingly defeated by the Shoans in a battle of a day's duration, in which he was wounded, and lost three thousand Italians, including Generals Dabormida and Albertone, nearly half his artillery, and his ammunition and stores. He was recalled and succeeded by General Baldissera (q.v.).

BARBER, The Rev. W. T. A., son of the Rev. W. Barber, Wesleyan (Missionary) minister, was born Jan. 4, 1858, at Jaffna, Ceylon. He was educated at the Gymnasium, Stellenbosch, Cape Colony, and at New Kingswood School, Bath. He graduated B.A., London, 1882; M.A., Caius College, Cambridge, 1883; and B.D., Dublin, 1896. He entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1882, and was afterwards assistant tutor at the Richmond Theological College, 1882-84; Principal of the Wuchang High School, Central China, 1884-92; and General Secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, 1896-98. He was appointed Head Master of the Leys School, Cambridge, in March 1898. He is author of "David Hill, Missionary and Saint" (1898). Address: The Leys, Cambridge.

BARBOUR, Sir David Miller, K.C.S.I., was born in 1844. He went out early to India, and became Member of Council of the Governor-General of India in 1887, retaining this position until 1893. In 1889 he was created a K.C.S.I. Address: 4 Hungerford Terrace, Calcutta.

BARDSLEY, The Right Rev. John Wareing, D.D., Bishop of Carlisle, born on March 29, 1835, at Keighley, in Yorkshire, is the son of the late Rev. Canon Bardsley, M.A., Rector of St. Ann's, Manchester. He was educated at Burnley and Manchester Grammar Schools, and at Trinity College, Dublin, M.A., D.D. He was Vicar of St. Saviour's, Liverpool, 1870-87; Archdeacon of Warrington, 1880-86; Archdeacon of Liverpool, 1886-87; and Bishop of Sodor and Man, 1887 to 1892, when he was translated to Carlisle. He is the author of "Counsels to Candidates for Confirmation, 1882; "The Origin of Man," 1883. He is married to Elizabeth, daughter of the Rev. B. Powell. Address: Rose Castle, Carlisle.

BARING, Walter, Minister at Monte Video since 1893, was born in 1844, and entered the Diplomatic Service in 1865. He has held offices at Teheran, Lisbon, Athens, and Montenegro, where he was Chargé d'Affaires in 1886. Address: H.M. British Legation, Monte Video.

BARING-GOULD, The Rev. Sabine, M.A., of Lew-Trenchard, born at Exeter on Jan. 28, 1834, is the eldest son of Edward Baring-Gould, Esq., of Lew-Trenchard, Devon, where the family has been seated for nearly 300 years, and of Charlotte Sophia, daughter of Admiral F. Godolphin Bond. He was educated at Clare College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of M.A. in 1856. He was appointed Incumbent of Dalton, Thirsk, by the Viscountess Down in 1869, and Rector of East Mersea, Colchester, by the Crown in 1871. On the death of his father in 1872 he succeeded to the family property, and in 1881 to the Rectory of Lew-Trenchard. He is Justice of Peace for the County of Devon. Mr. Baring-Gould is the author of "Paths of the Just," 1854;

"Iceland: its Scenes and Sagas," 1861; "Postmedieval Preachers," 1865; "The Book of Werewolves," 1865; "Curious Myths of the Middle Ages," 1st series, 1866, 2nd series, 1867; "The Silver Store," 1868; "Curiosities of Olden Times," 1869; "The Origin and Development of Religious Belief," vol. i. 1869, vol. ii. 1870; "The Golden Gate," 1869-70; "In Exitu Israel, an Historical Novel," 1870; "Lives of the Saints," 15 vols., 1872-77; "Some Modern Difficulties, a course of Lectures preached at St. Paul's Cathedral," 1874; "The Lost and Hostile Gospels: an Essay on the Toledoth Jeschu, and the Petrine and Pauline Gospels of the First Three Centuries of which Fragments remain," 1874; "Yorkshire Oddities," 2 vols., 1874; "Some Modern Difficulties," in nine lectures, 1875; "Village Sermons for a Year," 1875; "The Vicar of Morwenstowe," 1876; "The Mystery of Suffering," 1877; "Germany, Present and Past," 1879; "The Preacher's Pocket," 1880; "The Village Pulpit," 1881; "The Last Seven Words," 1884; "The Passion of Jesus," 1885; "The Birth of Jesus," 1885; "Our Parish Church," 1885; "The Trials of Jesus," 1886; "Our Inheritance," 1888; "Old Country Life," 1889; "Historic Oddities," 1889; "The Tragedy of the Cæsars," 2 vols., 1893; "Strange Survivals," 1893. He was editor of The Sacristy, a quarterly review of ecclesiastical art and literature, 1871-73. Of late years Mr. Baring-Gould has won celebrity as a novelist. He is the author of "Mehalah," "John Herring," "Court Royal," and "The Broom Squire" (1896), as well as of many short stories. Among his most recent works should be mentioned "Mrs. Curzenven" and "Cheap Jack Zita," 1893; "The Deserts of Southern France," "The Queen of Love," "A Garland of Country Song," "Old Fairy Tales Retold," 1894; "Noëmi," "The Old English Fairy Tales," 1895; "Napoleon Bonaparte," 1896; "A Study of St. Paul," "Guavas the Tinner," and "Bladys," 1897. He married in 1868 Grace, daughter of Joseph Taylor, Horbury, Yorkshire. Address: Lew-Trenchard House, N. Devon.

BARKER, Lady. See BROOME, LADY.

BARKER, Lieut.-General George Digby, C.B., the son of the late John Barker, of Clare Priory, Suffolk, and Georgiana, daughter of the late Colonel Weston of Shadowbuck, Suffolk, was born at Clare Priory in 1833. He was educated at the old Clapham Grammar School, and entered the army as an Ensign in the 78th Highlanders in 1853. After serving in the Persian Campaign of 1857, for which he received a medal, he was engaged throughout the Indian Mutiny, and was present at the battle of Cawnpore, and the first relief, defence, and capture of Lucknow. From 1874 to 1876 he held the position of Professor of Military Art at the Staff College; he had himself been first in the competition for admission to the Staff College in 1864, and he had passed out first in 1866. Promoted to the rank of Major-General in 1887, he was appointed to command the forces in China and Hong-kong in 1890, and held this position until 1895, having acted as Governor of Hong-kong during part of the year 1891. He became a Lieutenant-General in 1895, and in the following year was made Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Bermudas. General Barker was married in 1862 to Frances, daughter of the late George Murray of Rosemount, Ross-shire. Addresses: Government House, Bermuda; and Clare Priory, Suffolk.

BARLOW, Jane, the daughter of the Rev. Dr. Barlow, Senior Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin, is the author of "Irish Idylls," published in October 1892; "Bogland Studies," "Kerrigan's Quality," "Strangers at Lisconnel," "Maureen's Fairing," "Mrs. Martin's Company," "A Creel of Irish Stories" (1898), "The End of Elflintown," and "The Battle of the Frogs and Mice" (translation). She has also written a number of short stories and poems for various magazines. Address: Raheny, co. Dublin.

BARLOW, Thomas, M.D., was educated at University College, London, taking his M.D. degree at the University of London in 1874, and being elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of London in 1880. He is Physician to University College Hospital, and to the Hospital for Children in Great Ormond Street; Professor of Clinical Medicine in University College, and Physician to Her Majesty's Household. Dr. Barlow has contributed numerous articles and papers to the Transactions of the Pathological Society, the Medico-Chirurgical Society, and the Clinical Society. Address: 10 Wimpole Street, W.

BARLOW, William Henry, F.R.S. (L. & E.), Past Pres. Inst. C.E., Hon. Member Société des Ingénieurs Civils, &c., born at Woolwich on May 10, 1812, is the son of Prof. Barlow, F.R.S., of the Royal Military Academy, was educated at Woolwich; pupil of H. R. Palmer, M.I.C.E.; went to Constantinople in 1832 for Messrs. Mandslay & Field; erected the establishment for the reconstruction of the Turkish Ordnance; and was employed to report on the lighthouses at the entrance of the Bosphorus in the Black Sea. For his services in Turkey he received the decoration of the "Nishan." Returned to England 1833, he became Assistant Engineer on the Manchester and Birmingham Railway; Resident Engineer on the Midland Counties; and Engineer to the Midland Railway on the formation of that Company. He took offices in London in 1857, and became Consulting Engineer of the Midland Company. He made many of the new lines of the Midland, including the London end of the line and the St. Pancras Station. He was Joint Engineer with Sir J. Hawkshaw for the completion of Clifton Bridge; was the Engineer of the new Tay Bridge (1880-1887); and acted jointly with Sir J. Fowler and Mr. T. Harrison to settle the design of the Firth of Forth Bridge; went to America as one of the Judges of the Centennial Exhibition; and was one of the Vice-Presidents of the Royal Society in 1881. After the labours of Bessemer and others had reduced the cost of obtaining steel, Mr. Barlow took an active part in obtaining the recognition, in the rules and regulations of the Board of Trade, of the superior strength of this material for structural purposes. He served in three Commissions appointed by the Board of Trade: (1) to settle the coefficient to be used for steel in engineering structures; (2) to inquire into the cause of the fall of the former Tay Bridge; (3) to report on the provision to be made to resist wind pressure in engineering structures. He was for many years a Director of the Indo-European Telegraph Company; was appointed a Member of the Ordnance Committee in 1881, from which duty ill-health compelled his retirement in 1888. He has contributed several papers to the Philosophical Transactions, viz., one on the "Illumination of Lighthouses" (1837), one on the "Diurnal Variation of Electric Currents on the Surface of the Earth" (1848), one on "Resistance of Flexure in Beams" (1855), and one on "The Logograph" (1874), and several papers to the Institution of Civil Engineers. He married Selina Crawford, daughter of W. Caffin, of the Royal Arsenal. Addresses: High Combe, Old Charlton; and Athenæum.

BARNABY, Sir Nathaniel, K.C.B., Vice-President of the Institution of Naval Architects, London, was born in 1829 at Chatham, and belongs to a family which has produced many generations of shipwrights in the Royal Dockyard there. He was apprenticed to the trade of shipwright at Sheerness in 1843, and in 1848 he won, by competition, an Admiralty Scholarship in the School of Naval Architecture at Portsmouth. In 1854 he superintended the construction of the Viper and Wrangler gun-vessels built by contract for the Royal Navy. In 1855 he entered the designing office at the Admiralty, and during the thirty years he served there he was concerned in the design and construction of all but three of the entire list of sea-going fighting ships, armoured and unarmoured, which were in existence or were building at the date of his retirement, from ill-health, in October 1885. The exceptions were the Neptune, Orion, and Belleisle. He was appointed Chief Naval Architect in 1872, and afterwards, by change of title, Director of Naval Construction. He was the means of inaugurating the change in construction from iron to steel in shipbuilding in England, which has marked the last few years so notably. He initiated and was responsible for the formation of an Admiralty List of Merchant Ships having considerable security against foundering in collision, and appreciable fighting value as auxiliaries in war. He was one of the original founders of the Institution of Naval Architects in 1860, and has contributed many papers on professional subjects to its Transactions, as well as the articles on the "Navy" and "Shipbuilding" to the "Encyclopædia Britannica." He prepared for H.M. Patent Office the first volume of "Abridgments of Specification of Patents in Shipbuilding, &c.," published in 1862, and also the second volume of the same series. He was made a Companion of the Bath in 1876 on the recommendation of Mr. Disraeli, and a Knight Commander of the Bath in June 1885 on the recommendation of Mr. Gladstone. Residence: Moray House, Lewisham, S.E.

BARNARD, Henry, LL.D., American educator, was born at Hartford, Connecticut, Jan. 24, 1811. He graduated at Yale College in 1830, studied law, and was admitted to the Bar in 1835. From 1837 to 1840 he was a member of the Connecticut Legislature, and carried through that body a complete reorganisation of the common school system, and was for four years (1838-42) a member and secretary of the Board of Education created by it. Displaced by a political change in 1842, he spent more than a year in an extensive educational tour through the United States, with a view to the preparation of a History of Public Schools in the United States. He was called from the prosecution of this work to take charge of the public schools of Rhode Island; and after five years returned to Hartford, in 1849. In 1850 a State Normal School was established in Connecticut, and he was appointed Principal, with the added duties of State Superintendent of Public Schools. After five years of severe labour he retired from this work, but soon began the publication of the American Journal of Education, Hartford, in 1855, which is still continued. In addition to this he has been engaged for many years in the publication of a Library of Education, which, in 53 vols., embraces about 800 separate works. He has been President of the American Association for the Advancement of Education, was elected in 1856 President and Chancellor of the University of Wisconsin, which office he resigned in 1859; he was President in 1865-67 of the St. John's College, Annapolis, Maryland, and United States Commissioner of the Department of Education in 1868-70. While secretary of the Board he established the Connecticut Common School Journal, and founded, when in Rhode Island, the Rhode Island School Journal. His own contributions to educational literature have been so numerous, that but few of them can be mentioned here: "School Architecture," 1839; "Education in Factories," 1842; "National Education in Europe," 1851; "Normal Schools in the United States and Europe," 1851; "Tribute to Gallaudet, with History of Deaf Mute Instruction," 1852; "School Libraries," 1854; "Hints and Methods for the Use of Teachers," 1857; "English Pedagogy," 1862; "National Education," 1872; "Military Schools," 1872; "American Pedagogy," 1875.

BARNARDO, Thomas John, F.R.C.S.Ed., F.R.G.S., was born in Ireland in 1845, being the son of the late John M. Barnardo. He was educated at private schools, and then proceeded to study medicine at hospitals in London, Edinburgh, and Paris. Whilst a student at the London Hospital in 1866, he had his attention drawn to the condition of destitute children, and on his own responsibility he opened a small house in Stepney Causeway. Year by year the Homes have extended and multiplied, and the original rule has been always carefully adhered to, viz., that no destitute child, boy or girl, should ever be refused admission. At present the Homes comprise twenty-four mission branches, and eighty-six distinct Homes dealing with every class and age of destitute children, three of these Homes being situated in Canada, one in Jersey, seventeen in the English counties, and the remainder in London. At the Home in Stepney Causeway boys are taught various trades, whilst at the Village Home at Ilford, in Essex, fifty-two separate cottages are used for the bringing up of girls on the family system, under "mothers." An important adjunct is the emigration agency, by means of which boys and girls are removed to the Colonies, chiefly Canada, where suitable employments are found for them. Up to the present time over 32,000 children, of all ages, have been rescued and trained. Dr. Barnardo is the author of "Something Attempted, Something Done"; he has published a large number of small booklets on the rescue of destitute children, and he is the editor of Night and Day, a magazine devoted to the interests of his particular work. Address: Mossford Lodge, near Ilford, Essex.

BARNES, Hon. Sir John Gorell, a Judge of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Divisions, is the eldest son of the late Henry Barnes, Esq., shipowner, of Liverpool, and was born in 1848. He was educated at St. Peter's College, Cambridge, and took his B.A. degree in 1868, and his M.A. in 1871. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1876; went on the Northern Circuit, and took silk in 1888. In 1892 he was appointed a Judge of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice, and received the honour of knighthood in the same year. He married, in 1881, Mary, the eldest daughter of the late Thomas Mitchell, Esq. Addresses: 14 Kensington Park Gardens, W.; and Lamb Building, Temple.

BARNES-LAWRENCE, Herbert Cecil, M.A., is the second son of the Rev. Canon H. F. Barnes-Lawrence, and was born at Bridlington, Dec. 9, 1852. He was educated at King's School, Canterbury, Durham Grammar School, and Trinity and Lincoln Colleges, Oxford, obtaining a scholarship at the latter college. Appointed an assistant-master at Manchester Grammar School in 1876, he remained there until 1881, and after filling a similar position at Giggleswick Grammar School for two further years, he became, in 1883, Headmaster of the Perse Grammar School, Cambridge. Address: Beech House, Cambridge.

BARNETT, Canon Samuel Augustus, M.A., was born in 1844, and educated at Wadham College, Oxford, where he took in 1866 a second in History. He was ordained deacon in 1867, and priest in 1868, and was from 1867 to 1872 curate of St. Mary's, Bryanston Square. He was then appointed Vicar of St. Jude's, Whitechapel. There has hardly been a scheme for the elevation or education of the people of East London which he and Mrs. Barnett have not initiated or supported. Their names are identified with Poor Law Reform, the Extension of University Teaching, Charity Organisation, the Children's Country Holidays Fund, the Higher Education of Pupil Teachers, and many other philanthropic movements. With the help of friends from Oxford and elsewhere, Canon Barnett built "Toynbee Hall," close to St. Jude's Church, a kind of residential club and college, which forms a centre for university men who come and settle for a time to work among the poor. The success of his free exhibitions of loan-collections of pictures is attested by the increasing number of people—many of them of the humblest classes—who annually crowd to see them. In theology Canon Barnett belongs to the Broad Church School. In 1893 he became a Canon of Bristol, and was succeeded at St. Jude's by the Rev. Ronald Bayne. In 1896 he was appointed Select Preacher before Oxford University. He still holds a curacy at St. Jude's, and has published, in conjunction with Mrs. Barnett, "Practicable Socialism" and "The Service of God." Address: Toynbee Hall, Whitechapel.

BARODA, The Maharajah Gaekwar of. His Highness Maharajah Syagi Rao Gaekwar was born on March 10, 1863, at the town of Kavalana, in the Nassick District, and is the son of the late Rao Bhikaji Rao Gaekwar. He was educated at the "Maharajah's School" at Baroda, under the personal supervision and tuition of Mr. F. Elliot, of the Indian Civil Service. It will be in the memory of our readers how the late Gaekwar, Mulhar Rao, for his attempt to poison Colonel Phayre, the British Resident, and for continual and gross misgovernment, was, after being tried by a mixed commission of European officials and native chiefs, deposed from his government and sent into exile at Madras, where he died at the end of 1882. On Mulhar Rao's deposition, and with the consent of the Earl of Northbrook, then Viceroy of India, the Maharanee Jumna Bai adopted, on May 27, 1875, the present Maharajah, who was on the same day installed on the guddee or throne. During the minority of the Maharajah the administration was carried on by a Council of Regency under the direction of the European representative; and Raja Sir Tounjore Madhava Rao, Bahadoor, K.C.S.I., who was the Dewan to His Highness Maharajah Scindiah of Gwalior, was specially selected to fill the post of Prime Minister, together with a seat at the Regency Board. On Dec. 28, 1881, and at the early age of eighteen, his Highness was invested with full and sovereign powers, and since he has held the reins of state, he has, with the assistance of Sir Madhava Rao, whom he has retained as his Prime Minister, given satisfaction by his aptitude for work and desire to introduce reforms. His Highness is an excellent English scholar, speaking the language as fluently as his own.

BARR, Mrs. Amelia Edith, was born at Ulverston, Lancashire, March 29, 1831, and is the daughter of William Henry Huddleston. She was educated at the Glasgow High School, and in 1850 married Mr. Robert Barr, a Glasgow merchant. In 1854 she went to the United States, and after residing for a few years at Austin, Texas, removed to Galveston, in the same state, where, in 1867, her husband and three sons died of yellow fever. She went to New York in 1869 with her daughters, and taught for two years, and then began writing for publication. In addition to newspaper and magazine contributions, she has published "Romance and Reality," 1872; "Young People of Shakespeare's Time," 1882; "Cluny M'Pherson," 1883; "Scottish Sketches," 1883; "The Hallam Succession," 1884; "The Lost Silver of Briffault," 1885; "Jan Vedder's Wife," 1885; "A Daughter of Fife," 1886; "The Last of the M'Allisters," 1886; "The Bow of Orange Ribbon," 1886; "Between Two Loves," 1886; "The Squire of Sandalside," 1887; "Paul and Christina," 1887; "A Border Shepherdess," 1887; "Master of His Fate," 1888; "Remember the Alamo," 1888; "Christopher and other Stories," 1888; "Feet of Clay," 1889; "Friend Olivia," 1890; "A Rose of a Hundred Leaves," 1891; "A Sister to Esau," 1891; "Love for an Hour is Love for Ever," 1892; "A Singer from the Sea," 1892; "Girls of a Feather," 1893; "The Lone House," 1894; "Prisoners of Conscience," 1897, &c. Address: Cherry Croft, Cornwall Heights, Cornwall-on-Hudson, New York.

BARRÈS, Maurice, French novelist, born at Charmes sur Moselle, Aug. 17, 1862, was educated for the law, but preferred literature. At the end of 1883 he founded and edited a small literary paper called Les Jachés d'Eucre, which only lasted a year, and was the organ of a new school. He then wrote for the Revue Contemporaine and the Voltaire. In 1888 he published a novel called "Sous l'œil des barbares," which advocated the doctrine of absolute selfishness, also "Sensation de Paris," and "Le Quartier Latin," both of a pessimistic character. His attitude of absolute negation was more marked in an essay called "Huit Jours chez Monsieur Renan" (1888). He made himself a niche among the coming young men in literature, and was regarded as the head of a new school called "The Decadents." He entered the Chamber of Deputies in 1889 as member for Nancy, and was a warm partisan of General Boulanger. Paris address: 100 Bonhard Maillot.

BARRETT, Wilson, actor, is the son of a gentleman-farmer, and was born in Essex on Feb. 18, 1846. He was educated at a private school, and entered the dramatic profession by his own choice at an early age. Mr. Barrett first appeared on the stage at Halifax, and first essayed management as the lessee of the Burnley Theatre. In 1874 he took the Amphitheatre, Leeds. This house was destroyed by fire in 1876, and a limited company then built the Grand Theatre, Leeds, which was opened with Mr. Barrett as lessee in 1878. In 1879 he undertook the management of the Court Theatre, London. Here he produced "Heartsease," an adaptation of Schiller's "Marie Stuart," "Frou Frou," "Romeo and Juliet," "Juana," a poetical play by W. G. Wills, and "The Old Love and the New." In 1881 Mr. Barrett became sole lessee and manager of the Princess's Theatre, where he revived "The Old Love and the New." In the following September he produced Mr. G. R. Sims' drama, "The Lights o' London," and played Harold Armitage for 286 nights. "The Romany Rye," by the same author, was produced in 1882, and "The Silver King" in the same year. In this drama Mr. Barrett created the part of Wilfred Denver, which he played for 300 consecutive nights. In December 1883 he created the part of Claudian in the poetical play of that name, and played it for 300 nights. In October 1884 he made his first appearance in London as Hamlet. Hamlet was played for 117 nights, and then Mr. Barrett appeared as Junius Brutus in the late Lord Lytton's tragedy "Junius; or, the Household Gods." This was followed by revivals of "The Silver King" and "The Lights o' London." In 1885 Mr. Barrett produced the drama "Hoodman Blind," written by Mr. Henry A. Jones and himself, in which he played Jack Yeulett for 171 nights. Mr. Barrett is also part-author with Mr. Clement Scott of the modern drama "Sister Mary," produced at Brighton in 1886, and with Mr. Sydney Grundy of the classical tragedy "Clito," which followed the "Lord Harry" at the Princess's. At the same theatre he produced the "Ben-my-Chree," an adaptation of Hall Caine's famous novel "The Deemster," and subsequently "The Good Old Times," which was written in collaboration with Mr. Hall Caine; and in 1889 his own romantic drama "Now-a-Days." "The Golden Ladder" was produced by Mr. Barrett at the Globe Theatre. On May 18, 1889, he took farewell of his patrons for a long engagement in America. Since his return from that tour Mr. Barrett has written and played "Pharaoh," a four-act tragedy. He also revived "Othello" and "Virginus." In November 1893 Mr. Barrett again sailed for America, and in December of that year produced his adaptation of Hall Caine's "Bondman" at the Chestnut Street Theatre, Philadelphia. In 1895 he returned to London, and achieved a marvellous success with the spectacular religious drama "The Sign of the Cross," a tale of the early Christians, written by himself. He sustained the chief rôle, and Miss Mary Jeffries was his leading lady. It ran for over a year and a half at the Lyric Theatre. He also produced "The Daughters of Babylon," and at the end of 1897 he took another trip to America. Address: Garrick Club.

BARRIE, James Matthew ("Gavin Ogilvy"), was born on May 9, 1860, at Kirriemuir, a small weaving town in Forfarshire. He attended school there, and afterwards went for five years to Dumfries Academy. Subsequently he took the art-classes at Edinburgh University, and graduated as an M.A. in 1882. He was for eighteen months leader-writer on a Nottingham paper; then became a journalist in London, writing chiefly for the St. James's Gazette, to which paper and the British Weekly, the Speaker, and the National Observer, he still frequently contributes. His first book, "Better Dead," a satire on London life, appeared in 1887, and was followed by two more important works the year after, namely, "Auld Licht Idylls," and "When a Man's Single." In 1889 he published "A Window in Thrums," and in 1890 "My Lady Nicotine." The "Thrums" of three of these stories is his native town. "Sentimental Tommy" followed, and in 1896 appeared "Margaret Ogilvy," a memoir of the author's mother. During 1891 "The Little Minister," his first long story, appeared in Good Words, and was shortly republished in book form. In 1892 "Walker, London," a comedy by Mr. Barrie, the scene of which is laid on a house-boat, was produced at Toole's, and enjoyed a phenomenal run. This was followed by "Jane Annie," written in conjunction with Mr. Conan Doyle, and produced at the Savoy in May 1893, and by "The Professor's Love Story," produced by Mr. Willard in America and at the Garrick Theatre, London, 1894. His latest great dramatic success has been "The Little Minister," produced by Mr. Cyril Maude at the Haymarket in November 1897. This play, based on his novel, has had a long run. He married at Kirriemuir, in July 1894, Miss Mary Ansell, who made her mark in

"Walker, London." Address: Kirriemuir, Forfar.

BARRINGTON, Rutland, was born at Penge on Jan. 15, 1853, and made his first appearance on the stage at the Olympic in "Clancarty" in 1874. He was for some time an entertainer, travelling two years with Mrs. Howard Paul's company. In 1877 he appeared as Dr. Daly in "The Sorcerer," which was produced in the November of that year at the Opera Comique. His association with Mr. D'Oyly Carte dates from these times, when he began his well-known career as an actor and singer in Gilbert and Sullivan opera, making his classic hit in "The Mikado." As an actor of high comedy Mr. Barrington has also made a name. His first success in this direction was attained in "The Dean's Daughter," adapted by Mr. F. C. Philips from that author's novel of the same name. The play was produced by Mr. Barrington at the St. James's Theatre, of which he became manager in 1888, after severing his connection with the Savoy. He acted the part of the Dean, but the play was shortly withdrawn. In November he appeared as Mr. Thursby in "Brantingham Hall." Returning to the Savoy, where he had only missed appearing in "The Yeomen of the Guard," he played the part of Giuseppe Palmieri in "The Gondoliers," December 1889. He was the Rajah in "The Nautch Girl," 1891; and the Vicar in the revival of "The Vicar of Bray," 1892. Subsequent parts have been Rupert Vernon in "Haddon Hall," 1892; a Proctor in "Jane Annie," 1893; King Paramount in "Utopia (Limited)," 1893; Dr. Brierley in "The Gaiety Girl," 1894. In the latter year he replaced Mr. Monkhouse at Daly's. He appeared at the Lyric as the Regent in "His Excellency," in October 1894. In November 1895 he resumed his famous part of the Mikado at the Savoy. His most recent appearances have been at Daly's, as a Japanese magnate in "The Geisha," and a Roman Prefect in "The Greek Slave," 1898.

BARRINGTON, Sir Vincent H. B. Kennett, M.A., L.L.M., born Sept. 3, 1844, is the eldest son of the late Captain Vincent F. Kennett of the Manor House, Dorchester, by Arabella Henrietta, daughter and co-heiress of the late Sir Jonah Barrington, Judge of the High Court of Admiralty in Ireland, M.P. for Tuam and Clogher, and widow of Edward Hughes Lee. He assumed by Royal Licence, 1878, the additional surname and arms of Barrington under his mother's will, but continues to sign "Barrington." Both his parents are of ancient descent. He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a scholarship, and graduated as Wrangler in the Mathematical Tripos, 1867, and in Law Honours, 1869. Barrister Inner Temple, 1872, and formerly Lieutenant, Royal Elthorne Militia. Married, 1878, Alicia Georgette, daughter of the late George G. Sandeman of Westfield, Hayling Island. He was engaged as Commissioner under the Geneva Convention (Red Cross) during the following wars: Franco-German war, 1870-71, serving at Saarbruck, Metz, Orleans, siege of Paris, and afterwards in the East of France for relief of wounded during Bourbaki's retreat; Carlist war, 1873-76, serving at sieges of Bilbao and Pampeluna, and the last battles on the French frontier; Turco-Servian war, 1876, after which he joined Viscountess Strangford's mission in relief of the victims of the Bulgarian revolution; Turco-Russian war, 1877-78, serving with a staff of forty-five surgeons as Chief Commissioner of the Stafford House Committee, which established eleven hospitals, six field ambulances, and other means of relief in Europe and Asia. He also served during the Suakim Expedition 1885 and the Servo-Bulgarian war, 1885-86, and was engaged in ambulance work during revolutions in Argentina and Brazil, and in Venezuela, where he founded its Red Cross Society. For war services he was knighted, 1886, and received Egyptian war medal and clasp, Khedival Star, the Orders of Osmanie (Turkish), Takova (Servian), Isabel Catolica (Spanish), Alexander (Bulgarian), the French bronze cross, and the Turkish, Saxon, and other war medals; and also the silver and bronze medals of the Royal Humane Society for swimming to the rescue of drowning men. He was an early worker in the St. John Ambulance Association; Deputy Chairman of its Central Committee since 1883, and appointed for services Honorary Associate of the Order of St. John, 1875, and Knight of Grace, 1889. As Government nominated member of the Metropolitan Asylums Board since 1883, he has taken special interest in its fever and smallpox ambulance department; was Chairman of its Statistical Committee, 1887-92, and Cholera Committee. He was formerly partner in Wollaston & Sons, when he was elected on the Council of the London Chamber of Commerce, 1883, Deputy Chairman, 1889, and has since been Chairman of its South American Section, and on the Council of the Association of Chambers of Commerce since 1886. He was President of the Jury (Life Saving Section) Brussels Exhibition, 1876, and on the Juries of the Exhibition of Paris, 1889 (Social Economy), and Health Exhibition 1884, and on the Commissions of these Exhibitions, and of the Brussels

Exhibition, 1898. He has also been Special Commissioner to the Governments of various South American Republics on railway and harbour matters, and to India, Egypt, and other countries. He is author of various papers on Floating Hospitals (Epidemiological Society), 1883; River Pollution (Fisheries Exhibition), 1883; Ambulance Organisation of the Metropolis during Epidemics (Health Exhibition), 1884; Regent Progress in Ambulance Work (Sanitary Congress, Dublin), 1884; Organisation of the Metropolitan Asylum Board (Congress of Hygiene), 1891, &c. Address: 57 Albert Hall Mansions, S.W.

BARRINGTON, Hon. William Augustus Curzon, British Minister Plenipotentiary to the Argentine Republic and to the Republic of Paraguay since 1896, was born on Jan. 28, 1842, and is the third son of the 6th Viscount Barrington. He was educated at Woolwich and the University of Bonn, and entered the diplomatic service in 1859, becoming successively Secretary of Legation at Buenos Ayres, 1883, Acting Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General at Lima, 1884; Consul-General at Buda-Pesth in 1885; Chargé d'Affaires at Belgrade, and, afterwards, First Secretary at the Embassies of Madrid and Vienna. Address: H.B.M. Legation, Buenos Ayres.

BARROS, Prudente José de Moraes, late President of the United States of Brazil, born at Itu, in the state of Sao-Paulo, in 1841, studied law, and in 1863 became a barrister, and acquired a great reputation as an orator. In 1866 he was elected deputy for his native state, and became one of the Commission of the Budget. In 1870, when the Republican party was formed, he was one of the first to join it. In 1885 he was elected to the Chamber of Rio de Janeiro, and vigorously upheld the Republican cause. After the revolution of Nov. 15, 1889, Barros was named Governor of the Province of Sao-Paulo, one of the richest in the country. He occupied this post until November 1890, and governed with great moderation. He was elected a Senator of the Federal Congress charged to formulate the Constitution of the New Republic, and on its meeting he was chosen President. In 1891 he was a candidate for the Presidency of the Republic, but was defeated by Marshal de Fonseca, the dictator. At the second election in 1892 he was successful, and the vote was ratified by universal suffrage in 1894. He entered into power on Nov. 15, 1894, in spite of the resistance of the followers of General Peixoto (q.v.). In 1898 he was succeeded as President by Campos-Sales.

BARROW, John, F.R.S., F.S.A., F.R.G.S., was born in 1808, being the second son of Sir John Barrow, Bart., and was educated at the Charterhouse. He became Keeper of the Records at the Admiralty, and took an active part in promoting the search for Sir John Franklin, the officers engaged in the search presenting him with a handsome silver ornament representing the Arctic circle. He is, besides, an authority on mountaineering, and has been an active member of the Alpine Club. Mr. Barrow is the author of "Naval Worthies in Queen Elizabeth's Reign," "Life of Sir Francis Drake," "Expeditions on the Glaciers," &c. Addresses: 17 Hanover Terrace, Regent's Park, N.; and Athenæum.

BARROW-IN-FURNESS, Bishop of. See WARE, THE RIGHT REV. HENRY.

BARRY, The Right Rev. Alfred, D.D., D.C.L., late Bishop of Sydney, is the second son of the late eminent architect Sir Charles Barry, and was born in London on Jan. 15, 1826. He was educated at King's College, London, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. as fourth Wrangler, second Smith's prizeman, and seventh in the first-class of the Classical Tripos in 1848, obtaining a Fellowship in the same year. Dr. Barry, who was ordained in 1850, was from 1851 to 1854 Sub-Warden of Trinity College, Glenalmond; and subsequently held from 1854 to 1862 the Head Mastership of the Grammar Schools at Leeds, which he raised to a very high position by his energy and ability. In 1862 he was appointed to the Principalship of Cheltenham College. In 1868 he became Principal of King's College, London; in 1869 Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Bath and Wells; in 1871 was made a Canon of Worcester; in 1875 Honorary Chaplain, and in 1877 Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen; and in 1881 Canon of Westminster. He was also a member of the London School Board from 1871 to 1877. On Jan. 1, 1884, he was consecrated Primate of Australia, Metropolitan of New South Wales, and Bishop of Sydney, which office he resigned for urgent private reasons in May 1889. On his return to England he acted as Assistant Bishop in the diocese of Rochester from 1889 to 1891; in 1891 was appointed to a Canonry at St. George's, Windsor, and in 1895 to the Rectory of St. James', Piccadilly; and undertook the duties of Assistant Bishop in the diocese of London in 1897. Dr. Barry is the author of an "Introduction to the Old Testament," "Notes on the Gospels," "Life of Sir C. Barry, R.A.," "Cheltenham College Sermons," "Sermons for Boys,"

"Notes on the Catechism," "Religion for Every Day; Lectures to Men," 1873; "What is Natural Theology?" being the Boyle Lectures for 1876; "The Manifold Witness for Christ," the Boyle Lectures for 1877, 1878; "Some Lights of Science on the Faith," the Bampton Lectures for 1892; "The Ecclesiastical Expansion of England," the Hulsean Lectures for 1896; "England's Mission to India," 1894; "Christianity and Socialism," 1891; besides some volumes of sermons at Hereford, Worcester, Westminster, and Sydney. In 1851 he married Louisa, daughter of Canon T. E. Haughes. Addresses: The Cloisters, Windsor Castle; St. James's Rectory, Piccadilly; and Athenæum.

BARRY, Charles, F.S.A., is the eldest son of the late Sir Charles Barry, and was born in 1823. He showed an early desire to be an architect, and was educated for the profession in his father's office, and was for several years assisting him in various important works, both public and private, including the New Houses of Parliament. His health failing, in 1846 he went abroad and travelled through France, Germany, and Italy, studying the architectural works in those countries, and was absent 1½ years. He did not return to his father's office, but at his recommendation started practice on his own account, associating with him as partner the late Robert R. Banks, Esq., who had for some years been one of the principal assistants of Sir Charles. This association (which was founded on sincere personal friendship as well as artistic sympathy) remained unbroken till the death of Mr. Banks in 1872. During that time, and since, Mr. Barry has had an extensive and varied practice. In 1856, at the International competition for the "Government Public Offices," the design sent in by his partner and himself was placed second in merit by the assessors for the then projected Foreign Office; the work was, however, given (after strong remonstrances) to Sir Gilbert (then Mr.) Scott, whose design had obtained only the third place. Among his more public works may be named the New Burlington House, Piccadilly, the New College at Dulwich, and the large Industrial School at Feltham for the County of Middlesex. Among a large number of works for private clients may be mentioned "Bylaugh Hall," Norfolk, "Stevenstone," North Devon, for the Hon. Mark Rolle, and the almost rebuilding "Climber House," Nottinghamshire, for the Duke of Newcastle. Mr. Barry has since 1858 held the office of architect and surveyor to the Dulwich estate, and has erected there several churches, and a large number of private residences, besides his work at the old college and the erection of the New College. In 1876 Mr. Barry was elected President of the Royal Institute of British Architects, and held that office for three years. In 1878 he was one of the Royal Commission for the French Universal Exhibition for that year, and acted therein as the sole representative British Member of the small International Jury of the Fine Arts Section for making the awards for Architecture from the various countries therein represented. In recognition of this service the French Government, at the instance of the Prince of Wales, conferred on him the distinction of the Cross of an Officer of the Legion of Honour. In 1877 Mr. Barry received from his colleagues of the Royal Institute of British Architects the Queen's Gold Medal of the Institute, which is awarded once in three years to an architect of eminence. He is an Hon. Member of the Academies of Fine Arts at Vienna and Milan, and was elected a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of London in 1876, and is one of the original members of the Surveyors' Institution. Mr. Barry has been from its foundation a Member of Council of the City and Guilds of London Institute, and has always taken an active part in the proceedings of that body. Mr. Barry has lately completed the new Institution of Civil Engineers in Great George Street, Westminster, which has been carried out at a cost of £60,000. It is an elaborate example of the Classic style of Architecture, externally and internally. Office address: Parliament Mansions, Victoria Street, Westminster.

BARRY, Sir John Wolfe, K.C.B., F.R.S., LL.D., D.L., M.I.C.E., is the fifth and youngest son of the late Sir Charles Barry, R.A., and was born in London on Dec. 7, 1836. He was educated at Trinity College, Glendalmond (where his elder brother, the Rev. Alfred Barry, afterwards Bishop of Sydney and Primate of Australia, was sub-warden), and at King's College, London. To acquire a practical knowledge of work, he was placed with Messrs. Lucas Brothers, and was afterwards articled to Mr. (afterwards Sir John) Hawkshaw. While with Sir John Hawkshaw he was engaged as Resident-Engineer on the bridges over the Thames and the large stations at Charing Cross and Cannon Street. On leaving Sir John Hawkshaw's service in 1867 he commenced practice on his own account, and has carried out the Lewes and East Grinstead Railway; the Earl's Court Station, and the Ealing and Fulham Extensions of the Metropolitan District Railway; the St. Paul's Station and the new bridge over the Thames at Blackfriars; the railways for the completion of the "Inner Circle" (in conjunction with Sir John Hawkshaw); the Barry Dock, near Cardiff (the largest single dock in the United Kingdom), and railways connecting it with the South-Wales coalfield; and very many other important undertakings. Mr. Barry carried out for the Corporation of London, the Tower Bridge, which work was commenced in conjunction with Sir Horace Jones, the City architect, to whom was entrusted the architectural features of the bridge as distinguished from the engineering work, but who died soon after the work was commenced. By the agreement with the Corporation the responsibility for both the architectural and engineering work of the bridge then devolved on Mr. Barry. On the completion of the bridge, in the summer of 1894, Mr. Barry was made a C.B., K.C.B. 1897. In 1872 Mr. Barry visited the Argentine Republic and laid out a railway from Buenos Ayres to Rosario, which has since been carried out, though not on the original route selected by Mr. Barry. In 18— Mr. Barry was appointed Consulting Engineer to carry out with Messrs. Blythe & Cunningham of Edinburgh, and Mr. C. Forman of Glasgow, the important works of the underground system of railways in Glasgow known as the Glasgow Central Railway; and in 18— he was similarly appointed to execute with Mr. C. Forman the Lanarkshire and Dumbartonshire Railway, which is partly an underground railway in the western parts of Glasgow, but also gives access to the important manufacturing districts between Glasgow and the town of Dumbarton. In 1886 the Government appointed Mr. Barry on the Royal Commission on Irish Public Works, and important legislation, based on the Reports of the Commission, has taken place on the subjects of drainage, light railways, and fishery harbours. In 1889 he was nominated by the Board of Trade, jointly with Admiral Sir George Nares, K.C.B., and Sir Charles Hartley, K.C.M.G., on a commission ordered by Parliament to settle certain important matters connected with the river Ribble, and the same commission was reappointed in 1897 to report on further proposals connected with the same river. In December 1889 he was appointed by the Government on the Western (Scottish) Highlands and Islands Commission, a commission having objects similar to those of the Royal Commission on Irish Public Works. In 1894 he was appointed Chairman of a Commission (of which the other members were Sir George Nares, K.C.B., and Mr. G. F. Lyster, the Consulting Engineer of the Mersey Dock and Harbour Board) to examine and report on the navigation of the Lower Thames. In 1892 Mr. Barry was appointed by the Foreign Office as one of two British representatives on the "Commission Consultative Internationale des Travaux" of the Suez Canal, which position he still occupies. In 1895 Mr. Barry was appointed by the Government of Natal as their Consulting Engineer in England. In conjunction with Sir Charles Hartley, K.C.M.G., he presented to the Natal Government an exhaustive report on the various proposals for the improvement of the harbour of Durban, and submitted proposals which have been adopted by that Government. In 1896 he was appointed by the County Councils of Middlesex and Surrey their Engineer in connection with the new bridge across the Thames at Kew. In 1897 Mr. Barry was appointed by Government on a Committee on the desirability of establishing a National Physical Laboratory, the report of which is shortly expected. In 1897 Mr. (then newly created Sir) J. Wolfe-Barry was appointed by the Tyne Commissioners Engineer in conjunction with Messrs. Coode, Son, & Matthews to examine and report on the extensive damages which had taken place in the north breakwater of Tynemouth harbour, and to take steps for the reparation of this important work. Sir J. Wolfe-Barry is Consulting Engineer to the following public companies: The North-Eastern, Caledonian; London, Chatham, and Dover; Metropolitan, Metropolitan District, Barry Railway Companies, and to the Surrey Commercial Dock Company, in addition to the other appointments to which reference has already been made. Mr. Barry is a Member of Council of the Institution of Civil Engineers, and was elected President in 1896, and was again elected to the same post in 1897; a Member of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers; Associate of Council of the Surveyors' Institution; a Fellow of the Royal Institution and Society of Arts; and a Lieut.-Colonel in the Engineer and Railway Volunteer Staff Corps; and a member of the Army Committee. He is the author of a small volume, "Railway Appliances," in the Text-books of Science Series (Longmans, 1876), and of a course of lectures delivered at the School of Military Engineering, Chatham, in conjunction with Sir F. J. Bramwell, on the "Railway and the Locomotive," published in 1882. Mr. H. M. Brunel, son of the late I. K. Brunel, joined Mr. Barry in partnership in 1878, and Mr. C. A. Brereton and Mr. Arthur John Barry, nephew of Sir J. Wolfe-Barry, also became his partners in 1892, and these gentlemen have been associated with him in most of the above works. He married in 1874 Rosalind Grace, youngest daughter of the Rev. E. E. Rowsell, Rector of Hambledon, Surrey. By royal warrant Sir J. Wolfe-Barry was permitted to assume for himself and his descendants the name of Wolfe as a surname. He is a Deputy-Lieutenant of the County of London, is LL.D. of Glasgow University (honoris causa), and a Fellow of the Royal Society.

BARTET, Madame, nom de théâtre of Jeanne Julia Regnault, French actress, was born in Paris, Oct. 28, 1854. She entered the Conservatoire in 1871, and made her début at the Vaudeville in the part of Vivette in "L'Arlésienne" in 1872. In 1873 she played in "L'Oncle Sam," in 1875 in "Manon Lescaut," in 1876 she created the part of Louise in "Fromont et Risler," and in 1877 that of the Countess Zicka in Sardou's "Dora," known in England as "Diplomacy." Madame Bartet entered the Théâtre Français in 1880, and made her début in "Daniel Rochat." She took Madame Bernhardt's place soon after as the Queen in "Ruy Blas." The chief plays in which she has since acted are, "Le Dépit Amoureux," "Le Gendre de M. Poirier," "On ne Badine pas avec l'Amour," "La Roi s'amuse," and "L'Etrangère." She was much appreciated in London when the Comédie Française played at Drury Lane in 1893. She appeared in "Grosse Fortune" by Meilhac in 1896.

BARTHOLDI, Auguste, born at Colmar (Alsace), April 2, 1834, was intended for a lawyer, but Ary Scheffer, who was a friend of the family, recognised his latent artistic talent, and the use of Ary Scheffer's studio was the turning point of a life subsequently noteworthy for the production of the "Lion de Belfort" and the gigantic "Liberté éclairant le Monde," which, constructed in copper, on an internal iron frame designed by M. Eiffel, was, in 1884, presented by the French Committee to the United States, and was erected on Bedloe's Island, at the entrance to the harbour of New York, in 1886. It is by far the largest bronze statue in the world, being 150 feet high, or higher than the column in the Place Vendôme at Paris. A small replica has been erected at the Pont de Grenelle, Paris, by American subscriptions.

BARTHOU, Louis, French Deputy and Minister of the Interior, was born at Oloron, in the Basses-Pyrénées, Aug. 25, 1862. He is a Doctor of Laws and Municipal Councillor of Pau, and was elected as deputy for Oloron in 1889, for which he has since sat. He was Minister of Public Works in the Duruy Cabinet of 1894, and Minister of the Interior in the Méline Cabinet of 1896, retiring with his colleagues in June 1898. Paris address: 7 Avenue d'Autin.

BARTON, Clara, American philanthropist, born at Oxford, Massachusetts, about 1830, was educated at Clinton, New York. She entered the United States Patent Office as clerk in 1854, but on the outbreak of the war between the states she determined to devote herself to the care of the soldiers in the field. At the beginning of the Franco-German war she assisted the Grand Duchess of Baden in preparing military hospitals, and gave the Red Cross Society much aid during the war, and afterwards at Strasbourg and in Paris. At the close of the war she was decorated with the Golden Cross of Baden and the Iron Cross of Germany. In 1881, on the organisation of the American Red Cross Society, she became its president, and still retained that position, 1898.

BARTON, Dunbar Plunket, Q.C., the son of the late T. H. Barton, by his wife, a daughter of the third Baron Plunket, was born in 1853, and was educated at Harrow, and Corpus Christi College, Oxford. He was called to the Irish Bar in 1880, was appointed a Q.C. in 1889, was called to the English Bar in 1893, and was elected a Bencher of Gray's Inn in February 1898. Returned to the House of Commons as Conservative member for Mid-Armagh in 1891, he still represents that constituency in the Conservative interest, and he has, since Jan. 1, 1898, held the appointment of Solicitor-General for Ireland. Mr. Barton acted as private secretary to the late Duke of Marlborough when he was Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, and in his university days was President of the Oxford Union. He is a Director of the well-known brewing firm of Arthur Guinness & Co., and is a Justice of the Peace for Dublin and Armagh. Addresses: 12 Mandeville Place, W.; and 13 Clare Street, Dublin.

BASCUNAN, Aurelio, Chargé d'Affaires for Chile at the Court of St. James's, belongs to one of the oldest families in Chile, and was born in 1866. In 1879 he passed his examination of Bachiller, being the youngest to attain that degree in the University of Santiago. In 1882 his uncle, the President Santa Maria, appointed him his private secretary, which position he vacated for that of second secretary of the Chilean Legation in Peru after the war between the two countries. From Lima he was transferred to Buenos Ayres, and there he held a position in the Foreign Office until 1895, when he was appointed to the Legation in London. In 1898 the Legation at Paris was added to his charge. On the occasion of the Jubilee in 1897 he was decorated with the Jubilee medal; he is also an Officer of the Legion of Honour and a Commander of Isabella la Católica. He married the daughter of the ex-Premier of Chile, Mr. Carlos Antunez. Address: Members' Mansions, Victoria Street, S.W.

BASSET, Alfred Barnard, M.A., F.R.S., is the only son of the late Mr. Alfred Basset of London, and was born on July 25, 1854. His father died during his childhood, and he was brought up by his grandfather, the late John Swinford Basset, of Stamford Hill, Middlesex, whom he succeeded. He was educated at Grove House School, Tottenham, entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in October 1873, and was elected to a foundation scholarship in April 1878. He graduated B.A. in 1877, having been 13th Wrangler in the Mathematical Tripos of that year. After leaving Cambridge he studied law in the chambers of Mr. John Rigby, Q.C., and was called to the Bar on June 25, 1879; but after the expiration of a few years he gave up the practice of his profession, and resumed the study of Mathematics. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society on June 8, 1889, and is the author of a "Treatise on Hydro-dynamics," in two volumes, a "Treatise on Physical Optics," 1892, and also of several papers on Mathematical Physics. He married, in 1882, Edith Sarah Irwin, only child and heiress of the late Thomas Gustave de Chaundre, of Rouen and Dublin. Address: Fledborough Hall, Holyport, Berks.

BASTIAN, Professor Henry Charlton, M.D., F.R.S., F.L.S., was born at Truro, in Cornwall, April 26, 1837, and educated at a private school at Falmouth and in University College, London. He graduated M.A. in 1861, M.B. in 1863, and M.D. in 1866, these degrees being conferred by the University of London. He was elected F.R.S. in 1868, and F.R.C.P. in 1871. Dr. Bastian is a Fellow of several Medical Societies; he is also a Corresponding Member of the Royal Academy of Medicine in Turin, and of the Soc. de Psychol. Physiolog. of Paris. In 1866 he was appointed Lecturer on Pathology, and Assistant-Physician to St. Mary's Hospital. These posts he held until his appointment as Professor of Pathological Anatomy in University College, and Assistant-Physician to University College Hospital in December 1867. He was elected a physician to this hospital in 1871; and in 1878, on taking charge of in-patients, a professorship of Clinical Medicine was conferred upon him. In 1887 he resigned the Chair of Pathological Anatomy at University College, and was elected Professor of the Principles and Practice of Medicine. Dr. Bastian was Dean of the Faculty of Medicine in University College during the sessions 1874-75 and 1875-76; he served as Examiner in Medicine to the Queen's University in Ireland for 1876-79, and he has discharged similar duties for the University of Durham, and for the Royal College of Physicians of London. In 1887 the honorary degree of M.D. was conferred upon him by the Royal University of Ireland, and he was elected an Hon. Fellow of the King and Queen's College of Physicians in Ireland. For some years past he has acted as one of the Crown Referees in cases of Supposed Insanity. Dr. Bastian was elected President of the Neurological Society of London in 1892, and a Censor of the Royal College of Physicians in 1896 and 1897. In this latter year he delivered before the College the Lumleian lectures on "Some Problems in Connexion with Aphasia and other Speech Defects." He has published the following works: "The Modes of Origin of Lowest Organisms," 1871; "The Beginnings of Life," 2 vols., 1872; "Evolution and the Origin of Life," 1874; "Clinical Lectures on the Common Forms of Paralysis from Brain Disease," 1875; "The Brain as an Organ of Mind," 1880 (the latter work has been translated into French and German); "Paralysis; Cerebral, Bulbar, and Spinal," 1886; "Various Forms of Hysterical or Functional Paralysis," 1893; and "A Treatise on Aphasia and other Speech Defects," 1898. He is also the author of "Memoirs on Nematoids: Parasitic and Free," in the Philosophical Transactions and the Transactions of the Linnean Society. In his monograph on the Anguillulidæ he described 100 new species discovered by him in this country. Dr. Bastian is the author of numerous papers on Pathology and Medicine in the Transactions of the Pathological and Medico-Chirurgical Societies; of papers on the more recondite departments of Cerebral Physiology in the Journal of Mental Science, Brain, and other periodicals; and of some joint articles with the editor in Dr. Reynolds' "System of Medicine." Dr. Bastian was likewise one of the principal contributors to Quain's "Dictionary of Medicine" (1882), having written nearly the whole of the articles on Diseases of the Spinal Cord, as well as many others on Diseases of the Nervous System. Having resigned his Professorship at the College, and his Physiciancy at University College Hospital after thirty years of service, Dr. Bastian has recently (1898) been elected Emeritus Professor of the Principles and Practice of Medicine and of Clinical Medicine in University College, and Consulting Physician to the Hospital. Addresses: 8A Manchester Square, W.; and Athenæum.

BATEMAN, Sir Frederic, M.D., F.R.C.P., LL.D., is the son of John Bateman, of Norwich, and was born in 1824. He took the degree of M.D. at the University of Aberdeen in 1850, and was elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in 1876. He is a consulting physician to the Norfolk and Norwich Hospital, and a Justice of the Peace for the county of Norfolk. His publication, "Aphasia and the Localisation of Speech," gained for him the Alvarenga prize of the Academy of Medicine of France, and he is also the author of "Darwinism tested by Language," and "The Idiot, and his place in Creation." He received the honour of knighthood in 1892, and he was married, in 1855, to Emma, daughter and heiress of John Gooderson, of Heigham Fields House, Norwich (she died in 1897). Addresses: Upper St. Giles Street, Norwich; and Burlingham Lodge, Alburgh, Norfolk.

BATEMAN, Kate Josephine. See CROWE, MRS. GEORGE.

BATES, Henry, A.R.A., better known as Harry Bates, sculptor, came to London in 1879, studied under Jules Dalou at the Lambeth School, and in 1881 was admitted a student of the Royal Academy Schools, where he gained the gold medal and travelling studentship for sculpture in 1883. He has been a constant exhibitor at the Royal Academy, his designs often being in the shape of bas-reliefs on panels. He has designed "The Homer Panel," "The Æneid Panel," "The Story of Psyche," "Hounds in Leash," and "Pandora," which was bought under the terms of the Chantrey Bequest. In 1895 he exhibited a bronze bust of General Lord Roberts, G.C., G.C.B., and in 1896 four portrait busts, including one of Lord Lansdowne, and a full-sized model of an equestrian statue of Field-Marshal Lord Roberts for Calcutta. The finished statue was recently unveiled by Lord Elgin in Calcutta. The pedestal is adorned with allegorical figures representing Courage and Fortitude, and the friezes encircling it represent the march from Kabul to Kandahar. In 1898 he exhibited a reduced model in bronze and boxwood of the Roberts statue, besides a bust and a memorial tablet. He was made A.R.A. in 1892. Address: 10 Hall Road, N.W.

BATESON, William, M.A., F.R.S., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, was born at Whitby, Yorkshire, on the 8th of August 1861. He is the son of the late Rev. W. H. Bateson, D.D., Master of St. John's College, Cambridge. From Temple Grove School he obtained a foundation scholarship at Rugby, and thence proceeded to St John's College, Cambridge, graduating in the Natural Sciences Tripos in 1883 and 1884. Elected to a Fellowship at St. John's College in 1885, he became Balfour Student in 1887, and was awarded a Rolleston Prize in the University of Oxford in 1888. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1894. His first work was a study of the anatomy and development of Balanoglossus, material for this research having been collected in America during two visits to the marine laboratory of the Johns Hopkins University. The results appeared as a series of papers in the Quarterly Journal of Microscopical Science in 1884-86. In 1886 and 1887 he undertook a journey to the Aral Sea, and to other salt, alkaline, and bitter lakes in Western Central Asia, with the object of examining their fauna. Subsequently he has devoted himself to a study of the facts of Variation, and has published papers relating to the subject, in particular a collection of the evidence, entitled "Materials for the Study of Variation" (Macmillan, 1894). Address: Norwich House, Cambridge.

BATH and WELLS, Bishop of. See KENNION, RIGHT REV. GEORGE WYNDHAM.

BATTENBERG, Princess Henry of (H.R.H. Princess Beatrice), was born April 14, 1857, and was married at Osborne on July 23, 1885, to Prince Henry Maurice of Battenberg, who, however, died on Jan. 20, 1896, from a fever contracted during the Ashanti campaign of 1895-96. The Princess has four children, viz., Alexander Albert, born Nov. 23, 1886; Victoria Eugénie, born Oct. 24, 1887; Leopold Arthur, born May 21, 1889; and Maurice Victor, born Oct. 3, 1891. She occupies the position of Governor of the Isle of Wight, a post held by Prince Henry until his death. Her Royal Highness has compiled a Birthday Book, and also devotes time to painting. She has always, even during her married life, lived with the Queen, and she still continues to do so.

BATTERSEA, Lord, Cyril Flower, son of the late Mr. P. W. Flower, of Furzedown, Streatham, was born in 1843, and educated at Harrow and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1870. In the Parliament of 1880-85 he sat as a Liberal for Brecknock, and in 1885 and 1886 was returned for the Luton division of Bedfordshire, and sat for the same till 1892. In Mr. Gladstone's short Government of 1886 Mr. Cyril Flower was one of the Junior Lords of the Treasury, or "Whips" of the party. In 1892 he was made a peer under the title of Lord Battersea. He married in 1878 Constance, eldest daughter of the late Sir Anthony Rothschild. Both he and his wife are much interested in the welfare of their party, and have been warm supporters of the Eighty Club. They are devoted to the interests of the lower classes in London, and have done much for the People's Entertainment Society. Lord Battersea is President of the Recreative Evening School Association. He is also known as the owner of some fine paintings by Botticelli, Moroni, Da Vinci, Morretti, as well as by Burne-Jones, Sandys, Whistler, &c. BAYER, Karl Emmerich Robert, an Austrian writer, generally known by his nom de guerre of Robert Byr, was born at Bregenz, in the Tyrol, April 15, 1835, and received his education in the Military Academy at Wiener-Neustadt, which he left on his appointment as lieutenant in the Count Radetzky's Hussar Regiment. In 1859 he was advanced to the rank of captain, and during the Italian campaign he was placed on the general staff. After the conclusion of peace Bayer began his literary career by the publication of his "Sketches of Military Life" ("Kantonirungsbilder"), 1860. In 1862 he retired from active service, and settled in his native town, where he still continues to reside. Bayer is chiefly known to fame as a novelist. Military life he has described in his first work, already mentioned, in "Austrian Garrisons" ("Oesterreichische Garnisonen"), 1863, and in "Quarters" ("Auf der Station"), 1866. His "In the Years Nine and Thirteen" ("Anno Neun und Dreizehn"), 1865, contains biographical sketches of actors in the German War of Independence. To another class of works belong the following novels: "The Home of a German Count" ("Ein Deutsches Grafenhaus"), 1866; "With a Brazen Face" ("Mit eherner Stirn"), 1868; "The Struggle for Life" ("Der Kampf ums Dasein"), 1869; "Sphinx," 1879; "Nomaden," 1871; "Ruin" ("Trümmer"), 1871; "Quatuor," a collection of tales, 1875; "Ghosts" ("Larven"), 1876; and "A Secret Despatch" ("Eine geheime Depesche"), 1880; and "Sesam," 1880; "The Path to the Heart" ("Der Weg zum Herzen"), 1881; "Turn of Life" ("Am Wendepunkt des Lebens"), 1881; "Implacable" ("Unversöhnlich"), 1882; "Lydia," 1883; "Andor," 1883;

"Am I to do it?" ("Soll Ich?"), 1884; "Castell Ursani," 1885; "Dora," 1886; "Villa Mirafior," 1886; "Will-of-the-Wisp" ("Irrneische"), 1887; "The Path to Fortune" ("Der Weg zum Glück"), 1889; "Wood Idyl" ("Walddydl"), 1889. He has also written plays which have been performed in public.

BAYFIELD, Rev. Matthew Albert, M.A., was born at Edgbaston, Birmingham, June 17, 1852, and is the son of L. A. Bayfield, Chartered Accountant, of Birmingham. He was educated at King Edward's School, Birmingham, and Clare College, Cambridge, of which latter foundation he was a scholar, and from which he graduated with first-class classical honours in 1875. Appointed an Assistant Master at Blackheath School in 1875, he obtained a similar position at Marlborough College in 1879; and after acting as Headmaster's Assistant at Malvern College from 1881 to 1890, he became Headmaster of Christ College, Brecon, in 1890, and eventually he was, in 1895, appointed Headmaster of Eastbourne College. Mr. Bayfield has edited "Ion," "Alcestis," and "Medea," and, in conjunction with Dr. Verrall, "Septem contra Thebas," and, with Dr. Leaf, the "Iliad." He is also the author of "Latin Prose for Lower Forms." Address: Eastbourne College.

BAYLEY, Sir Steuart Colvin, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., Member of Council at the India Office, formerly Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, was educated at Haileybury, and arrived in India in 1856. His first post was that of Assistant-Magistrate and Collector of the 24 Pergunnahs, and he subsequently rose through various grades till he was appointed Commissioner of the Dacca Division in 1873. Four years later he was acting as personal assistant to the Viceroy for famine affairs. His more recent appointments have been: Chief Commissioner of Assam, June 1880; Resident at Hyderabad (Nizam's Dominions), March 1881; a Member of the Governor-General's Council, May 1882; Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, April 1887; and Secretary in the Political Department, India Office, January 1891. He was created K.C.S.I. in 1890. Addresses: India Office; Charles Street, Westminster, S.W.; and Athenæum.

BAYLISS, Sir Wyke, F.S.A., second son of John Cox Bayliss and Anne Wyke, was born on Oct. 21, 1835, at Madeley, Salop. In 1845 the family removed to London, and he pursued his studies at the National Gallery, the British Museum, and the Royal Academy, with the intention of becoming an artist. At the age of eighteen

he entered an architect's office, where the speciality of his work gave a bent to, though it was not sufficient to break, his purpose of becoming a painter. Architecture, and especially the Gothic of our cathedrals, became at once the motive of all his pictures. He has travelled much abroad, and has painted almost all the chief cathedrals of the Continent. Amongst his best-known paintings may be mentioned "La Sainte Chapelle," exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1865; "The White Lady of Nuremberg," "The Interior of S. Mark's, Venice," 1880; "Vespers in S. Peter's, Rome," 1888; "The Golden Duomo, Pisa," 1892; "The Interior of Strasburg Cathedral," "Chartres Cathedral," &c. He is also the author of "The Witness of Art," "The Higher Life in Art," "The Enchanted Island"; and has for many years been engaged upon a work which is announced for immediate publication, under the title of "Rex Regum, a Painter's Study of the Likeness of Christ, from the time of the Apostles to the present day." In 1875 he was elected a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of London; in 1888 he was elected President of the Royal Society of British Artists; and in 1897 he received the honour of knighthood. One or two exhibitions of his works have been held, and in the catalogue of one of them appear several sonnets written by the artist in illustration of the subjects of his pictures. He is well known as a lecturer at the London Institution, the Midland Institute, &c. He was married in 1858 to Elise, daughter of Rev. T. Broade, of Staffordshire. Address: 7 North Road, Clapham Park, S.W.

BAYLY, Miss Ada Ellen, "Edna Lyall," is the youngest daughter of the late Robert Bayly, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. She was born and educated at Brighton, and at an early age made up her mind to write. Her first story, "Won by Waiting," was published in 1879. This was followed by "Donovan," 1882; "We Two," 1884; "In the Golden Days," 1885; "Knight-Errent," 1887; "Autobiography of a Slander," 1887; "Derrick Vaughan, Novelist," 1889; "A Hardy Norseman," 1889; "Max Hereford's Dream," 1891; "To Right the Wrong," 1893; "Doreen: the Story of a Singer," 1894; "How the Children Raised the Wind," 1895; "Autobiography of a Truth," 1896; and "Wayfaring Men," 1897. Address: 6 College Road, Eastbourne.

BEACHCROFT, Richard Melvill, was born on Jan. 22, 1846, and is the son of Richard Beachcroft, and Henrietta, daughter of the late Sir James Cosmo

Melville, K.C.B. He was educated at Harrow, and being admitted a solicitor in 1868, he became eventually a partner in the firm of Beachcroft, Thompson & Co., of 9 Theobalds Road, W.C. He has acted as Solicitor to Christ's Hospital since 1873, and is a member of the Court of the Clothworkers' Company, with which company his family has been connected for nearly two centuries. Mr. Beachcroft is an original member of the London County Council, having been the representative of North Paddington in the first Council. Elected an alderman in 1892, he became Deputy-Chairman in 1896, and Vice-Chairman in 1897. He is an old member of the Alpine Club, and has been a frequent and enthusiastic climber of many of the Swiss and Tyrolean mountains. He is married to Charlotte, daughter of the late Robert M. Bonnar-Maurice, of Bodynfoel Hall, Montgomeryshire. Addresses: 11 Craven Hill, W.; and 9 Theobalds Road.

BEALE, Dorothea, daughter of the late Mr. Miles Beale, M.R.C.S., was born in London, 1831, and educated chiefly at home. She attended the opening lectures of Queen's College in 1848. When for the first time public examinations were thrown open to women she took certificates for English, French, German, Latin, Mathematics, Music, and Pedagogy. In 1850 she was appointed the first lady Mathematical Tutor, and was also appointed Latin Tutor. In 1858 she was elected Principal of the Ladies' College, Cheltenham, which, numbering at that time 69 pupils, has since risen to about 500, of whom about 99 are boarders. There is besides an overflow school of about 80. There are in connection with the Ladies' College two residential colleges of St. Hilda, in Cheltenham and Oxford; and a Mission Settlement, known as St. Hilda's, in Shoreditch, has been built by the Cheltenham Ladies' College Guild, and was opened by the Bishop of London in April 1898. Miss Beale has published "Text-book of English and General History"; "Chronological Maps"; "School Hymns," reprinted with long introduction; "Report of Schools Enquiry Commission of 1868." She has edited and written a large part of a volume, "Work and Play in Girls' Schools," and has issued a large number of short papers on educational and literary subjects, and has contributed many articles to the Journal of Education, Fraser, The Nineteenth Century, Atlanta, Parents' Magazine, Monthly Packet, &c. She edits the Ladies' College Magazine. Miss Beale has been largely instrumental in advancing the movement for the Higher Education of Women. The Ladies' College gained a gold medal at the International Exhibition, and Miss Beale received the title of Officier d'Académie. She is a Member of the Société des Sciences et Lettres. Address: Ladies' College, Cheltenham.

BEALE, Emeritus Professor Lionel Smith, M.B., F.R.S., Consulting Physician to King's College Hospital, and Emeritus Professor of the Principles and Practice of Medicine at King's College, London, formerly Professor of Physiology and of General and Morbid Anatomy, and afterwards Professor of Pathological Anatomy, and Examiner in Medicine. He was born in London in 1828, educated in King's College School and in the Medical Department of King's College. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in 1859, is an Hon. Fellow of King's College, a Fellow of the Medical Society of Sweden, of the Microscopical Societies of New York and California, the Royal Medical and Chirurgical, the Microscopical, and the Pathological Societies; he was formerly President and is now Treasurer of the Royal Microscopical Society, and of the Quekett Club, Member of the Academy of Sciences of Bologna, Corresponding Member of the Académie Royale de Médecine de Belgique, &c., and the author of several works on medicine, physiology, medical chemistry, and the microscope. Among these works are: "The Microscope in its Application to Practical Medicine"; "How to Work with the Microscope," of which there have been several editions; "The Structure of the Tissues of the Body"; "Protoplasm; or, Life, Matter, and Mind"; "Disease Germs, their Supposed and Real Nature, and on the Treatment of Diseases caused by their Presence"; "Life Theories, their Influence upon Religious Thought," 1871; "The Mystery of Life: Facts and Arguments against the Physical Doctrine of Vitality, in reply to Sir William Gull," 1871; "Our Morality and the Moral Question," now in a second edition; "The Liver," 1889; "On Life and on Vital Action in Health and Disease"; "The Anatomy of the Liver"; "Urine, Urinary Deposits, and Calculous Disorders," four editions; "Urinary and Renal Derangements and Calculous Disorders: Diagnosis and Treatment"; "One Hundred Urinary Deposits," in eight sheets; "On Slight Ailments"; "The Physiological Anatomy and Physiology of Man," in conjunction with his colleagues at King's College, the late Dr. Todd and Sir J. Bowman; and of other works. He has contributed several memoirs to the Royal Society, "On the Structure of the Liver"; "The Distribution of Nerves to Muscle"; "On the Anatomy of Nerve-Fibres and Nerve-Centres," &c., which are published in the Philosophical Transactions and in the Proceedings of the Royal Society, and numerous papers to the Royal Microscopical Society, and a memoir in the Medico-Chirurgical Transactions, 1854. He was the editor of the Archives of Medicine, and has also contributed to the Lancet, Medical Times and Gazette, Medical and Chirurgical Review, and the Microscopical Journal. He resigned his professorship at King's College in 1896, having held that post for more than forty years, and became Emeritus Professor of Medicine. Address: 61 Grosvenor Street, W.

BEATRICE, Princess. See BATTENBERG, PRINCESS HENRY OF.

BEAUCHAMP, Earl, William Lygon, was born Feb. 20, 1872, and succeeded his father as 7th Earl in 1891. He was educated at Eton, and Christ Church, Oxford. He acted as Mayor of Worcester from 1895 to 1896, and he was elected Progressive Member for Finsbury on the London School Board in November 1897. Lord Beauchamp is at present unmarried, and the heir to the title is his brother, Edward, born in 1873. Addresses: 125 Piccadilly, W.; and Madresfield Court, Malvern Link, Worcestershire.

BEAUCLERK, William Nelthorpe, J.P., D.L., LL.D., British Minister to Peru and Ecuador, was born in 1849, and is the son of Captain Lord Frederick Beauclerk, R.N. After having graduated at Trinity College, Dublin, with honours in law and history, he was appointed to the Foreign Office, and became an Attaché at Copenhagen in 1874. He has been Secretary at St. Petersburg, 1879; Rome, 1880; Washington, 1887; Berlin, 1888. In 1890 he was appointed Secretary of Legation at Peking, where he married the daughter of Sir Robert Hart, Bart., in 1892. He then was Consul-General at Buda-Pesth (1897), and on Sept. 22, 1898, he was appointed to his present post.

BEAUFORT, Duke of, Henry Charles Fitzroy Somerset, K.G., Marquis and Earl of Worcester, Earl of Glamorgan, Viscount Grosmont, Lord Lieutenant of Monmouthshire, &c., was born Feb. 1, 1824. His Grace, who is a Conservative in politics, succeeded his father as eighth Duke, Nov. 17, 1853. He entered the Life Guards in 1841, exchanged into the 7th Hussars, where he became Captain in 1847, became Lieut.-Colonel in 1858, and retired in 1861. He was M.P. for East Gloucestershire, 1846-53, was Master of the Horse under Earl Derby's second administration, 1858-59, and was reappointed to that office under Earl Derby's third administration, in July 1866, continuing in that post till 1869. He takes a great interest in horse-racing, and is President of the Four-in-Hand Club. In March 1898, on the occasion of a lawn meet at Badminton, his former seat, he was presented with an oil portrait of himself, painted by Mr. Ellis Roberts, and subscribed for by upwards of 1000 followers of his late pack "in recognition of his long services to country sport." He is one of the joint editors of the sporting books known as "The Badminton Library." His Grace married, July 3, 1845, Georgina Charlotte, eldest daughter of the late Earl Howe. Address: Stoke Park, near Bristol.

BEBEL, Ferdinand August, German Socialist, born at Cologne, Feb. 22 or 29, 1840, was educated at Wetzlar, and set up at Leipzig as a turner. Even in 1862 he was already one of the most active leaders of the popular movement in Germany. In 1865 he induced the Workers' Union of Leipzig to adopt a Socialistic propaganda. In 1867 he entered political life as Member for Glauchau-Meerane in the North German Diet. In 1871 he formed part of the first Imperial Reichstag. He worked at his trade during the recess, and was the chief of that section called the Eisenacher Arbeiterpartei, which was in co-operation with the International Workers' Union of London, with Karl Marx at its head. Together with Herr Liebknecht, he was accused of high-treason in 1872, and condemned to two years' confinement in a fortress. In 1874 he was re-elected to the Reichstag, and actively opposed Bismarck's laws against the Socialists. In fact, from 1874 until 1886 he was continually being arrested and imprisoned for his doctrines, and in the intervals of imprisonment he was being elected to the Parliament and fighting the Iron Chancellor. In 1890 he spoke violently against the annexation of Alsace-Lorraine, which he called the "fatal crime" of Bismarck, involving the huge armaments of modern days. His chief writings are: "Unsere Ziele," "Der Deutsche Bauernkrieg," "Die Frau und der Sozialismus," 1883 (18th edit., 1893); "Die Socialdemokratie," 1895.

BECKER, Bernard Henry, author and journalist, born in 1833, was for years attached to All the Year Round, and has written a large number of original stories and sketches in that journal, as well as in the World and other papers, and was formerly on the staff of the Daily News. In 1874 he produced "Scientific London," an account of the rise, progress, and condition of the great scientific institutions of the capital. Mr. Becker published in 1878 a book in two volumes, entitled "Adventurous Lives." Having in the winter of 1878-79 acted as the Special Commissioner of the Daily News in Sheffield, Manchester, and other distressed districts of the North and Midlands, he was sent in a similar capacity to Ireland in the autumn of 1880, when he discovered Mr. and Mrs. Boycott herding sheep, and wrote those letters on the state of Connaught and Munster which have since appeared in a collected form as "Disturbed Ireland," and given rise to several discussions in the House of Commons. In 1884 Mr. Becker produced "Holiday Haunts," the title of which explains itself, like that of the more recent "Letters from Lazy Latitudes," published in 1886.

BECKLES, the Right Rev. Edward Hyndman, D.D., son of the late John Alleyne Beckles, Esq. (descended from the Beckles family, of Durham), was born in Barbados in 1816, received his education at Codrington College, Barbados, and after holding different cures in the West Indies, was consecrated Bishop of Sierra Leone in 1859. He resigned that see in 1870, being succeeded in it by Dr. Cheetam. In the same year he was appointed Rector of Wooton, Dover, and in 1873 Rector of St. Peter's, Bethnal Green, London. In February 1877 he was appointed Superintending Bishop of the English Episcopalian congregations in Scotland. Address: St. Peter's, Bethnal Green, E.

BEDDARD, Frank E., M.A., F.R.S., son of the late John Beddard, was born at Dudley in 1858, and educated at Harrow and New College, Oxford. After taking his degree he was for some time a Demonstrator under the late Professor Rolleston, and afterwards became Assistant Editor of the Challenger Reports. He is at present Prosecutor of the Zoological Society of London, Examiner in the University of London, and Lecturer on Biology at Guy's Hospital. He was elected F.R.S. in 1892. Mr. Beddard is author of the following works: "Report on the Isopods collected during the Voyage of H.M.S. Challenger"; "Animal Colouration"; "Contributions to the Anatomy of the Anthropoid Apes" (Transactions of the Zoological Society, 1893); a "Monograph on the Oligochaeta" (Clarendon Press, 1895); and numerous contributions to the Quarterly Journal of Microscopical Science, and to the publications of the Royal and Zoological Societies. He has also contributed popular articles on zoological subjects to Blackwood's and other magazines. Address: United University Club, Suffolk Street.

BEDDOE, John, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S., born at Bewdley, in Worcestershire, Sept. 21, 1826, was educated at Bridgnorth School, University College, London, and the University of Edinburgh. He graduated B.A. in London in 1851, and M.D. in Edinburgh in 1853. Dr. Beddoe served on the civil medical staff during the Crimean War. Since then he has practised as a physician at Clifton, and held sundry hospital appointments, but is now residing at the Chantry, Bradford-on-Avon. He was President of the Anthropological Society in 1869 and 1870, and he was a Member of the Council of the British Association for several years. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, in 1873, and is an honorary member of sundry Continental and American scientific societies, and officer (1st Class) of the French Order of Public Instruction. Dr. Beddoe has written numerous papers, medical, statistical, and anthropological, and he has largely applied the numerical method to ethnology. In 1868 his Essay on the Origin of the English Nation took the first prize, £150, of the Welsh National Eisteddfod. It formed the basis of his principal work, "The Races of Britain," which was not published until 1885. His other most considerable works and papers are "Stature and Bulk of Man in the British Isles"; "Relations of Temperament and Complexion to Disease"; "On Hospital Diets"; "Comparison of Mortality in England and Australia"; and on the "Natural Colour of the Skin in certain Oriental Races." He is joint author of the "Anthropological Instructions for Travellers" of the British Association, and was elected President of the Anthropological Institute in 1889 and 1890. In 1891 he was given the LL.D. of the University of Edinburgh, and as Rhind Lecturer for the year delivered a course of lectures in Edinburgh on the Anthropological History of Europe. He married in 1858 Agnes Montgomerie Christison (niece of the eminent physician of that name, Sir Robert Christison, Bart.), who has since been well known in connection with various philanthropic movements, chiefly for the benefit of women. Addresses: The Chantry, Bradford-on-Avon; and Athenæum.

BEDFORD, Bishop of. See ISLINGTON, BISHOP OF.

BEDFORD, Vice-Admiral Sir Frederick George Denham, K.C.B., son of Vice-Admiral Edward J. Bedford, was born in December 1838, and entered the Navy in July 1852. He served as a midshipman in H.M.S. Sampson during 1854, in which vessel he was present at the bombardment of Odessa, the taking of the redoubt Kaleb, and also the bombardment of Sebastopol. For these services he received the Crimean and Turkish medals. In 1855 he took part in the Baltic Expedition as a midshipman in H.M.S. Vulture, and was present at the bombardment of Sveaborg, subsequently receiving the Baltic medal. He was promoted Lieutenant in 1859, Commander in 1871, and Captain in 1876, and commanded H.M.S. Shah in her memorable engagement with the Peruvian ironclad Huascar off Ylo in May 1877. As captain of H.M.S. Monarch he did excellent work in organising the flotilla on the Nile for the relief of General Gordon in 1884, and received the special thanks of the Admiralty for this service. He was promoted to C.B. in 1886, and in 1888 was appointed Aide-de-Camp to the Queen. Admiral Bedford served as a Lord Commissioner of the Admiralty from 1889 to 1892, and was also a member of a Committee appointed to take evidence and report upon the manning of the Navy. He was promoted to the rank of Rear-Admiral in May 1891, and hoisted his flag on H.M.S. St. George as Commander-in-Chief at the Cape and West Africa station in 1892. It was a most eventful commission. In 1894 he conducted the operations at Bathurst on the river Gambia for the punishment of Fodi Silah, a rebellious slave-raiding chief. Later on it was found necessary to land a punitive expedition against the chief Nanna of Brohemie in the Benin River, and in recognition of services performed in both these expeditions Admiral Bedford received a K.C.B. In February 1895 he landed a Naval Brigade for the punishment of King Koko of Nimby, the chief town of Brass, on the Niger River, and brought the operations to a successful issue. He received the Africa medal with three clasps. On resigning the command of the Cape station he was presented with an appreciative address from the inhabitants of Simon's Town. He returned to England in 1895, and has since been appointed Second Sea Lord of the Admiralty. He is the author of the following nautical works, which have passed through many editions: "The Sailor's Pocket-Book," "The Sailor's Hand-Book," and "The Sailor's Ready Reference Book." Vice-Admiral Sir Frederick Bedford is married to Ethel, a daughter of E. R. Turner, Esq., of Ipswich. Addresses: 56 Lexham Gardens, W.; and United Service Club.

BEDFORD, Duke of, Herbrand Arthur Russell, was born Feb. 19, 1858, in Eaton Palace, London, and succeeded his brother as 11th Duke in 1893. He was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, and he entered the army by joining the Grenadier Guards in 1879. He served in the Egyptian Campaign of 1882, receiving a medal with clasp, and the Khedive's star; and he acted as A.D.C. to the Marquis of Dufferin, when Viceroy of India, from 1884 to 1888. He is Chairman of the Bedfordshire County Council, a Major of the 3rd Battalion of the Bedfordshire Regiment, and Hon. Colonel of the Bedfordshire Volunteers. The Duke was married in 1888, when Lord Herbrand Russell, to Mary du Caurroy, daughter of the Ven. W. Tribe, late Archdeacon of Lahore, and has a son and heir, the Marquis of Tavistock, born in 1888. He is a Liberal Unionist in politics, and a Justice of the Peace; whilst he devotes a good deal of time to the study of Zoology and Natural History, and in 1897 he published, "The History of a Great Agricultural Estate." Addresses: 15 Belgrave Square, S.W.; Woburn Abbey, Bedfordshire; Endsleigh, Tavistock, Devonshire; Thorney, Peterborough; and Oakley House, Bedfordshire.

BEER, Frederick, was born on July 8, 1858, and is the son of the late Julius Beer. He was educated at Magdalene College, Cambridge. He has devoted a good deal of time to travelling, and he went to Khartoum before the siege of that town. He has been proprietor of the Observer London Sunday paper since 1880, inheriting it from his father, and he has edited it since 1894. He is married to Rachel, daughter of the late Sassoon D. Sassoon. Address: 7 Chesterfield Gardens, W.

BEER, Rachel, daughter of the late Sassoon D. Sassoon, was educated at home, and spent two years in hospital nursing. She has, since October 1893, managed and edited the Sunday Times, of which she is proprietress. She is a Member of the Institute of Journalists, and also of the Institute of Women Journalists. Mrs. Beer is probably the only woman editor of a general newspaper in England. She composed and published some piano and instrumental music. She is married to Mr. Frederick Arthur Beer, editor of the London Observer. Address: 7 Chesterfield Gardens, W.

BEERE, Mrs. Bernard, is a daughter of Mr. Wilby Whitehead, and widow of Capt. E. C. Dering, a son of Sir Edward Dering, Bart. She was prepared for the stage by Mr. Hermann Vezin, and made her début at the Opera Comique, but soon after, on the occasion of her marriage, abandoned the profession. On her return to the stage she appeared as Julia, in "The Rivals," at the St. James's Theatre, and during her engagement there played Lady Sneerwell, Grace Harkaway, and Emilia. She subsequently took part in "The School for Scandal," and "The Rivals." On April 12, 1882, Mrs. Bernard-Beere represented Bathsheba Everdene, in "Far from the Madding Crowd," at the Globe. After this she proceeded to the Haymarket, where, on May 5, 1883, she was "cast for" the title part of Mr. Herman Merivale's version of "Fédora." Her next characters were Mrs. Devenish, in "Lords and Commons," and Countess Zicka, in "Diplomacy." During 1888 she appeared in a succession of plays at the Opera Comique Theatre, of which "As in a Looking-Glass" was the most remarkable. Then followed a long absence from the stage, which was much regretted by her many admirers. In 1897 Mrs. Bernard Beere again came before the public in the part of Charlotte Corday, in the play of that name, at the Grand Theatre, Islington, Mr. Kyrle Bellew taking the part of Marat in the same piece. On Dec. 23, 1897, she made her formal re-appearance on the stage, playing in "A Sheep in Wolf's Clothing," at the Comedy Theatre.

BEERNAERT, Auguste, Belgian statesman, was born at Ostend in 1824, and was called to the Bar in 1859, where he pleaded before the Court of Cassation, especially in commercial cases. He went in for politics, and attached himself to the moderate Liberal party, under whose auspices he wrote for L'Etoile Belge. In 1874 he openly became a member of the Clerical party, and accepted the position of Minister of Public Works from M. Malon. This sudden recantation made a scandal, and the late Premier, M. Frère Orban, made it the subject of a vote of censure on the new Ministry. In 1878 he went into opposition with the rest of his colleagues, and was the toughest opponent the Liberal Ministry had. The parliamentary struggles became so acute that even the Pope had to intervene as mediator. In 1884, on the return of the Conservatives to power, M. Beernaert became Minister of Agriculture, and the chief adviser of the Premier. The local authorities were given the power of suppressing lay schools, and the taxes that the Clerical party had violently opposed when in opposition were retained. This gave rise to much irritation, and the Premier resigned. Thereupon M. Beernaert became Minister of Finance and President of the Council, a position he held until 1894. During his long premiership his chief difficulty was to fight the Socialists, and to quell the strikes of 1885 among the miners. He dealt with the latter by starting great public works, by reforming the prison laws, and developing the system of national defence. He took an active part in acquiring the Congo Free State, of which King Leopold is the President, and in the Congress at Brussels for the suppression of the Slave Trade. He resigned in 1894 on the question of the Revision of the Constitution and Universal Suffrage. In the new chamber at the end of 1894 he was elected President, and he is still the chief of its orators. In 1895 he presided over the 14th Congress of the Society of Social Economics at Paris.

BEESELY, Professor Edward Spencer, was born at Feckenham, Worcestershire, in 1831, and educated at Wadham College, Oxford. He was appointed Assistant-Master of Marlborough College in 1854, and Professor of History in University College, London, in 1860. At the General Election of 1885 he was the unsuccessful Liberal candidate for Westminster, and in 1886 he stood, also without success, for East Marylebone. Professor Beesly is the author of several review articles, pamphlets, &c., on historical, political, and social questions, treated from the Positivist point of view. He is one of the translators of Comte's "System of Positive Polity." A series of lectures by Professor Beesly on Roman history, entitled "Catiline, Clodius, and Tiberius," was published in 1878. He is also the author of "Queen Elizabeth" in the "Twelve English Statesmen" series, published by Messrs. Macmillan (1892). Address: 53 Warrington Crescent.

BEET, Rev. Joseph Agar, D.D., Professor of Systematic Theology at the Wesleyan College, Richmond, is the son of W. J. Beet, a manufacturer, and Sarah Baugh, his wife, and was born at Sheffield, Sept. 27, 1840, and was educated at Wesley College, Sheffield, and at the Wesleyan College, Richmond. After being for twenty-one years engaged in pastoral work, he was elected to the chair which he now occupies. In 1877 Dr. Beet published a commentary on the Epistle to the Romans, which, after passing through eight editions, is now being rewritten. This volume was followed by others on the Epistles to Corinthians, Galatians, Ephesians, Philipians, and Colossians. In recognition of the value of these works, he received in 1891 from the University of Glasgow the decree of D.D. In 1889 he delivered the Fernley Lecture on "The Credentials of the Gospel"; and in 1896 gave courses of lectures at the University of Chicago, and at the Chautauqua and Ocean Grove (U.S.A.) Summer Schools. He has also published three volumes of theological lectures, of which the latest, on "The Last Things," appeared in 1897, and other smaller works; and is a frequent contributor to The Expositor. Two of his volumes have been translated into Japanese, and are used as theological text-books in Japan. All the above works, even the commentaries, are contributions to systematic theology and to apologetics; for the aim of Dr. Beet's expositions has been to learn from the writings of St. Paul the writer's conception of Christ and the Gospel, in order thus, and by comparison with the conceptions of other New Testament writers, to learn the historic reality of Christ and the eternal reality of God. He has endeavoured to treat theology on a thoroughly scientific and philosophical method, all conclusions resting on observed matters of fact, and all facts being used as avenues of approach to broad principles. On behalf of the Anglo-Armenian Association Dr. Beet had the honour of presenting to Mrs. Gladstone on her eighty-fifth birthday (Jan. 6, 1897) a portrait of the Catholicos of Etchmiadzin, the head of the Armenian Church, on the occasion of the unveiling of a window in Hawarden Church in memory of the Armenian martyrs. Address: Wesleyan College, Richmond, Surrey.

BEETON, Henry Coppinger, was born in London, May 15, 1827. He was appointed Agent-General for British Columbia by Order in Council, 1883; a Commissioner of the International Fisheries Exhibition, 1883, and of the Health Exhibition, 1884; a Royal Commissioner of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, 1886; on the Colonies Committee of the Chicago Exhibition, 1883. Addresses: 2 Adamson Road, South Hampstead; Armadale, Weston-super-Mare.

BEEVOR, Sir Hugh Reeve, M.D., F.R.C.P., son of the late Sir Thomas Beavor, 4th Baronet, sometime secretary to Richard Cobden, President of the Norwich Union Fire Office, was born on Oct. 31, 1858, at Hingham, Norfolk. He was educated at Felstead School and King's College, London. He is an Assistant Physician to King's College Hospital and to the City of London Hospital for Diseases of the Chest. He is also Medical Officer to the Norwich Union Life Insurance Office, and has been, since January 1896, Dean of the Medical Faculty of King's College. He is married to Emily, daughter of Sir William Foster, Bart., and has a son and heir, Thomas, born 1897.

BEIT, Alfred, was born at Hamburg in 1853, and went out to South Africa when quite young. He was engaged in the diamond trade at Kimberley from 1875 to 1888, and he is a partner in the firm of Wernher, Beit & Co. On the occasion of the sitting of the Jameson Commission, Mr. Beit was summoned as a witness. He is at present unmarried. Addresses: Park Lane, W.; Cape Town, and Kimberley.

BELGIANS, King of. See LEO-POLD II.

BELJAME, Alexandre, was born on Nov. 26, 1842, at Villiers-le-Bel, Seine-et-Oise, France. His mother was a daughter of Bosc, Member of the Institute and friend of Madame Roland, whose "Mémoires" he preserved and published. After spending some years in England at Aylesbury and Weston-super-Mare, M. Beljame studied at the Lycée Charlemagne, Paris, of which he was a distinguished scholar. He was one of the first to compete for the degrees in English established by M. Duruy, was received first at the "Agrégation d'anglais" in 1868, and taught for several years at the Lycée Louis-le-Grand, Paris. In 1881 he was made Docteur ès Lettres (the vote in his favour being unanimous) by the University of Paris, where he was soon after offered a lectureship of English Literature, since transformed into an assistant-professorship. At the Sorbonne Professor Beljame has grouped round him more than two hundred students of English literature, some of whom have already made their mark in the French universities and lycées. They attend his lectures zealously, and are greatly attached to him. When he was made a Knight of the Legion of Honour, his present and former pupils presented him with a diamond cross. He is also Maître de Conférences at the École Normale Supérieure. Professor Beljame is a frequent visitor to London, and his face is well known in the reading-room of the British Museum. His principal works are: "Le Public et les Hommes de Lettres en Angleterre au 18^e Siècle" (Dryden, Addison, Pope), Paris, Hachette, 1881; 2nd edit., with index, 1897 (crowned by the French Academy); "Quæ e Gallicis verbis in Anglicam linguam Johannes Dryden introduxit," Paris, Hachette, 1881; a French edition of Tennyson's "Enoch Arden," Paris, Hachette, 1892; 4th edit., 1898; "Tennyson, Enoch Arden, traduction en prose française," Paris, Hachette, 1892; 3rd edit., 1897; "Shelley, Alastor, traduction en prose avec le texte anglais en regard et des notes," Paris, Hachette, 1891; "Shakespeare, Macbeth, texte critique avec la traduction en regard," Paris, Hachette, 1897 (crowned by the French Academy); "Les Premières œuvres dramatiques de Shakespeare," a report of lectures given at the University of Paris, published by the Revue des Cours et Conférences. In the same periodical have also appeared some of his lectures on Pope, the English Novel, &c. Address: Paris, 29 Rue de Condé.

BELL, Alexander Graham, Ph.D., was born at Edinburgh, March 3, 1847. He was educated at the Edinburgh High School and Edinburgh University, and also studied for a time at the London University. He went to Canada in 1870, and thence, in 1872, to the United States. He had acquired prominence as a teacher of deaf-mutes before his inventions of the speaking telephone and photophone (first exhibited in 1876 and 1880 respectively) brought him wealth and fame. He is a member of various learned societies, and has published a number of papers on electrical subjects and the teaching of speech to deaf-mutes.

BELL, Charles Dent, D.D., Hon. Canon of Carlisle, son of Henry Humphrey Bell, Esq., landed proprietor, was born Feb. 10, 1819, at Ballymaguigan, county Derry, Ireland. He was educated at the Academy, Edinburgh, at the Royal School, Dungannon, county Tyrone, and entered Trinity College, Dublin, as Queen's Scholar in 1839; received the degree of B.A. and Divinity Testimonial, 1842; and was Vice-Chancellor's Prizeman for English verse, 1840, 1841, 1842; M.A., 1852; B.D. and D.D., 1878; Deacon, 1843; Priest, 1844. The following have been his appointments: Curate of Hampton-in-Arden, 1843-45; Curate of St. Mary's Chapel, Reading, 1845-46; Curate of St. Mary's-in-the-Castle, Hastings, 1846-54; Incumbent of St. John's Chapel, Hampstead, 1854-61; Vicar of Ambleside and Rural Dean, 1861; Hon. Canon of Carlisle, 1869; Vicar of Rydal with Ambleside, 1872; Rector of Cheltenham, 1879; Surrogate of Cheltenham, 1884. He is the author of "Night Scenes of the Bible and their Teachings," 1860; "The Sainly Calling," 1874; "Hills that bring Peace," 1876; "Voices from the Lakes," 1876 (now out of print); "Angelic Beings and their Ministry," 1877; "Roll Call of Faith," 1878; "Songs in the Twilight," 1878 (now out of print); "Hymns for Church and Chamber," 1879; "Our Daily Life, its Dangers and its Duties" and "Life of Henry Martyn," 1880; "Choice of Wisdom" and "Living Truths for Head and Heart," 1881; "Songs in Many Keys," 1884; "The Valley of Weeping and Place of Springs" and "Gleanings from a Tour in Palestine and the East," 1886; "A Winter on the Nile," 1888; "Reminiscences of a Boyhood in the Early Part of the Century, a New Story by a Old Hand," 1889; in 1893 he published "Poems, Old and New," and in 1894 "Diana's Looking-Glass and other Poems," and more lately two volumes of sermons, "The Name above every Name," and "The Gospel the Power of God." Dr. Bell was one of the promoters of the Dean Close Memorial School, Cheltenham, Chairman of Committee, and a Trustee; ex-officio Chairman of the Committee of the Cheltenham Training College for Male and Female Students. During his Incumbency he restored the fine old parish church of Cheltenham, and built in the parish the noble new church (St. Matthew's). Address: Loughrigg Brow, Ambleside.

BELL, Charles Frederic Moberly, the son of the late Thomas Bell, of Egypt, was born April 2, 1847, and was educated privately. He acted as correspondent of the Times in Egypt from 1865 to 1890, and in the latter year was appointed Assistant-Manager of that journal. He is the author of "Khedives and Pashas," 1884; "Egyptian Finance," 1887; "From Pharaoh to Fellah," 1889. Mr. Bell was married in 1875 to a daughter of the Rev. James Chetaway. Addresses: 98 Portland Place, W.; and Burgh Heath, Epsom.

BELL, Francis Jeffrey, was born in Calcutta on Jan. 26, 1855. After taking his degree at Oxford (Magdalen College) in 1878, he entered the service of the Trustees of the British Museum, and has since been constantly employed on work in the Zoological Department, where he devotes himself chiefly to the lower marine invertebrates. In 1879 he was appointed Professor of Comparative Anatomy and Zoology at King's College, London, which post he resigned in 1896, being then made Emeritus Professor and later on a Fellow of the College. From 1879 to 1886 he was a contributor to, and for the last two of those years editor of, the Zoological Record. From 1879 to 1897 he devoted a large amount of time to preparing abstracts of current researches of zoology for the Journal of the Royal Microscopical Society. For some years he was editor of this journal, and from 1883 to 1898 he was one of the Secretaries of that Society. In 1896 he was appointed Secretary to the International Congress of Zoology, which met at Cambridge in August 1898. While at Oxford he prepared a translation of Professor Genbaur's famous treatise on the "Elements of Comparative Anatomy." In 1885 he published with Messrs. Cassell a text-book of "Comparative Anatomy and Physiology." He prepared for the Trustees of the British Museum a descriptive catalogue of British Echinoderms. He took a large part in the revision of the chapters dealing with animals in the last edition of

Dr. Carpenter's work on the microscope edited by Dr. Dallinger, and he has edited a new edition, 1895, of Gosse's "Evenings at the Microscope." He has published various memoirs in the Proceedings and Transactions of various learned societies, many of which have dealt with Echinoderms. Of these the most extensive is the report on the Echinoderms collected by H.M.S. Alert. He has also contributed critical reviews and articles on popular natural history to various periodicals. He is an Hon. Member of the Manchester Microscopical Society, and a Corresponding Member of the Linnean Society of New South Wales. Mr. Bell acted as Examiner in Morphology in the Honours School at Oxford in 1892 and 1893, and examined for the Natural Science Tripos at Cambridge in 1897 and 1898. Permanent address: British Museum of Natural History, Cromwell Road, S.W.

BELL, The Rev. George Charles, M.A., fifth in the succession as Master of Marlborough College, is the eldest son of George Bell, Esq., merchant of London, and was born July 9, 1832, at Streatham. He was educated, 1842-51, at Christ's Hospital (the Bluecoat School), in London. As a Grecian, he gained a scholarship at Lincoln College, Oxford, 1851, and went up to the University, having, in addition, a school exhibition. In his second year he migrated to Worcester College, where he had won a Clarke scholarship, 1852. In the last term of 1854 he took a first-class in the Final Classical School, and in the following spring a first in the Final Mathematical School. In 1857 Mr. Bell gained the Senior University Mathematical Scholarship, and was elected Fellow and Mathematical Lecturer of his College. He received Deacon's orders in 1859, and six years later was appointed Second Master of Dulwich College. In 1868 Mr. Bell was elected as Head Master of his own old school, Christ's Hospital. In the following year he was ordained Priest. Mr. Bell remained at Christ's Hospital for eight years, and in 1876, on the resignation of Archdeacon Farrar, he accepted the Mastership of Marlborough. While in London Mr. Bell took an active part in supporting Mrs. William Grey's scheme for the education of girls: in recognition of this he was appointed a Vice-President of the Girl's Public Day School Company. He has been an active member of the Head Master's Conference since its foundation, and was Chairman of its Committee for three periods of three years each. He has also, for many years, been a Member of the Council of the College of Preceptors. Since 1890, as an Almoner of Christ's Hospital, he has taken a prominent part in the work of carrying the scheme of the Charity Commissioners into effect, by removing the London Boarding School to a new site at Horsham. The following is a list of the various stages in Mr. Bell's career: Scholar of Lincoln College, Oxford, 1851; Scholar of Worcester College, Oxford, 1852; first-class Mathematical Moderations, 1852; first-class Classics (Final Schools), 1854; first-class Mathematics (Do.), 1855; B.A., 1855; Senior Mathematical Scholar, 1857; Fellow of Worcester, 1857, and M.A.; Mathematical Lecturer of Worcester College, 1857-65; Mathematical Moderator, 1859-60; ordained Deacon, 1859, Priest, 1869, by Samuel Wilberforce, Bishop of Oxford; Mathematical Examiner, 1863; Select Preacher, 1867 and 1885; Second Master of Dulwich College, 1865-68; Head Master of Christ's Hospital, 1868-76; Master of Marlborough College, 1876; Prebendary of Sarum, 1886; has published "The Increase of Faith," a sermon preached in Salisbury Cathedral, 1887; "Confidence in Christ," preached in Westminster Abbey, 1888; and "Religious Teaching in Secondary Schools," Macmillan, 1897. He married in 1870 Elizabeth, second daughter of Edward Milner, Esq., of Dulwich Wood. Club: Athenæum.

BELL, Henry Thomas Mackenzie, poet and critic, is better known simply as Mackenzie Bell. He is the son of the late Thomas Bell, and nephew of the late Thomas Mackenzie (see "Men of the Time," 7th edit.), sometime Solicitor-General for Scotland, subsequently a Scottish judge under the title of Lord Mackenzie, and author of "Studies in Roman Law" (5th edit. 1898). He was born in Liverpool on March 2, 1856. During early childhood he had the misfortune to have a slight stroke of paralysis—the result of a fall owing to a nurse's carelessness. But for many years his health has been good, and he has done much literary work, and travelled considerably. In 1884 he settled in London, and in the same year published his monograph on the poet and novelist, Charles Whitehead, and thereby attracted well-deserved attention to that early friend of Dickens, who was originally asked to write the letterpress to the drawings by Seymour—letterpress which was ultimately undertaken by Dickens, and became "The Pickwick Papers." A new edition of Mr. Mackenzie Bell's monograph, prefixed to which was an appreciation of Whitehead by Mr. Hall Caine, was issued in 1894, and had a cordial reception from the press. Mr. Mackenzie Bell has written numerous important critical articles in "The Poets and the Poetry of the Century," and has been a contributor of signed articles, poems, or letters, to The Fortnightly Review, The Pall Mall Magazine, The Atlantic Monthly, The Athenæum, The Speaker, The Literary World, Temple Bar, The Lady's Realm, Black and White, The Academy, "The Savage Club Papers" (third series), "The Dictionary of National Biography," and other publications of repute. His "Spring's Immortality and other Poems" appeared in the autumn of 1893, a third edition being published in April 1896. His "Christina Rossetti: a Biographical and Critical Study," copyrighted in Great Britain and in the United States of America, January 1898, attracted much attention, and reached a third edition in February of the same year. His latest publication is a second volume of original verse, entitled "Pictures of Travel and other Poems." Address: 33 Carlton Road, Putney, S.W.

BELL, Sir Isaac Lowthian, Bart., F.R.S., D.C.L., was born in 1816. After completing his studies of physical science at Edinburgh University and the Sorbonne at Paris, he entered the chemical and iron works at Walker. In 1850 he became connected with the chemical works at Washington, in the county of Durham, then in the hands of his father-in-law, the late H. L. Pattinson, F.R.S. Under his direction they were greatly enlarged, and an extensive establishment was constructed for the manufacture of oxychloride of lead, a pigment discovered by Mr. Pattinson. In 1873 he ceased to be a partner in these works, which are now carried on by a grandson of Mr. Pattinson's. Mr. Bell, in connection with his brothers, Messrs. Thomas and John Bell, founded, in 1852, the Clarence Works on the Tees, one of the earliest, and now one of the largest, iron-smelting concerns on that river, which these gentlemen carry on in connection with extensive collieries and ironstone mines. Recently, arrangements have been made for obtaining salt from a bed of the mineral, found at a depth of 1200 feet at Port Clarence. Mr. Bell has been a frequent contributor to various learned societies on subjects connected with the metallurgy of iron, and has recently completed a very elaborate experimental research on the chemical phenomena of the blast-furnace. He has filled the posts of President to the Iron and Steel Institute, to the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, to the Mining and Mechanical Engineers of the North of England, and that of President of the Society of Chemical Industry. In recognition of his services as Juror of the International Exhibitions at Philadelphia in 1876, and at Paris in 1878 and 1889, he was elected a Member of the American Philosophical Institution and an Officer of the Legion of Honour. He has filled the office of Sheriff, and was twice elected Mayor of Newcastle-on-Tyne, the last time in order to receive the members of the British Association at their meeting in the year 1863. He received the Howard Bequest from the Institute of Civil Engineers in 1892, and the Prince Consort's Gold Medal from the Society of Arts in 1894. He was elected M.P. for Hartlepool in July 1875, but ceased to represent that borough in 1880. Sir Lowthian Bell is the author of several important writings on the iron and steel industries. Permanent Address: Rowton Grange, Northallerton.

BELL, James, C.B., D.Sc., Ph.D., F.R.S., born in 1825, is a native of the county Armagh; was educated principally by private tuition and at University College, London, where he distinguished himself in chemistry and mathematics. He became Deputy-Principal of the Somerset House Laboratory, Inland Revenue Department, in 1867, and was Principal from 1875 to 1894. In connection with his official position he was Chemical Examiner of lime and lemon juice for the supply of the British merchant navy, 1868-94, and from 1869 until 1894 he acted as Consulting Chemist to the Indian Government, and nearly all of the principal public departments. On the passing of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act in 1875 he was appointed to the difficult and responsible position of Chemical Referee under that Act for the United Kingdom. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1884, and the degree of Doctor of Science was conferred upon him in 1886 by the Senate of the Royal University, Dublin. He obtained the degree of Doctor of Philosophy under the ordinary statutes of the University of Erlangen; and was President of the Institute of Chemistry of Great Britain and Ireland in 1888 to 1891, and created a Companion of the Bath in 1889. As regards his scientific work, Dr. Bell is, perhaps, best known from his valuable series of chemical researches into the composition of articles of food, and the variations that occur in their constituents. The results of these original researches, with improved methods of analysis, were elaborated and embodied by him in a work entitled "The Chemistry of Foods," and published in three parts, 1881-83. This work has since been translated into German, and published in Berlin. Among his other scientific work may be mentioned his study of the grape and malt ferments, published in the Journal of the Chemical Society, 1870, and also his laborious and interesting research on tobacco, the results of which were published in 1887, in the form of a pamphlet, entitled "The Chemistry of Tobacco." The report of the result of his investigation into the constitution of butter and the variations in its composition, was regarded as of so much importance that it was presented to the House of Commons, and published as a Parliamentary paper in June 1876. In addition to his scientific labours, Dr. Bell has compiled two departmental books, partly educational and partly legal and technical. Dr. Bell's services have often been called into requisition on different Government Committees; of these we may instance the Committee on the Adulteration of Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs; a Treasury Committee on the Exportation of Essences and Perfumes; a Board of Trade Committee on the Use of Disinfectants in the Mercantile Marine; and the Brewers' Materials Committee. Dr. Bell, from his extensive practical and scientific knowledge, occupied a unique position on these Committees, and was able to render valuable assistance in dealing with the various questions submitted to each Committee for inquiry and solution. On more than one occasion Dr. Bell's services have proved useful to a Chancellor of the Exchequer. It is well known, for instance, that on the adjustment of the tobacco duties in 1887, to meet the difficulties of the situation, he suggested that a limit to the quantity of water permissible in manufactured tobacco should be fixed by law, and he devised a scheme for carrying out the same, with the result that the application of the enactment has been most successful alike to the revenue, the trade, and the consumer, who obtains his tobacco without being loaded with water, as in former days. To several successive Committees of the House of Commons Dr. Bell has rendered, as an expert witness, important assistance by his suggestions and his views on practical questions; and for the Playfair Committee on British and Foreign Spirits, he solved to their satisfaction the difficult and intricate problem of the changes that take place in the maturing of whisky. Permanent residence: Howell Hill Lodge, Ewell, Surrey.

BELLAMY, The Rev. James, M.A., D.D., President of St. John's College, Oxford, was born in London on Jan. 31, 1819, and is the eldest son of the late James William Bellamy, Headmaster of Merchant Taylors' School from the year 1819 to 1845. He was educated at Merchant Taylors', and entered St. John's at the age of seventeen. In 1841, during his college days, he was librarian of the Union Society. He obtained a second class in Lit. Hum., and a first class in Mathematics in 1841 (B.A. 1841; M.A. 1845; B.D. 1850; D.D. 1872). He was Fellow of his College till 1871, when he became President and Tutor from 1850 to 1860; Mathematical Moderator, 1853-54; Member of the Hebdomadal Council, 1874-78; and Vice-Chancellor, 1886-90. Address: St. John's College, Oxford, &c.

BELLOC, Elizabeth Ragner, Madame, née Bessie Ragner Parkes, was born at Birmingham on the 10th of June 1829. She was the only daughter of the late Joseph Parkes, Taxing Master in Chancery, and through her mother, née Eliza Priestley, Madame Belloc is a great-granddaughter of Dr. Joseph Priestley. In 1858 Miss Bessie Parkes became actively connected with the Economic Section of the Association for the Promotion of Social Science. She founded and edited for some years the English Women's Journal, which had for its main object the amelioration of the industrial position of women. In this enterprise she was principally assisted by Madame Budichon (née Barbara Leigh Smith), the daughter of the late Member for Norwich. Madame Belloc entered the Roman Catholic Church in 1864, and married three years later Louis Maire Belloc, a member of the French Bar, and only son of the well-known French painter, Jean Hilaire Belloc. Madame Belloc was widowed in 1872. Her published works include "Gabriel, a Poem," 1856; "Essays on Woman's Work," two editions, 1864-1866; "Vignettes," 1865; "In a Walled Garden," three editions, 1895; "A Passing World," 1897. Madame Belloc has also contributed largely to periodical literature. Address: 11 Great College Street, Westminster, S.W.

BELLOC, Marie Adelaide. See LOWNDES, MRS.

BELMORE, Earl, The Right Hon. Sir Somerset Richard Lowry-Corry, G.C.M.G., son of the 3rd Earl, whom he succeeded in 1845, was born in London on April 9, 1835, and educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was elected as senior representative peer for Ireland in 1857; was Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department in Lord Derby's third administration, from July 1866 to July 1867; and Governor of New South Wales from January 1868 to February 1872. He is a Privy-Councillor in Ireland, 1867, was created K.C.M.G. in 1872 and G.C.M.G. in 1890. He was President of the Commission on Trinity College, Dublin, in 1877, and is now President of the Manual and Practical Instruction (Ireland) Commission. He has been one of the Lords Justices-General and General Governors of Ireland, and a Member of the Judicial Committee of the Irish Privy Council. He published, in 1887, "Parliamentary Memoirs of Fermanagh and Tyrone," besides other works on Irish county history. He is married to Anne Elizabeth Honoria, daughter of the late Captain Gladstone, R.N., M.P. Addresses: Castle Coole, Enniskillen; and Athenæum.

BELPER, Lord, The Right Hon. Henry Strutt, 2nd Baron, was born on May 20, 1840, and succeeded to the title in 1880. He was educated at Harrow and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He sat as M.P. (Liberal) for Derbyshire, East, from 1868 to 1874, and in the General Election of the latter year he unsuccessfully contested the same constituency, but in 1880 he was returned for Berwick-on-Tweed. For many years Lord Belper was Colonel of the South Notts Yeomanry Cavalry. He is a J.P. for the counties of Derby and Leicester, and also Chairman of the Notts Quarter-Sessions and the Nottinghamshire County Council. His lordship is an Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, and in 1895 was appointed Captain of Her Majesty's Body Guard of the Hon. Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms, and also a Privy Councillor. He is an LL.M. of Cambridge. In 1874 he married Lady Margaret Coke, daughter of the 2nd Earl of Leicester, and has issue—the Hon. William Strutt, heir, born in 1875, has five daughters. The family seat is Kingston Hall, Kegworth, Derbyshire.

BENEDEN, Professor Pierre Joseph van, M.D., LL.D., was born at Malines, Dec. 19, 1809, and became Professor at the Faculty of Sciences at Louvain in 1836. He has devoted a long life to researches in many branches of anatomy, zoology, physiology, ichthyology (fossil and recent), and ethnology. Besides his larger work, Professor Van Beneden has published nearly 300 memoirs in the Transactions of various scientific societies. Professor Van Beneden is M.D. and D.Sc., LL.D., Edinburgh, Member of the Academy of Science of Belgium, Foreign Member of the Royal Society of London, Corresponding Member of the Institute of France (Académie des Sciences, 1892), of the Academies of Berlin, Boston, Lisbon, Montpellier, Munich, and of numerous scientific societies, and Knight Commander or Grand Officer of Orders of Belgium, Brazil, Italy, and other countries. He is the father of Dr. Edouard van Beneden (born 5th March 1846), Professor of Zoology at the University of Liège, whose work has been principally devoted to researches on the embryogeny of animals, for which he was awarded the Serres Prize of the Academy of Sciences of Paris in 1882.

BENEDETTI, Comte Vincent de, a French diplomatist, of Italian extraction, born at Bastia, in Corsica, in 1817, was educated for the Consular and Diplomatic service. After having been appointed Consul at Palermo in 1848, he became first Secretary to the Embassy at Constantinople until May 1859, when he was appointed to succeed M. Bourée as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister at Teheran. M. Benedetti, who declined to accept the office, was some months afterwards named Director of Political Affairs to the Foreign Minister—a position associated with the successful career of MM. de Rayneval and d'Hauterive, and with the names of Desages, Armand, Lefebvre, and Thouvenel. It fell to the lot of M. Benedetti to act as secretary and editor of the Protocols in the Congress of Paris in 1856, and he was made Chevalier of the Legion of Honour in June 1845, Officer in 1853, Commander in 1856, Grand Officer in June 1860, and Grand Cross in 1866. Having been appointed Minister Plenipotentiary of France at Turin in 1861, on the recognition of the Italian Kingdom by the French Government, he resigned when M. Thouvenel retired from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and was appointed Ambassador at Berlin, Nov. 27, 1864. M. Benedetti obtained great notoriety in connection with the remarkable draft of a secret treaty between France and Prussia, which was published in the Times on the 25th of July, 1870, at the very beginning of the war between those two Powers. The document stated that the Emperor Napoleon III. would allow and recognise the Prussian acquisitions consequent upon the war against Austria; that the King of Prussia would promise to assist France in acquiring Luxemburg; that the Emperor would not oppose a Federal reunion of North and South Germany; that if the Emperor should occupy or conquer Belgium, the King should afford armed assistance to France against any other Power that might declare war against her in such case; and that the two Powers should conclude an offensive and defensive alliance. The publication of this extraordinary document caused great consternation and excitement throughout Europe. Its authenticity was not denied, but France declared that although M. Benedetti had written the document, he had done so at the dictation of Count Bismarck; whereas the latter statesman declared that through one channel or another France had incessantly demanded some compensation for not interfering with Prussia in her projects. Both statesmen agreed in saying that their respective Sovereigns declined to sanction the treaty. On the outbreak of the war, M. Benedetti was of course recalled from Berlin; and since the fall of the Empire he has disappeared from public notice, having retired to Ajaccio. In October 1871, however, he published a pamphlet, in which he threw upon Count Bismarck the whole responsibility of the draft treaty, but the German Chancellor utterly crushed his opponent by a weighty reply. In 1872 he was elected a Member of the Conseil Général of Corsica, and since then he has been an advocate at the Bar of Ajaccio. An English translation of his "Studies in Diplomacy" appeared in 1895.

BENHAM, The Rev. Canon William, B.D., Rector of St. Edmund, Lombard Street, was born at West Meon, Hants, Jan. 15, 1831, his father being the village postmaster, as his grandfather had been before him. He was educated at the village National School, and was favourably noticed by the rector, Archdeacon Bayley, who, being blind, took him to his house as his little secretary. He taught the youth Latin and Greek, and after his death in 1844, Mr. Benham was sent to St. Mark's College, Chelsea, to be trained for a schoolmaster. After working in that capacity for a few years, Archdeacon Bayley's family furnished him with the means of going through the Theological Department of King's College, London. He went out with a first-class, and was ordained by Archbishop Tait, then Bishop of London, as Divinity Teacher to his old college at Chelsea. He remained there from 1857 to 1864, when he became Editorial Secretary to the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, and Curate of St. Lawrence Jewry, under the present Dean of Exeter. In 1867 he was favourably noticed as a preacher by some members of Archbishop Longley's family, unknown to himself, and this led to the Archbishop offering him the vicarage of his own parish of Addington. He acted as the Primate's private secretary during the first Lambeth Conference, and passed the Resolutions through the press, and also his last Charge. Archbishop Tait made him one of the Six Preachers of Canterbury in 1872, and gave him the vicarage of Margate in the same year. His chief work there was the carrying out the restoration of the parish church. In 1880 he was appointed to the vicarage of Marden, and in 1882 to the rectory of St. Edmund the King, Lombard Street, in the City of London. In 1889 Archbishop Benson conferred on him an honorary Canonry in Canterbury Cathedral. Bishop Creighton appointed him Boyle Lecturer in 1897. Canon Benham has published "The Gospel of St. Matthew, with Notes and Commentary," 1862; "English Ballads, with Introduction and Notes," 1863; "The Epistles for the Christian Year, with Notes and a Commentary," 1864; "The Church of the Patriarchs," 1867; "The 'Globe' edition of Cowper's works," 1870; Commentary on the Acts in the "Commentary of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge," 1871; "A Companion to the Lectionary," 1872; a new translation of Thomas à Kempis's "Imitatio Christi," 1874; "Memoirs of Catherine and Craufurd Tait," 1879; "Readings on the Life of Our Lord and His Apostles," 1880; "How to Teach the Old Testament," 1881; "Short History of the American Church," 1884; an edition of "Cowper's Letters," 1885; "Diocesan History of Winchester," 1885; "Sermons for the Church's Year," 2 vols., 1885; and a "Dictionary of Religion"; "Life of Archbishop Tait," jointly with the Bishop of Winchester, 1894. He was editor of Griffith and Farran's "Library of Ancient and Modern Theology." He has also contributed articles to "The Bible Educator," Macmillan's Magazine, and other periodicals. He married (1) Louisa Marian Engelbach, and (2) Caroline E. Sandell. Address: 32 Finsbury Square, E.C.

BENN, John Williams, London County Council, son of the Rev. Julius Benn, Congregational Minister, was born Nov. 13, 1850, at Hyde, Cheshire. He came to London in 1851, and was educated privately. He was engaged in art and trade journalism until 1889, when he entered public life as member of the first London County Council, representing East Finsbury; he was re-elected in 1892, with the Earl of Rosebery, K.G., as colleague, and again in 1895. He acted as "Whip" of the Progressive Party on the London County Council from 1890 to 1894, and has taken an active part, as a Liberal, in London politics. In 1898 he became London County Councillor for the Kennington Division of Lambeth. In 1892 he contested the St. George's East Division of the Tower Hamlets for the parliamentary seat, and defeated the Right Hon. C. T. Ritchie; he was defeated by four votes at the election of 1895. He has held various chairmanships of the London County Council, being Vice-Chairman of that body from 1895 to 1896. He was appointed J.P. for the county of Essex in 1894. He has contributed numerous articles to newspapers and magazines, mostly on social topics concerning the Metropolis. He has taken a special interest in the Tramway, Telephone, Water, and Housing Questions, and his action secured inquiries in the House of Commons as to the Unification of London and the telephone service. He is now Chairman of the Highways Committee of the London County Council.

He contested the borough of Deptford, in the parliamentary interest, in November 1897, and reduced the majority by 900 votes. He is on the Executive of the London Reform Union and the London Liberal and Radical Union, and is much in demand as a political speaker. He has taken a prominent part in the Temperance movement, and is frequently on the platform of the United Kingdom Alliance and the National Temperance League. He occasionally lectures on art subjects, being a ready draughtsman, and well versed in all the processes of illustration. Some of his work appeared in the articles on "Artistic M.P.'s" which recently appeared in the Strand Magazine. He was founder of the firm of Benn Brothers, Limited, of 11 Finsbury Square, and is President of the recently formed Commercial Press Association, which represents the combined trade journalism of the country. Address: Westminster Palace Hotel, London, S.W.

BENNETT, Enoch Arnold, was born in Staffordshire on May 27, 1867, and was educated at Newcastle Middle School. After following the legal profession for some time, he became assistant-editor of Woman in 1893, eventually succeeding to the editorship in 1896. Address: 9 Fulham Park Gardens, S.W.

BENNETT, Henry Curtis, J.P., was born in Staffordshire on May 11, 1846, and is the son of the Rev. George Peter Bennett, for thirty-two years Vicar of Kelvedon, Essex. He was educated at Kelvedon, and was called to the Bar in 1870. He was appointed a Metropolitan Police Magistrate in 1886, and continues to hold this position. Mr. Bennett is married to Emily Jane, daughter of F. Hughes-Hallett, of Brooke Place, Ashford, Kent. Addresses: 118 Lexham Gardens, Kensington, W.; and Boreham Lodge, Chelmsford, Essex.

BENNETT, William Henry, F.R.C.S., is Surgeon to St. George's Hospital, and Lecturer on Clinical Surgery in the Medical School of that Institution. He is a Member of the Court of Examiners of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, and he occupies the position of H.M. Inspector of Anatomy. He is the author of "Lectures on Varicose Veins of the Lower Extremities," "Lectures on Varicocele," "Lectures on Abdominal Hernia," and of numerous articles in the various medical journals, and transactions of medical and surgical societies. Address: 1 Chesterfield Street, Mayfair.

BENNIGSEN, Rudolph von, born at Lüneburg, Hanover, July 10, 1824, studied jurisprudence at Göttingen and Heidelberg, and qualified as an advocate, but entered the judiciary and rose to the functions of a judge at Göttingen. In 1855 the city of Aurich elected him to the Second Chamber of the Hanover Legislature, but the King refused him the indispensable consent of the Crown to accept that legislative office. Thereupon he resigned his judgeship, took his seat in the Parliament (1856), and at once assumed a position as leader of the Opposition. In 1859 Bennigsen and Miguel, with a few others, drew up and issued a programme or scheme of German unity. In this document it was declared that only Prussia could be at the head of a united Germany, and in fact Bennigsen advocated at this period that which Prince Bismarck long afterwards accomplished. The National-Verein held its first sitting Sept. 16, 1859, at the invitation of Bennigsen, and he himself was chosen President. The Frankfurt Assembly formed the permanent organisation of the National-Verein, and fixed its seat in the city of Coburg. At the time of its dissolution in 1866 it numbered 30,000 members, of whom 10,000 were from Prussia. In that year the organisation of the North German Confederation making inevitable and speedy realisation of the Empire, the Union had no further raison d'être, and it was accordingly dissolved. Bennigsen, who by the annexation of Hanover was made a Prussian, became a member both of the Prussian Lower Chamber and of the North German Reichstag. During the war in 1870 he was in confidential relations with the Prussian authorities, and undertook two important missions—one to the South German States, where he discussed the conditions of a possible unity; the other to the camp of Versailles, in the winter of 1871, where the same negotiations were afterwards carried out to a practical result. In 1873 he was elected President of the Prussian House of Deputies. At the elections of 1877 the Socialist party opposed his candidature, but without success. He was re-elected to the Reichstag, and endeavoured to effect an understanding between Prince Bismarck and the National Liberals, but the negotiations ended in the disruption of his party. In 1883 he retired from the Reichstag, but was again elected in 1887, and again took command of the National Liberal party. He kept his seat in 1890 at the head of greatly diminished forces. In 1888 he was appointed by the Emperor Chief Administrator of Hanover.

BENSON, Edward Frederic, novelist, was born on July 24, 1867, at Wellington College. He is the son of the late Archbishop of Canterbury and of Mary Sidgwick, and was educated at Marlborough and King's College, Cambridge, of which he was a Scholar. He was elected Wortz Student in 1892, Prendergast Student in 1893, and Craven Travelling Student in 1894. He was at work in Athens for the British Archaeological School from 1892 to 1895, and in Egypt for the Hellenic Society in 1895. He has travelled in Egypt, Greece, Italy, and Algeria. He became famous with his first novel, "Dodo," in 1893, and has since published "Six Common Things," 1893; "Rubicon," 1894; "Judgement Books," 1895; "Limitations," 1896; "The Babe B.A.," 1897; and "The Vintage," 1898. He was captain of the Marlborough rugby team, and played racquets for his school in 1886-87. Address: 9 St. Thomas Street, Winchester.

BÉRAUD, Jean, French painter, was born at St. Petersburg, Dec. 31, 1849, of French parents. Although the son of a sculptor, he was intended for the law, and finished his studies in 1870. During the siege of Paris he was one of the mobiles of the Seine; he then became a pupil of Bonnat (q.v.), and in 1874 began sending pictures to the Salon. The chief of these are: "Leda," 1875; "The Return from the Burial," 1876, his first sensational picture; "Coquelin Cadet" in the rôle of Matamore, 1878; "Montmartre," 1881; "The Journal des Débats," 1889, a collection of portraits of the staff. Since 1890 M. Béraud has exhibited at the Champ de Mars. Among his pictures there have been "Monte Carlo, Rien ne va plus," "l'Arlequine," and a set of scriptural pictures, in which, following the example of the mediæval schools, he has depicted Christ in antique garb, but all the other personages in modern dress. The best-known of these is "Mary Magdalene at the house of Simon the Pharisee," in which Mary, in a ball dress, is kneeling at the feet of our Lord, and the diners are in irreproachable evening dress. It achieved a succès de scandale, as the men were hardly-disguised portraits of the chiefs of Parisian literary circles and society.

BERESFORD, Rear-Admiral Lord Charles William de la Poer, C.B., M.P., second son of the Rev. John Beresford, 4th Marquis of Waterford, by Christiana Julia, fourth daughter of the late Colonel Charles Powell Leslie, of Glaslough, co. Monaghan, was born Feb. 10, 1846, at Philiptown, co. Dublin. He entered the Royal Navy in 1859, was appointed a Lieutenant in 1868, and advanced to the rank of Commander in 1875. He served successively in the Marlborough, the Defence, the Clio, the Tribune, the Sulej, the Research, the Royal yacht

Victoria and Albert, the Galatea, the Goshawk, and Bellerophon. In 1872 he was appointed Flag-Lieutenant to the Commander-in-Chief at Devonport; and he accompanied the Prince of Wales as Naval aide-de-camp to India in 1875-76. In 1877 he joined the Thunderer, and was commander of the Royal yacht Osborne from 1878 to 1881. His lordship received the gold medal of the Royal Humane Society and of the Liverpool Shipwreck and Humane Society for having on three occasions jumped overboard and saved lives at sea. On one of these occasions, when he rescued a marine who had fallen overboard at Port Stanley, Falkland Islands, he was attired in heavy shooting clothes, and his pockets were filled with cartridges. At the time of the bombardment of the forts of Alexandria, Lord Charles Beresford was in command of the gunboat Condor, and in the action of July 11, 1882, he greatly distinguished himself by his gallant conduct. The ironclad Téméraire, which got ashore at the beginning of the engagement, was safely assisted off by the Condor. Then the formidable Marabout batteries, which constituted the second strongest defence of the port of Alexandria, were effectually silenced. This latter success was chiefly due to the gallant way in which the Condor bore down on the fort and engaged guns immensely superior to her own. So vigorous, indeed, was the attack on the big fort, that the Admiral's ship signalled "Well done, Condor." It was ascertained that the Khedive, who had taken refuge with Dervish Pacha at Ramleh, was in imminent danger. Arabi Pacha had sent a body of troops to guard the palace, and ordered them to kill the Khedive; but Tewfik and Dervish managed to bribe the men, and to communicate with Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, who despatched the Condor inshore to keep the Egyptian troops in check. The Khedive then succeeded in getting away, and drove to Ras-el-Tin. As the conflagration and looting continued in the city of Alexandria, the Americans were asked to land marines to assist in keeping order, and a regular police system was organised under Lord Charles Beresford, while Captain Fisher, of the Inflexible, took command of the land forces. Strong measures were necessary to subdue the looters. Several of the scoundrels detected in the very act of setting fire to houses were summarily shot in the great square, and those caught plundering were flogged. Lord Charles Beresford was promoted to the rank of Captain (Aug. 7, 1882) for the services he had rendered at the bombardment of Alexandria. In September 1884 he was appointed on the staff of Lord Wolseley for the Nile Expedition, and assisted in the arduous work of getting the boats up to Korti. In command of the Naval Brigade with Sir Herbert Stewart across the Desert, he was the only man not killed of those in immediate charge of the machine-gun at Abu Klea, and was subsequently left in charge of Zeraba when the troops marched on Gubat. In February 1885, with the small river steamer Safia, he rescued Sir Charles Wilson's party (who had been wrecked on their return from Khartoum), after having had the boiler of his steamer repaired while anchored for twenty-four hours under fire of the enemy's fort, which fire was kept down solely by the two machine-guns on board. His lordship sat in the House of Commons as member for the county of Waterford, in the Conservative interest, from February 1874 till April 1880, when his candidature was unsuccessful. On many occasions he called attention to the state of affairs connected with the Navy, and several naval reforms were effected through his instrumentality. In November 1885 he was returned for the Eastern Division of Marylebone by a majority of 944 over the late sitting member, and easily retained the seat at the election of 1886. He was appointed Junior Lord of the Admiralty on the accession of Lord Salisbury to power, which post he resigned in 1888 on a question affecting the strength of the Navy. He subsequently brought before the House of Commons detailed proposals for strengthening the fleet by seventy ships, at a cost of twenty millions. The Naval Defence Bill may be said to have resulted from these proposals. In December 1889 he was appointed to the command of the first-class armoured cruiser Undaunted, for service in the Mediterranean, having previously retired from Parliament. During this command he was instrumental in saving from shipwreck the Seignelay, a French cruiser of 1900 tons, which had parted her cable in a gale, and had gone ashore. Lord Charles offered to save the ship, although the French officers had declared that to get her off was a "physical impossibility." Owing to shallowness of water, the Undaunted could not approach within 850 yards of the French ship; but, after working hard for three days, the crew of the Undaunted got a chain cable right over the Seignelay, and ultimately succeeded in drawing the French vessel into deep water. Lord Charles and his crew received the thanks of the French Government, personally conveyed by the French Admiral, and his lordship was also presented with a beautiful Sèvres vase, the Admiralty not permitting him to accept the Legion of Honour which was offered. The Undaunted came home in June 1893, and paid off. Shortly afterwards Lord Charles was appointed to the command of the Steam Reserve at Chatham, where he did invaluable service, passing thirty-three vessels into the Navy, after conducting the necessary trials. In the early part of 1897 he was appointed Naval Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, and took part in the Jubilee procession. He was promoted to the rank of Rear-Admiral in September of the same year. After being offered forty-six seats in Parliament, Lord Charles elected to fight the vacancy created at York by the death of Sir Frank Lockwood, and succeeded, by a majority of 11, in securing the seat, the first captured for the Government since the General Election of 1895. A petition was then presented by his opponents, asking for a re-count and scrutiny, but the proceedings were ultimately withdrawn, and Lord Charles retained the seat. In a letter to Alderman Rymer, chairman of his party in York, written in August 1898, he begged to be excused from his coming Parliamentary engagements, on the ground that he had been requested by the Chairman of the Associated Chambers of Commerce to proceed to China to make a report on the future prospects of British trade and commerce with that country. He started for the East on Aug. 24, 1898. His mission, we are informed, may be purely political, and it is ostensibly based on the principle, "That no commercial development of China is possible until China can guarantee security to trade and commerce by adequate and efficient military and police protection." Lord Charles Beresford married in 1878 Nina, eldest daughter of the late Richard Gardner, Esq., M.P., and has issue, two daughters, Kathleen Mary, born 1879, and Eileen Theresa Lucy, born 1889. He is also heir-presumptive to his nephew, the Marquis of Waterford. Addresses: 2 Lower Berkeley Street, Portman Square; and Park Gate House, Ham Common.

BERESFORD, Lord William Leslie de la Poer, 3^d C., K.C.I.E., the third son of the 4th Marquis of Waterford, was born on July 20, 1847, and was educated at Eton. He joined the 9th Lancers in 1867, served in Zululand in 1879, where he obtained the Victoria Cross, and was Lieutenant-Colonel of the 9th Lancers from 1890 to 1894. He was A.D.C. to Lord Lytton, when Viceroy of India, from 1876 to 1880, and acted as Military Secretary to Lords Ripon, Dufferin, and Lansdowne during their respective tenures of the Viceroyalty, from 1882 to 1894. Lord William was married, in 1895, to Lily Warren, daughter of the late Commodore Price, of New York, and widow of the 8th Duke of Marlborough, and has a son, William Warren de la Poer, born Feb. 4, 1897. Addresses: 3 Carlton House Terrace, S.W.; and Deepdene, Dorking.

BERKELEY, Ernest James Lennox, C.B., was born in 1857, and is the son of George Rawdon Lennox Berkeley. He was educated at the Royal Academy, Gosport, and the Royal Military College, Sandhurst. He is the Commissioner and Consul-General for the British Protectorate of Uganda, and was made a C.B. in 1897, when he married the daughter of Sir James Harris. Address: 10 St. James's Place, S.W.

BERKLEY, George, Civil Engineer, was born in London on April 26, 1821, and educated at private schools, and apprenticed to Samuda Bros. in 1835, with whom he worked in the shops and on designs of atmospheric systems of working railways, steam-engines, &c. From 1841 to 1849 he was assistant to Robert Stephenson, during which period he was engaged on experiments with locomotives, alteration of gauge and rolling stock of the Eastern Counties and North-Eastern Railways; inquiry into systems of working atmospheric railways, question of gauge referred to Royal Commission in 1846, and other work. From 1849 to 1859 he was engaged on inquiry into the water supply of Liverpool and neighbourhood for Robert Stephenson; Engineer to London and Blackwall Railway; North and South-Western Junction Railway and Branch to Hammersmith; Hampstead Junction Railway; Stratford and Loughton Railway; Wimbledon and Croydon; East Suffolk system of railways; Wells and Fakenham, and other lines; and from 1851 to 1859 represented Robert Stephenson as Engineer to the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, and succeeded to the post on the death of Robert Stephenson. In 1874 he was appointed one of the Consulting Engineers to the Colonial Office for Railways in Natal, and viaducts and other work in the Cape Colony. In 1885 he was appointed Consulting Engineer to the Indian Midland Railway; and in 1887, in conjunction with his son, was appointed Engineer to the Argentine North-Eastern Railway. In 1845 he wrote a paper on the atmospheric system of railways, and in 1870 a paper on the strength of iron and steel, for the Institution of Civil Engineers. He is senior Vice-President of the Institution of Civil Engineers; a Member of the Athenæum Club; and has been for some years on the Board of Managers of the Royal Institution. Address: Athenæum.

BERNARD-BEERE, Mrs. See BEERE, MRS. BERNARD.

BERNHARDT, Sarah, née Rosine Bernardt, French actress, was born at 5 Rue de l'École de Médecine in Paris, Oct. 22, 1844. Her mother was Julie Bernardt, a Jewess born at Berlin, but living in Amsterdam since her childhood, who had come to Paris when a young woman to gain her livelihood. As all the birth registers of Paris were burnt during the Commune, these particulars can only be obtained from the entry registers of the Conservatoire. She spent her early life in Holland at her grandfather's, an Amsterdam optician. She was sent to the Convent Grand Champ at Versailles at the age of seven, and was renowned for her violent temper. There she had as schoolfellow her future rival, Sophie Croizette, afterwards Madame Stern. She left in 1858, and on Nov. 29, 1859, she entered the Paris Conservatoire, and became a pupil of MM. Provost and Samson, professors of elocution. She gained a second prize for tragedy in 1861, and a second prize for comedy in 1862. This opened the doors of the Théâtre Français to her, and on Aug. 11, 1862, she made her début in "Iphigénie," and on the 24th in the "Valérie" of Scribe. She attracted hardly any notice from the public; but M. Francisque Sarcey, who was then writing for L'Opinion Nationale, gave her a few lines, in which he said her elocution was perfect, but her acting that of a schoolgirl. She left the Comédie Française after eight months, or rather was dismissed for having boxed the ears of one of the seniors, Mademoiselle Nathalie. She then went to the Gymnase, and appeared on June 25, 1863, in "Le Père de la débutante" and other pieces. However, in April 1864 the discipline of daily work became too much for her, and she went to Madrid, thus losing her place. Returning, she went to the Porte St. Martin Theatre, and on Dec. 8, 1865, she appeared in "La Biche au bois." She did not stay long here, and for a year was absent from the theatre; after which, in January 1867, she prevailed upon M. Duquesnel to give her a place at the Odéon, having been recommended to him by M. Camille Doucet. Her success was not quick, but it was sure. She played Armande in "Les Femmes Savantes," Albine in "Britannicus," Mariette in "François le Champi," and Zacharie in "Athalie." On Jan. 14, 1869, she created the part of Zanetto in "Le Passant," by François Coppée. The poet had been persuaded to give her the part by Mme. Agar, one of her fellow-actors. She was a great success as the Florentine page, and in the dedication the poet alludes to her beauty and talent as the chief factors in the success of the piece. During the war of 1870 she was untiring in working with the Odéon ambulance, and when the theatre opened again, she appeared in "Jean Marie," by M. André Theuriet, and "Mademoiselle Aissé," by Louis Bouilhet. On Feb. 19, 1872, the turning-point of her career was reached, for she then appeared in a revival of "Ruy Blas" as the Queen, Marie de Neuborg. The part seemed to have been written for her; the expression of her "golden voice" was so soft, and at the same time so touching, that her success became a triumph. M. Perrin, who had succeeded Thierry as Director of the Comédie Française, determined that this star must shine in his firmament alone, and she made her reappearance in "Mademoiselle de Belle-Isle" on Nov. 6, 1872. She worked hard with wondrous results: her Junie in "Britannicus" was received rapturously on December 14, and on March 23, 1874, she created the part of Berthe de Savigny in "Le Sphinx," by Octave Feuillet. Mademoiselle Croizette was playing the chief female part, but she was completely eclipsed by Madame Bernhardt in the part of the outraged but forgiving wife. In the month of December she played Phédre at three days' notice, and at once was compared to Rachel, who had been presumed till then to be unapproachable in that rôle. It still remains her favourite part, and she includes it invariably in her répertoire whenever she comes to London. She was elected a sociétaire of the Comédie Française in 1875, and in 1876 played Mrs. Clarkson in "L'Etrangère"; Andromaque and Doña Sol in 1877. "Ruy Blas" was produced in 1879, and she was as great a success at the Comédie Française as she had before been at the Odéon. For seven years she had been one of its members, and knowing her impetuous nature, people were wondering how long she would be able to bear the restrictions of such a position, when the expected happened. In 1879 the Comédie Française visited London, and gave a brilliant series of performances at the Gaiety Theatre, under the direction of Mr. John Hollingshead. Madame Bernhardt was unable one night to play her part in "L'Etrangère," and some of the London papers made certain criticisms on her conduct, which were followed up by the Paris Figaro. Thereupon she resigned her position of sociétaire and accepted an engagement to visit the United States. However, on her return to France from London she was persuaded to remain, and played Clorinde in "L'Aventurière," a part she disliked. In consequence she was adversely criticised by the press. Being further refused the part of Célémène in Musset's "On ne badine pas avec l'amour," she betook herself to her country house, and refused on any account to reappear in public. Thereupon the theatre brought an action against her for breach of contract, and she was compelled to pay £4000 damages. In May 1880 she went on a provincial tour through France, and then returned to London to play "Adrienne Lecouvreur" and "Froufrou." In August she went to Copenhagen, where she was received with the same enthusiasm as in London. She then accepted a tempting offer to go to America, where she was rumoured to have made gigantic sums. The people received her as a queen both in the United States and in Mexico, and their enthusiasm even went the length of acclaiming her as a compatriot, for in spite of her denials the newspapers persisted in saying she was born at Rochester, N.Y. In March 1881 she returned to France, and almost at once set off for Russia, Holland, and Belgium. In April 1882 she was married at the Church of St. Andrew, Wells Street, London, to M. Damala, one of the members of her company, from whom she was divorced shortly afterwards. He died in 1889. On December 11 of the same year she created her greatest rôle, that of Fédora, in the play of that name by M. Victorien Sardou (q.v.), at the Vaudeville, Paris. She also appeared in "Nana Sahib," by M. Jean Richepin, and, in 1883, in "Macbeth." In 1884 M. Mayer became the Director of the Porte St. Martin Theatre, and Madame Bernhardt entered into a five years' engagement with him. On December 26 of that year she created Théodora in the play of that name, which ran for nearly a year. She paid another visit to London in 1886, playing Fédora at the Gaiety, and went on to America, only returning to Paris in July 1887, bringing back £32,000 profit. In November of that year she played La Tosca in the play of that name, her best rôle after Fédora. During her foreign tour in 1888 the Turkish Censor of Plays prohibited "Théodora" at Constantinople. Mr. F. C. Phillips' (q.v.) novel, "As in a Looking-Glass," furnished her with a new play, "Léna," in 1889. The next year M. Jules Barbier wrote for her "Jeanne d'Arc," which she brought to London in June at the old Her Majesty's. In October she created the title-rôle of "Cléopâtre," by MM. Sardou and Emile Moreau, and then started on her third journey to America, which was continued into Australia, where Sydney was decorated in her honour. At this time there was some talk of her return to the Comédie Française, but she would not bind herself for three years. She returned to Europe in 1892, starting at once for London, where she played at the Royal English Opera-House, now the Palace Theatre. In 1893 she took the Renaissance Theatre in Paris, and brought out "Les Rois," by M. Jules Lemaitre (q.v.), and on Jan. 24, 1894, "Izeyl," by MM. Armand Silvestre (q.v.) and Morand, in which she appeared at Daly's in June 1894, with other plays of her répertoire. In 1895 she produced "La Princesse Lointaine," the second work of M. Edmond Rostand (q.v.), the author of "Cyrano de Bergerac." She again visited Daly's in 1895; in 1896 she was at the Comedy, and produced "Magda," a translation of Sudermann's "Heimat." At the end of the year took place the fête organised by M. Henri Bauer in her honour. It consisted of a lunch at the Grand Hotel of 500 guests, and a performance at the Renaissance of the third act of "Phèdre" and the fourth act of "Rome vaincue," by M. de Parodi, followed by the recitation of poems in her honour by MM. François Coppée, Edmond Rostand, André Theuriot, and Catulle Mendès. The only harsh note on a very great day was the refusal of the Government to bestow the Legion of Honour on the great actress. In 1897 she produced "Lorenzaccio," an adaptation of De Musset by Armand d'Artois, and "Spiritisme," by no means Sardou's masterpiece. She visited London as usual in June, and appeared at the Adelphi in the above-named and several of her old successes. In the autumn of the year she underwent a painful operation under Dr. Pozzi, but was no sooner out of the doctor's hands than she performed in Signor Gabriele d'Annunzio's "La Fille Morte" and M. Romain Coolus' "Lysiane." The latter she brought to London in June 1898, where her stay at the Lyric was rendered notorious by the refusal of the Lord Chamberlain to allow the representation of "Le Songe d'une Matinée de Printemps," by Signor d'Annunzio. Besides being an actress, Madame Bernhardt has tried other arts, and has exhibited sculpture at the Salon 1874-86, has painted pictures, and in 1888 wrote a play, "L'Aveu," which was performed at the Odéon.

BERRY, Rev. Charles Albert, D.D., was born at Leigh, Lancashire, on Dec. 14, 1852, and was educated at a private school at Southport, and the Airedale Independent College, Yorkshire. He was pastor of St. George's Road Chapel, Bolton, from 1875 to 1883, and in the latter year received a call to the Queen Street Congregational Chapel, Wolverhampton. He was, in 1887, asked to succeed Henry Ward Beecher, of Brooklyn, U.S.A.; this invitation, however, he refused, as also other requests to come to London. He has visited America on several occasions, and has travelled in Egypt, Palestine, Australia, and New Zealand. Dr. Berry was elected, in 1897, Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, and he has also served the office of President of the National Council of Evangelical Free Churches. He is the author of "Vision and Duty," 1892 (series of "Preachers of the Age"); "Mischievous Goodness," 1897; and a volume of sermons. Address: 13 Parkdale, Wolverhampton.

BERRY, The Hon. Sir Graham, K.C.M.G., was born in 1822. He was a shopkeeper in Chelsea, who went out to Victoria in 1852 in the height of the gold-digging fever, but instead of turning his attention to the gold mines he settled down to business in Melbourne. In 1860 he was elected to the Victorian Parliament as an advanced Liberal, and again in 1864, but was defeated in the next election, and then, devoting his energies to journalism, became proprietor and editor of the Geelong Register. He soon, however, re-entered Parliament, and in 1870 first took office as Treasurer, and five years later became Premier for a short time. In 1877 Sir G. Berry was returned at the head of an overwhelming majority, and once more took the Premiership. While in office he passed several important democratic measures, including a land tax on large estates, but failed to carry a proposal for a fundamental reform of the Legislative Council. Sir G. Berry then visited England in order to induce the Imperial Parliament to take up the matter, but failed, though through his efforts the question was eventually settled. On his return the general election of 1880 placed him in a minority, but he was subsequently restored to power, and carried some noteworthy reform measures. Again thrown out by a want of confidence vote, Sir G. Berry entered a coalition Ministry, in which he was Chief Secretary and Postmaster-General (1884-85). Early in 1886 Sir G. Berry, with Mr. Service, was Victorian delegate to the first Federal Council, and shortly afterwards he was appointed Agent-General in London for Victoria, which post he held until February 1892. On returning to the colony he accepted the office of Treasurer in the Shields Ministry, which succumbed to a vote of want of confidence in January 1893. The honour of knighthood was conferred in 1886 on Sir Graham Berry in recognition of his services to the colony. He was Executive Commissioner for Victoria at the Colonial and Indian Exhibition. In 1869 he married Madge, daughter of J. B. Evans of Victoria. Address: Melbourne.

BERRY, William Bisset, M.D., Speaker of the Cape Legislative Assembly was born at Aberdeen, and graduated at the University of his native town. In 1867 he established himself in practice in the eastern districts of Cape Colony. He took a great interest in municipal and educational work, and served on several government commissions, being an expert with regard to native problems. In 1893 he was elected to the Legislative Assembly for Queenstown. He is a strenuous advocate of compulsory education for all. He supports Mr. Rose Innes as a Moderate, but has backed up Mr. Rhodes' policy in Charterland. He is popular with both sides of the House.

BERTHELOT, Pierre Eugène Marcellin, a French chemist, the son of a physician, was born at Paris, Oct. 25, 1827. From a very early age he has devoted himself to scientific studies, and made special researches into the synthesis of fatty bodies and alcohol, and into thermo-chemistry. The degree of Doctor of Sciences was conferred upon him in April 1854, and in 1861 the Academy of Sciences awarded him the sum of 3500 francs for his researches. In 1859 he was appointed Professor of Organic Chemistry at the Superior School of Pharmacy, and in 1865, at the request of the Academy of Sciences, a new chair of organic chemistry was erected for him at the Collège de France. He was elected a Member of the Académie de Médecine in February 1863, and entered the Académie des Sciences, March 3, 1873, in the place of Duhamel. He has since been elected Foreign Member of the Royal Society of London, and of most of the Academies of Europe and the United States. On Sept. 2, 1870, he was elected President of the Scientific Committee of Defence, and during the siege of Paris was engaged in the manufacture of guns and ammunition, and especially of nitro-glycerine and dynamite. Since 1878 he has been President of the Committee on Explosives, to which body the new smokeless powder is due. On April 6, 1876, he was named Inspector-General of Higher Education. The labours of M. Berthelot have had for their object, principally, the reproduction of the substances which enter into the composition of organised beings, and his labours have opened a new field for science, which, up to his time, had limited itself almost entirely to analysis. The dyeing trade has benefited largely by his discoveries in extracting dyes from coal tar. He has for forty years contributed extensively to the Annales de Chimie et de Physique, of which he is now editor, La Synthèse des Carbures d'Hydrogène, &c., and has written "Chimie Organique fondée sur la Synthèse," 1860; "Leçons sur les Principes Sucres," 1862; "Leçons sur les Méthodes Générales de Synthèse," 1864; "Leçons sur l'Isomérisie," 1865; "Traité Élémentaire de Chimie Organique," "Sur la Force de la Poudre et des Matières Explosives," 1872 and 1889; "Vérification de l'Aréomètre de Baumé," 1873; "Les Origines de l'Alchimie," 1885; "Collection des anciens Alchimistes grecs," 1888; besides numerous scientific and philosophical articles for the Revue des Deux Mondes, the Revue des Cours Scientifiques, Le Temps, &c., which have been collectively published under the title "Science et Philosophie." He is one of the founders and the director of the "Grande Encyclopédie," of which the first volume was published in 1885. M. Berthelot was decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1861, made an Officer in 1867, Commander in 1879, and Grand Officer in 1886, in which year he became, for a short time, a member of the French Cabinet. In 1889 he was elected Secrétaire perpétuel de l'Académie des Sciences de Paris, and in 1895 Minister for Foreign Affairs.

BERTILLON, Alphonse, French anthropologist, younger brother of Dr. Jacques Bertillon, was born at Paris in 1853. He has devoted himself especially to ethnography, and has acquired a European reputation by applying anthropometry to the detection of criminals. As Chief of the Identification Office at the Préfecture de Police in Paris, he instituted in 1880 a system of measuring which has given marvellously precise results. Out of the 700 anthropometric discoveries of old criminals during the first six years of the use of his system, not one error has been discovered. Other governments have followed the example of France, and it was introduced at Scotland Yard in 1896. His chief works are "Ethnographie Moderne, les races sauvages," 1883; "L'Anthropométrie judiciaire à Paris en 1889," 1890; "la Photographie judiciaire," 1890; "Identification anthropométrique," 1893.

BERTILLON, Jacques, French doctor and statistician, born at Paris in 1851, is the elder son of Dr. Louis Adolphe Bertillon, statistician and botanist. He studied medicine at Paris, and became a doctor in 1883. He is one of the heads of department of the Statistical Office of the Préfecture of the Seine. He married the lady doctor Caroline Schultze, who is physician to the Odéon Theatre. He has published "Atlas de statistique graphique de la ville de Paris en 1888," 1890.

BERTRAND, Joseph Louis François, a French mathematician, born in Paris, March 11, 1822, evinced from a very early age an extraordinary taste for mathematics, and when eleven years of age, on leaving the College of St. Louis, he entered the École Polytechnique. He was successively Professor at the Lycée Saint-Louis, Examiner for admissions at the École Polytechnique, Teacher of Analysis at the same school, Assistant Professor of Mathematical Physics at the College of France, and Professor of Special Mathematics at the Lycée Napoleon. In 1856 he was admitted to the Académie des Sciences in place of Sturm, and on the death of Elie de Beaumont, in 1874, was elected perpetual secretary. Besides his three great works, "Traité d'Arithmétique," 1849; "Traité d'Algèbre," 1856; and "Traité de Calcul Différentiel Intégral," 1864-70, he has written a number of memoirs relative to physics, pure mathematics and mechanics, of which the following are the principal: "Sur les Conditions d'Intégralité des Fonctions différentielles," "Sur la Théorie Générale des Surfaces," "Sur la Similitude en Mécanique," "Sur la Théorie des Phénomènes Capillaires," "Sur la Théorie de la Propagation du Son," &c., which have appeared in the Journal de l'École Polytechnique or the Mémoires de l'Académie des Sciences. Lately he has written monographs on d'Alembert (1889) and Pascal (1890). He was made an Officer of the Legion of Honour in August 1867, and Commander in December 1881.

BESANT, Mrs. Annie, née Wood, is of Irish parentage, being the daughter of William Page Wood and Emily, daughter of James Morris, and was born in London on October 1, 1847, and brought up at Harrow. In 1867 she married the Rev. Frank Besant, who was at that time a master at Cheltenham, and was subsequently Vicar of Sibsey, in Lincolnshire. In 1873 she was legally separated from him. In 1874 her keen interest in political and social topics brought her into contact with the Secularists. She joined the National Secular Society, and published pamphlets under their auspices. On the publication of the notorious "Fruits of Philosophy," she was prosecuted in connection with the late Mr. Bradlaugh, M.P. (June 1877), but the prosecution was a failure. In 1883 Mrs. Besant became deeply interested in Socialism. She was during three years a member of the London School Board. After a lifelong devotion to Free Thought she joined the Theosophical Society in 1889, and has carried on active Theosophical propaganda at home and in India and the United States. In March 1893 she returned from a lecturing tour in the United States, where, as in India, to which she paid a lengthy visit in 1894, the Theosophical cult is very popular. She has now resumed her activities at home. She resides at the Theosophical European Headquarters in St. John's Wood, N.W., and in 1893 published her biography under the title of "Through Storm to Peace." Other works from her pen are "Reincarnation" and "Seven Principles of Man," 1892; "Death and After," 1893; "Building of the Kosmos," 1894; "Karma," "In the Outer Court," and "The Self and its Sheaths," 1895; "Path of Discipleship" and "Man and his Bodies," 1896; "Four Great Religions," "The Ancient Wisdom," and "Three Paths to Union with God," 1897. She edits the Theosophical Review in conjunction with G. R. S. Mead. Address: 19 Avenue Road, Regent's Park, N.W.

BESANT, Sir Walter, was born at Portsmouth in 1838, and educated at King's College, London, and Christ's College, Cambridge, where he graduated in high mathematical honours. He was intended for the Church, but abandoned this career. He was then appointed Senior Professor in the Royal College of Mauritius, but was compelled by ill-health to resign, and returned to England, where he has since resided. In 1868 he produced his first work, "Studies in Early French Poetry." In 1873 he brought out "The French Humourists," in 1877 "Rabelais" for the Ancient and Foreign Classics, and in 1882 "Readings from Rabelais," in 1879 "Coligny," and in 1881 "Whittington" (Chatto & Windus). Mr. Besant acted for many years as Secretary of the Palestine Exploration Fund, in which capacity he wrote, in 1871, a "History of Jerusalem," with the late Professor Palmer, and was editor of the great work entitled "The Survey of Western Palestine." He has contributed to most of the magazines. In 1871 he entered into the partnership with the late Mr. James Rice which produced the series of novels that bear their joint names. Mr. Besant has also written, under his own name, "The Revolt of Man," "The Captain's Room," "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," 1882, which led to the establishment of the People's Palace in the East End of London; "All in a Garden Fair," 1883; "Dorothy Foster," 1884; "Uncle Jack," 1885; "Children of Gibeon," 1886; "The World Went Very Well Then," 1887; "For Faith and Freedom," 1888; "The Bell of St. Paul's," 1889; "Armored of Lyonesse," 1890; "St. Katherine's by the Tower," 1891; "The Ivory Gate," 1892; "The Rebel Queen," 1893; "Beyond the Dreams of Avarice," 1895; "The Master Craftsman," "The City of Refuge," 1896; "A Fountain Sealed" and "The Changeling," 1897, and two or three volumes of short stories. He also, with Mr. Rice, put on the stage two plays, one performed at the Royal Court, a dramatic version of "Ready Money Mortiboy," and the other, "Such a Good Man," the play from which their story bearing the same title was written. He wrote a book on the people of London, 1892 (Chatto & Windus); on "Westminster," 1895; and a small book on the history of London, 1893 (Longmans). His "Rise of the British Empire" appeared in 1897. Mr. Besant has also written a biography of the late Professor Palmer, 1883; and "The Eulogy of Richard Jefferies," 1888. On the establishment of the Incorporated Society of Authors, he was elected the first Chairman of the Executive Committee, and in succession to the late Sir Frederick Pollock he was re-elected to the same office, which he held for four years. He is editor of The Author, a monthly paper devoted to the interests of literary men and literary beginners. He is now the Director of the "Survey of London." Latterly Sir Walter Besant has taken great interest in the scheme for celebrating the millenary of King Alfred, and in February 1898 he lectured, at Winchester, upon the Alfred Commemoration. Addresses: Froggnal End, Hampstead; Athenæum.

BESANT, William Henry, M.A., D.Sc., F.R.S., the son of a merchant at Portsmouth, was born at Portsmouth in 1828, and was educated at the Grammar School, and at a Proprietary School at Southsea, and proceeded, in 1846, to St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1850 as Senior Wrangler and First Smith's Prizeman. He was elected to a Fellowship at St. John's College in 1851, and was appointed Lecturer in 1853. The Fellowship ceased in 1859, but he was retained as Lecturer, and held that appointment until June 1889. In 1856 he was Moderator and in 1857 Examiner for the Mathematical Tripos. In 1859 he acted as deputy for the Vice-Chancellor in the examination for the Smith's Prizes. From 1859 to 1864 he was one of the Examiners for the University of London. In 1871 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. He is also a Member of the Royal Astronomical Society, and of the London Mathematical Society. In 1883 he received the degree of Doctor of Science, being the first D.Sc. created by the University of Cambridge. He has been very active as a private tutor, college lecturer, and examiner in Cambridge and elsewhere. In 1885 he was again Moderator for the Mathematical Tripos. In May 1889 he was re-elected to a Fellowship at St. John's College. Dr. Besant has published treatises on "Hydro-Mechanics," "Elementary Hydrostatics," "Geometrical Conic Sections," "Dynamics," "Roulettes and Glissettes," and has written various papers in the Messenger of Mathematics and in the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics. Dr. Besant married the only surviving daughter of the late Professor Willis in 1861. Private address: Spring Lawn, Harvey Road, Cambridge.

BESIEGED RESIDENT. See LA-BOUCHERE, H.

BESNARD, Armand Louis Charles Gustave, French Admiral, was born at Rambouillet, Oct. 11, 1833, and entered the Naval School in 1849. He was present at the bombardment of Petropaulovsk during the Crimean war, and was engaged in China during the second Chinese war. In 1863 his bravery in Cochinchina, at Vinh-Long, gained him the Legion of Honour. During the war of 1870 he was Chief of the Staff (acting as brevet lieutenant-colonel) to the army of Brittany, and was present at the battles of Droué and Le Mans. In 1873 he was promoted to a captaincy, and was Chief of the Staff to Admiral Jaurès. In 1879 he was assistant to Commander Gougeard, the Minister of Marine in the Gambetta Cabinet; after its fall he commanded the Friedland, and then the training-ship Iphigénie. In 1886 he attained flag rank, and became Chief of the Staff at the Admiralty, until he was appointed to the command of the Chinese squadron. In 1892 he was promoted Vice-Admiral and Préfet Maritime at Brest, when M. Ribot gave him the portfolio of the Admiralty in his Cabinet (Jan. 26, 1895). This post he held until the fall of the Méline Ministry in June 1898. He is a Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour. Paris Address: 45 Boulevard Lannes.

BETHAM-EDWARDS, Miss Matilda Barbara, was born at Westerfield, Suffolk, in 1836, and began to write when quite young. Her first effort in fiction, a story, "The White House by the Sea," published when she was nineteen, has been many times reprinted in popular editions, also translated into Norwegian and other languages; since that time she has devoted herself entirely to literature, contributing to Punch, the Graphic, the Pall Mall Gazette, Macmillan's Magazine, and other leading periodicals, and publishing numerous novels and novelettes. Amongst the most popular are: "John and I," "Doctor Jacob," "Kitty," "The Sylvestres," "Bridget," "Disarmed," "Pearla," "Love and Mirage," "Half-way," "A Dream of Millions," "Felicia,"

"Foretalled," "Brother Gabriel," "For the Other World." Many of these stories originally appeared in American and English serials, and have been translated into French, German, and Norwegian. They have also been reissued in popular editions in America, Germany, and at home. Amongst Miss Betham-Edwards's miscellaneous contributions to literature may be mentioned "A Winter with the Swallows in Algeria" and "A Year in Western France." In 1885 she published a volume of "Poems," containing, among other reprints, "The Golden Bee," which attracted the attention of Charles Dickens when the authoress was in her teens, and which was republished in popular form in 1897. In 1889 this writer issued a centennial edition of Arthur Young's "Travels in France," with notes, biography, and general sketch of France, the result of personal experience and observations; also, "The Roof of France; or, Travels in Lozère." In recognition of these works the French Government in 1891 conferred upon Miss Betham-Edwards the dignity of Officier de l'Instruction Publique de France. She is the first Englishwoman thus honoured. In 1892 and 1894 appeared in 2 vols. "France of To-day." This writer's hymn, "God make my life a little light," has now found a place in most hymnals, anthologies, &c., and is included in Dr. Julian's great Dictionary of Hymnology recently issued. Miss Betham-Edwards's latest contributions to fiction are: "The Romance of a French Parson," 1892; "The Curb of Honour," 1893; "A Romance of Dijon," 1894; "The Dream Charlotte," 1896; "A Storm-Rent Sky," 1898. She also edited "The Autobiography of Arthur Young," 1898; and among forthcoming works are her "Reminiscences" and "Poems," a complete edition. In 1894 she received a Civil List pension of £50 a year in consideration of her services to literature. Address: Villa Julia, Hastings.

BETHELL, George Richard, M.P., the son of W. F. Bethell, of Rise Park, Hull, was born March 23, 1849, and was educated at Laleham and Gosport Naval School. After the usual training on board the Britannia, he entered the Navy in 1862, and served as a sub-lieutenant during surveys conducted in the Mediterranean and in the Gulf of Suez. After becoming a Lieutenant he served on board the Challenger, the Alert, and the Minotaur during the years 1872 to 1884. In the latter year he was attached to Sir C. Warren's expedition to Bechuanaland, and was also in that year promoted to be Commander. He holds the Khedive's bronze star, and the Egyptian medal.

Commander Bethell was elected, in 1885, Conservative member for the Holderness Division of the East Riding of Yorkshire, and he has retained the seat up to the present time. Address: Sigglesothorne, Hull.

BEVERLEY, Bishop of. See CROSSTHWAITE, THE RIGHT REV. ROBERT J.

BHOWNAGGREE, Sir Mancherjee, K.C.I.E., M.P., only son of the late Merwanjee Bhownaggree, a Parsee merchant and public-spirited citizen of Bombay, was born in that city on Aug. 15, 1851. He was educated at the Proprietary School and Elphinstone College, and appointed Fellow of the Bombay University in 1881. When at college he won a prize for an essay on the Constitution of the East India Company, which three years later he enlarged into an abbreviated history of the growth of the famous John Company. Receiving a journalistic training under the well-known Anglo-Indian publicist Mr. Robert Knight, he was appointed one of the sub-editors of the Statesman newspaper in 1871, in which year he also delivered a public lecture on the history and growth of the Times newspaper. On the death of his father in the following year the charge of the Bombay State Agency of the large territory of Bhavnagar devolved upon him, and from that time his connection with the press, which has been maintained up to now, became a non-professional one. In 1877 he published a Gujarati translation of Her Majesty's "Leaves from the Journal of our Life in the Highlands"; and until he came to England in 1881 to read for the Bar, he was an active member on the governing bodies of several public institutions. For eight years he was secretary of the first female English school in Western India, and during his tenure that academy was placed in a fine building of its own. He was also secretary for many years of the Bombay branch of the East Indian Association; and on the Mechanics' Institute, the Gymnastic Institute, and many other public bodies he did important work. In 1881 the Bombay government appointed him a Justice of the Peace. He varied his study in law here by taking part in the proceedings of several public bodies and serving upon their councils. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1885, in which year he read an exhaustive paper on the subject of female education in India before the Society of Arts. Mr. Matthew Arnold presided on the occasion, and he and several other speakers so highly commended the lecture that the Society's silver medal was awarded for it. In 1886 he served as one of the Commissioners from India on the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, and was created a C.I.E. In the following year he was asked by the Maharaja of Bhavnagar, with the consent of Lord Reay's Government at Bombay, to assist him in establishing a constitutional administration and in reorganising the judicial and police departments in his State. This was so novel an innovation on the strictly autocratic form of rule which had prevailed from time immemorial in native India that the task was fraught not only with difficulty, but with danger. It was, however, accomplished with tact and firmness, the unwavering support of the Maharajah Takhtsingjee and the enlightened co-operation of fellow councillors—Dewan Vittaldas, Mr. Proctor Sims, and Dr. Barjorjee Byramjee—making it so successful in practice from the first that the new constitution has been since firmly fixed in the State, and even found imitators in other territories. It struck a blow at the absolute exercise of individual authority, and put an end to the strife of rival factions which is so fruitful a source of mischief in the India of the Rajahs. This brought about a combination of powerful malcontents, who fiercely attacked the Maharaja and the gentlemen who were Mr. Bhownagree's coadjutors in scurrilous sheets which were spread broadcast over India. Thereupon followed in 1890 the famous prosecution known as the "Bhavnagar Defamation Cases," which ended in the conviction and punishment of the ringleaders of the gang. A complete exposure of the blackmailing system of the lower native press and of the various pernicious influences which are at work at the courts of native states was made in the course of the trial, and formed the subject of a valuable and bulky report which Mr. Bhownagree wrote at its conclusion. When thus engaged in political and judicial work, he did not neglect the educational and social duties which fell upon him as a public man. He was the Secretary and chief worker of the Rukmabai Defence Committee, which had for its object the protection of Hindu women against the evils of infant marriage. He gave valuable evidence before the Public Service Commission, which dealt with the question of the wider employment of the people of India in the administrative service of their country, and successfully worked to place the Bombay Gymnastic Institute upon a permanent basis by housing it, with the co-operation of the Governments of Lord Reay and Lord Harris, in a fine building and large playground in one of the most conspicuous sites in the city. The death of his only sister Ave in 1888 fell upon him heavily, and in order to perpetuate her memory he founded the Nurses' Home at Bombay, and erected the East Corridor of the Imperial Institute in London, in which city she was educated. Both these monuments bear her name, as well as several prizes endowed in connection with female education, of which he, following in the footsteps of his father and mother, has been a staunch advocate throughout his life. His other contributions to different charities make up a handsome total. Returning to London in 1891, his old activity upon public bodies was resumed, and his friends perceived that if he entered upon a parliamentary career his energies would find adequate scope in English public life, and also serve the purpose of cementing the bonds between Great Britain and her Indian Empire. He was thus induced to enter into the political arena, and the path to success, which seemed long and difficult, was not made either smoother or shorter by his accepting the offer of North-East Bethnal Green to contest it in the Conservative interest. Mr. George Howell had been in possession of the seat by large Radical majorities ever since it became a separate constituency in 1885. But after a plucky fight Mr. Bhownagree was elected on the 16th July 1895. In questions of domestic legislation he is a progressive Conservative, and a strong Imperialist as regards our foreign policy and possessions. He insists upon India being regarded from an entirely non-political standpoint, and holds firmly to the belief that British rule has given her an unprecedented period of peace and of opportunities for material progress, on which he regards her future prosperity must mainly depend. Any movements which tend to shake the foundations of that rule he strongly deprecates, but in his criticism of the policy and actions of either party towards India he follows an independent line. Permanent address: 3 Cromwell Crescent, S.W.

BICKERDYKE, John. See COOK, C. H.

BICKERSTETH, The Right Rev. Edward Henry, D.D., Bishop of Exeter, born at Islington, Jan. 25, 1825, son of the late Rev. Edward Bickersteth, Rector of Watton, was educated at Watton and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was Chancellor's English Medallist in 1844, 1845, and 1846; proceeded B.A. (Sen. Opt.) in 1847, Classical Tripos, 3rd Class; took the degree of M.A. in 1850; and gained the Seatonian Prize in 1854. Mr. Bickersteth became Curate of Banningham, Norfolk, in 1848; Curate of Christ Church, Tunbridge Wells, 1852; Rector of Hinton Martell, Dorset, in the same year;

Vicar of Christ Church, Hampstead, in 1855; Chaplain to the Bishop of Ripon in 1861; Rural Dean of Highgate in 1837; and Dean of Gloucester in 1884. On the translation of Dr. Temple to the See of London, Dr. Bickersteth was appointed Bishop of Exeter, and was consecrated in 1885. He is author of the following books: "Poems," 1848; "Water from the Well-Spring," 1853; "The Rock of Ages; or, Scripture Testimony to the One Eternal Godhead of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit," 1858; "Practical and Explanatory Commentary on the New Testament," 1864; "Yesterday, To-day, and for Ever: a Poem in 12 books," 1866; "The Spirit of Life; or, Scripture Testimony to the Divine Person and Work of the Holy Ghost," 1868; "The Hymnal Companion to the Book of Common Prayer," 1870; "The Two Brothers, and other Poems," 1871; "The Master's Home-Call, 1872; "The Reef and other Parables," 1873; "The Shadowed Home and the Light Beyond," 1874; and "The Lord's Table," 1882. The "Hymnal Companion," of which a revised and enlarged edition, with tunes, appeared in 1876, is now in use in many thousands of churches in England and the Colonies. He married (1) in 1848 Rosa, daughter of the late Sir Samuel Bignold, Norwich (she died in 1873); and (2) in 1876 Ellen, daughter of the late Robert Bickersteth. Address: The Palace, Exeter.

BICKMORE, Albert Smith, was born at St. George's, Maine, March 1, 1839. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1860, and immediately began to study Natural History under Agassiz, who, in the following year, placed him in charge of the department of Mollusca in his Museum of Comparative Zoology at Cambridge, Mass. He had, very early in his scientific career, determined to establish at New York a Museum of Natural History. Partly to make collections for this, and partly to supply some deficiencies in the Museum of Comparative Zoology, he sailed in 1865 for the East Indies. He spent one year making collections of shells and small animals in the East Indian Archipelago; then traversed a large portion of China; visited and explored Japan, crossed Siberia, visiting its mines, Central and Northern Russia, and other European countries, and returned to New York after an absence of about three years. In 1869 he published in London and New York a volume of his "Travels in the East Indian Archipelago," and a German edition at Jena. In 1870 he was elected Professor of Natural History in Madison University, Hamilton, New York. He has been a frequent contributor to the American Journal of Science, and the Journal of the Royal Geographical Society; and is now Director of the Museum of Natural History, New York, which was inaugurated at the close of 1877.

BIDDULPH, General Sir Michael Anthony Shrapnel, G.C.B., is the second son of the late Rev. Thomas Shrapnel Biddulph of Amroth Castle, Pembroke-shire, sometime Prebendary of Brecknock, by Charlotte, daughter of the Rev. James Stillingfleet, Prebendary of Worcester, and was born at Cleeve Court, Somerset, in 1825. He was educated at Woolwich, and entered the Royal Artillery in 1843 as a second lieutenant. He was promoted to first lieutenant in 1844; became captain in 1850, brevet major in 1854, brevet lieutenant-colonel in 1856, colonel in 1874, major-general in 1877, lieutenant-general in 1881, and general in 1886. General Biddulph served throughout the Eastern campaign of 1854-55, including the battles of Alma, Balaklava, and Inkerman, and the siege and fall of Sebastopol. He was Deputy Adjutant-General of Artillery in India from 1868 to 1871; and in 1876 he was appointed Brigadier-General in command of the Rohilkund district; he also commanded the Quetta field force in Afghanistan 1878-79. He was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath (military division) in 1873, and promoted to a Knight Commandership of that Order in 1879 (G.C.B.). In 1881 he was appointed to the divisional staff of the army in Bengal. He is Gentleman-Usher of the Black Rod and Groom-in-Waiting, President of the Ordnance Committee, and Keeper of the Regalia. Sir Michael Biddulph married, in 1857, Katherine, daughter of Captain Stamati, Commandant of Balaklava. Address: 2 Whitehall Court, S.W.

BIDDULPH, General Sir Robert, G.C.M.G., K.C.B., is the son of the late Mr. Robert Biddulph of Ledbury, Herefordshire, by Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. George Palmer, M.P., of Nazing Park, Essex. He was born in London, Aug. 26, 1835, and educated at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich. He was appointed second lieutenant in the Royal Artillery in 1853; captain in 1860; major in the army in 1861; lieutenant-colonel in 1864; colonel in 1872; brigadier-general in 1879; major-general in the army in 1883; and lieutenant-general in 1887. He was Deputy Assistant-Adjutant-General in India from 1858 to 1860; Military Secretary in China in 1860-61; Military Secretary in Madras from 1861 to 1865; and Deputy Assistant-Quartermaster-General at Woolwich from 1868 to 1871. He was one of the Assistant Boundary Commissioners under the Reform

Act of 1867, and acted as private secretary to Mr. Cardwell when that statesman was Secretary for War, in 1871-73. From 1873 to 1878 he was Assistant Adjutant-General at Headquarters; in March 1879, he was nominated her Majesty's Commissioner for arranging the payment due to the Turkish Government under the Convention concluded in the previous year; and in May 1879 he was appointed High Commissioner and Commander-in-Chief of the island of Cyprus, on the transfer of Sir Garnet Wolseley to Natal; Inspector-General of Recruiting, 1886-87; Quartermaster-General of the Army in 1887; Director-General of Military Education from March 1888 to January 1893. Under his administration the state of the island of Cyprus has very greatly improved; and to him is due much of the credit for the successful "locust war" urged against that deadly insect-plague. From January to October 1893, he was Quartermaster-General to the Forces at Headquarters. In October 1893 he was appointed Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Gibraltar, a post he now holds. He was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath (military division) in 1877, and created a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and George in 1880, a G.C.M.G. in 1886. In 1892 he was promoted to the rank of General. He married, in 1864, Sophia, daughter of the Rev. A. L. Lambert, rector of Chilbolton, Hampshire, and widow of Mr. R. Stuart Palmer. Address: The Convent, Gibraltar.

BIDWELL, Shelford, F.R.S., eldest son of the late Shelford Clarke Bidwell, Esq., J.P., was born on March 6, 1848, at Thetford, Norfolk, and was educated privately, and at Caius College, Cambridge. He graduated B.A. (Mathematical Tripos) in 1870, LL.B. (Law Tripos) in 1871, and M.A. in 1873, and was called to the Bar (Lincoln's Inn) in 1874. He has devoted much time to experimental scientific work, especially in relation to electricity, magnetism, and optics. Accounts of his researches are contained in numerous papers published in the Philosophical Transactions and the Proceedings of the Royal Society, the Proceedings of the Physical Society, the Philosophical Magazine, Nature, and other scientific journals. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1886, was President of the Physical Society, 1897-98; and a Member of the Institution of Electrical Engineers, and other associations. He married in 1874 Annie Wilhelmina Evelyn, daughter of the Rev. E. Firmstone, M.A., Rector of Wyke, near Winchester, and has three children. Addresses: Riverstone Lodge, Southfields, S.W.; 1 Mitre Court Buildings, Temple.

BIERSTADT, Albert, was born at Düsseldorf, in Germany, Jan. 7, 1830. His parents emigrated to the United States when he was two years of age, and settled in New England. He went to Germany in 1853, studied painting at Düsseldorf, spent a winter in Rome, made the tour of Switzerland and the Apennines, and returned to the United States in 1857. In 1859 he accompanied General Lander on an expedition to the Rocky Mountains, where he spent several months in making sketches. He was made an Academician in 1860. In 1863 he produced his celebrated picture "View of the Rocky Mountains—Lander's Peak," which at once gave him a high reputation. Among his subsequent works, the most noticeable have been—"Sunlight and Shadow," "The Storm in the Rocky Mountains," "Domes of the Yosemite," "Laramie Peak," "Emigrants Crossing the Plains," "Mount Hood," "Mount Whitney," "Scene near Fort Laramie," "Geysers of the Yellowstone," "Great Trees of California," "Matterhorn," "Rocky Mountain Sheep," "Settlement of California," "Discovery of the Hudson," "Last of the Buffalo," and "Landing of Columbus." He travelled in Europe in 1867, 1878, and 1883, and in 1863 and 1873 visited the Pacific coast, while in 1889 he went to Alaska. In 1871 he was made a member of the Academy of Fine Arts of St. Petersburg. He has received medals in Belgium, Germany, Bavaria, and Austria, the Legion of Honour, the Russian Order of St. Stanislaus, and the Turkish Order of the Medjidie. His house and studio at Irvington, New York, were destroyed by fire in November 1882; but though his loss was considerable, his more valuable pictures were fortunately at his studio in New York City, and so escaped destruction.

BIGELOW, John, American statesman and author, was born at Malden-on-Hudson, New York, Nov. 25, 1817. He graduated at Union College in 1835, was admitted to the Bar in 1839, became joint proprietor with William C. Bryant, and Managing Editor of the New York Evening Post in 1849, was appointed Consul at Paris by President Lincoln in 1861, Chargé d'Affaires in December 1864, and Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Court of France in April 1865; he resigned, and returned to the United States in the beginning of 1867 to devote himself to literary pursuits. He was chairman of the commission organized at the request of Governor Tilden to investigate the management of the canals of the State of New York in 1874, in 1875 was elected Secretary of State of the State of New York, in 1876 was offered the position of Chamberlain of the City of New York, Vand in 1885 was appointed Assistant Treasurer of the United States at New York, in which he declined. During the years 1843-45 Mr. Bigelow was a frequent contributor to the Democratic Review. He was one of the five inspectors of the State Prison at Sing Sing, 1845-48, and was the author of all their annual reports to the Legislature. He visited the island of Jamaica in 1850, and upon his return published "Jamaica in 1850; or the Effect of Sixteen Years of Freedom on a Slave Colony." During his residence in Paris he published "Les Etats Unis en 1863." Also while in Paris he became possessed of the original manuscript of the autobiography of Benjamin Franklin, from which he published, in 1868, the first correct copy ever printed of that famous story. Among his other writings are "Some Recollections of Antoine Pierre Berryer," 1869; "France and Hereditary Monarchy," 1871; a "Life of Benjamin Franklin," in 8 vols., 1875 (of which the third edition was issued in 1892); "The Wit and Wisdom of the Haytiens," 1877; and "Molinos, the Quietist," 1882. He has been for many years an occasional contributor to Harper's, the Century, and Scribner's. He edited the "Writings and Speeches of Samuel J. Tilden," 2 vols. 1885; and "The Writings of Benjamin Franklin," in 10 vols., 1888. "Some Recollections of Laboulaye" were printed privately for him in 1889, and he contributed a "Life of William Cullen Bryant" to the "American Men of Letters" series in 1890. In 1895 he published "The Life of Samuel J. Tilden," and in 1896 "The Mystery of Sleep." Mr. Bigelow is one of the executors of the will of the late Samuel J. Tilden, and is President of the Board of Trustees of the "Tilden Trust." In 1886 the New York Chamber of Commerce, in response to an invitation of M. de Lesseps, requested Mr. Bigelow to accompany him to visit the works of the Panama Canal Company and report their situation and prospects. Mr. Bigelow's report was published by the Chamber of Commerce, to which body he was immediately after elected an honorary member. He was appointed by President Cleveland sole Commissioner of the United States to the International Exposition of Sciences and Industry at Brussels in 1888.

BIGGE, Sir Arthur John, K.C.B., C.M.G., Lieutenant-Colonel in the Royal Artillery, Private Secretary and Equerry to the Queen, was born on June 18, 1849, and is the fourth son of the Rev. J. F. Bigge, Vicar of Stamfordham, and Caroline Mary Ellison. He entered the Royal Artillery in 1869, and served in the Zulu War (1878-79), being mentioned in despatches and gaining the Zulu medal. In 1879 he was appointed Aide-de-Camp to General Sir Evelyn Wood, then in command of No. Four Column in the Zulu campaign. He became Captain in 1880, Major in 1885, and Lieutenant-Colonel in 1893. His Court appointments date from 1880, when he became Assistant-Keeper of the Privy Purse and Assistant Private Secretary to the Queen. In 1881 he was appointed Equerry-in-Ordinary, and in May 1895 Private Secretary to Her Majesty. He received the honour of knighthood in the latter year. He is married to Constance, daughter of the Rev. W. F. Neville, Vicar of Butleigh. Addresses: Winchester Tower, Windsor Castle; and St. James's Palace, S.W.

BIGHAM, Sir John C., K.B., Judge of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, was born in 1840, and is the son of John Bigham, merchant, of Liverpool. He was educated at the Royal Institution, Liverpool, and at Berlin and Paris. He went to the Bar in 1870, took silk in 1883, and was elected a Bencher of his Inn in 1886. At the Bar he had a considerable practice. In 1892 he contested the Exchange Division of Liverpool for the Unionists, and was returned to Parliament for that division in 1895, retaining his seat till October 1897, when he was raised to the Bench and knighted. While in Parliament he was a Member of the Committee on the Jameson Raid in 1897. In 1870 he married Georgina, daughter of John Rogers, of Liverpool. Addresses: 19 Palace Gate, Kensington, W.; and Goldsmith Building, Temple, E.C.

BILCESCO, Mademoiselle Sarmisa, Doctor at Law, a Roumanian by birth, is the first lady who obtained the degree of a Doctor at Law in France. She was born in 1867 at Bucharest, where her father is Governor of the National Bank. When only sixteen she graduated as Bachelor of Letters, and the year after as Bachelor of Sciences. Encouraged by these early successes, Mlle. Bilcesco felt tempted to continue her studies in Paris, where she arrived with her mother in 1884. She at once put herself under the direction of M. Georges Bourdon, Secrétaire of the Chamber des Députés, and rédauteur of the journal Le Temps, who prepared her for all examinations. After having been admitted as student at the Sorbonne, Mlle. Bilcesco studied three years for the degree of a licentiate, and two years longer for that of a doctor. She passed all her examinations with honours, and took the first place among the licentiates of her year. But her crowning triumph was her examination for the degree of a doctor, which took

Act of 1867, and acted as private secretary to Mr. Cardwell when that statesman was Secretary for War, in 1871-73. place on June 12, 1890. The thesis she selected was "The Status or Position of Mothers under French and Roman Laws," a paper of 504 pages, which she read before a large audience, the jury congratulating her on the choice of the subject, and the remarkable manner in which she had treated the same. Mlle. Bilcesco is not only a first-rate scholar, but likewise a talented musician. She returns to Bucharest, where she proposes to claim admission to the Roumanian Bar, not so much to set up as a lawyer, as to decide the question of a woman's right to practise the profession of the law.

BILLOT, Jean François, French general and senator, born at Chaumeil, Aug. 15, 1828, and admitted to the Ecole de St. Cyr, Dec. 1, 1847, was appointed to the Staff in 1849. By successive promotions he became Colonel in November 1870. The brilliant portion of his military career has been almost entirely African. He was recalled from Algiers to France on the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian War. He was promoted to field rank, and took command of the 18th Corps d'Armée. He was victorious at the engagements of Beaune-la-Rolande and Villersexel. At the conclusion of peace he was elected to the National Assembly by his own department of Corrèze, and sat among the Republicans of the Left. He opposed vigorously the attempts of a monarchic restoration in 1873, and in 1875 was elected a senator. He had the chief part in the passing of a bill for the reorganisation of the Staff of the French army, opening it to all ranks in February 1878. In 1879 he was appointed Chief of the 15th Corps d'Armée at Marseilles, and in 1882 became Minister of War in the Freycinet Cabinet, which post he continued to hold in the Duclerc Cabinet of August of the same year. His chief work was in the cause of the army of Africa, of the artillery of fortresses, and of the defence of the Invalides against suppression. He resigned Jan. 30, 1883, for refusing to deprive the Orleans princes of their military rank. In 1885 he became head of the 1st Corps at Lille, and then a Member of the Conseil Supérieur de la Guerre. In 1889 he strenuously opposed the bill on regional recruiting, and on the 8th of July was made a Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour, of which he had been a Chevalier since 1859. In 1897 he played an unenviable part in the Drayfus-Esterhazy-Zola trials, and he was the chief factor in endeavouring to place the army on an impossible pinnacle above suspicion. This attempt of a military caste to form itself into a dictatorship was regarded with dismay by all true friends of the French nation abroad.

However, he felt he had gone too far, and moderated the tone of his witness in the Courts. General Billot retired with his other colleagues of the Méline Cabinet in June 1898.

BINNIE, Sir Alexander R., M.Inst. C.&M.E., F.G.S., F.R.M.S., &c., Engineer to the London County Council, was born in London in 1839, and was educated at various private academies. He was a pupil and assistant to the celebrated J. F. Le Trobe Bateman, F.R.S., who was President of the Institution of Civil Engineers, and Engineer to the Glasgow and Manchester Waterworks. In early life Mr. Binnie was engaged on railway construction in England and Wales. He entered the Public Works Department of India by open competition in 1868, and during his six years' service in that country was engaged in the exploration which led to the discovery of coal in the Central Provinces, for which he received the commendation of the Government of India; he successfully designed and constructed the whole of the works for the supply of the City of Najpur with water, for which he again received the commendation of Government; he was also engaged on railway work, and for a short period acted an Assistant Secretary, Public Works Department, to the Chief Commission of the Central Provinces. For fifteen years he was Engineer to the Bradford Corporation, during which period he designed and successively constructed many large works at a cost of over one million sterling, and among them the highest reservoir embankment (125 feet) in the United Kingdom; he also laid out and designed for the Corporation a large extension of the waterworks in the Nidd Valley at an estimated cost of £1,250,000. Sir Alexander is the author of a paper on the Najpur waterworks, for which he received from the Institution of Civil Engineers a Telford medal and premium. He has been appointed on more than one occasion Lecturer on Waterworks at the School of Military Engineering at Chatham, and his lectures have been published by Government, besides which he is the author of many valuable professional reports, and an address as President to the Bradford Philosophical Society on "Heat in its Relation to Coal." Since his appointment as Chief Engineer to the London County Council, he has been engaged on the purification of the sewage discharged into the river, which has made such a marked improvement in the condition of the Thames; has constructed the new bridge over the Lee at Barking Road; has designed and completed the Blackwall Tunnel; prepared new designs for Highgate Archway and Vauxhall Bridge; besides laying out works for bringing a supply of water from Wales to supplement the present Thames and Lee sources. Since 1890 Sir Alexander Binnie has been Chief Engineer to the London County Council. He received the honour of knighthood in 1897. Address: 77 Ladbrooke Drive, W.

BINYON, Laurence, son of Rev. Frederick Binyon, was born at Lancaster, 1869, educated at St. Paul's School and at Trinity College, Oxford; Newdigate Prize, 1890; B.A., 1892. He was appointed Assistant in the British Museum Printed Books Department in 1893, and transferred to Department of Prints and Drawings in 1895. He published works are: in verse, "Primavera" (part author), 1890; "Lyric Poems," 1894; "Poems," 1895; "London Visions," 1895; "The Praise of Life," 1896; "Porphyryon," 1898: in prose, two portfolio monographs, "Dutch Etchers," 1895, "Crome and Cotman," 1897; "Descriptive Catalogue of Drawings of the British School in the British Museum" (in progress), vol. 1, 1898. Address: British Museum.

BIRDWOOD, Sir George Christopher Molesworth, M.D., C.S.I., K.C.I.E., LL.D., eldest son of the late General Christopher Birdwood, 3rd Bombay Native Infantry, and Commissary-General, Bombay, was born at Belgium, Bombay, Dec. 8, 1832. He was educated at Plymouth New Grammar School, and the University, Edinburgh, where he took the degree of M.D., and passed the usual examination of the College of Surgeons in 1854. He was appointed to the Medical Staff of the East India Company on their Bombay Establishment in the same year. His first charge was of the Southern Marhatta Horse, Kalludghee, in 1855. Later he was transferred to the 1st Battery 2nd Brigade of Artillery at Sholapore, where he was also at different times in charge of the 8th Madras Cavalry, 3rd Bombay Native Infantry, and the Civil Station. In 1856 he was sent to the Persian Gulf in medical charge of the Company's steamship Ajdaha, and on his return to Bombay in April 1857 he was appointed Acting Professor of Anatomy and Physiology in Grant Medical College, and from that date to his leaving India continued to be connected with the college almost without interruption in the chairs successively of Anatomy and Physiology, and Botany and Materia Medica. In the same year Dr. Birdwood was appointed Curator of the Government Central Museum at Bombay. Later he was appointed Registrar of the University; and he also held the offices of Honorary Secretary to the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, and Honorary Secretary to the Agri-Horticultural Society of Western India. With the assistance of the late eminent Hindu physician, Dr. Bhau Daje, he was mainly instrumental in establishing the Victoria and Albert Museum and the Victoria Gardens in Bombay. In 1864 he was appointed Sheriff of Bombay, and in 1868 Special Commissioner for the Government of Bombay at the International Exhibition held in Paris in that year. In 1869 he was forced finally to leave India, through permanently broken health. On the occasion of the proclamation of the Queen as Empress of India, Jan. 1, 1877, he was appointed to the Companionship of the Star of India; and the honour of knighthood was conferred on him in September 1881. In 1887 he had conferred on him the honorary degree of LL.D., Cambridge, and was decorated with the insignia of the Knight Companionship of the Order of the Indian Empire. He still maintains his official ties with India, having been appointed, about 1879, Special Assistant in the Revenue, Statistics, and Commerce Department of the India Office. He was a Royal Commissioner and Member of the Finance Committee of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition of 1886; and Chairman of the Committee of the British Indian Section of the Paris Exhibition of 1889; a Royal Commissioner for the Chicago Exhibition of 1893; and a Member of the London and Antwerp Consultative and Executive Committees for the British Section at the Antwerp Exhibition of 1894. He is the author of "Catalogue of the Economic Products of the Bombay Presidency (Vegetable)," 1st edit. 1862, 2nd edit. 1868; "The Genus Boswellia (Frankincense plants), with illustrations of three new species," in the Transactions of the Linnean Society, vol. xxvii.; the article "Incense," in the Encyclopædia Britannica; "The Perfumes of the Bible," in Cassell's "Bible Educator"; "Handbook to the British Indian Section, Paris Exhibition of 1878;" the article "On an Ancient Silver Patera," in the Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature, vol. xi. New Series, 1881; "Handbook on the Industrial Arts of India," 1880; "The Arts of India," 1881; "Ausstellung Indischer Kunst-Gegenstände, zu Berlin," 1881; "Indiens Konstslöjd en Kortfattad Skildring," Stockholm, 1882; "Indiens Kunst-industrie, Kjøbenhavn," 1882; "Report on the Miscellaneous Old Records of the India Office," 1879, reprinted 1890; and "The First Letter Book of the (English) East India Company," 1898. He has also contributed introductions to "The Miracle Play of Hassan and Husain," by Sir Lewis Pelly, 1879; to "Eastern Carpets," by Mr.

Vincent Robinson, 1882; to "The Dawn of the British Trade in the East," by Henry Stevens, 1886; to "Representative Men of India," by Sorabji Jehanghieh, 1889; the "Catalogue of the Indian Section of the Edinburgh Forestry Exhibition," 1884; and an Appendix on "The Aryan Fauna and Flora," to Professor Max Müller's "Biographies of Words," 1888; a "Report on Spanish Chestnuts," 1892; and a Monograph on "The Antiquity of the Oriental Manufacture of Sumptuary Carpets," to the monumental work on "Oriental Carpets," published by the Royal and Imperial Ministry of Commerce, Worship, and Education, 1892-94, the English edition of which, edited by Mr. Caspar Purden Clarke, C.I.E., was issued in Vienna. He was a constant contributor to the Indian press, and for some time editor of the Bombay Saturday Review. Letters by him on the opium trade, which had appeared in the Times, were republished in Mr. W. H. Brereton's "Truth about Opium," 1882. He is also the author of the article "Are we Despoiling India?—a Rejoinder, by 'John Indigo,'" in the National Review for September 1883; and of a review of Sir Henry Yule's "Hobson Jobson," in the Quarterly Review for 1887; and of the following articles in the Asiatic Quarterly Review: "The Christmas Tree," January 1886; "The Empire of the Hittites," January 1888; "The Mahratta Plough," October 1888; and "Leper in India," April 1890. He has been a contributor also to the Bombay Quarterly Review, the Journal of the East Indian Association, the Journal of the National Indian Association, the Journal of the Society of Arts, and the Journal of Indian Art. Sir George Birdwood married in 1856 Frances Anne, eldest daughter of the late Edward Tolcher, Esq., R.N., of Harewood, Plympton St. Mary's, Devon. Address: 7 Apsley Terrace, Acton, W.

BIRRELL, Augustine, Q.C., M.P., youngest son of the Rev. C. M. Birrell of Liverpool, and Harriet Jane Grey, daughter of the Rev. Henry Grey, D.D., of Edinburgh, was born Jan. 19, 1850, at Wavertree, near Liverpool. He was educated at Amersham Hall School, near Reading, and Trinity Hall, Cambridge, where he graduated with honours in Law and History in 1872. He was called to the Bar by the Inner Temple, November 1875, and practises in the Chancery Division; is the author of "Obiter Dicta," two series, 1884 and 1887; and "Life of Charlotte Brontë," 1887; "Res Judicatæ," 1892; "Men, Women, and Books," 1894; "Lectures on Trustees," 1896; and an edition of Boswell, 1897. He contested the Walton Division of Liverpool in 1885, and the Widnes Division of Lancashire in 1886, both unsuccessfully. He was returned to Parliament for West Fife in July 1889, on the retirement of the Hon. K. P. Bruce, and again in 1892 and 1895. He was appointed Quain Professor of Law at University College, London, in 1896, where in June 1898 he delivered the annual oration on Founder's Day, taking as his subject, "University Ideals." He married first, in 1878, Margaret, daughter of the late Archibald Mirrielees, formerly of St. Petersburg (she died in 1879); and second, in 1888, Eleanor, widow of the Hon. Lionel Tennyson, and daughter of Frederick and Lady Charlotte Locker Lampson. Addresses: 30 Lower Sloane Street, S.W., and 3 New Square, Lincoln's Inn, &c.

BISHOP, William Henry, American author, was born at Hartford, Connecticut, Jan. 7, 1847, and graduated at Yale College in 1867. He has been a frequent contributor to periodical literature, and in addition has published "Detmold," 1879; "The House of a Merchant Prince," 1882; "Choy Susan, and other Stories," 1884; "Old Mexico, and Her Lost Provinces," 1884; "Fish and Men in the Maine Islands," 1884; "The Golden Justice," 1887; "The Brown Stone Boy, and other Queer People," 1883; "The Yellow Snake," 1891; "A House-Hunter in Europe," 1893; "A Pound of Cure," and "Writing to Rosina," 1894; "The Garden of Eden, U.S.A.," 1895.

BISPHAM, David S., principal baritone at the Royal Opera, Covent Garden, and at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, was born in Philadelphia, U.S.A., Jan. 5, 1857, of families of old English Quaker stock, the name Bispham having been associated from time immemorial with the county of Lancashire, England, while his mother's family name, Scull, has been associated with the west of England since the time of William the Conqueror. Notwithstanding the influences of more than two hundred years of Quaker doctrine, which, in the United States, is even more strictly insisted upon than in the mother-country, the musical faculty which might have been quenched by lack of use in previous generations found unmistakable vent, and, at an early age, in David Bispham, who, though granted but a small measure of musical education in his youth, has through insistence upon one object, and the maintenance of the highest standard of vocal art and achievements, attained to a position on the operatic stage and the concert platform unsurpassed by any singer in the English-speaking world to-day. He made his début as the Duc de Longueville in "The Basoche," Royal English Opera, in 1891, and has sung the principal rôles in French, German, and Italian at the Royal Opera, Covent Garden. Address: 19 Kensington Gore, S.W.

BJÖRNSSEN, Bjørnstjerne, a Norwegian novelist and dramatic poet, was born Dec. 8, 1832, at Quickne, in Norway, where his father was pastor. He completed his education at the Universities of Christiania and Copenhagen, and first became known in consequence of some articles and stories which he contributed to newspapers, especially the Folketidning, an illustrated journal, in the columns of which appeared his "Aanum," "Ole Stormsen," and "En munter Mand." The years 1856 and 1857 he passed at Copenhagen, where he studied the works of Baggesen, of Oehlenschläger, and of the principal Danish writers. Afterwards he published in Fædrelandet (Fatherland) his novel of "Thrand," which was followed by "Arne," perhaps his most popular story, and the idyllic peasant romance, "Synnøve Solbakken." Ole Bull appointed him as manager of the Bergen Theatre, and in 1858 he put on the stage, "Halte Hulda," and "Mellena Slagene" (Between the Battles). As a Christiania editor and journalist Bjørnsen expressed strong republican opinions, which aroused considerable public excitement. He was finally condemned to a year's imprisonment for treason, but escaped to Germany, and afterwards to America, and did not return to Christiania until 1882, when he once more began the work of agitation against the Government and the union of the two Scandinavian kingdoms. He settled near Lillehammer, became leader of the "Peasants' Party," and acquired some influence in political quarters. He has produced some notable tragedies and other pieces for the stage. These are "Halte Hulda," "Mellena Slagene," "Kong Swerre," the trilogy of "Sigurd Slembe," some translations of French plays, and the tragedy of "Mary Stuart." His comedy, "En Hanske," was translated by Mr. Osman Edwards for the English stage in 1894. The following works of his have been translated into English: "Arne; a Sketch of Norwegian Country Life," translated from the Norwegian by A. Plesner and S. Rugeley Powers, 1866; "Ovind; a Story of Country Life in Norway," translated by S. and E. Hjerleid, 1869; "The Fisher Maiden," a Norwegian tale translated from the author's German edition, by M. E. Niles, 1869—also translated from the Norwegian, under the title of "The Fishing Girl," by A. Plesner and F. Richardson, 1870; "The Happy Boy: a Tale of Norwegian Peasant Life," translated by H. R. G., 1870; "The Newly Married Couple," translated by S. and E. Hjerleid, 1870; and "Love and Life in Norway," translated from the Norwegian by the Hon. A. Bethell and A. Plesner, 1870. In recent years, "In God's Way," and the "Heritage of the Kurts," both very powerful novels, have appeared in Mr. Edmund Gosse's International Series. As a lyric poet Bjørnsen takes high rank; he has even attempted the composition of epic verse. He has been a voluminous writer and dramatist, and in all his work has striven to become a vehicle of national feeling, seeking to give expression to the Norwegian spirit. He has a strong dislike for the modern cult of mere French imitation, and has done his best to discourage the practice. In this respect he is, without question, one of the most stimulating influences for the revival of Scandinavian literature.

BLACK, William, was born at Glasgow in 1841, and received his education at various private schools. His youthful ambition was to become an artist, and he studied for a short time in the Government School of Art in his native city, but eventually he drifted into journalism, becoming connected with the Glasgow Weekly Citizen while yet in his teens. In 1864 he came to London, and wrote for magazines. He was attached, in the following year, to the staff of the Morning Star, and was special correspondent for that paper during the Prusso-Austrian war of 1866, scenes from which appeared in his first novel, "Love or Marriage," published in 1867. This novel dealt too much with awkward social problems, and was not successful, but the author's next work of fiction was favourably received. It was entitled "In Silk Attire," 1869, and a considerable portion of it was devoted to descriptions of peasant life in the Black Forest. Then followed "Kilmeny" and "The Monarch of Mincing Lane," the former dealing mostly with Bohemian artistic life in London. But his first real hold of the novel-reading public was obtained by "A Daughter of Heth," 1871, which went through many editions. Next came "The Strange Adventures of a Phaeton," 1872, which literally described a driving excursion that the author made from London to Edinburgh, with a thread of fiction interwoven. It is said that a good many Americans, amongst others, have adopted this plan of exploring the English counties, and have taken the "Adventures" as a sort of guide-book. In 1873 was published "A Princess of Thule." It was followed by "The Maid of Killeena and other Stories," 1874; "Three Feathers," 1875, the scene of which was laid in Cornwall;

"Madcap Violet," 1876; "Green Pastures and Piccadilly," 1877; "Macleod of Dare," 1878; "White Wings; a Yachting Romance," 1880; "Sunrise: a Story of these Times," 1881; "The Beautiful Wretch," 1882; "Shandon Bells," 1883; "Yolande," 1883; "Judith Shakespeare," 1884; "White Heather," 1885; "Sabina Zembra," 1887; "The Strange Adventures of a House-Boat" (a sequel to the Phaeton Adventures), 1888; "In Far Lochaber," 1889; "The New Prince Fortunatus," and "Stand Fast, Craig-Royston!" 1890; "Donald Ross of Heimra," 1891; "Wolfenberg," 1892; and "The Handsome Humes," 1893; "Highland Cousins," 1894; "Briseis," 1896; &c. For four or five years Mr. Black was assistant editor of the Daily News, but he practically ceased his connection with journalism over fifteen years ago. Addresses: 15 Buckingham Street, W.C.; and Paston House, Brighton.

BLACKLEY, The Rev. Canon William Lewery, M.A., is the second son of the late Travers R. Blackley, Esq., of Ash-town Lodge, co. Dublin, and Bohogh, co. Roscommon. He was born at Dundalk, Ireland, Dec. 30, 1830, and received part of his early education on the Continent. Having entered Trinity College, Dublin, in his sixteenth year, he obtained his B.A. degree in 1850, and his M.A. in 1854, in which year he was ordained to the curacy of St. Peter's, Southwark; shortly after he became Curate of Frensham, where he remained thirteen years, and was then promoted by Bishop Sumner in 1867 to the rectory of North Waltham, Hants; whence, in 1883, he was preferred by Bishop Harold Browne to the vicarage of King's Somborne, in the same county, and to an Honorary Canonry in the Cathedral of Winchester. In 1889 he was appointed by the Dean and Chapter of Westminster to the vicarage of St. James the Less, Westminster, which he now holds. In 1857 he published his metrical translation from the Swedish of Bishop Tegner's famous poem, "The Frithjof Saga." This was followed by the publication of his "Practical German Dictionary," which in its original and abridged forms has passed through many editions. In 1867 he published his "Critical English New Testament"; and his volume on "Word Gossip" followed in 1869. He also, besides frequent contributions to all the leading reviews, wrote, for the National Society, the Teacher's Manual, "How to teach Domestic Economy," 1879; and "The Social Economy Reading Book," 1881; and his book on "Thrift and Independence, a Word to Working Men," was published by the S.P.C.K. in 1888. In November 1878 he published an article in the Nineteenth Century under the title of "National Insurance, a cheap, practical, and popular way of preventing Pauperism," which immediately attracted public attention. A sermon preached by Canon Blackley in Westminster Abbey in September 1879, on "Our National Improvidence," also attracted much notice. The National Provident League was formed in 1880, for the purpose of educating public opinion on the subject of National Insurance against pauperism. Canon Blackley's proposals have reached far beyond this country, with the result that movements more or less upon his lines have been started in France, Switzerland, Italy, and New Zealand; while a complete system of National Insurance has been established throughout the whole German Empire, securing sick pay, accident pay, and old age pensions to all workers. Address: 75 St. George's Square, S.W.

BLACKMORE, Richard Doddridge, novelist, son of the Rev. John Blackmore, was born at Longworth, Berkshire, in 1825. His maternal grandmother was a granddaughter of Dr. Doddridge. He was educated at Tiverton School and Exeter College, Oxford, where he obtained a scholarship and graduated B.A. in 1847, taking a second-class in Classics. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1852, and afterwards practised as a conveyancer. He is the author of "Poems by Melanter," "Epullia," "The Bugle of the Black Sea," "Fringilla," and the following novels: "Clara Vaughan," 1864; "Cradock Nowell: a Tale of the New Forest," 1866; "Lorna Doone: a Romance of Exmoor," 1869; "The Maid of Sker," 1872; "Alice Lorraine: a Tale of the South Downs," 1875; "Cripples the Carrier: a Woodland Tale," 1876; "Erëma; or, My Father's Sin," 1877; "Mary Anerley," 1880; "Christowell: a Dartmoor Tale," 1882; "Remarkable History of Sir Thomas Upmore," 1884; "Springhaven," 1887; "Kit and Kitty," 1889; "Perlycross," 1894; "Tales from the Telling-house," 1896; and "Dariel," 1897. Mr. Blackmore has also published "The Fate of Franklin," a poem, 1860; "The Farm and Fruit of Old," a translation of the first and second Georgics of Virgil, 1862; and a translation of "The Georgics of Virgil," 1871. Mr. Blackmore is a large fruit-grower at Teddington, and has at times contributed interesting letters to the Times on the subject of fruit-growing.

BLACKWOOD, William, publisher and editor of Blackwood's Magazine, was born on July 13, 1836, at Lucknow, and is the eldest son of Major William Blackwood, of the 59th Native Infantry, and Emma, eldest daughter of Brigadier-Gen-ral George Moore, also in the East India Company's service. Major Blackwood was of the second generation of publishers of that name, and his father, William, was the founder of the famous house. Mr. William Blackwood was educated at Edinburgh Academy and at the University of Edinburgh, and completed his studies at the Sorbonne (Paris) and at Heidelberg. He entered the publishing business under Major Blackwood and his uncle, Mr. John Blackwood, in 1857. He has devoted much space as a publisher and editor to accounts of travel as well as to fiction. In his capacity of country gentleman he was at one time Lieutenant of the Midlothian Yeomanry Cavalry, and is a member of the Royal Company of Archers. He has received the Jubilee Medal presented by the Queen to those who have attended her personally at least on three occasions. Addresses: 45 George Street, Edinburgh; 37 Paternoster Row, E.C.; and Gogar Mount, Midlothian.

BLAIKIE, Professor William Garden, D.D., LL.D., F.R.S.E., son of an eminent lawyer, who afterwards was Lord Provost of Aberdeen, was born at Aberdeen in 1820, and educated at the Grammar School and University of his native town. As soon as he was qualified he received an appointment to the parish of Drumblade, but on the Disruption in 1843 he and his congregation joined the Free Church of Scotland. After a short ministry in the country he was invited to go to Edinburgh, and there, in company with other young men of zeal, founded the Pilrig Free Church. In 1864 the University of Edinburgh conferred on him the degree of D.D., and a few years later he received the degree of LL.D. from the University of Aberdeen. In 1868 he was appointed Professor of Apologetics and Pastoral Theology in New College, Edinburgh. In 1888, as "Cunningham Lecturer," he delivered a course of lectures on "The Preachers of Scotland," afterwards published. Dr. Blaikie was one of the chief promoters of "The Alliance of Reformed Churches holding the Presbyterian system," commonly called "The Pan-Presbyterian," and was one of the chief secretaries at each of the four meetings in Edinburgh, Philadelphia, Belfast, and London. He was President of the meeting at Toronto in 1892. In the same year he was chosen Moderator of the General Assembly of the Free Church. He has edited various periodicals, including the North British Review, Sunday Magazine, Catholic Presbyterian, &c. He has also written "Better Days for Working People," "Personal Life of David Livingstone," "The Work of the Ministry," "Personal Ministry and Pastoral Methods of our Lord," three volumes of the "Expositor's Bible," "Heroes of Israel," "Life of Dr. Chalmers" ("Famous Scots" series), "Memoir of Principal David Brown of Aberdeen," &c. He has contributed to many magazines and journals, including, besides those which he edited, the Quiver, the Expositor, Harper, Macmillan, Good Words, Sunday at Home, Blackwood, &c. Of the "Present Day Tracts," issued by the Religious Tract Society, a considerable number have been written by him. Addresses: 9 Palmerston Road, Grange, Edinburgh; and 2 Tantallon Terrace, North Berwick.

BLAIR, Lieut.-General James, C.B., U.C., entered the army on June 30, 1844; lieutenant, March 19, 1848; captain, Oct. 23, 1857; major, June 10, 1864; lieutenant-colonel, June 10, 1870; colonel, June 10, 1875; major-general, July 2, 1885; lieutenant-general, Jan. 9, 1889. Lieut.-General J. Blair served throughout the Indian Mutiny campaign of 1857-59, and was present at the siege of Neemuch, siege and assault of Kotah, and pursuit of Tantia Topee (medal with clasp, and Victoria Cross). He received the U.C. "for having on two occasions distinguished himself by his gallant and daring conduct. First, on the night of Aug. 12, 1857, at Neemuch, in volunteering to apprehend seven or eight armed mutineers, who had shut themselves up for defence in a house, the door of which he burst open. He then rushed in among them, and forced them to escape through the roof; in this encounter he was severely wounded. In spite of his wounds, he pursued the fugitives, but was unable to come up with them in consequence of the darkness of the night. Second, on Oct. 23, 1857, at Jeerun, in fighting his way most gallantly through a body of rebels, who had literally surrounded him. After breaking his sword on one of their heads, and receiving a severe sword cut on his right arm, he rejoined his troop. In this wounded condition, and with no other weapon than the hilt of his broken sword, he put himself at the head of his men, charged the rebels most effectually, and dispersed them."

BLAKE, Sir Henry Arthur, G.C.M.G., F.R.G.S., Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Colony of Hong-Kong, born at Corbally, Limerick, Jan. 18, 1840, is the eldest son of Peter Blake, Esq., County Inspector of Irish Constabulary, second son of Peter Blake, of Corbally Castle, co. Galway (see title "WALLSCOURT," Burke's Peerage), and Jane, daughter of John Lane, Esq., of Lanespark, co. Tipperary (Captain 17th Light Dragoons). He was educated at Dr. St. John's academy, Kilsenny, and Santry College; entered the Royal Irish

He was elected a District Surveyor of Metropolitan Buildings, 1876, and Superintending Architect, 1887. He has published a "Guide to Tintern Abbey," 1879; a "History of Sutton in Holderness," 1896; and has read papers "On Health, Comfort, and Cleanliness in the House," before the Society of Arts; on "Oak and Chestnut in Old Timber Roofs," before the Institute of Architects; on "Party-walls, &c.," before the Architectural Association; on "Shoring," "The Growth and Seasoning of Timber," and on "English and Continental Doors," before the Carpenters' Company; on "The Influence of the Public Authority on Street Architecture," before the Congress at Edinburgh in 1889; on "Artizans' Dwellings," and on "Fire and Panic." Address: Sutton in Holderness.

BLIND, Karl, was born at Mannheim, Sept. 4, 1826, and studied jurisprudence and ancient Germanic literature at Heidelberg and Bonn. Active among students, working men, gymnastic associations, and the army, as a leader of Democratic circles, he was in 1846 and 1847 tried and imprisoned in Baden and Bavaria on charges of high-treason, but acquitted. In 1848, at Karlsruhe, he took a leading part in the preparations for a national rising. Arrested while endeavouring to expand the movement into one for a German Commonwealth, he was freed by the successes of the Revolution. During the Provisional Parliament at Frankfurt he insisted, at mass-meetings, on the abolition of the Princely Diet, and the election of a provisional revolutionary executive. Wounded in a street-riot, he was proscribed after participating in the Republican rising led by Hecker. From Alsace he agitated for a new levy. Falsely accused of being implicated in the Paris Insurrection of June, he was imprisoned at Strassburg, and transported in chains to Switzerland; the Mayor of St. Louis generously preventing his surrender to the Baden authorities, which had been planned by the French police. During the first Schleswig-Holstein war, he, with Gustav von Struve, led, in September 1848, the second Republican Revolution in the Black Forest. At the storming of Staufeu he fought on the barricade, and was among the last who left the town. Being made a prisoner through the treachery of some militiamen, he was court-martialled, his life being saved by the secret sympathy of two of the privates who were members of the Court. Sentenced, after a State trial, lasting ten days, to eight years' imprisonment in the spring of 1849, he was being secretly transported to the fortress of Mainz, when he was liberated by the people and soldiers breaking open the prison at Bruchsal. Heading the same day a hastily formed number of free corps, he endeavoured, with Struve, to take Rastatt, and then entered the capital of Baden. He was a firm opponent of Brentano, the chief of the new Government, whom he accused of being in occult connection with the ejected dynasty—a fact afterwards proved, when Brentano was declared a "traitor" by the Constituent Assembly. With Dr. Frederick Schütz he was sent on a diplomatic mission to Paris, accredited to Louis Napoleon, the then President of the Republic. There, in violation of the law of nations, he was arrested as being implicated in Ledru Rollin's rising for the protection of the Roman Republic, and threatened with being surrendered to the Prussian courts-martial if he continued to uphold his diplomatic quality. He refused to yield, and after several months of imprisonment, was banished from France. After this he lived in Belgium with his wife, who has made many sacrifices for the popular cause, and also undergone imprisonment. New prosecutions induced him to come with his family to England, whence he carried on a Democratic and National German Propaganda. After an amnesty in 1862, the House of Deputies at Stuttgart gave him a banquet. He was the speaker of the London Germans at Garibaldi's entry. He promoted the Schleswig-Holstein movement in connection with leaders of the Schleswig Diet, whose confidential communications he transmitted to the English Foreign Office; and he was at the head of the London Committee during the war of 1863-64. At Berlin, his stepson met with a tragic death in the attempt on the life of Prince Bismarck on May 7, 1866. For many years Karl Blind operated with Mazzini, Garibaldi, and other European leaders, and supported the cause of Hungary, Poland, the American Union, and the American Republic; for which thanks were expressed to him by President Lincoln and President Juarez. During the war of 1870-71 he supported his country's cause. In England he has been a member of Executive Committees on Transvaal, Egyptian, and other affairs. Many political writings, and essays on history, mythology, and Germanic literature, published in Germany, England, America, Italy, and Spain, have proceeded from his pen; chiefly political biographies—Ledru Rollin, Francis Deak, and Freiligrath. He has exerted himself to bring about the national testimonial for the philosopher Feuerbach, and the monuments for the great minne-singers Hans Sachs and Walther von der Vogelweide. His step-daughter, Mathilde Blind, who died in 1896, was well known as a poetess and champion of woman's rights. Address: S. Hampstead, N.W.

BLISS, Cornelius N., was born at Fall River, Massachusetts, Jan. 26, 1833, and received an academic education at Fall River and at New Orleans, Louisiana. He entered mercantile pursuits in the latter city, but soon removed to Boston, Massachusetts, continuing his connection with commercial affairs in that city and in New York. He was a member of the Pan-American Conference, and President of the Protective Tariff League, but declined to be a candidate for the Governorship of

New York in 1885, and refused again a similar offer made in 1891. He was appointed Secretary of the Interior in President M'Kinley's Cabinet, March 5, 1897.

BLOFELD, Thomas Calthorpe, was born in 1836, and was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was appointed Recorder of Ipswich in 1877, and he also occupies the position of Chancellor of the Diocese of Norwich.

BLOMFIELD, Sir Arthur William, M.A., A.R.A., F.S.A., F.R.I.B.A., was born at Fulham Palace on March 6, 1829. He is the fourth son of the late Right Rev. Charles James Blomfield, D.D., Bishop of London (1828-57), and of Dorothy, daughter of Charles Cox, Esq. He was educated at Rugby and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained his M.A. degree in 1854, afterwards studying architecture under the late P. C. Hardwick, Architect to the Bank of England, whom he eventually succeeded in that post. He was elected an Hon. Member of the Royal Academy of Arts at Copenhagen, and received the Order of the Danebrog (3rd Class) from the King of Denmark in 1887, on the occasion of the consecration of the English Church of St. Alban, built by him at Copenhagen. In 1888 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, and received the honour of knighthood in 1889. In 1891 he received the gold medal of the Royal Institute of British Architects presented annually by the Queen, on the recommendation of the Institute, to some one who has rendered distinguished service to architecture by his work or writings. Addresses: 28 Montagu Square, and 6 Montagu Place, W.; Springfield, Broadway, Worcestershire.

BLOOD, Brigadier-General Sir Bindon, K.C.B., R.E., eldest son of William B. Blood, Esq., J.P., of Granagher, county Clare, was born in November 1842, and entered the army as a Lieutenant of Royal Engineers in December 1860, reaching the rank of Captain in 1873, Major in July 1881, and Lieut.-Colonel in July 1888. He was engaged in the expedition of 1878 against the Jowakis, an Afriidi tribe, who were constantly raiding the North-West frontier of India, and was awarded medal with clasp. In 1879 Sir Bindon Blood went to South Africa, and took part in the Zulu campaign, for which he received a brevet majority. He also saw considerable service during the Afghan war. In 1882 he took part in the Egyptian expedition, being present at the battle of Tel-el-Kebir. He was mentioned in despatches, and received a brevet of Lieut.-Colonel and the Osmanieh of the 4th Class. In the expedition into Chitral of 1895 he acted as Chief Staff Officer, and had command of the Malakand Field Force, being present at nearly all the operations, including the storming of the Malakand and Amandara Passes, the passage of the Swat River, and the relief of Chakdarri. He was mentioned in despatches, and specially promoted to K.C.B. In January of 1896 he was appointed a Brigadier-General in the Bengal Command, and was Chief Staff Officer of the Chitral Relief Force in 1896. Sir Bindon Blood married in 1883 Charlotte, daughter of Sir Auckland Colville, K.C.S.I. Address: Granagher, Ennis, county Clare.

BLOUËT, Paul, "Max O'Rell," was born in Brittany (France) on March 2, 1848, educated in Paris, and took his degrees of B.A. and B.Sc. in 1864 and 1865. He received his commission in the French army in 1869; fought in the Franco-Prussian war; was made a prisoner at Sedan on Sept. 3, 1870; fought against the Commune; was severely wounded, and pensioned. He came to England as newspaper correspondent in 1873; was appointed Head French Master of St. Paul's School in 1876, and resigned his Mastership in 1884. In 1883 he published "John Bull and his Island," which took Paris and London by storm, and was soon translated into English, and also into most European languages and several Asiatic tongues. In 1884 he published "John Bull's Daughter"; in 1885, "The Dear Neighbours"; in 1886, "Drat the Boys!"; in 1887, "Friend MacDonald"; in 1889, "Jonathan and his Continent"; "Jacques Bonhomme," 1890; in 1891, "A Frenchman in America"; and "John Bull and Co."—a sketch of our Colonies, 1894. He has also written several educational works, amongst which is "French Oratory" (Oxford, 1883). All the works of "Max O'Rell" have been translated into English by his wife. Several orders, French and others, have been conferred on him. During the years 1887, 1888, 1889, and 1890 he gave lectures in the United Kingdom and in America. In 1891 he started on a two years' tour round the world, during which he gave 446 lectures in the United States, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa. Since then he has been occupied in lecturing throughout the English provinces. One of his favourite lectures is "The Gospel of Cheerfulness," as exemplified by the habits and disposition of the French people, in which he contends that the real Frenchman is not known to the English. The Englishman gets his ideas of the French from what passes on the boulevards and from literature; because the French do not understand hospitality, and only admit their intimate friends to their homes; whereas French literature deals with exceptions, and not the real representative Frenchman, the small landowner deeply attached to his country and his cottage. . Address : 8 Acacia Road, N.W.

BLOWITZ, Henri Georges Stephane Adolphe Oppen de, Times correspondent in Paris, was born of Jewish stock at the château of Blowitz, Pilsen, Bohemia, on Dec. 28, 1825. By a decree of May 6, 1860, he was permitted to assume the present form of his name, which in France and Germany implies noble rank. He was engaged for some time in the invention of a machine for wool-carding by steam. On Oct. 5, 1870, he was naturalised as a Frenchman, having for many years been employed as a teacher of German at various French lycées, especially that of Tours (1850), and as a literary and political journalist. In the latter capacity he wrote for the Gazette du Midi, and sent a weekly letter to the Lyons journal, La Décentralisation. He revealed the history of Ismail Pasha's special train which caused De Lesseps' defeat in the elections of 1869. After the war of 1870 he gave M. Thiers his warmest support, and was of the greatest assistance to General Espivent de la Villeboisnet in his efforts to suppress the Commune at Versailles by being in communication with Thiers at Versailles by a private wire from a house belonging to his wife, when other communications had been cut by the Communards. At the General's request he was decorated with the Legion of Honour in June 1871. In July of the same year he became temporary correspondent to the Times, and three years later was appointed their chief Paris representative. He inaugurated constant telegraphic communication, and obtained the concession of a special wire from 9 P.M. till 3 A.M. for his paper. In 1875 he revealed the plans of the German military party for a second invasion of France, and sent the whole of the Berlin Treaty to the Times before it was signed. His communications to the Times have often been of European importance. He was one of the originators of what is now known as the "interview," and Thiers, Gambetta, Prince Bismarck, the Marquis Tseng, Jules Ferry, Leo XIII., Prince Lobanoff, and the late Sultan at various times made use of him in his capacity of interviewer in order informally to gauge public opinion, or to influence it in their own favour. M. de Blowitz was promoted to be an Officer of the Legion of Honour on July 30, 1878. Besides of late years writing almost daily for the Times, he has published "Feuilles Volantes," 1858; a comedy entitled "Midi à Quatorze Heures," "Le Mariage Royal d'Espagne," 1878, and several other political pamphlets. He married in 1865 Anne Amélie Arrand d'Aquel. Paris address : Boulevard des Capucines 35.

BLUMENTHAL, Field-Marshal Leonard Count von, Chief of the General Staff of the Prussian Army, was born on July 30, 1810, at Schweltdt, on the Oder. He was, like the majority of the leaders of the Prussian army, a soldier from childhood. Educated from 1820 to 1827 in the military academies of Culm and Berlin, he was entered on July 27, 1827, as Second Lieutenant in the Guard Landwehr Regiment (the present Fusilier Guards), attended from 1830 to 1833 the general military school in Berlin, was from 1837 to 1845 Adjutant to the Coblenz Landwehr battalion, and became for the first time in 1846 Premier Lieutenant in the topographical division of the General Staff. In order that he might be thoroughly acquainted with technical military science, Blumenthal had been ordered for service during the following years to the Artillery Guards and the division of the Pioneer Guards. He had already, in March 1848, taken part, as Lieutenant in the Fusilier battalions of the 31st Infantry Regiment, in the street-fights in Berlin. Some months later Blumenthal was transferred as Captain (Jan. 1, 1849) to the General Staff, to which he has, with slight interruptions, belonged for about twenty-five years. In 1849 he took, as a member of the staff of General von Bonin, part in the Schleswig-Holstein campaign, and fought in the skirmishes at Auenbüll and Beuschan, in the battle of Colding, and in the affairs at Alminde, Gudsøe, and Tauloo-Church, and took, in the siege and battle of Fredericia, so active and conspicuous a part, that he was, on May 14, 1849, promoted as Chief of the General Staff of the Schleswig-Holstein Army. His capabilities were regarded as being so brilliant, that in the following year (1850) he was named as General Staff officer of the Mobile Division under General von Tietzen in the electorate of Hesse. He was next sent, intrusted with special military propositions, to England, and was rewarded with the Order of the Red Eagle (4th Class, with swords). On June 18, 1853, advanced to the rank of Major in the Grand General Staff, Blumenthal was, as military companion and as General Staff officer of the 8th Division, appointed to take part in the spring exercises of that year in Thuringia and at Berlin. His linguistic and departmental knowledge led to his being entrusted with further commissions to England. In 1859 he was named the personal Adjutant of Prince Frederic Charles. On July 2, 1860, he became Colonel and Commander of the 31st, later of the 71st, Infantry Regiment. In 1861 he accompanied General von Bonin to the British Court, and became then the conductor of the foreign officers at the autumn manœuvres on the Rhine, and military companion of the Crown Prince of Saxony at the coronation in Königsberg. Colonel von Blumenthal had been for some time Chief of the Staff of the Third Army Corps, when, on Dec. 15, 1863, he was nominated the Chief of the General Staff of the combined Mobile Army Corps against Denmark, and then had the first opportunity of exhibiting his splendid abilities. The part which he took in that war, especially at Missunde, in the storming of the trenches at Düppel, and the passage on to the island of Alsen, was so extremely important, that on June 25, 1864, he was promoted to be Major-General, and received the Order pour le Mérite. After the peace, General von Blumenthal commanded first the 7th and next the 30th Infantry Brigade. In the Austrian war of 1866 he was Chief of the General Staff of the Second Army of the Crown Prince, and for his distinguished services received the Oak-leaf of the Order pour le Mérite (one of the rarest distinctions in the army) and the Star of Knight Commander of the Order of the House of Hohenzollern. On Oct. 30, 1866, he was designated Commander of the 14th Division in Düsseldorf, and accompanied the Crown Prince in the autumn of 1866 to St. Petersburg. When, on the outbreak of the war with France, the Crown Prince was entrusted with the supreme command of the Third Army, General von Blumenthal was requested to accept the important post of Chief of the General Staff; and his Imperial Highness, when presented by the Emperor of Germany with the Iron Cross, declared that the same distinction was equally due to General von Blumenthal. In 1871 he was sent to England to represent the German Empire at the autumn manœuvres at Chobham. Von Blumenthal was made Field-Marshal in 1888, and Count in 1893, and is recognised as one of the most distinguished strategists of modern Germany.

BLUNT, The Right Reverend Richard Frederick Lefevre, Bishop of Hull, Suffragan to the Archbishop of York, is the third son of Samuel Jasper Blunt, Esq., late senior clerk of the Colonial Office, and Elizabeth Mary Lee, daughter of R. E. N. Lee, Esq., of Chelsea, was born Nov. 16, 1833, and was educated at Merchant Taylors' School. After he had studied law in the Temple and Lincoln's Inn Fields he entered the Theological Department of King's College, London, and became Theological Associate (1st Class) in 1857, when he was ordained to the curacy of St. Paul's, Cheltenham, under the Rev. C. H. Bromby (now Bishop Bromby). In 1860 he became senior curate to his cousin, Rev. Gerald Blunt, at St. Luke's, Chelsea, and in the next year married Emily Jane, eldest daughter of John Simpson, Esq., of the Cedars, Upper Tooting. In 1864 he was appointed by Lord Hotham to the vicarage of Scarborough, and received from Archbishop Longley, at the request of Bishop Tait and the Principal and Professors of King's College, the degree of M.A., and five years afterwards he was elected Fellow of King's College. In 1870 he was appointed Rural Dean, and in the following year was collated to the Prebendal Stall of Grindall in York Minster, and in 1873 he was preferred to the Archdeaconry of the East Riding. During the winter of 1880 he acted as chaplain at Christ Church, Cannes, and in 1881 was made Hon. Chaplain to the Queen. In 1882 he received the degree of D.D. from Archbishop Tait, and in the following year he was collated by Archbishop Thomson to the Residuary Stall in York Minster, and resigned his Prebendal Stall. In 1885 he became in due course Chaplain-in-ordinary to the Queen, and in 1886 he was appointed Select Preacher at Cambridge. On Bishop Magee succeeding to the Archbishopric of York, Archdeacon Blunt was nominated by the Crown as Bishop Suffragan of Hull, to which See he was consecrated on May 1, 1891. In the following year he resigned his Archdeaconry, and was collated to the Prebendal Stall of Bole in York Minster. He has been a Member of the Convocation of York since 1873, and one of the Assessors since 1888. Besides many charges, sermons, and papers, he has published "The Divine Patriot, and other Sermons," "Doctrina Pastoralis," Lectures in the Divinity School, Cambridge, "Notes for Confirmation Lectures," "Private Prayers and Daily Intercessions," "Meditations on the Holy Communion Service," the last four being published by the S.P.C.K. Addresses: The Vicarage, Scarborough; and The Residence, York.

BLUNT, Wilfrid Scawen, the son of F. S. Blunt of Crabbet Park, was born at Petworth House on Aug. 17, 1840, and succeeded to the Crabbet estates on the death of his elder brother in 1872. He was educated at Stonyhurst and Oscott, and was in the Diplomatic Service from 1858 to 1870. During the years 1877 to 1881 he travelled a good deal in the East, visiting Arabia, Syria, Persia, and Mesopotamia; and after taking part in the Egyptian National Movement of 1881 to 1882, he visited India. He contested Camberwell in the Home Rule interest in 1885, and again in the following year stood for Kidderminster in the same interest. As the result of calling a meeting in a proclaimed district of Ireland in 1887, Mr. Blunt was committed to prison for two months, this time being spent in Galway and Kilmainham Gaols. He is well known as an authority on Arab horse-breeding. He is the author of the well-known "Love Sonnets of Proteus," 1880; "The Future of Islam," 1882; "The Wind and the Whirlwind," 1883; "Ideas about India," 1885; "In Vinculis," 1889; "A New Pilgrimage," 1889; "Esther," 1892; "Stealing of the Mare," 1892; "Griselda," 1893. He was married, in 1869, to Lady Anne Noel, daughter of the 1st Earl of Lovelace, and has a daughter. Addresses: Crabbet Park, Three Bridges, Sussex; and 104F Mount Street, Grosvenor Square, W.

BLYDEN, Edward Wilmot, American negro author, was born at St. Thomas, West Indies, Aug. 3, 1832. His parents were of pure negro blood, and he developed early a taste for languages. He returned to Africa and edited the Liberia Herald at the age of nineteen. He has filled the positions of Presbyterian pastor, Principal of Alexander High School, and President of Liberia College. He was Commissioner for Liberia to the General Assembly of the American Presbyterian Church in 1861 and 1880. He has since been Secretary of State for the Interior, and in 1892 was appointed to his present post of Minister of Liberia at the Court of St. James's. His chief works are: "From West Africa to Palestine," 1873; "Liberia, its Status and its Field," "Christianity and the Negro Race," and "Africa and the Africans."

BLYTH, Sir James, Bart., son of James Blyth of Chelmsford, Essex, and Caroline, daughter of Henry Gilbey of Bishop Stortford, Herts, was born at Chelmsford in 1841. He is a distinguished agriculturist, and has been honoured by the King of the Belgians with the Imperial Order of Leopold in recognition of his services to Agriculture and the Fine Arts. He has also the Order of the Mejidieh for his services to Egyptian Agriculture. For many years he has taken a keen interest in dairying, and erected in 1892, as an object-lesson, an electric model dairy in his grounds at Blythwood. He is owner of the well-known Blythwood herd of Jersey cattle, stud of Shire horses, and flock of Southdown sheep; and his Blythwood Challenge Bowls, designed to promote the best types of dairy cattle, are attractive features at the Agricultural Shows. Sir James's letters on "The Future of British Agriculture," contributed to the Times during his Presidency of the British Dairy Farmers' Association, which were copied and criticised by the Press of the United Kingdom, and reprinted in pamphlet form, aroused widespread interest among farmers, on whom they impress the necessity of producing, to a much greater extent, perishable articles of food, for at present we pay to foreign countries some fifty million pounds sterling annually, but Sir James Blyth contends that they can for the most part be grown in equal or greater perfection in Great Britain and Ireland. Sir James is also a Governor or Vice-President of many Agricultural and other Societies, Member of Council of the British Empire League, a Visitor of the Royal Institution, and a Director of W. and A. Gilbey, Limited. He married in 1865 Eliza (who died 1894), daughter of William Mooney of Clontarf, co. Dublin. Heir: Herbert William. He was created a Baronet in 1895. Addresses: 33 Portland Place, London, W.; and Blythwood, Stansted, Essex.

BODDA-PYNE, née Louisa Pyne, a popular English singer, daughter of a well-known singer, Mr. G. Pyne, was born in 1832, and was at a very early age the pupil of Sir George Smart, and made her first appearance about 1842. She sang in Paris with great success in 1847, appeared in opera in 1849, performed at the Royal Italian Opera in 1851, and visited the United States, where she was enthusiastically received, in 1854. After an absence of three years she returned to her native land, and was, in conjunction with Mr. Harrison, joint-lessee for a short season of the Lyceum and Drury Lane, and from 1858 till 1862 of Covent Garden Theatre. The enterprise having failed, she transferred her services to her Majesty's Theatre, and has frequently performed at her Majesty's Concerts at Windsor Castle and Buckingham Palace. She is married to Mr. Frank Bodda.

BODINGTON, Nathan, M.A. Litt.D., was born at Aston, near Birmingham, on May 29, 1848, and was educated at King Edward's School, Birmingham, and at Wadham College, Oxford. At the University he gained first-class honours in the Final School of Lit. Hum. in 1872, and was three years later elected a Fellow of Lincoln College. During the years 1873 and 1874 he was an Assistant Master at Manchester Grammar School, and at Westminster School, and from 1875 to 1881 he held a classical tutorship at Lincoln College, and was also a lecturer at both Lincoln and Oriel Colleges. Mr. Bodington was appointed Professor of Classics in the Mason College at Birmingham in 1881, but in the following year he went to Leeds, as Principal of, and Professor of Greek in, the Yorkshire College. He is at present, moreover, Vice-Chancellor of the Victoria University. Addresses: Shire Oak Road, Leeds.

BODKIN, Archibald Henry, was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1885, and is engaged on the South-Eastern Circuit, and at the Middlesex and Kent Sessions. Address: 5 Paper Buildings, Temple, E.C.

BODLEY, John Edward Courtenay, son of Edward Fisher Bodley, J.P., of Shelton, Staffordshire, and Dane Bank House, Cheshire, by Mary Ridgway, who was the last survivor of the elder branch of the family which claimed to be the heirs-general of the Ridgways, Earls of Londonderry (extinct). Born at Shelton, June 6, 1853, educated privately and at Balliol College, Oxford (B.A. 1877; M.A. 1879); called to the Bar, 1874, while an undergraduate, on his twenty-first birthday, and was thus the youngest barrister ever called to the English Bar, as some years before he went to the University, being prevented by ill-health from preparing for Oxford, he had entered at the Inner Temple at an unusually early age. After taking his degree he joined the Oxford Circuit, and published in Blackwood's Magazine, in 1882, a sketch of circuit-life entitled "The Soucheater Sessions." He became private secretary to the President of the Local Government Board (Right Hon. Sir C. W. Dilke) in 1882. In 1884 he was appointed Secretary to the Royal Commission on the Housing of the Working Classes, and was the author of the Report (1885) which was signed by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, Cardinal Manning, the Marquis of Salisbury and the majority of the Commissioners. Between 1885 and 1889 Mr. Bodley travelled extensively, visiting many of the continental capitals, to study European politics, and spending two years in traversing South and East Africa, British North America, and the United States. As the result of his travels he wrote a few articles in the Edinburgh, Quarterly, and other English Reviews, two of which, on the Roman Catholic Church in America, were republished in the United States under the title of "The Catholic Democracy of America." In 1890 Mr. Bodley undertook his work on France, and went to live in that country for the purpose of devoting himself entirely to it. It occupied him exclusively and without interruption for more than seven years, until the appearance, in February 1898, of the first two volumes of "France," which deal with "political France after a century of revolution." The years of labour bestowed on the work were justified by the remarkable reception bestowed on it by the English and American reviewers, as well as by French critics of all schools. French and German editions of the first series will shortly appear, and meanwhile the author is engaged in further volumes, which will treat of the Church, Education, and the Administrative System. Mr. Bodley married in Algeria in 1891 Evelyn Frances, eldest child of Mr. John Bell, of Mustapha Rais, Algiers, and Rushpool Hall, Yorkshire. Address: Château de Bellefontaine, Biarritz.

BODY, George, D.D., Canon Missioner of Durham, was born at Cheriton Fitzpaine, Devonshire, on Jan. 7, 1840, and was educated at Blundell's School, Tiverton, under the headmastership of Rev. T. B. Hughes, M.A. From this school he passed as Diocesan Student, from the Diocese of Exeter, to St. Augustine's Missionary College, Canterbury. Through ill-health he had to give up his purpose of undertaking foreign missionary work, and passed from Canterbury to St. John's College, Cambridge, in October 1859. In Lent, 1863, he was ordained Deacon, his first Curacy being at St. James's, Wednesbury, in the Diocese of Lichfield. From Wednesbury he went to the Curacy of Sedgley, in the same Diocese, and from Sedgley to Wolverhampton. In 1870 he was appointed Rector of Kirby Misperton, on the nomination of the Earl of Feversham, which benefice he held until 1884. In 1883 he was called to the Diocese of Durham as Canon Missioner. From 1880 to 1885 he represented the Archdeaconry of Cleveland in the Convocation of York. In 1885 he was made D.D. of Durham (honoris causa), and in 1890 was elected a Vice-President of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts as a recognition of his interest in foreign mission work. He has published many Sermons and two volumes of Lectures: (1) "The Life of Justification," in 1870, and (2) "The Life of Temptation," in 1870, each of which is in its 7th edit. Recent works of his are "Activities of the Ascended Lord," 1891; "The School of Calvary," 2nd edit. 1891; and "The Life of Love," 1893.

BOETTICHER, Karl Heinrich von, German statesman, was born at Stettin, Jan. 6, 1833. After studying law, he entered the Civil Service in 1862. He has held various posts in the Ministry of the Interior, and was appointed Secretary in 1880, a post he held, together with the Vice-Presidency of the Prussian Ministry, until June 1897, when he resigned at the same time as Baron von Marschall, in consequence of the opposition of the Agrarian party.

BOISSIER, Professor Marie Louis Gaston, was born Aug. 15, 1823, at Nîmes, and educated at the Lycée of that town, and at the Lycée Louis-le-Grand, Paris. In 1846 he became Professor of Rhetoric at Angoulême, and ten years later was called to Paris as supplementary professor at the Lycée Charlemagne. In 1861 he proceeded to the Collège de France as Professor of Latin Oratory, in succession to Havet, and then became deputy to Sainte Beuve in the chair of Latin Poetry. On June 8, 1876, he was elected a Member of the French Academy, succeeding Patin in the 39th chair. In 1895 he was elected Perpetual Secretary of the Academy. M. Boissier has written "Le Poète Attius," 1856; "Une Étude sur Terentius Varron," 1859; "Cicéron et ses Amis," 1866; "La Religion Romaine d'Auguste aux Antonins," 1875; "Madame de Sévigné," and many critical papers in the Revue des Deux Mondes and the Revue de l'Instruction Publique.

BOITO, Arrigo, Italian poet and composer, born Feb. 24, 1842, the brother of Camille Boito, the critic, entered the Conservatoire of Milan in 1853. He travelled in France, Poland, and Germany, where he became one of Wagner's disciples. His first work was "Le Mefistofele," which, when produced in 1868 at La Scala, Milan, met with startling failure, but when reproduced in 1875 at Bologna achieved immediate success. His other operas are "Nerone," "Ero e Leandro," "La Sorella d'Italia," and "Oda all' Arte." He is known as a poet, and has published in 1877 "Libro dei versi" and "Re Orso." He is, however, chiefly known as a librettist.

BOLDREWOOD, Rolf. See BROWNE, THOMAS ALEXANDER.

BOMBAY, Bishop of. See MAC-ARTHUR, THE RIGHT REV. JAMES.

BOND, Hon. Robert, born in Newfoundland, Feb. 25, 1857, was educated at Queen's College, Taunton, England. He studied for the legal profession, but left it to enter politics. He was elected to the Newfoundland Assembly in 1882, and became Speaker of that body in 1885. On the retirement of Sir William Whiteway in 1886, Mr. Bond became leader of his party. On the return of the former to active politics in 1889, he entered his Cabinet as Colonial Secretary. In 1890 he was one of three delegates sent to England relative to the "French Shore Treaty Question," and was the same year appointed by the Imperial and Newfoundland Governments to visit the United States to arrange a reciprocity treaty between that country and Newfoundland. In 1892 he was sent to Halifax with three others to confer with representatives from the Canadian Government upon the question of the fisheries and other matters of difference. He was unseated and disqualified in 1894. He afterwards, on the removal of the disability by Act of Parliament, returned to office, and was one of the delegates who negotiated terms of union with Canada at Ottawa in April 1895.

BOND, The Right Rev. William Bennett, M.A., LL.D., Bishop of Montreal, was born at Truro, in 1815. He received his education in various public and private schools in Cornwall and in London, and at an early age emigrated to Newfoundland, where he studied for the ministry with Archdeacon Bridge; and at Montreal, to which he had meantime repaired, was in 1840 ordained a Deacon, and in 1841, a Priest. For several years, under the direction of the late Bishop Mountain, of Quebec, he organised many mission stations in the Eastern Townships of the Province of Quebec; was incumbent of Lachine for a number of years; and assistant minister in St. George's, Montreal, of which he finally became incumbent. He maintained his connection with this parish for the long period of thirty years, successively becoming Archdeacon of Hochelaga and Dean of Montreal. On the resignation of Bishop Oxenden, he was, in 1879, elected by the synod of the diocese to the Bishopric of Montreal. Bishop Bond is President of the Theological College of the Diocese of Montreal, and is an LL.D. of the University of McGill College. Address: Bishops-court, 42 Union Avenue, Montreal.

BON GAULTIER. See MARTIN, SIR THEODORE.

BONNAT, Léon, a French painter and Member of the Institute, was born at Bayonne June 20, 1833, was a pupil of Madrazo and Léon Cogniet, and in 1857 obtained the second prize at Rome for his "Résurrection de Lazare." Since that time he has been a constant exhibitor at the annual Salons. Among his works may be mentioned "Le bon Samaritain," 1859; "Adam et Eve trouvant Abel mort," 1861; "Pèlerins dans l'église Saint Pierre de Rome," 1864; "Ribéra dessinant à la porte de l'Ara Cœli à Rome," 1867. After a tour in the East he produced the "Assumption," 1869; "Femme fellah et son enfant," 1870; "Femmes d'Ustaritz," 1872, and many others which have been rendered popular through engravings. His "Christ" for the Court of Appeal was especially noteworthy for the truth of the anatomy and condition of the corpse. M. Bonnat obtained two medals of the second class in 1861 and 1867, and the Medal of Honour in 1869. In 1867 he was decorated with the Legion of Honour. For many years he has confined himself to portraiture, and his best portraits, such as those of Thiers and Victor Hugo, Jules Ferry and President Carnot (1890), have gained him European celebrity.

BONNEY, Professor, The Rev. Thomas George, D.Sc. (Cantab.), Hon. LL.D. (Montreal), Hon. D.Sc. (Dublin), F.R.S., F.S.A., F.G.S., &c., son of late Rev. T. Bonney, M.A., was born July 27, 1833, at Rugeley, and educated at Uppingham School and St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated as 12th Wrangler and 16th in second-class classics in 1856. He was elected in 1859 to a Fellowship, which he still holds. From 1856 to 1861 he was Mathematical Master at Westminster School, but returned to Cambridge in the latter year. During his residence there he was active in securing for Natural Science a due place in Academic studies and promoting reforms in the University. He was appointed a tutor of the College in 1868, and was Lecturer in Geology. In 1877 he was elected Professor of Geology at University College, London, and in 1881, on being appointed Secretary of the British Association, finally quitted Cambridge to reside at Hampstead. He resigned the latter post in 1885, was President of the Geological Section at the meeting in 1886, and delivered one of the Evening Discourses in 1888. He was for six years Secretary of the Geological Society, and President in 1884-86. In 1889 he received the Wollaston Medal. He has been also President of the Mineralogical Society, and was Rede Lecturer at Cambridge in 1892. (See REDE.) In Geology, Professor Bonney has chiefly devoted himself to Petrological and Physical questions, and has written numerous papers printed in the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, the Geological Magazine, the publications of the Royal Society, &c. He is author of "The Story of our Planet," "Ioe Work," "Charles Lyell and Modern Geology," and a contributor to other works of science or biography. He was President of the Alpine Club in 1880-82, and is the author of "Outline Sketches in the High Alps of Dauphiné," 1865; "The Alpine Regions," 1868; besides furnishing the text to several illustrated books on the Alps, Norway, &c. He has also contributed largely to several works of descriptive topography, such as "Picturesque Europe," "Our own Country," "English Cathedrals," &c., and translated Pierotti's "Jerusalem Explored," 1864; and "Customs of Palestine," 1864. Ordained in 1857, Professor Bonney was one of the Cambridge Preachers at the Chapel Royal, Whitehall, 1876-78, and has been six times a Special Preacher before the University of Cambridge, on one occasion being Hulsean Lecturer. These lectures, "On the Influence of Science on Theology," have been published (1885), besides two other small volumes and several detached sermons. He was Boyle Lecturer in 1890-91, publishing the lectures in volumes entitled "Old Truths in Modern Lights," and "Christian Doctrines and Modern Thought." He is an Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Manchester, and an Hon. Canon of that Cathedral. Addresses: 23 Denning Road, N.W.; and Athenæum.

BONVALOT, Pierre Gabriel, French explorer, born at Espagne, in the Aube, in 1853, was a traveller and linguist from his earliest years. In 1880 he was charged by the Minister of Public Instruction with a mission to Central Asia. He visited Turkestan, Bokhara, and Samarcand, discovered the ruins of Chari-Samane, and returned to Europe by the Amu Daria and the Caspian Sea in 1882. In 1885 he was again entrusted with a mission to Persia and the Turcoman country. He was made prisoner by the Afghans, but despite their hostility he made noteworthy discoveries in the Pamirs, and crossed into Cashmere, August 1887. In 1889 M. Bonvalot agreed to accompany Prince Henri d'Orléans in crossing Asia from Siberia to Tonkin. They started from Paris on the 6th July, crossed the Chinese frontier on Sept. 1, and marching for a year and twenty-five days, arrived on the borders of the Red River in December 1890. The most difficult part of their journey was the crossing of the Tibetan tableland. Their observations and 700 photographs interested the learned world, and the Geographical Society of France awarded them its Gold Medal in 1890. Since then M. Bonvalot has travelled in Abyssinia.

BOOTH, Charles, LL.D., author and statistician, was born in Liverpool on March 30, 1840, and was educated at the Royal Institution School. Since 1862 he has been a partner in Alfred Booth & Co., Liverpool, and was President of the Royal Statistical Society from 1892 to 1894. He received the honour of the LL.D. of Cambridge University in 1898. He has published in nine volumes a standard work entitled "Life and Labour of the People in London," 1891-1897; "Pauperism and the Endowment of Old Age," 1892; "The Aged Poor," 1894. He married in 1871 Mary, daughter of Charles Zachary Macaulay. Addresses: 24 Great Cumberland Place, W.; and Athenæum.

BOOTH, The Rev. William, "General" of the Salvation Army, was born at Nottingham, April 10, 1829, and educated at a private school in that town. He studied theology with the Rev. William Cooke, D.D., became a minister of the Methodist New Connexion in 1850, and was appointed mostly to hold special evangelistic services, to which he felt so strongly drawn that when the Conference of 1861 required him to settle in the ordinary circuit work, he resigned, and began his labours as an evangelist amongst the churches wherever he had opportunity. Coming in this capacity to the East End of London he observed that the vast majority of the people attended no place of worship, and he started "The Christian Mission" in July 1865. To this mission, when it had become a large organisation, formed upon military lines, he gave in 1878 the name of "The Salvation Army," under which it soon became widely known, and grew rapidly until it now has (April 1898) 4611 corps and outposts at stations established in the United Kingdom, France, the United States, Australasia, India, the Cape of Good Hope, Canada, Scandinavia, Holland, Belgium, Italy, Japan, West Indies, South America, and elsewhere. 13,623 officers or evangelists are entirely employed in and supported by this Army, under the General's absolute direction, and they hold upwards of 79,095 services in the open air and in theatres, music halls, and other buildings every week. The General has published several hymn and music books, volumes entitled "Salvation Soldiery," "Training of Children," and "Letters to Soldiers," describing his views as to religious life and work. "Holy Living" and "Orders and Regulations for the Salvation Army" are some of the smaller publications issued by him for the direction of the Army as to teaching and services. He also contributed an article on "The Salvation Army" to the Contemporary Review for August 1882. Mrs. Booth shared largely in all the General's efforts, and further explained their views in "Practical Religion," "Aggressive Christianity," "Godliness," "Life and Death," and "The Salvation Army in Relation to Church and State." She died of cancer in October 1890, after a painful illness borne with Christian fortitude. The General's eldest son is his Chief of Staff, managing all his business; his eldest daughter, with her husband, directs the work in Belgium and Holland; another son is in charge of the work in Australasia; the second daughter, together with her husband, supervises the operations in the United States of America; the third daughter has the direction of affairs in Canada; the fourth daughter and her husband are at the head of the work in France—so that each member of the family is actively employed in some branch of the Army's service. The General established The War Cry as a weekly gazette of the Army in 1880. It is now published weekly in England, similar papers being published at each Colonial and Foreign headquarters, so that there are now 34 weekly War Cry's, with a circulation of over 652,776. En Avant appears in Paris, Strids Ropet in Stockholm, the Jangi Pokar (Gujarati) edition in Gujarat, a Tamil one in Madras, a Singhalese one in Ceylon, and an English and Marathi edition in Bombay. Belgium, Holland, and Germany also publish separate editions in their respective languages. In November 1890 he published a volume entitled "In Darkest England and the Way Out," containing a scheme for the enlightenment and industrial support of the lowest classes. The General appealed for £100,000 with which to begin the work of social rescue, and subsequently started 76 rescue homes for fallen women, and 100 "slum posts," besides a system of Labour Bureaux, and food depôts, shelters, factories, and homes for inebriates. In May 1892 General Booth again stated that £30,000 a year would be necessary in order to carry out the "Darkest England" scheme. The appeal was endorsed by such well-known public men as the Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Compton, Mr. H. H. Fowler, Mr. Labouchere, and Archdeacon Farrar. Subsequently General Booth submitted the working of the scheme to a committee of inquiry, consisting of the Earl of Onslow, Sir Henry James, M.P., Mr. E. Waterhouse (President Institute of Chartered Accountants), Mr. Walter Long, and Mr. C. E. Hobhouse, M.P. These gentlemen reported favourably as to the working of the scheme and the application of the funds thereto subscribed. In 1896 there were two notable celebrations, the one in commemoration of his return from his second tour in South Africa, Australasia, Ceylon, and India (this was held in March at the Crystal Palace), and the other a Twelve Days' Exhibition of the work of the Army throughout the world (held at the Agricultural Hall). Address: 101 Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

BOOTHBY, Guy Newell, was born at Adelaide, South Australia, on Oct. 13, 1867, and is the eldest son of Thomas Wilde Boothby, sometime Member of the House of Assembly, and grandson of Mr. Justice Boothby. He has travelled a good deal, and in 1891 he crossed Australia from north to south. He is the author of: "On the Wallaby," 1894; "In Strange Company," 1894; "The Marriage of Esther," 1895; "A Lost Endeavour," 1895; "A Bid for Fortune," 1895; "Beautiful White Devil," 1896; "Dr. Nikola," 1896; "Fascination of the King," and "Sheilah M'Leod," 1897, &c. He is married to Rose Alice, third daughter of William Bristowe, of Champion Hill. Address: Alveston, Thames Ditton, Surrey.

BORNIER, Vicomte Henri de, French poet and dramatist, born at Lunel, Dec. 25, 1825, studied at Montpellier and at Saint-Pons, and in 1845 completed his legal studies at Paris. The same year he published "Les Premières Feuilles," a volume of poems, and submitted a play to the Théâtre Français, "Le Mariage de Luther." They attracted the notice of Salvandy, the Minister of Public Instruction, who appointed the youthful poet a supernumerary at the Bibliothèque de l'Arsenal, where he has risen successively to be sub-librarian, librarian, and finally, in March 1889, administrator. In July 1891 he was made an Officer of the Legion of Honour. In 1853 he published a play, "Dante de Béatrix," and in 1884 he wrote a recitation for the Odéon, "La Muse de Corneille," which has often been recited on the poet's birthday. A pendant to this was "Le Quinze Janvier ou la Muse de Molière," which he wrote for the Français in 1860. The following year he obtained the first prize for poetry with "L'Isthme de Suez," and again in 1863, and the prize for eloquence in 1864 with "L'Eloge de Chateaubriand." In 1868 his "Agamemnon" was played at the Français, and his "La Fille de Roland" in 1875. Among later dramas must be mentioned "L'Arétin" (1885), destined to show the deplorable effects of licentious reading, and "Mahomet," on which he had worked for several years. This last had been accepted by the Français, but was forbidden by the Government at the request of the Turkish Ambassador as likely to offend the religious susceptibilities of their Turkish subjects, March 1890. His complete poetical works were published in 1888 in 2 vols. He was elected to the French Academy in 1893 in succession to Xavier Marmier, and lives at 1 Rue de Sully, Paris.

BOSISTO, Joseph, C.M.G., was born March 21, 1827, at Hammersmith. He became a druggist, and emigrated to Adelaide, South Australia, in 1848, where he remained for three years, and established the wholesale business of Messrs. Faulding & Co. After a short attack of the gold fever in 1851, he went to Melbourne, and began business at Bridge Road, Richmond. The business, at first almost purely a pharmaceutical one, soon developed into a regular manufacturing concern, and upon its founder discovering the remarkable antiseptic properties of the eucalyptus trees, it developed into a large undertaking. The Pharmaceutical Society of Victoria was founded by Mr. Bosisto in 1857, with the aid and cordial co-operation of a few of the chief pharmacists of Victoria, and has proved to have exerted a highly beneficial influence in the development of pharmaceutical and therapeutical knowledge throughout the colony. Mr. Bosisto sat as a Municipal Councillor for over twelve years, in the course of which time he held the office of Mayor for two consecutive periods. He was elected Chairman of the Richmond Magisterial Bench for five years successively, was returned to Parliament in 1874, and has always been placed at the head of the poll in the elections until 1886. Mr. Bosisto was appointed President of the Royal Commission of Victoria at the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, 1886.

BOTTOMLEY, James Thomson, M.A., D.Sc., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., F.C.S., Lecturer on Natural Philosophy, and electrical engineer, was born at Fortbreda, county Down, Ireland, on Jan. 10, 1845. His father was William Bottomley, merchant, of Belfast, and Justice of the Peace; his mother was second daughter of the late Dr. James Thomson, Professor of Mathematics in the University of Glasgow, and a sister of Sir William Thomson, F.R.S., now Lord Kelvin, and Professor James Thomson, F.R.S., both Professors in Glasgow University. Mr. Bottomley was educated partly at a private school, and partly at the Royal Belfast Academical Institution. His parents intended that he should enter the then Established Church in Ireland, and he was sent to Trinity College, Dublin, with that object; but when he had passed through half of his undergraduate course, the desire of following a scientific career became so strong that he was permitted to pursue his bent. He then became a pupil, and subsequently an assistant, of the late Dr. Thomas Andrews, F.R.S., Professor of Chemistry in Queen's College, Belfast, studying with him Chemistry and Chemical Physics, and devoting much attention at the same time to Mathematics and Natural Philosophy. He finally took the degree of B.A. in Trinity College, Dublin, and the degrees of B.A. and M.A. with first-class Honours and Gold Medals in Natural Philosophy and Chemistry in the Queen's University in Ireland. After a year's residence in Glasgow with his uncle, Sir William Thomson, where he studied Chemistry under the late Dr. Thomas Anderson, and Physics in the Natural Philosophy Laboratory, Mr. Bottomley was appointed Demonstrator in Chemistry at King's College, London, under the late Dr. W. A. Miller, F.R.S. He held this office only one year; for, to his great disappointment, his health became injuriously affected in the Chemical Laboratory, and he was glad, with the consent of Dr. Miller, and at the wish of Professor W. G. Adams, to be transferred to the post of Demonstrator in Natural Philosophy in King's College. In 1870 he removed to Glasgow to take part in the teaching of the Natural Philosophy Class in the University, under a special arrangement made for that purpose, Sir William Thomson being at that time actively engaged in the great work of laying some of the submarine cables; and Mr. Bottomley has continued to assist, and when necessary represent, Sir William Thomson since that time. He is the author of original papers on "Conduction of Heat," "Radiation of Heat," "Elasticity of Wires," &c., which have been published in The Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society, The Proceedings of the Royal Society, Philosophical Magazine, Proceedings of the British Association, and elsewhere. He is also the author of elementary textbooks on "Dynamics," and on "Hydrostatics," and of "Four Figure Mathematical Tables." He is Fellow of the Royal Society, of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, and of the Chemical Society, Member of the Institution of Electrical Engineers, and of the Physical Society. Address: 13 University Gardens, Glasgow.

BOTTOMLEY, William Beecroft, M.A., Ph.D., F.L.S., F.C.S., only son of Joseph Bottomley, Esq., was born at Apperley Bridge, Leeds, in 1863, and educated at the Royal Grammar School, Lancaster. He gained a Natural Science Scholarship at St. Mary's Hospital, London, in 1883, and studied there and at University College, London, during 1883 and 1884. In 1885 he proceeded to Germany, studying at the Universities of Heidelberg and Erlangen. In 1886 he was appointed Lecturer on Biology and Science Tutor in St. Mary's Hospital, which appointment he continued to hold until 1891. In 1888 he entered King's College, Cambridge, as Exhibitioner, and graduated in 1891. In 1892 he was appointed Assistant to the Professor of Botany in University College, London. In the following year, 1893, he was elected Professor of Botany in King's College, London; and in 1894 Professor of Biology in the Royal Veterinary College, London, both of which appointments he still holds. After graduating at Cambridge, Professor Bottomley was for three years engaged giving series of University Extension Lectures throughout Kent upon Botany in its relation to Agriculture. He was thus brought into intimate touch with matters connected with rural economy, and became an earnest advocate of Agricultural Co-operation. In 1895 he founded the South-Eastern Co-operative Agricultural Society upon similar lines to the Syndicats Agriculural of France, for the joint-purchase of agricultural requisites and joint-disposal of produce. He also joined with Mr. Yerburch in promoting the establishment of Rural Co-operative Credit Banks, and became Hon. Secretary of the Agricultural Banks Association. In 1896 he spent six weeks in Germany investigating the working of the Raiffeisen Rural Credit Banks, and upon his return read a paper at the Liverpool Meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, describing the Raiffeisen Banks of Germany, with their unlimited liability of members, limited areas of operation, absence of all paid administrative posts, exclusion of individual profit, and examination into application of loan granted, and its economic utility. He also published a series of articles upon "Raiffeisen and his Work," showing that it would be advantageous to the agricultural industry of Great Britain if some system could be established in this country somewhat similar to the Raiffeisen organisation with its Local Rural Loan Banks, grouped into county areas, and these again controlled and directed by a central association. Professor Bottomley is also joint Hon. Secretary, with Dr. Paton of Nottingham, of the English Land Colonisation Society, which has for its object the establishment of co-operative colonies of small holdings. He is also Chairman of the Board of Directors of the West Indian Co-operative Union, which has recently been formed to promote agricultural co-operation and the development of minor industries in the West Indian Islands. He is the author of numerous papers upon science, rural economy, and agricultural co-operation; and is also well known for his popular lectures upon various scientific subjects. Address: The Botanical Laboratories, King's College, London.

BOUGHTON, George Henry, R.A., was born near Norwich in 1833. His father was William Boughton. His family went to America in 1836, and he passed his youth in Albany, New York, where he early developed an artistic taste. In 1853 he came to London, and passed several months in the study of art. Returning to America he settled in New York, and soon became known as a landscape painter. In 1859 he went to Paris, where he devoted two years to study, and in 1861 he opened a studio in London. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy June 19, 1879. Among his best works are: "Winter Twilight," "The Lake of the Dismal Swamp," "Passing into the Shade," "Coming into Church," "Morning Prayer," "The Scarlet Letter," "The Idyl of the Birds," "The Return of the 'Mayflower,'" "Counsellors of Peter the Headstrong," "A Morning in May, Isle of Wight," and "The Ordeal of Purity" (1894). In recent Academies he has exhibited the following: "Sunrise after Sharp Frost, Suffolk," and a portrait of Gladys, daughter of Walter Palmer, Esq., 1895; "A Sports-woman on a Highland River," "The Gardener's Daughter," and two portraits, 1896; "Memories" (Diploma work), and "After Midnight Mass, fifteenth century," 1897; and "The Road to Camelot," and two portraits, one of a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kendal, 1898. Mr. Boughton has of late years made a study of the picturesque aspects of the old Puritan life of New England, and many of his recent works have illustrated it. He has also visited Holland, and painted a number of Dutch scenes, and, with Mr. Edwin Abbey, is the author of "A Sketching Tour in Holland," 1885. He has frequently exhibited at the National Academy of New York, and was made a Member of that Academy in 1871. He was made R.A. in March 1896. Address: West House, Campden Hill, W.

BOUGUEREAU, Adolphe William, a French painter, and Member of the Institute, was born at La Rochelle, Nov. 30, 1835. He began life in a business house at Bordeaux, but obtained permission to attend the drawing school of M. Alaux for two hours a day. His fellow pupils treated him with contempt on account of his business connections, and when at the end of the year he gained the first prize, the excitement was so great that a riot ensued, and a formal protest was made by the pupils against his receiving it, but without effect. He then turned all his attention to painting, and entered the studio of Picot in Paris, and later, entered the École de Beaux Arts, where his progress was rapid. Having gained the "Prix de Rome" with his picture of "Zenobia on the banks of the Araxes," in 1850 he went to Rome, and in 1854 exhibited "The Body of St. Cecilia borne to the Catacombs," since which time he has occupied a leading position among the artists of the Modern French School. His next great work was "Philomela and Procne," 1861. Both these pictures are now in the Luxembourg. "Mater Afflictorum," or "Vierge Consolatrice," 1876, was purchased by the French Government for 12,000 francs. Among his pictures exhibited at the Salon may be mentioned, "The Bather," 1870; "Harvest Time," 1872; "The Little Marauders," 1873; "Homer and his Guide," 1874; "Flora and Zephyrus," 1875; "Pieta," 1876; "Youth and Love," 1877; "The Scourging of Our Lord," 1880; "The Virgin with Angels," 1881; "Slave carrying a Fan," 1882; "The Youth of Bacchus" and "Byblis," 1885; "Love Disarmed," 1886; "Love Victorious," 1887; "Baigneuses," 1888; "Tysche and Love," 1889; "L'Amour Mouillé," 1891. M. Bouguereau executed the mural paintings in the St. Louis Chapel of the Church of St. Clotilde and in the Church of St. Augustine. Many of his pictures have been engraved by François. They have been made familiar by the Autotype Company in England. Address: 75 Rue Notre Dame des Champs, Paris.

BOULENGER, George Albert, F.R.S., F.Z.S., was born at Brussels on Oct. 19, 1858. In 1882, after having served a time as Aide-Naturaliste in the Royal Belgian Museum, he was appointed first-class Assistant in the Zoological Department of the British Museum, and there took charge of the collections of Reptiles and Fishes. On these groups of animals he has published very numerous memoirs and papers, from 1877 to the present day. He is the author of the British Museum Catalogues of Reptiles (7 vols., 1885-96) and of Batrachians (2 vols., 1882), which are the standard works for the determination of these animals, and of a "Catalogue of Percoid Fishes," 1895. Other works are "Fauna of India, Reptiles and Batrachians," 1890, and "The Tailless Batrachians of Europe," 1897-98. Since 1880 he has prepared the annual reports on Reptiles and Fishes for the "Record of Zoological Literature." Address: 8 Courtfield Road, South Kensington, S.W.

BOULNOIS, Edmund, M.P., son of the late W. Boulnois, of Baker Street, Marylebone, was born on June 17, 1838, and was educated at King Edward's School, Bury St. Edmunds, and St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated M.A. in 1868. He has sat in the House of Commons since 1889 as Conservative member for East Marylebone, and he also represents the same constituency on the London County Council. Mr. Boulnois is a Justice of the Peace for both London and Middlesex, is Chairman of the West Middlesex Waterworks Company, Director of the London Life Association, and the Westminster Electric Supply Corporation, and he is the proprietor of the Baker Street Bazaar, in London. Address: 27 Westbourne Terrace, W.

BOURCHIER, Arthur, M.A., the only son of Captain Charles John Bouchier, late 8th Hussars, was born at Speen, Berkshire, on June 22, 1864, and was educated at Eton, and Christ Church, Oxford. Whilst at the University he founded the Oxford Dramatic Society, and was instrumental in bringing about the building of the new theatre there, in which he played the characters of Shylock, Falstaff, Brutus, Feste, and Thanatos (in the "Alcestis"). Taking to the stage as a profession, he made his first appearance at Wolverhampton, as Jacques in "As You Like It," in 1889, and he subsequently played this part at the St. James's Theatre, London. He has appeared as Joseph Surface at the Criterion, and as Charles Surface at Daly's Theatre; and in 1895 he became manager of the Royalty Theatre, where he produced "The Chili Widow" (which ran over 300 nights) and "The Queen's Proctor." He has adapted several plays, amongst them being "The Chili Widow," from the French. Mr. Bouchier was married in 1894 to Miss Violet Vanbrugh, the well-known actress (q.v.). Address: 190 Earl's Court Road, W.

BOURCHIER, Mrs. Arthur. See VANBRUGH, MISS VIOLET.

BOURGEOIS, Léon Victor Auguste, French statesman, was born in Paris, May 21, 1851. He was educated at the Lycée Charlemagne, and became Doctor of Laws. He was Secretary of the Bar Committee, and entered official life in the Office of Public Works in 1876. He was elected Sous-Préfet of Reims in 1880, and Préfet of the Department of the Tarn in 1882. In the strike at Carmaux he conciliated the miners, and was rewarded with the Legion of Honour. In 1885 he was appointed Préfet of the Haute-Garonne, and returned to Paris in 1886 to the Ministry of the Interior. In 1887 he became Préfet de Police, and was successful in that difficult office at the time of President Grévy's resignation, when there was much fear of a dangerous rising. He entered the Chamber in 1888 as Deputy for the Marne, and became Under-Secretary of the Interior in the Floquet Cabinet, which resigned in 1889. In 1890 he became Minister of the Interior on the resignation of M. Constans, which he exchanged for that of Public Instruction in the Freycinet Cabinet of the same year. In 1895 he undertook the formation of a Radical cabinet on the overthrow of M. Ribot, but he found himself absolutely dependent upon the votes of the Socialists for a working majority in the Chamber. This, and a conflict with the Senate, led to his downfall in April 1896, when he was succeeded by the Protectionist and Moderate Cabinet of M. Méline. He has published a study of democracy in France; and in June 1898 he was offered, and accepted, the portfolio of Public Instruction in the Brisson Cabinet of that year.

BOURGET, Paul, French poet and novelist of the psychological school, was born at Amiens on Sept. 2, 1852. His father, a learned mathematician, was afterwards Rector of the Academies of Aix and Clermont. M. Bourget was educated at Clermont, at the Sainte-Barbe College in Paris, and at the Collège des Hautes Études. Together with Richépin, Bouchor, and other future celebrities, he formed part of a literary society that led him to abandon teaching as a profession. In 1872 he began writing for the Renaissance journal, and in 1873 published an article in the Revue des Deux Mondes, characteristically entitled "Le Roman réaliste et le Roman piétiste." His first volume of poems, "La Vie inquiète," appeared in 1874. He then left poetry for romance, and among his best known-works we may mention "Études et Portraits," 1888; "Portraits d'Écrivains"; "Études Anglaises"; "Pastels, dix portraits de femmes," 1889; "Nouveaux Pastels," 1891; and the following novels: "Cruelle Énigme," 1885; "Mensonges," 1887; "Le Disciple," 1889, a study of the scientific and pessimist tendencies of the age; and "Cosmopolis," which contains a study of the present Pope. His poems were published in two volumes in 1885-87. M. Bourget is a traveller, and admires England and the English, and he has lectured before the University of Oxford. He has shown himself a psychological "maniac," as he himself says, and a passionate lover of the analytic school, inaugurated by Stendhal. He is one of the most widely read novelists in France, and was elected a Member of the French Academy in 1894 to the seat of Maxime du Camp. Among his recent works should be mentioned "Notre Cœur," 1890; "La Terre Promise" and "Sensations d'Italie," 1892; "L'Idylle Tragique" and "Outre Mer," 1895. The last-mentioned deals with the United States of America. His last work, "Voyageuses" (1898), has been published in book form, after running as a serial in Cosmopolis.

BOUTELLE, Charles Addison, American statesman, was born at Damascotta, Maine, Feb. 9, 1839, and received an academic education. He followed his father's occupation as shipmaster, and in the spring of 1862 was appointed Acting Master in the United States Navy, and was promoted for gallant conduct to be Lieutenant, May 5, 1864. Afterwards in command of the U.S.S. Nyanza, he participated in the capture of Mobile, and was assigned to command naval forces in Mississippi Sound. He was honourably discharged, at his own request, Jan. 14, 1866. In 1870 he became managing editor, and in 1874 proprietor, of the Whig and Courier of Bangor, Maine. He was elected to the Forty-eighth Congress, and re-elected to the Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, Fifty-first, Fifty-second, Fifty-third, Fifty-fourth, and Fifty-fifth Congresses. He is leader of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the United States House of Representatives.

BOWELL, Hon. Sir Mackenzie, K.C.M.G., Canadian statesman, was born at Rickingham, Suffolk, England, Dec. 27, 1823. He went to Canada with his parents in 1833, entered the military service as ensign in the Bellville Rifle Company in 1857, and after some service on the American frontier in 1864 and later, he was made major in 1867 and lieutenant-colonel in 1872, retiring with that rank in 1874. He represented North Hastings for twenty-five years in the House of Commons, being then called to the Senate. In 1878 he entered Sir John Macdonald's Cabinet as Minister of Customs, occupying that office for thirteen years; under Sir John Abbott he was Minister of Militia, and under Sir John Thompson he was Minister of Trade and Commerce. On the death of the latter Mr. Bowell formed an Administration, December 1894, the main policy of which was the enforcement of remedial legislation in the matter of the Manitoba School question. Having failed to accomplish this object, he retired from the Government, April 27, 1896. He was appointed a K.C.M.G. Jan. 1, 1895, shortly after becoming Prime Minister.

BOWEN, The Right Hon. Sir George Ferguson, G.C.M.G., Hon. D.C.L. and Hon. LL.D., the eldest son of the late Rev. Edward Bowen, born in 1821, was educated at the Charterhouse and Trinity College, Oxford, where he obtained a scholarship in 1840, and graduated B.A. as first class in classics in 1844. In the same year he was elected to a Fellowship of Brasenose College, and became a member of Lincoln's Inn. He was Chief Secretary to the Government of the Ionian Islands from 1854 to 1859, and was appointed in that year the first Governor of the new colony of Queensland, in Australia, comprising the north-eastern portion of the Australian Continent. He was appointed, in 1868, Governor of New Zealand; and in May 1873, Governor of Victoria. He was Governor of Mauritius from 1875 to 1883, when he was appointed Governor of Hong-Kong. He retired on his pension in 1887; but in 1888 he was appointed Royal Commissioner at Malta to make arrangements respecting the new Constitution granted to that island. Sir George is the author of "A Handbook for Travellers in Greece," one of Murray's Handbooks; "Mount Athos, Thessaly, and Epirus: a Diary of a Journey from Constantinople to Corfu," 1852; "Ithaca in 1850" and "Imperial Federation," 1886, &c. A full account of his public services will be found in "Thirty Years of Colonial Government," being a selection from the "Despatches and Letters of the Right Hon. Sir G. F. Bowen, G.C.M.G., Hon. D.C.L. Oxford, Hon. LL.D. Cambridge. Edited by Stanley Lane-Poole." Sir George Bowen is a member of the Governing Bodies of the Imperial Institute and of Charterhouse School, and married in 1856 the Countess Roma, only surviving daughter of Count Roma, G.C.M.G., then President of the Senate of the Ionian Islands. The Countess Roma died in 1893, and he was again married in 1896 to Florence, daughter of Dr. T. Luby, Senior Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin, and widow of the Rev. H. White. Addresses: 16 Lowndes Street, S.W.; and Athenæum.

BOWER, Frederick Orpen, D.Sc., F.R.S. (1891), F.L.S., F.R.S.Ed., was born on Nov. 4, 1855, at Ripon, Yorkshire. He is the younger son of Abraham Bower, Esq., J.P., of Elmcrofts, Ripon, Yorks. Educated at Ripon Grammar School, Repton School, and Trinity College, Cambridge, he graduated in the first class of the Nat. Sci. Tripos in 1877. Having served as assistant to the Professor of Botany in University College, London, he was appointed first Lecturer in Botany at the Normal School of Science (now Royal College of Science), South Kensington, in 1882, and in 1885 Regius-Professor of Botany in the University of Glasgow. He acted as Examiner in the University of London in 1885-89. He has co-operated with Dr. D. H. Scott in translating the "Comparative Anatomy of Phanerogams and Ferns," by De Bary (Clarendon Press, 1884), and with Professor Vines in the production of a "Course of Practical Instruction in Botany," in its third edition in 1891. He is the author of numerous memoirs published by the Royal Society, the Linn. Soc., in the Q.J.M.S., and "Annals of Botany." One of his most recent works is "Practical Botany for Beginners," 1894. Address: 45 Kersland Terrace, Hillhead, Glasgow.

BOWER, Sir Graham John, K.C.M.G., the son of Admiral James Paterson Bower, was born in Ireland on June 15, 1848. He was educated at the Naval Academy at Gosport, entered the Navy in 1861, and retired in 1880 as Commander. In the latter year he became private secretary to Sir Hercules Robinson, Governor of the Cape, and High Commissioner for South Africa, and from 1884 to 1897 he acted as Imperial Secretary to the High Commissioner. He came to England after the Jameson raid, and gave evidence at the parliamentary inquiry held at Westminster regarding that event. Sir Graham has recently (1898) been appointed Colonial Secretary of the Island of Mauritius. He is the author of "Practical Federation," a book published under the name of "Centurion." He was created a K.C.M.G. in 1892, and was married in 1882 to Maude Laidley Mitchell, of Sydney, N.S.W.

BOWLES, Thomas Gibson, M.P., was born in 1842, and was educated privately in England and abroad, and at King's College, London. He was in the Inland Revenue Department of the Civil Service from 1860 to 1868, and in the latter year he founded the paper Vanity Fair, selling it, however, eventually. In the year 1878 he assisted in starting the Stafford House Committee for the relief of the distressed and suffering Turks, and he was presented with the Order of the Medjidie. He has represented King's Lynn, as Conservative member in the House of Commons, since 1892. He is the author of: "The Defence of Paris," "Maritime Warfare," 1878; "Flotsam and Jetsam," 1882; "Log of the Nereid," 1889. Mr. Bowles was married in 1876 to Jessica, daughter of General Evans Gordon (she died in 1887). Addresses: 25 Lowndes Square, S.W.; and Wilbury House, Salisbury.

BOWRING, Edgar Alfred, C.B., a younger son of the late Sir John Bowring, was born in 1826, and educated at University College, London. He entered the Civil Service in the Board of Trade in 1841, and filled in succession the post of private secretary to the Earl of Clarendon, to Earl Granville, and to Lord Stanley of Alderley. He was appointed Précis Writer and Librarian to that department in 1848, and Registrar in 1853, but retired from the service on the abolition of his office at the end of 1863. He acted as Secretary to the Royal Commission for the Great Exhibition of 1851, and held that appointment until his election as M.P. for Exeter at the general election of 1868. His services were so highly appreciated by the late Prince Consort, the President of the Commission, that immediately after H.R.H.'s decease, her Majesty nominated Mr. Bowring a Companion of the Order of the Bath, Civil Division. Mr. Bowring lost his seat for Exeter at the general election of February 1874. He is the author of an English poetical version of "The Book of Psalms," English versions of the poetical works of Schiller, Goethe, and Heine, and (jointly with Lord Hobart) of a reply to the "Sophisms of Free Trade," by Mr. Justice Byles. Besides having been a frequent contributor to periodical literature, he is understood to have translated two small volumes of German hymns, selected by the Queen, and privately printed for her Majesty's use, one volume on the death of the Duchess of Kent, and the other on that of Prince Albert.

BOYD, The Rev. Andrew Kennedy Hutchison, D.D. and LL.D., born at Auchinleck, Ayrshire, of which parish his father was incumbent, November 1825, was educated at King's College, London, and at the University of Glasgow, where he obtained the highest honours in philosophy and theology, and was author of several prize essays, taking the degree of B.A. in April 1846. He was ordained in 1851, and has been incumbent successively of the parishes of Newton-on-Ayr, Kirkpatrick-Irongray (in Galloway), St. Bernard's (Edinburgh), and of the University city of St. Andrews, which he still holds. He first became known as a writer by papers which appeared in Fraser's Magazine under the signature of A. K. H. B. Of these, the most important have been reprinted; the best known of these being "The Recreations of a Country Parson" (three series). Dr. Boyd is also the author of many volumes of sermons, under the titles of "The Graver Thoughts of a Country Parson," and "Counsel and Comfort spoken from a City Pulpit," "Present-day Thoughts: Memorials of St. Andrews Sundays," 1870; "Towards the Sunset," 1883; "What Set Him Right," 1885; and "The Best Last," in 1888. He received the degree of D.D. from the University of Edinburgh in 1864, and of LL.D. from the University of St. Andrews in 1889. In May 1890 he was elected Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. His latest works are "Twenty-five Years of St. Andrews," published in 1892;

"St. Andrews and Elsewhere," 1894; and "The Last Years of St. Andrews." He is a member of the Middle Temple, and studied for two years for the English Bar. In 1895 he was made a Fellow of King's College. Address: 7 Abbotsford Crescent, St. Andrews.

BOYD, The Rev. Henry, M.A., D.D., Principal of Hertford College, Oxford, was born on Feb. 26, 1831, and is the third son of William Charles Boyd, Esq. He was educated at Hackney School and at Exeter College, Oxford, where he matriculated at the age of seventeen. He was in the second class in Lit. Hum. in 1852, and was Ellerton Essayist in 1853, and Denyer Theological Essayist in 1856 and 1857 (B.A. 1852; M.A. 1857; B.D. and D.D. 1879). From 1862 to 1874 he was incumbent of St. Mark's, Victoria Docks, E., and from 1875 to 1890 was Hon. Canon of Rochester. In 1874 Dr. Boyd was elected Fellow, and in 1877 Principal, of Hertford. In 1879 he was select preacher before the University, and in 1890 Vice-Chancellor. Address: Hertford College, Oxford.

BOYD, Hon. Walter, LL.D., was born at Dublin on Jan. 28, 1833, and was educated at Portora, Enniskillen, and Trinity College, Dublin. He was called to the Irish Bar in 1856, was appointed Q.C. in 1877, and Queen's Advocate for Ireland in 1878. He became a Judge in the Irish Court of Bankruptcy in 1885, and after holding that position for twelve years, he was in 1897 appointed a Justice of the High Court of Justice in Ireland. He is the author of "Law and Practice of the Court of Admiralty in Ireland." Addresses: 66 Merriion Square, Dublin; and Howth House, Howth, County Dublin.

BOYLE, Sir Courtenay, K.C.B., was born in Jamaica on Oct. 21, 1845, being the son of Cavendish Spencer Boyle, and was educated at Charterhouse and Christ Church, Oxford. Appointed private secretary to the Viceroy of Ireland in 1868, he became an Inspector of the Local Government Board in 1873, returning again to the private secretaryship to the Viceroy in 1882. Three years later, in 1885, he was appointed Assistant Secretary to the Board of Trade, and after seven years' service in that position, he became Permanent Secretary to the Board of Trade in 1893. Sir Courtenay Boyle was created a K.C.B. in 1892, and is married to Lady Muriel Sarah Campbell, daughter of the 2nd Earl of Cawdor. He played in the Oxford cricket eleven from 1864 to 1867, and has also represented his University at tennis. Address: 11 Granville Place, Portman Square, W.

BOYLE, The Very Rev. George David, Dean of Salisbury, is the eldest son of the late Right Hon. David Boyle, Lord Justice-General and President of the Court of Session in Scotland, by his second marriage with Camilla Catherine, eldest daughter of the late Mr. David Smythe, of Methven, Perthshire, and was born in 1828. He was educated at the Edinburgh Academy, the Charterhouse, and at Exeter College, Oxford (B.A. 1851, M.A. 1853). Between 1853 and 1860 he held in succession curacies in Kidderminster and Hagley. He was Incumbent of St. Michael's, Handsworth, from 1861 to 1867, and Rural Dean of Handsworth, 1866-67. He was appointed Vicar of Kidderminster in 1867, and Rural Dean in 1877, and he was Hon. Canon of Worcester from 1872 till 1880, when he was appointed Dean of Salisbury. He was appointed to the Royal Artillery in April 1856, and served in the suppression of the Indian Mutiny in 1857-58. Subsequently he was appointed to the staff of the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, first as Officer for Discipline, then as Instructor in Artillery, finally as Professor of Military History. He served throughout the Franco-German war as chief representative of the British National Society for Aid to Sick and Wounded in War, received the Iron Cross from the Emperor of Germany, and was made Officer of the Legion of Honour by the French Government, and Knight of the First Class of the Bavarian Order of St. Michael. Being appointed Military Secretary to Sir Garnet Wolseley, he served with him throughout the Ashanti Campaign, 1873-1874. He served as a member of a special mission to Natal in 1875, was Assistant Adjutant-General to the Cyprus Expeditionary Force in 1878, and raised and organised the Cyprus Military Police. In 1879 he accompanied Sir Garnet Wolseley to South Africa as Military Secretary, and later succeeded Sir G. Colley as Chief of the Staff, in which capacity he served throughout the closing operations of the Zulu war and the campaign against Sekukuni. In 1880 he was appointed Private Secretary to the Viceroy of India, and returned to England with the Earl of Lytton on his resignation. He was Military Attaché to the British Embassy at Paris from January 1881 to May 1882, when he was appointed Assistant Under-Secretary for Ireland, to deal with all matters relating to police and crime in that country. He resigned the latter post, however, on July 19, 1882. In 1884 he was appointed Deputy Adjutant-General of the Nile Expeditionary Force, and subsequently Brigadier-General and second in command of the River Column of the expedition. When General Earle was killed during the action of Kirbekan, General Brackenbury assumed command of the column, and conducted it to near Abu Hamed, whence it was recalled by Lord Wolseley, down the rapids to Korti. He was promoted to be a Major-General, June 15, 1885, for distinguished service in the field, and Lieut.-General, April 1, 1888. He was appointed head of the Intelligence Department of the War Office, Jan. 1, 1886, and retained this position till March 1891. In 1888 he was appointed a Member of a Royal Commission, under the Chairmanship of Lord Hartington, to inquire into the administration of the Naval and Military Departments of the State. In April 1891 he was appointed a Member of the Council of the Governor-General of India, and continued in this position till April 1896. He was knighted in 1894. He has been President of the Ordnance Committee since May 1896, and was appointed Colonel Commandant of the Royal Artillery in 1897. He is the author of "Fanti and Ashanti," 1873; "Narrative of the Ashanti War"; "The River Column"; and of several military pamphlets. He married Emilia, daughter of E. S. Halswell, and widow of Reginald Morley, in 1861. Address: 23 Hanover Square, W.

BRADDON, The Right Hon. Sir Edward Nicholas Coventry, K.C.M.G., son of Henry Braddon of Skirton Lodge, Cornwall, and brother of the novelist, Miss E. Braddon (Mrs. Maxwell), was born June 11, 1829; educated at private schools and by private tutor, and at the London University; went to India in 1847 to the mercantile house of his cousins, Messrs. Bagshaw and Co. (afterwards Braddon and Co.), Calcutta. After eight years spent in mercantile pursuits, he was engaged in civil engineering in charge of an Assistant Engineer's length of the East India Railway, during which time he led a small force of volunteers against the insurgent Santahals; he subsequently served as a volunteer with the 7th N.I. against the rebels, and on the close of the rebellion pursued and captured fourteen of the leading Santahals implicated in the murder of several Europeans and natives. As some recognition of these services he received the appointment of Assistant Commissioner in charge of the Deoghur District, Santal Pergunnahs, October 1857. He served under Sir George Yule as a volunteer against the rebel Sepoys in the Purneah and adjoining districts (Mutiny medal and favourable mention in despatches). Raised a regiment of Santhals, for which service he was thanked specially by the Lieut.-Governor of Bengal. In April 1862 Mr. Braddon was promoted to be superintendent of Excise and Stamps, Oudh; subsequently made Inspector-General of Registration, and Superintendent of Trade Statistics in that Province, and during eighteen months acted in addition as Revenue Secretary to the Financial Commissioner. Retired from the service, Mr. Braddon made Tasmania his home. He arrived there in May 1878, and was elected in July 1879 a member of the House of Assembly for West Devon. That seat he retained through four elections until he left Tasmania as Agent-General. In 1876 he was appointed leader of the Opposition. In 1887 he took office in a new Administration as Minister of Lands and Works and Education. On Oct. 29, 1888, he was appointed Agent-General for Tasmania, but was succeeded in that office by Sir Robert Herbert, K.C.B., in 1893. Since 1894 he has been Premier and Leader of the House of Assembly. In 1891 he was made a K.C.M.G. He was sworn of the Privy Council on the occasion of the Queen's Jubilee, 1897. Sir E. Braddon has contributed many articles to reviews, magazines, and newspapers. His first published work, "Life in India," came out in 1870, since which he has published, in 1895, "Thirty Years of Shikar." He married, second, in 1876 Alice, daughter of W. H. Smith. Address: Treglith, West Devon, Tasmania.

He was educated at Cheltenham College, whence in 1869 he passed as an Exhibitioner to Balliol College, Oxford. Having taken his degree, with a first-class in honours in 1873, he was in the following year elected to a Fellowship in Balliol College, and soon afterwards gained the Chancellor's prize for an English Essay. He was elected to a lectureship in philosophy, and continued as a teacher at Balliol until the beginning of 1882, when he became Professor of Modern Literature and History at the newly-founded University College, Liverpool. Here he remained until July 1889, when, on the resignation of Professor Nichol, he was appointed Regius Professor of English Language and Literature in the University of Glasgow. Besides various literary and philosophical articles and addresses, he is the author of an essay on Aristotle's Conception of the State.

published in Mr. Evelyn Abbott's "Heliconica." He is also the editor of the "Prolegomena to Ethics," a work left unfinished by Professor Green, who was his tutor at Oxford. Address: Glasgow University.

BRADLEY, The Very Rev. George Granville, D.D., LL.D., Dean of Westminster, is one of the sons of the Rev. Charles Bradley, who was for many years vicar of Glasbury, in the county of Brecon, and sometime incumbent of St. James's Chapel at Clapham, Surrey. He was born in 1821, and educated under the Rev. C. Pritchard at the Clapham Grammar School, and for three years under Dr. Arnold at Rugby, from which school he was elected to an open scholarship at University College, Oxford, where he was a favourite pupil of Dean Stanley, who at that time was tutor. He took his Bachelor's degree in Easter Term, 1844, as a first class in Classical Honours, and in 1845 obtained the Chancellor's prize for a Latin essay, his subject being "The Equestrian Order in the Roman Republic." Having been elected to a Fellowship in 1844, he proceeded M.A. in 1847. Mr. Bradley was one of the assistant-masters of Rugby School for some years, under Dr. Tait and his successor, Dr. Goulburn, and was elected in 1858 to the Headmastership of Marlborough College, on the preferment of his predecessor, Dr. Cotton, to the bishopric of Calcutta. Mr. Bradley was ordained deacon in 1858 by the Bishop of London, and priest in the same year by the Bishop of Salisbury. In December 1870 he was elected to the Mastership of University College, Oxford, in the place of the late Dr. Plumptre. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of St. Andrews, Feb. 25, 1873. He was appointed Examining Chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1874; was Select Preacher at Oxford, 1874-75; held the post of Hon. Chaplain to the Queen, 1874-75; and of Chaplain in Ordinary, 1876-81. In October 1880, he was nominated a Member of the Oxford University Commission, in the place of Lord Selborne, resigned. He obtained a Canonry in Worcester Cathedral in February 1881, and August in the same year he was appointed by the Crown to the Deanery of Westminster, in succession to the late Dean Stanley. The degree of D.D. was conferred upon him at Oxford, Oct. 28, 1881. In 1882 he delivered at Edinburgh a series of lectures, afterwards published under the title of "Recollections of Arthur Penrhyn Stanley," 1883. On the death of Mr. Theodore Walrond, Dr. Bradley undertook the task of preparing for publication the biography of Dean Stanley, which was finally completed by Mr. R. E. Prothero at the close of the year 1893. In 1885 he published a volume of Westminster Abbey Lectures on the Book of Ecclesiastes, and in 1887 a similar volume on the Book of Job. He is also the writer of two books on Latin Prose, which have had a large circulation. Dr. Bradley married in 1849 Marian Jane, fifth daughter of the Rev. Benjamin Philpot, formerly Rector of Great Cressingham, Norfolk. One of his daughters, Margaret L. Woods (q.v.), wife of the late President of Trinity College, Oxford, is the authoress of "A Village Tragedy," 1887, and other well-known works. Another daughter, now Mrs. A. Murray Smith, is the authoress of the "Life of Lady Arabella Stuart," published in 1886, and, with a third sister, of the "Deanery Guide" to Westminster Abbey. The Dean's eldest son, Mr. A. G. Bradley, is the author of "The Life of General Wolfe," "Sketches in Old Virginia," and other works. Addresses: The Deanery, Westminster; and Athenæum.

BRADLEY, Henry, son of John Bradley, was born at Manchester, Dec. 3, 1845, and was educated at Chesterfield Grammar School. After spending some part of his early life in teaching, he found work as a commercial clerk and foreign correspondent at Sheffield. Removing to London in 1884, he took up literary work, contributed to the Academy and the Athenæum, and was temporary editor of the Academy for a portion of the year 1884-85. He acted as President of the Philological Society from 1891 to 1893, and joined Dr. Murray as joint-editor of the Oxford English Dictionary in 1889. He is the author of: "The Story of the Goths," 1888; revised edition of "Stratmann's Middle-English Dictionary," 1891; revised editions of "Morris's Elementary Lessons in Historical English Grammar," and of "Morris's Primer of English Grammar," 1897; and he has edited the sections E., F., and G. of the Oxford English Dictionary. Address: North House, Clarendon Press, Oxford.

BRADY, Professor George Stewardson, born in 1832, at Gateshead-on-Tyne, was educated at Ackworth School, Yorkshire, Tulketh Hall, Lancashire, and at the University of Durham College of Medicine, Newcastle-upon-Tyne; M.D., and LL.D. (hon.) St. Andrews; F.R.S.; Corresponding Member of the Zoological Society of London, and Academy of Natural Science, Philadelphia, &c.; Professor of Natural History in the Durham College of Science, Newcastle-upon-Tyne; Hon. Physician to the Sunderland Infirmary. His principal published works are as follows: "A Monograph of the Recent British Ostracoda," in Transactions of the Linnean Society, 1868; "A Monograph of the Post-Tertiary Entomostraca of Scotland and Parts of England and Ireland" (Palæontographical Society, 1874—jointly with H. W. Crosskey and D. Robertson); "A Monograph of the Fossil Ostracoda of the Antwerp Crag" (Transactions of the Zoological Society of London, 1875); "A Monograph of the Free and Semiparasitic Copepoda of the British Islands," 3 vols. (Ray Society, 1877-80); "Report on the Ostracoda of the Challenger Expedition" (1880); "Report on the Copepoda of the Challenger Expedition" (1884); "A Monograph of the Marine and Fresh-Water Ostracoda of the North Atlantic and of North-Western Europe: Section I, Podocopa" (Transactions of the Royal Dublin Society, vol. iv. 1889—jointly with the Rev. Canon Norman, D.C.L.); "A Supplementary Report on the Mydocopa obtained during the Challenger Expedition" (Transactions of the Zoological Society of London, 1897); "On Ostracoda Collected in the South Sea Islands by H. B. Brady, Esq., D.C.L., F.R.S." (Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, 1889), besides numerous contributions to medical and scientific journals. Professor Brady was in practice as physician and surgeon in Sunderland from 1857 to 1892, and held the positions of Physician to the Sunderland Infirmary and to the Sunderland Children's Hospital, the Girls' Reformatory, and the Industrial School. He is now President of the "Sunderland Subscription Library and Literary Society," and of the "Sunderland Microscopical Society," and Vice-President of the "Natural History Society of Northumberland, Durham, and Newcastle-upon-Tyne." He has been twice President of the "Tyneside Naturalists' Field Club," and was a Vice-President of the International Congress of Zoologists, 1898. Address: The Durham College of Science, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

BRADY, Sir Thomas Francis, son of Patrick William Brady of Cavan, was born in July 1824, and was educated at Trinity College, Dublin. He entered the Irish Board of Public Works in 1846, and was appointed an Inspector of Irish Fisheries in 1860, which position he continued to hold until 1891. He has served as a Member of several Royal Commissions, viz., that on "Sea and Oyster Fisheries" in 1868, and the one on "Trawling" in 1884. Sir Thomas is the author of: "Digests of the Irish Fishery Laws," and is married to Annie, daughter of John Lipsett, Manor House, Ballyshannon. He received the honour of knighthood in 1886. Address: 11 Percy Place, Dublin; and Baltimore, county Cork.

BRAMLEY, Frank, A.R.A., son of Charles Bramley of Fiskerton, Lincoln, was born near Boston, Lincolnshire, on May 6, 1857, and was educated at Lincoln. He studied at the Lincoln School of Art and at Antwerp, and was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy of Arts in 1894. Amongst his works there may be mentioned: "Domino," 1886; "Eyes and no Eyes," 1887; "A Hopeless Dawn," 1888 (purchased under the terms of the Chantrey Bequest); "Saved," 1889; "For of such is the Kingdom of Heaven," 1891; "Old Memories," 1892; "After Fifty Years," 1893; "Sleep, a Portrait of Mrs. Bolitho," 1895; "After the Storm," 1896; and several portraits in 1897. Mr. Bramley was married, in 1891, to Katherine, daughter of John Graham of Huntingstile, Grasmere. Address: Huntingstile, Grasmere, Westmoreland.

BRAMWELL, Sir Frederick Joseph, Bart., D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., Past President of the Institution of Civil Engineers, youngest son of the late George Bramwell, banker, was born in the year 1818. From his earliest boyhood he showed great interest in mechanics, as evinced by his endeavours to repeat, in a rough model, the steam engines and winding machinery which he had seen at the age of nine in use in the construction of the St. Katharine's Dock. In 1834 he was apprenticed to one of the old school of mechanical engineers, John Hague, with whom he served his time, and with whom he continued for a few years as principal draughtsman; then, after a varied experience in the employment of others, in 1853 he began business on his own account as a civil engineer. In 1856 he was elected an Associate of the Institution of Civil Engineers; in 1862 was transferred to full membership of that body; in 1867 was elected a Member of its Council, and in 1884-85 had the honour of filling the position of President, having previously been, in the years 1874-75, President of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers. In 1881, on the formation of the present Ordnance Committee, he was appointed one of the two lay members of that Committee. He has also, in the exercise of his profession, and at the instance of the Government, served on several committees which have been appointed for various purposes. Having been for some years a member of the British Association, he was in 1872 made President of Section G (Mechanical Section), and was selected to refill this office on the occasion of a visit of the Association to Montreal in 1884, and was elected President of that body for the year commencing with the Bath meeting, September 1888. In 1873 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and in the year 1878 served on its Council. Having been a member of the Board of Managers of the Royal Institution for some time, he was, on the retirement of Sir William Bowman in 1885, appointed to the position of Hon. Secretary of that body. In 1884 he was nominated by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales to the position of Chairman of the Executive Council of the Inventions Exhibition which was held in the following year. On the formation of the City and Guilds of London Institute for the Advancement of Technical Education, he was appointed by the Goldsmiths' Company as one of their representatives, being at that time Prime Warden of the Company, and was elected by the Executive Committee of the Institute to be their Chairman. In 1885 he became Hon. Secretary of the Royal Institution of Great Britain. In 1881 he received the honour of knighthood in connection with his services in the promotion of technical education, and in 1886 the honorary degree of D.C.L. from Oxford. In 1889 he was created a Baronet, and in 1891 was made an honorary LL.D. of Cambridge. Addresses: 1A Hyde Park Gate, S.W.; Four Elms, Kent; 5 Great George Street, Westminster; and Athenæum.

BRAMWELL, John Milne, M.B., born at Perth, N.B., May 11, 1852, is the son of James Paton Bramwell, M.D., of Perth, and was educated at Perth Grammar School and the University of Edinburgh, where he took the degree of M.B. and C.M., 1873. Immediately after graduating, he was appointed surgeon in the Liverpool, Brazil, and River Plate Mail S.S. Co., remained a year in the Company, made three voyages to Brazil and River Plate; then he was appointed Assistant-Surgeon at the Perth City Infirmary, and subsequently settled in Goole as partner with Malcolm Morris (now Lecturer on Skin Diseases, St. Mary's Hospital, London). He has recently devoted much study to hypnotism, to which his attention was first drawn by seeing, when a child, hypnotic experiments performed by his father. He read Dr. Gregory's book on the subject, and a translation from the German book by Reichenbach, and never lost interest in the subject; but he commenced its serious study not many years ago, and has read much of the important Continental literature bearing upon it. He has twice visited Nancy, and observed the methods employed there, and at La Salpêtrière at Paris, and has also spent some time at the hypnotic clinics in Switzerland, Holland, and Sweden. The French methods of inducing hypnosis differ. He combined the two methods, and found the result far more successful than that obtained by either of the French schools, pushed hypnotic practice more boldly after returning from France, and has treated many cases. On March 28, 1890, he gave to medical men at Leeds demonstration of hypnotism as an Anæsthetic, a report of which was published in The Lancet and The British Medical Journal of April 5, 1890. Mr. Bramwell's publications are: "Extractions under Hypnotism," The Journal of the British Dental Association, March 15, 1890; an article in Health on hypnotism, May 16, 1890; "Successful Treatment of Dip-somania, Insomnia, &c., &c., and Various Diseases by Hypnotic Suggestion," 1890-92; "Alterations in the Special Senses and Induction of Anæsthesia for Operative Purposes by Suggestion in the apparently Waking State," 1892; "Hypnotism with Illustrative Cases," Transactions of the Harveian Society; "On Imperative Ideas," Brain, Parts lxx. and lxxi.; "James Braid, Surgeon and Hypnotist," ibid., Part lxxiii.; "Un Cas d'Hyperhydrosé Localisée Traité avec Succès par la Suggestion Hypnotique," Revue de l'Hypnot., 1895; "La Guérison des Obsessions par la Suggestion," ibid., 1896; "Hypnotic Anæsthesia," Practitioner, 1896; "James Braid: his Work and Writings," Proceedings of the Society of Psychological Research, 1896; "Personally Observed Hypnotic Phenomena: and What is Hypnotism?" ibid., 1896; "On the Evolution of Hypnotic Theory," Brain, Part lxxvi., 1896; "On the So-called Automatism of the Hypnotised Subject," and "On the Appreciation of Time by Somnambules," Dritter Internat. Cong. für Psychol., München, 1896; "Suggestion: its Place in Medicine and Scientific Research" ("Humane Science Lectures by Various Authors," George Bell & Sons), 1897. Address: 2 Henrietta Street, Cavendish Square, W.

BRANDES, Georg, a Danish author of Jewish family, was born at Copenhagen, Feb. 4, 1842. He studied in the University of his native city, 1859-64, applying himself first to Jurisprudence and then to philosophy and æsthetics. In 1862 he gained the gold medal of the University by an essay on "Fatalism among the Ancients," and afterwards passed the examination for his degree with the highest distinction. As soon as he had graduated he left Denmark and spent several years in different countries on the Continent. He was at Stockholm in 1865; passed the winter of 1866-67 at Paris; was in Germany in 1868; and in France and Italy in 1870-71. He published "Dualismen von nyeste Filosofi" ("The Dualism of the Philosophy of the Present Time") in 1866, with reference to the relations between science and faith—a work which exposed him to violent attacks from the orthodox party; "Æsthetic Studies," 1868; "Criticalisms and Portraits," 1870; and "French Æsthetics at the Present Day," 1870. On returning from his travels he became a private tutor in the University of Copenhagen, and delivered the series of lectures which were published at Copenhagen in 5 vols., 1872–82, under the title of "Hovedstrømninger i det 19 Aarhundredes literatur" ("The Great Literary Currents of the Nineteenth Century"), and were subsequently translated into German by himself. He has given Danish translations of John Stuart Mill's essay on the "Subjection of Women," 1869, and his "Utilitarianism," 1872; and edited "Sören Kierkegaard," 1877; and "Danske Digtere" (Danish Poets), 1877. In October 1877 Brandes left Denmark and settled in Berlin, where he diligently studied and made himself master of the German language. At Berlin he composed the biographies "Esajas Tegnér" and "Benjamin d'Israeli," both published in 1878. In the spring of the year 1883 he returned to Denmark, his fellow-countrymen having guaranteed him an income of 4000 crowns for ten years, with the single stipulation that he should deliver public lectures on literature at Copenhagen. He has further published "Ferdinand Lassalle," 1881; "Men and Works," 1883; "The Men of the Modern Literary Revival," 1883; "Ludwig Holberg," 1884; "Berlin," 1885; "Impressions of Poland," 1888; "Impressions of Russia," 1888; and 2 vols. of his "Essays," 1889. English translations of his works, edited in England and America, are "Lord Beaconsfield," 1880; "Eminent Authors of the Nineteenth Century," 1886; and "Impressions of Russia," 1889. His Study of Shakespeare in 1898 was received with much favour in England. It was principally translated by Mr. William Archer, and is worthy of a scholar who has soaked himself in Shakespereana for the last thirty years. On the disputable point of the sonnets, he supports the theory that the originator of them was the Earl of Pembroke, whose liaison with Mary Fitton he holds to be the subject of the series. He points out the change that took place in Shakespeare's plays after his patron, Lord Southampton, had been condemned for participation in Essex's rebellion—how the optimism of "Henry V." changes to the sombreness of "Lear" and "Coriolanus." The great purpose of his book is to show that Shakespeare was a man, and not a mere label for the author of some plays and poems. His contempt for the Baconian theory is marked.

BRANDIS, Sir Dietrich, Ph.D., K.C.I.E., F.R.S., son of Dr. Christian August Brandis, Professor of Philosophy at the University of Bonn, by Caroline, daughter of Bernhard Housmann, of Hanover, was born at Bonn on March 31, 1824. He was educated at the High School (Gymnasium) of Bonn, Copenhagen, and Göttingen, and from 1837 to 1839, while in Athens (where his father had been called to assist in organising the University), was educated by Dr. Ernst Curtius, now Professor at Berlin. He studied at the Universities of Copenhagen, Göttingen, and Bonn; took his degree as Doctor of Philosophy at Bonn in 1848, was lecturer on Botany at that University from 1849 to 1855; was appointed by Lord Dalhousie, then Governor-General of India, Superintendent of Forests in Pegu, which appointment he gained in January 1856. The charge of the forests of Tenasserim and Martaban was added in 1857. On the amalgamation of the provinces he was appointed Superintendent of Forests in British Burmah. In November 1862 Dr. Brandis was called to Calcutta to organise Forest administration in the provinces immediately under the Government of India, and in 1864 he was appointed Inspector-General of Forests to the Government of India. On several occasions he was deputed to assist in the organisation of Forest business in the minor Presidencies, viz., to Sind in 1868, to Bombay in 1870, and to Madras in 1881. While on furlough to recruit his health, Dr. Brandis published (in 1874) a Forest Flora of North-West and Central India. In 1878 he founded the Indian Forest School at Döhra Dün, in North-West India, for the education of natives of India for the post of forest rangers. In 1883 he retired from the service. Of his numerous official publications the most important are a "Report on the Attaran Forests," published at Calcutta in 1861, and a "Report on the Forest Administration in the Madras Presidency," published at Madras in 1883. In 1878 Dr. Brandis was created a Companion of the Indian Empire, and in 1887 the honour of a Knight Commander of the same Order was conferred upon him. In 1874 Dr. Brandis was made an Hon. Member of the Scottish Arboricultural Society, and in 1875 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. Of the numerous papers contributed by him to scientific periodicals may be mentioned: "On the Distribution of Forests in India," "Ocean Highways," 1872; "Progress of Forestry in India," Transactions, Scottish Arboricultural Society, 1884; "Regen und Wald in Indien," Deutsche Meteorologische Zeitschrift, October 1887. He is now living in retirement at Bonn, his native place.

BRANDL, Alois, German author, was born at Innsbruck, June 21, 1855, and studied at the University of Vienna, and then at Berlin under Müllenhoff and Zupitza, where he specialised in Old English. This led to his coming to England in 1879, where he studied under Sweet and Furnivall. In 1884 he became Professor of English at Prague, at Göttingen in 1888, and was called to succeed Ten Brink at Strasbourg in 1892. This post he resigned for a corresponding one in Berlin in 1895. His chief works are: "Thomas of Erceeldoune," 1881; "S. T. Coleridge und die Englische Romantik," 1886; and "Shakspeare," 1894. He has edited the Archiv für das Studium der neueren Sprachen since 1896. Berlin address: Kaiserin Augusta Strasse 73.

BRASSEY, Lord, Sir Thomas Brassey, K.C.B., D.C.L., D.L., J.P., 1st Baron, eldest son of Thomas Brassey, the well-known contractor for public works, was born at Stafford on Feb. 11, 1836, and educated at Rugby and University College, Oxford, graduating in honours in the Modern Law and History School. He was elected for Devonport in 1865, has represented Hastings from 1868 to 1886, and was appointed Civil Lord of the Admiralty in 1880, and Secretary to the Admiralty in 1884. He is the author of "Work and Wages," "Lectures on the Labour Question," "English Work and Foreign Wages," "British Seamen," "The British Navy," in 5 vols., and The Naval Annual, a serial publication, commenced in 1886. He has published numerous pamphlets on political, economical, and naval questions. Lord Brassey began his career in Parliament by seconding a motion by Mr. Thomas Hughes in 1869 for an inquiry into the Labour Laws. In 1871 he began the first of a series of speeches on Naval Administration. The subjects dealt with have included the defence of the commercial harbours, the organisation of the Comptroller's Department of the Admiralty and of the Dockyards, the principal reform advocated being a more decentralised management. In treating of ship-building policy, the objections to extreme dimensions have been strongly urged. The Question of the Naval Reserves was brought forward by Lord Brassey in Parliament on several occasions, and he succeeded in obtaining the consent of the Admiralty to the enrolment of a second class reserve, for which the fishing population would be eligible. The present strength of the force is 10,000. He also took an active part in establishing the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers. Lord Brassey moved for a select committee on the Euphrates Valley Railway in 1871 and for a Royal Commission on Marine Insurance in 1875. In 1879 he seconded Mr. Chaplain's motion for the appointment of a Royal Commission on Agriculture. In 1874-75 he served on the Royal Commission on Unseaworthy Ships, in 1885 he was appointed a member of the Commission on the Defence of the Coaling Stations, and in 1893-94 he acted as the President of the Royal Commission on Opium, which held its inquiry in India and Burmah. As a yachtsman, Lord Brassey has made many distant voyages. In 1876-77 he went round the world in the Sunbeam. In 1884 he visited the West Indies, and in 1886-87, India, Australia, and the Cape. A series of letters by him on the state of the defences of the coaling stations on the route to Australia by the Suez Canal, and to India by the Cape of Good Hope, was published in the Times. He was the first yachtsman who obtained a Board of Trade certificate for competency to navigate as master. The late Lady Brassey was the author of the well-known work, "Voyage of the Sunbeam," and other popular books of travel. She died at sea, Oct. 14, 1887. At the general election of 1886 Lord Brassey withdrew from Hastings and offered himself as a Gladstonian Liberal for one of the divisions of Liverpool. He was defeated, and on the resignation of Mr. Gladstone's Government he was raised to the peerage. Lord Brassey has taken an active part in the organisation of the Imperial Federation League. He introduced the deputation to Lord Salisbury, at whose instance the convening of the Colonial Conference of 1887 was considered by the Government. In 1895 he was appointed to the Governorship of Victoria, a position which he still occupies. He is a Younger Brother of the Trinity House, a Governor of University College, London, and a Commander of the Legion of Honour. On Sept. 8, 1890, Lord Brassey married the Hon. Sybil de Vere Capell, youngest daughter of the Viscountess Malden, and sister of the present Earl of Essex. His heir is the Hon. Thomas Brassey, born in 1862. Addresses: 24 Park Lane, W.; Normanhurst, Battle, Sussex; and Athenæum.

BREADALBANE, Marquis of, The Right Hon. Gavin Campbell, K.G., D.L., was born April 9, 1851, and succeeded his father as Earl of Breadalbane (in the Scotch Peerage) in 1871. He was educated at St. Andrews, was a Lord-in-Waiting from 1873 to 1874, Treasurer of the Queen's Household from 1880 to 1885, and Lord Steward of the Household from 1892 to 1895. He also acted as Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland from 1893 to 1895. He is a Major in the 5th Volunteer Battalion of the Royal Highlanders, and Brigadier-General of the Royal Company of Archers. Lord Breadalbane was created a Marquis in the Peerage of the United Kingdom in 1885, and was married, in 1872, to Alma, daughter of the 4th Duke of Montrose. Address: 19 Cavendish Square, W.; and Taymouth Castle, Perthshire.

BREAL, Michel Jules Alfred, a French philologist, was born at Landau, Bavaria, of French parentage, March 26, 1832. He received his early education in France, and studied Sanskrit at Berlin, under Professors Bopp and Weber. Returning to Paris, he joined the staff at the Bibliothèque Impériale, and in 1862 obtained the Academy's prize for his "L'Étude des Origines de la Religion Zoroastrienne." In 1864 he was made Professor of Comparative Grammar at the College of France. M. Breal was elected a Member of the Institute, Dec. 3, 1875, and made Director at the École des Hautes Études. In 1879 he was appointed Inspector-General of Public Instruction for secondary education. He retired in 1888, but still keeps his position as a member of the Council of Higher Education in France. He was made a Commander of the Legion of Honour in 1890. Among his works are: "Hercule et Cacus, Étude de Mythologie comparée," 1863; translation of the "Bopp's Grammaire comparée des Langues Indo-Européennes," 1867-72; "Quelques Mots sur l'Instruction publique en France," 1872; "L'Enseignement de la Langue Française," 1878; "Excursions pédagogiques," 1880; "La Réforme de l'orthographe Française," 1890. Address: 70 Rue d'Assas, Paris.

BREITMANN, Hans. See LELAND, CHARLES GODFREY.

BRETT, Hon. Reginald Baliol, C.B., was born in London, June 30, 1852, and is the eldest son of Lord Esher, Master of the Rolls. He was educated at Cheam School, in Surrey, and at Eton, and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1874, and took his M.A. degree in 1877. At the end of that year he was appointed private secretary to the Marquis of Hartington, then the leader of the Liberal party. At the general election in 1880, Mr. Brett was returned to Parliament for Falmouth, defeating Sir Julius Vogel, the late Prime Minister of New Zealand. Mr. Brett continued for a time to act as unpaid secretary to the Marquis of Hartington, who was appointed Secretary of State for India in Mr. Gladstone's Government. At the general election of 1885 Mr. Brett contested Plymouth, and was defeated by Sir Edward Clarke, M.P. In 1895 he was appointed Secretary to H.M. Office of Works, and in June 1897, was created a Companion of the Bath. Mr. Brett is the author of "Footprints of Statesmen," 1892, "The Yoke of Empire," and of many articles on historical and political subjects in the Fortnightly Review and the Nineteenth Century. In September 1879 he married Eleanor, the youngest daughter of M. Sylvain Van de Weyer, one of the founders of Belgian independence, a member of the Provisional Government of 1830, and for many years subsequently Belgian Minister at the Court of St. James. Addresses: 2 Tilney Street, Mayfair; Orchard Lea, Windsor Forest; The Roman Camp, Callander.

BREUL, Karl Hermann, was born at Hanover, Aug. 10, 1860, and educated from 1868 to 1878 at the Lyceum of his native town. From 1878 to 1883 he studied at the Universities of Tübingen, Strassburg, under Ten Brink, and Berlin, where he took his degree of Ph.D. in 1883. In that year he went to Paris and studied under Gaston, Paris, and translated Tobler's work on "Old and Modern French Versification." In June 1884 he was appointed University Lecturer on German at Cambridge, and in 1886 the degree of M.A. (honoris causa) was conferred upon him. He was appointed Lecturer in German at Newnham and Girton Colleges in 1885, and in 1897 he obtained the degree of Litt.D., and was appointed Secretary to the Special Board of Medieval and Modern Languages. He has examined for the Universities of Cambridge, Oxford, London, Victoria, Ireland (Royal), and the London Chamber of Commerce. Since 1897 he has acted as German sub-editor of The Modern Quarterly, the organ of the Modern Language Association, of which he has been a prominent member from its commencement in 1893. Dr. Breul is an enthusiastic supporter of the teaching of modern languages as living tongues, and is in thorough accord with those teachers who are endeavouring to introduce the more scientific educational methods of Germany into England. His chief publications are: "Le Dit de Robert le Diable" (Halle, 1895); "A Bibliographical Guide to the Study of German" (London, 1895); editions of German classics, such as "Das Bild des Kaisers," "Wilhelm Tell," "Maria Stuart," "Wallenstein" (Cambridge University Press, 1888-96); "Die Frauencollegen an der Universität Cambridge" (1891). Address: Engelmere, Cambridge.

BREWER, David Josiah, American jurist, is the son of an American missionary to Turkey, and was born at Smyrna, in Asia Minor, June 20, 1837. He graduated from Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut, in 1856, and from the Law School at Albany, New York, in 1858. He established himself in his profession at Leavenworth, Kansas, in 1859, and resided there until he removed to Washington to enter upon his duties in the Supreme Court of the United States. In 1862-65 he was Judge of the Probate and Criminal Courts of Leavenworth County; from 1865 to 1869, Judge of the District Court, and in 1870 was elected a Justice of the Supreme Court of his State, being re-elected in 1875 and 1882. In 1884 he was appointed Judge of the United States Circuit Court for the Eighth District, and was appointed a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States in December 1889. In 1896 he was appointed a member of the Venezuela Boundary Commission, of which he was unanimously elected President.

BRIALMONT, General Alexis Henri, a Belgian military engineer, and writer on military subjects, son of General Laurent Mathieu Brialmont, was born at Venloo, in the province of Limburg, May 25, 1821. He quitted the military school at Brussels with the rank of sub-lieutenant in 1843. Being connected, as an engineer officer, with the management of the fortifications, he was appointed to carry out the works at the fortress of Diest. From 1847 to 1850 he was private secretary to General Chazal, then Minister of War. In 1855 he left the corps of engineers and became a member of the staff, attaining to the rank of Captain in 1857. In due course he became Major-General, and in 1877 Lieutenant-General. He was appointed Inspector-General of Fortifications and of the Sappers and Miners in Belgium in 1875. Lieut.-General Brialmont has written many works on military history and tactics. The following are the principal: "Eloge de la Guerre, ou réfutation des doctrines des Amis de la Paix," 1 vol. in 12mo, 1894; "Précis d'Art militaire," 4 vols. in 12mo, 1850; "Considérations politiques et militaires sur la Belgique," 3 vols. in 8vo, 1851-52; "Histoire du Duc de Wellington," 3 vols. in 8vo, 1856; "Agrandissement général d'Anvers," 1 vol. in 8vo, with atlas, 1858; "Complément de l'Œuvre de 1830," 1 vol. in 8vo, 1860; "Études sur la Défense des États et sur la Fortification," 3 vols. in 8vo, with atlas, 1863; "Études sur l'Organisation des Armées," 1 vol. in 8vo, 1867; "Traité de Fortification polygonale," 2 vols. gr. in 8vo, with atlas, 1869; "La Fortification à fossés secs," 2 vols. gr. in 8vo, with atlas, 1872; "La Fortification improvisée," 1 vol. in 12mo, 1870; "Études sur la Fortification des Capitales et l'investissement des Camps retranchés," 1 vol. gr. in 8vo, 1873; "La Défense des États et les Camps retranchés," 1 vol. in 8vo, 1876; "La Fortification du champ de bataille," 1 vol. gr. in 8vo, with atlas, 1879; "Manuel de Fortification de Campagne," 1 vol. in 8vo, 1879; "Étude sur les Formations de Combat de l'Infanterie, l'attaque et la défense des positions retranchées," 1 vol. in 8vo, 1880; "Tactique des trois Armées," 2 vols. in 8vo, with atlas, 1881; "Situation militaire de la Belgique, travaux de défense de la Meuse," 1 vol. in 8vo, 1882; "Le général Todleben, sa vie et ses travaux," 1 vol. in 12mo, 1884; "La Fortification du temps présent," 2 vols. gr. in 8vo, with atlas, 1885; "Influence du Tir plongeant et des Obus-torpilles sur la Fortification," 1 vol. gr. in 8vo, with atlas, 1888; "Les régions fortifiées," 1 vol. gr. in 8vo, with atlas, 1890; and forty pamphlets on political and military subjects, published from 1846 to 1890. General Brialmont made the principal fortifications of Antwerp in 1858; the fortifications of Bucharest in 1883, as well as those of Liège, and of Namur in 1887.

BRIDGE, Sir John, J.P., born in 1824, was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1850. Appointed a Police Magistrate at the Bow Street Court in 1872, he became Chief Police Magistrate for London in 1890, and in the same year he received the honour of knighthood. Sir John was married in 1857 to Ada Louisa, daughter of George Bridge. Addresses: 50 Inverness Terrace, W.; Headley Grove, Epsom; and Athenæum.

BRIDGE, Sir (John) Frederick, Mus.D., F.R.C.O., Organist at Westminster Abbey, son of John Bridge, was born Dec. 5, 1844, at Oldbury, Worcestershire, educated at Rochester Cathedral School under John Hopkins, and afterwards became a pupil of Sir John Goss. He was appointed Organist of Holy Trinity Church, Windsor, in 1865; of Manchester Cathedral in 1869; Professor of Harmony at Owens College, Manchester, in 1871; Permanent Deputy Organist of Westminster Abbey in 1875; and succeeded to the full offices of Master of the Choristers and Organist in 1882. He is also Professor of Harmony and Counterpoint at the Royal College of Music. Sir John Bridge has composed the oratorio "Mount Moriah," a cantata, "Boadicea," "Hymn to the Creator" (the song of St. Francis), produced at the Worcester Festival, 1884; "Rock of Ages" (Latin translated by Mr. Gladstone), produced at the Birmingham Festival, 1885; "Callirhoë" at the Birmingham Festival, 1889; church music and part songs. He is the author of theoretical works on Counterpoint, Double Counterpoint, and Canon, and "Organ Accompaniment"—all published in Novello's series of Primers. He wrote an oratorio for the Worcester Festival of 1890, and has composed "The Inchcape Rock" and other works for various societies. He was appointed Gresham Professor of Music in 1891. His last work is a Primer, entitled "Musical Gestures," which is a new system of teaching the rudiments of music by Manual Exercises. On Sir Joseph Barnby's death in 1896, he was appointed Conductor of the Royal Choral Society. For the concert which concluded the season, and which was made the occasion of a celebration of the Jubilee, he set Mr. Rudyard Kipling's ballad, "The Flag of England," to music. He was knighted by her Majesty on the occasion of the Diamond Jubilee, 1897. Address: The Cloisters, Westminster Abbey, S.W.

BRIDGES, Robert, M.A., M.B. Oxon., poet, the son of I. T. Bridges, of St. Nicholas Court, Isle of Thanet, was born on Oct. 23, 1844, and was educated at Eton and Corpus Christi College, Oxford, of which latter foundation he is an Hon. Fellow. On leaving Oxford he pursued the study of medicine at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London, and eventually became Assistant Physician at the Children's Hospital, in Great Ormond Street, and Physician at the Great Northern Hospital. He retired from his medical duties in 1882. Dr. Bridges has a considerable reputation as a poet, and has published numerous plays and poems, the latter having been often privately printed at the Rev. Mr. Daniell's private printing press, Worcester College, Oxford. He is also the author of "An Essay on Milton's Poems," and "A Critical Essay on Keats." He was married in 1884 to Mary, eldest daughter of Alfred Waterhouse, R.A. Address: Yattendon, Newbury.

BRIGGS, Charles Augustus, D.D., was born in New York City, Jan. 15, 1841. He was educated at the University of Virginia (1857-60), and at the Union Theological Seminary, New York City (1861-63), studying afterwards at the University of Berlin under Dorner and Rüdiger (1868-69). From 1870 to 1874 he was pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Rosselle, N. J., and since 1874 he has held a Professorship at the Union Theological Seminary. On his transferral in 1891 from the chair of Hebrew and Cognate Languages to that of Biblical Theology, he made an Address on "Authority of Holy Scripture" that provoked considerable controversy on the inerrancy of the Bible, and ultimately (in 1893) caused his suspension by the American Presbyterian Church from the ministry. He retains his Professorship, however, as the trustees and faculty of the seminary have sustained him in the controversy. He has nevertheless recently formally withdrawn from the Presbyterian Church, and applied for orders as a Protestant Episcopal clergyman. His principal publications, in addition to contributions to periodicals, are: "Biblical Study," 1883; "American Presbyterianism," 1885; "Messianic Prophecy," 1886; "Whither?" 1889; "Biblical History," 1890; "Authenticity of Holy Scripture," 1891; "The Messiah of the Gospels," 1894; "The Messiah of the Apostles," 1895. He was one of the translators of the Commentaries on the Psalms and Ezra in the "American Lange Series."

BRIGHT, The Right Hon. Jacob, M.P., son of the late Mr. Jacob Bright and brother of the late Right Hon. John Bright, was born in 1821, and educated at the Friends' School, York. He sat for Manchester from 1867 to 1874, and again from 1876 to November 1885, when he was defeated; he was returned in 1886, and again in 1892, for the South-West Division of Manchester. He retired in 1895. Mr. Jacob Bright has identified himself with the chief Radical movements of his time, and has for many years been in favour of Home Rule for Ireland. He obtained the Municipal vote for women in 1869, and has always supported their efforts to obtain the Parliamentary vote. He has, in fact, been one of the most thorough supporters of women in all that concerns their property and their status. In 1883 he succeeded in preventing the ratification of a treaty which proposed to give both banks of the Congo to Portugal. Mr. Gladstone then made the unprecedented promise that the treaty should not be ratified without the consent of the House of Commons. Nothing more was heard of the treaty, and shortly afterwards freedom of commerce on the Congo was secured by the African Conference at Berlin. Mr. Jacob Bright is a Director of the Manchester Ship Canal. He is Chairman of John Bright & Brothers of Rochdale. He married in 1855 Ursula, daughter of Joseph Mellor, merchant, of Liverpool. Address: 31 St. James's Place, S.W.

BRIGHT, James Franck, D.D., Master of University College, Oxford, was born in St. James's, Westminster, on May 29, 1832, and is the third son of Dr. Richard Bright of Guy's Hospital. He was educated at Rugby, and matriculated at University College at the age of eighteen. He was in the first class in Law and History in 1854; B.A., 1855; M.A., 1858; B.D. and D.D., 1884. From 1856 to 1872 he was an assistant master at Marlborough College, and at the head of its Modern Department; and returned to his College in 1872, when he became Lecturer and Tutor in Divinity and Modern History at Balliol, and Modern History Lecturer at University. In 1874 he was elected a Fellow of his College, in 1875 Dean, in 1877 Tutor, in 1881 Master. From 1872 to 1875 he was Modern History Lecturer at University; from 1873 to 1875 at Wadham and Queen's; from 1875 to 1881 at New College; from 1873 to 1875 Lecturer and Tutor at Corpus Christi; and from 1872 to 1882 Lecturer and Tutor in Divinity and Modern History at Balliol. In 1877 he was appointed an Hon. Fellow of Balliol. He has been History Examiner on numerous occasions, and is the author of the well-known text-book, "A History of England," in 4 vols. In 1897 he published lives of Maria Theresa and Joseph II. He married in 1864 Emmeline Theresa, daughter of the Rev. E. D. Wickham, Vicar of Holmwood. Addresses: University College, Oxford; and Athenæum.

BRIGHT, Canon William, D.D., Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History, and Canon and Sub-Dean of Christ Church, Oxford, was born at Doncaster Dec. 14, 1824, and is the son of William Bright, Town Clerk of Doncaster. From Rugby School he was elected scholar of University College, Oxford, where he graduated in the first class in Classics in 1846. The next year he was elected a Fellow of his College, and gained the Johnson Theological Scholarship and the Ellerton Theological Prize, and in 1849 he proceeded M.A. Applying himself to the study of divinity, he was ordained deacon in 1848, and priest in 1850, and in the succeeding year became theological tutor in Trinity College, Glenalmond. He returned to Oxford in 1859, and was afterwards appointed Tutor of University College. He was promoted in 1868 to the Regius Professorship of Ecclesiastical History, and to the canonry of Christ Church, which is attached to that chair. The University conferred upon him the degree of D.D. in 1869. He became Proctor for the Chapter in Convocation in 1878, and on subsequent occasions, and was Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Lincoln, 1885-93. Dr. Bright's works are: "Ancient Collects selected from Various Rituals," 1857, 1867; "A History of the Church, from the Edict of Milan to the Council of Chalcedon," 1860, 1868; "Select Sermons of St. Leo on the Incarnation, with his 'Tome,' translated with notes," 1862, 1866; "Faith and Life: Readings from Ancient Writers," 1864, 1866. In 1865 he published, in collaboration with the Rev. P. G. Medd, M.A., a Latin version of the Book of Common Prayer; "Hymns and other Verses," 1866 and 1874; reprints of "Eusebius's Ecclesiastical History," "St. Athanasius's Orations against the Arians," "Socrates's Ecclesiastical History," "Select Anti-Pelagian Treatises of St. Augustine," and "St. Athanasius's Historical Writings," with introductions, in 1872, 1873, 1878, 1880, 1881, 1882, 1883, 1893; "Chapters of Early English Church History," 1878, 1888, 1897; "Later Treatises of St. Athanasius, translated with Notes and Appendix," in the "Library of the Fathers," 1881; "Notes on the Canons of the First Four General Councils," 1882, 1892; "Private Prayers for a Week," 1882; "Family Prayers for a Week," 1885; "Iona, and Other Verses," 1886; "Addresses on the Seven Sayings from the Cross," 1887; "The Incarnation as a Motive Power," 1889, 1891; "Lessons from the Lives of Three Great Fathers, 1890-91; "Morality in Doctrine," 1892; "Waymarks in Church History," 1894; "The Roman See in the Early Church, and other Studies in Church History," 1896; "The Law of Faith," 1898. Address: Christ Church, Oxford.

BRISSON, Eugène Henri, a French politician, was born July 31, 1835, at Bourges, and is the son of a lawyer in that city, studied law in Paris, and entered the profession in 1859. He wrote for the Temps and the Avenir National, and established in 1868, in conjunction with MM. Lacour and Allain-Targé, the Revue Politique. As a democratic candidate at the elections in 1869 he was unsuccessful in obtaining a seat in the Corps Législatif, but after the Revolution of Sept. 4, 1870, he was appointed Deputy Mayor of Paris by the Government for the National Defence. This position he resigned on October 3. On Feb. 8, 1871, he was elected as representative of the Seine in the Assembly, and submitted a proposition of amnesty for all political crimes. At the general elections in February 1876, he was elected for the tenth arrondissement of Paris, and followed in the new Chamber the same political line. He was one of the 363 deputies who refused a vote of confidence to the Broglie Cabinet. At the opening of the session of 1879 M. Brisson was elected Vice-President, and was named President of the Budget Commission on February 27 of the same year. He succeeded M. Gambetta as President of the Chamber, Nov. 3, 1881, and was re-elected in 1883. He accepted the office of Prime Minister on the fall of M. Ferry in 1885, but after a few months gave place to M. de Freycinet. At the elections of September 1889, he was the only Republican candidate elected in Paris, "au premier tour du scrutin." In the autumn of 1890 he put forward proposals for compelling religious bodies to pay up considerable arrears due from them under the new laws relating to church property. These proposals caused considerable discussion in the newspapers. In 1892 he brought forward a plan for completely reorganising the French naval forces, but the Naval Budget Committee refused to support him against the existing Ministry. He was one of the candidates for the Presidency of the French Republic in June 1894, and stood second in the poll, receiving 195 votes to M. Casimir-Périer's 451. In 1896 he was elected President of the Chamber of Deputies, and his firm action during the difficult days of the Zola trial (1897) has been much admired throughout France. At the beginning of the new Parliament in May 1898, he was defeated on the re-election of President by M. Paul Deschanel, a moderate Republican (q.v.). M. Brisson is well known for the Spartan nature of his Republicanism; his address in Paris is Rue Mazagran 9, and he lives on the fifth floor in a bare flat that the Iron Duke would have admired. He has never been known to take a cab, but always travels on the outside of omnibuses. In fact, he is the living embodiment in France of what we should call the Nonconformist conscience. His mission in life is to preside over Commissions of Inquiry, especially when scandals have to be investigated with inflexible severity. His presidency of the Panama Commission was appreciated by all. When the Méline Cabinet fell in June 1898, after MM. Peytral, Sarrien, and Ribot (q.v.) had failed to form cabinets, M. Brisson was commissioned by the President to undertake this duty, which he carried to a successful issue. His combination was a Radical one, and included MM. Cavaignac, Sarrien, Delcassé, and Bourgeois (q.v.). With a courage that merits all honour, M. Brisson and his colleagues persisted in their patriotic work of vindicating before the civilised world the unimpeachable integrity and absolute justice of the national conscience. As the weeks dragged their weary course, the tension of the situation became dangerously strained, and special means had to be adopted to preserve public order. On the Chamber reassembling on Oct. 25, 1898, the Government was violently assailed, and received a sudden blow by the dramatic and reprehensible resignation of General Chanoine (q.v.), the new Minister of War. After a series of votes affirming the supremacy of the civil over the military power, declaring continued confidence in the army, and rejecting by 274 votes to 261 a motion censuring the Government for "not causing the army to be respected," the Chamber, on the motion of M. de Malny, called upon the Government to institute prosecutions against persons "insulting the army." This proceeding M. Brisson declined to take, and the subsequent vote of confidence in the Government was lost by 286 to 254—an extraordinary majority. M. Brisson and his ministers immediately withdrew from the Chamber, and tendered their resignations, which were at once accepted by M. Faure, Parliament being adjourned till November 4, when M. Charles Dupuy returned to office. Thus fell a Government which will be famed hereafter for its determined effort to free the nation from an aggressive militarism.

BRISTOL, Bishop of. See BROWNE, THE RIGHT REV. GEORGE FORREST.

BROADBENT, Sir William Henry, Bart., M.D., F.R.S., the son of John Broadbent, of Longwood Edge, Huddersfield, was born in Yorkshire on Jan. 23, 1835, and was educated at Huddersfield College, Owens College, Manchester, and Paris. He has been Physician to the Western General Dispensary, the London Fever Hospital, and St. Mary's Hospital, of which last-named institution he is now a consulting physician. He has occupied the position of President of the Harveian Society of London, of the Medical Society of London in 1881, of the Clinical Society during the years 1887-88, and of the Neurological Society from 1895 to 1896. He has, moreover, served as Censor of the Royal College of Physicians of London during the years 1888-89 and 1895-96. Since 1892 Sir William has been Physician-in-Ordinary to the Prince of Wales, and he attended both the Duke of Clarence, on the occasion of his fatal illness in 1892, and also the Duke of York, who went through a severe attack of typhoid fever in 1891. He is the author of "The Pulse," 1890; "The Heart," 1897. In 1893 he was created a Baronet, and he has a son and heir, John, born 1865. Sir William Broadbent was in July 1898 appointed one of her Majesty's Physicians Extraordinary, in the room of Sir Richard Quain, M.D., deceased. Address: 84 Brook Street, Grosvenor Square.

BROADHURST, Henry, M.P., J.P., son of a journeyman stonemason, was born at Littlemore, near Oxford, on April 30, 1840, and received some education at a village school there. He worked as a journeyman stonemason up to the year

1872, when he became Secretary of the Labour Representation League. In 1875 he was appointed Secretary of the Parliamentary Committee of the Trades Union Congress, but resigned through ill-health in 1890. During the agitation on the Eastern Question he took a leading part in the organisation of meetings, &c., in support of Mr. Gladstone's policy. He was elected Member of Parliament for Stoke-on-Trent in 1880; was a member of the Royal Commission on Reformatories and Industrial Schools in 1881-82; served on the Royal Commission on the Housing of the Working Classes in 1884-85; and at the general election of 1885 he was returned for the Bordesley Division of Birmingham. In February 1886 he was appointed Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department in Mr. Gladstone's Ministry. At the general election of 1886 he successfully stood for West Nottingham, but was not re-elected in 1892. He took a leading part in the passing of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, and many other measures affecting the industrial classes. He is the author of the Leasehold Enfranchisement Bill, and during the sessions of 1884-85 he had charge of the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill. He is also a prominent advocate of Old Age Pensions. He has served on the Royal Commission on the Condition of the Aged Poor. He resigned his seat on the Market Royal Commission, and has been twice offered important Inspectorships which he has refused—the first occasion being in 1882, when he declined an Inspectorship of Factories and Workshops; the second in 1884, when he declined one of Canal Boats. He was elected Member of Parliament for Leicester in 1894, on the occasion of the double vacancy caused by the retirement of Sir T. Whitehead and Mr. T. A. Picton, and now represents that constituency. In the Eastern Counties he holds many important public positions. Address: Cromer.

BROCK, Thomas, R.A., sculptor, was born in 1847 at Worcester, where his father, William Brock, was a decorator. He was educated first at the Government School of Design in that city, then came to London and studied at the Royal Academy, where he obtained both silver and gold medals. He became a pupil and afterwards an assistant of the late J. H. Foley, the sculptor. After Mr. Foley's death he completed the numerous works left unfinished by him, the chief of these being the O'Connell monument in Dublin. Among Mr. Brock's ideal works may be mentioned "Salmacis," "Hercules strangling Antæus," statuettes of Paris and Cneph, and a large equestrian group, "A Moment of Peril," purchased for the nation by the Royal Academy. He exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1889 "The Genius of Poetry." Among portrait statues may be named Richard Baxter, Robert Raikes, Sir Rowland Hill, Sir Richard Temple, Sir Erasmus Wilson, the poet Longfellow (the latter for the Westminster Abbey Memorial), Sir Richard Owen, a bronze, now in the Natural History Museum, South Kensington; Dr. Phillpotts, a marble bust in Worcester Cathedral; Lord Bowen; Lord Derby; Sir Richard Quain. In the Royal Academy's Exhibition of 1898 he had no less than five sculptures, including a statue of Eve, and a bronze bust of Henry Tate, Esq., to be placed in the National Gallery of British Art. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy Jan. 16, 1883; R.A. in 1891. Address: 30 Osnaburgh Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

BRODRICK, The Hon. George Charles, LL.B., D.C.L., Warden of Merton College, Oxford, is the second son of the seventh Viscount Middleton, formerly Dean of Exeter, and was born at Castle Rising, Norfolk, May 5, 1831. He was educated at Eton School, and at Balliol College, Oxford, taking his degree in 1854 (first-class Mods., 1852; first-class Lit. Hum., 1853; Law and History School, 1854; English Essay Prize and Arnold Historical Essay, 1855). He was elected a Fellow of Merton College in 1855. He was President of the Union Debating Society. He also carried off, in 1858, the Law Scholarship at the University of London, where he took the degree of LL.B. In 1885 he was created D.C.L. of Oxford by a University decree. He was called to the Bar from Lincoln's Inn in 1859, and for some years practised as a barrister on the Western circuit. In conjunction with Mr. Freemantle (now Dean of Ripon) he edited, in 1865, "The Ecclesiastical Judgments of the Privy Council." In 1877 Mr. Brodrick was unanimously elected by the School Board for London to fill a death vacancy, being the first member so elected. He long served on the Council of the London Society for the Extension of University Teaching, and he is a member of the governing body of Eton College. He took an active part in promoting the University Tests Act, and other measures of academical, and generally of educational interest. In 1868, and again in 1874, he contested the borough of Woodstock as a Liberal candidate, and in 1880 he was a candidate for the undivided county of Monmouthshire. In February 1881, he was elected Warden of Merton College in the place of the late Dr. Bullock-Marsham. Mr. Brodrick is known to have contributed largely, but for the most part anonymously, to the daily Press and leading periodicals. A selection of articles published under his own name, together with two more elaborate treatises on "Primogeniture" and "Local Government," and other occasional essays, were republished in a volume entitled "Political Studies" in 1880. In the following year he published a work entitled "English Land and English Landlords," being an inquiry into the origin, structure, and proposed reform of the English Land system; and he afterwards discussed the Irish Land question, and the claim of Tenant-right for British farmers, in three articles which appeared in Fraser's Magazine for 1881-82. Mr. Brodrick is also the author of articles on "The Progress of Democracy in England," and "Democracy and Socialism," which appeared in the Nineteenth Century during 1883 and 1884. His latest contributions to literature are mainly connected with academical history, including a volume entitled "Memorials of Merton College," 1885; a compendious "History of the University of Oxford," 1886; and several papers on kindred subjects. Since the adhesion of the late Mr. Gladstone to Home Rule in 1886, Mr. Brodrick has been an active member of the Liberal Unionist party. Addresses: Merton College, Oxford, &c.; and Athenæum.

BRODRICK, The Right Hon. William St. John Freemantle, M.P., eldest son of Viscount Midleton, and nephew of the Hon. G. C. Brodrick, Warden of Merton College, was born in 1856 and educated in Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. 1879, and M.A. 1882. He was also President of the Oxford Union Debating Society. He represented West Surrey in the Parliaments of 1880-85, and after the passing of the Redistribution Act successfully stood for the Guildford Division of the county, which he still represents. He served on the Royal Commission on Prisons in Ireland, 1883-85. In Lord Salisbury's second Administration, 1886-92, Mr. Brodrick was appointed Financial Secretary to the War Office. It was on his motion that Lord Rosebery's Government was overthrown in June 1895, and he was appointed Under-Secretary of State for War, with charge of the War Office business in the House of Commons, July 1895. He was raised to the Privy Council in 1897, and in October 1898 was appointed Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in succession to Lord Curzon. He married Lady Hilda Charteris, third daughter of the Earl of Wemyss, in 1880. Addresses: Peper-Harrow, Godalming; 54 Portland Place, W., and Athenæum.

BROOKE, The Rev. Augustus Stopford, born in Dublin in 1832, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he gained the Downe prize and the Vice-Chancellor's prize for English verse. He graduated B.A. in 1856 and M.A. in 1858. He was curate of St. Matthew, Marylebone, 1857-59; curate of Kensington, 1860-63; minister of St. James's Chapel, York Street, St. James's Square, 1866-75; and became minister of Bedford Chapel, Bloomsbury, June 1876. He was appointed a Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen in 1872. Mr. Brooke is the author of "Life and Letters of the late Frederick W. Robertson," 1865; "Theology in the English Poets," 1874; "Primer of English Literature," and four volumes of "Sermons," 1868-77; "The Early Life of Jesus," a volume of poems 1888; a "History of English Poetry," a standard study of Tennyson, 1894; and "The Old Testament and Modern Life," 1896. In 1880 he seceded from the Church of England, his reason for this step being that he had ceased to believe that miracles were credible, and that, since the Established Church founded its whole scheme of doctrine on the miracle of the Incarnation, disbelief in that miracle put him outside the doctrines of the Church of England. Mr. Brooke then joined the Unitarian Church, and officiated for some years at Bedford Chapel, Bloomsbury. In 1895, after prolonged illness, he resigned this position.

BROOKE, Sir Charles Anthony, G.C.M.G., born in 1829, son of Sir James Brooke, the famous first Rajah of Sarawak, was educated at Crewkerne Grammar School, and passed into the Royal Navy, where he rose to be a Lieutenant. He succeeded his father as 2nd Rajah of Sarawak in 1868, and has since ruled that state with the same skill and success. He was created a G.C.M.G. in 1888. He married Margaret, daughter of Clayton de Windt, of Blunsden Hall, Wiltshire. Addresses: Sarawak, Borneo; and 12 Hans Place, S.W.

BROOME, Mary Ann, Lady (formerly Lady Barker, under which name most of her books were published), is the eldest daughter of the late W. G. Stewart, Esq., Island Secretary of Jamaica, in which island she was born. Sent to England at two years old, she returned to Jamaica in 1850. In 1852 she married Captain (afterwards Colonel) G. R. Barker, Royal Artillery, who distinguished himself very highly in the Crimean war and the Indian Mutiny, and was made K.C.B. for services in the field. Lady Barker went to India to join Sir George in 1860, but he died that year, and she returned to England.

In 1865 Lady Barker married the late Mr. Frederick Napier Broome, then of Canterbury, New Zealand, and accompanied him back to the Middle Island. In 1869 Mr. Napier Broome and his wife returned to England. "Station Life in New Zealand," from her pen, was published in that year, and its success encouraged the author to write, in the following year, a small volume for children called "Stories About." This second work was soon followed by "A Christmas Cake in Four Quarters," "Spring Comedies," "Travelling About," "Holiday Stories," "Ribbon Stories," "Sybil's Book," "Station Amusements in New Zealand," "Boys," "The White Rat," &c., besides many articles for magazines. In 1874 she published also a little book called "First Principles of Cooking," of which the circulation has been large, and almost immediately after its appearance she accepted the post of Lady Superintendent of the National Training School of Cookery, South Kensington. She was also for some years editor of Evening Hours, a family magazine. Mr. Napier Broome having entered the Colonial service in 1875, her next experiences were of South Africa and Mauritius. Her life in the former country is described in "A Year's Housekeeping in South Africa," 1877. In 1883, her husband having been appointed Governor of Western Australia, she went to that colony, which is described in her last published book, "Letters to England," 1885. On leaving Western Australia in 1890, Lady Broome received an affectionate farewell from the people of the colony, by whom she was greatly beloved. Sir Frederick Napier Broome, K.C.M.G., died on Nov. 26, 1896.

BROS, James, son of Thomas Bros, barrister, was born in 1841, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1866. He was appointed a Police Magistrate at the Clerkenwell Court in 1888. Address: 31 Elm Park Gardens, S.W.

BROUARDEL, Paul Camille Hippolyte, French doctor and authority on forensic medicine, was born at St. Quentin, Feb. 13, 1837, educated at the Lycée St. Louis at Paris, and attained the doctorate in 1865. He became Physician at the Hôpital St. Antoine in 1873, was made Professor of Forensic Medicine in 1879, and elected a member of the Academy of Medicine in 1880, of which he is now the dean. He succeeded Wurtz in 1884 as President of the Consulting Committee of Public Hygiene in France. He is often called upon to give evidence in the courts of law on delicate points of forensic medicine. He has also travelled on medical missions, notably to Germany in 1883, to study trichinosis, on which he published important reports. He was made a Commander of the Legion of Honour in 1885. His chief works are: "L'Urée et la Fole," 1877; "Études Médico-Légales sur la Combustion du Corps humain," 1878; "Des Causes d'erreur dans les Expertises Relatives aux Attentats à la Pudeur," 1883; "Le Secret Médical," 1886, dealing with a case arising out of the death of the painter Bastien Lepage; besides works in collaboration with eminent men of science. Recently he has published "L'Infanticide," and "La Mort et la Mort Soudaine," 1897, and "La Responsabilité Médicale," 1898.

BROUGH, Miss Fanny, actress, a daughter of Robert Brough, was born in the fifties. She first made her appearance on the boards, being then quite young, at the Princess's Theatre, Manchester, in Mr. Calvert's company, staying there two years, and once taking the rôle of Ophelia to Mr. Barry Sullivan's Hamlet. She made her first appearance in London at the St. James's Theatre as Fernande in the autumn of 1890, and afterwards at the same house took other parts in the "Two Thorns" and "War," and, during Mrs. John Wood's management, played in many comedies, and in the "Caste" Company took many leading parts. She was engaged in many provincial tours, and came back to the Princess's and Drury Lane in various characters. She played the part of Mrs. Othello at Toole's Theatre in 1893, and appeared at a set of morning performances at the Lyric on April 5, 1894. One of her latest notable performances was in "The Eider-down Quilt," produced by Mr. Playfair in 1896.

BROUGH, Lionel, comedian, was born at Pontypool, Monmouthshire, March 10, 1836, being the fourth son of Mr. Barnabas Brough, and a younger brother of the well-known comic authors, "The Brothers Brough." His first employment was in the capacity of office-boy to Mr. J. Timbs, in the Illustrated London News office, in Douglas Jerrold's time. Subsequently he published the first number of the Daily Telegraph, and for five years he was connected with the Morning Star. Going to Liverpool with other members of the Savage Club to give amateur theatrical performances in aid of the Lancashire Relief Fund, he achieved so decided a histrionic success that he was offered a regular engagement by Mr. A. Henderson, and accordingly made his first professional appearance at the Prince of Wales's Theatre at Liverpool in 1864. His first appearance in London was at the Queen's Theatre in 1867. Mr. Brough was manager of Covent Garden Theatre for Mr. Dion Boucicault during the season in which "Babil and Bijou" was produced. He afterwards became, for a short time, joint lessee of the Novelty Theatre, Great Queen Street. For the last thirty years he has played a round of the principal "low comedy" parts in almost every important theatre in London and the provinces; in comic opera, farce, burlesque, plays, &c., and particularly in most of the "Old Comedy" revivals. It is on record that he has played Tony Lumpkin in "She Stoops to Conquer," 776 times. He has also played in America, and some years ago played a répertoire of thirty-eight pieces through all the principal towns in South Africa. Mr. Brough has been engaged for some time at the Haymarket and her Majesty's Theatres under the management of Mr. Beerbohm Tree, playing in all the principal productions during a series of seasons. During one vacation he again visited South Africa, taking a journey of 14,000 miles, to tell anecdotes for fourteen nights. On his last appearance at Johannesburg he was persuaded to play "Tony Lumpkin" once more, so that he now has the record of having played it 777 times. He again visited America with Mr. Tree and his company, taking the part of "The Laird" in "Trilby," and playing in "Seats of the Mighty," and opened at her Majesty's Theatre in "The Silver Key." He is now engaged at the "Avenue." Permanent address: Percy Villa, South Lambeth.

BROUGHTON, Miss Rhoda, a popular English novelist, is the daughter of a clergyman, and was born Nov. 29, 1840, in North Wales. Her principal works are: "Cometh Up as a Flower," 1867; "Not Wisely, but Too Well," 1867; "Red as a Rose is She," 1870; "Goodbye, Sweetheart, Goodbye," 1872; "Nancy," 1873; "Tales for Christmas Eve," 1873 (republished in 1879 under the title of "Twilight Stories"); "Joan," 1876; "Second Thoughts," 1880; "Belinda," 1883; and "Doctor Cupid," 1886. More recently she has published "Alas," 1890 (2nd edit. 1891); "Mrs. Bligh," 1892; "A Beginner," 1894; "Scylla or Charybdis?" 1895; and "Dear Faustina," 1897. Address: Holywell Street, Oxford.

John Brown, D.D., of Broughton Place Church, was born in Edinburgh on March 26, 1838. He was educated at the Edinburgh High School and at Mill Hill, and at the Universities of Edinburgh, Heidelberg, and Marburg. In 1863 he was appointed Lecturer and in 1869 Professor of Chemistry in the University of Edinburgh, and in 1891 was elected President of the Chemical Society of London, which office he held for two years. He is the author of many papers in scientific journals, and in the publications of learned societies. He married Jane Bailie, daughter of the Rev. James Porter, Drumlee, county Down. Address: 8 Belgrave Crescent, Edinburgh.

BROWN, Horace T., F.R.S., was born at Burton-on-Trent on July 20, 1848, and was educated at Burton-on-Trent and Atherstone Grammar Schools, and at the Royal College of Chemistry. He was engaged in brewing at Burton-on-Trent from 1866 to 1893. He acted as Vice-President of the Chemical Society from 1894 to 1897, received the Longstaff Medal of the Chemical Society in 1894, and is a member of the International Catalogue Committee of the Royal Society. He has contributed many papers on chemical, biological, and geological subjects in the Transactions of the Chemical Society, Proceedings of the Royal Society, Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, &c. He was married in 1874 to Annie, daughter of Paul J. Fearon. Address: 52 Nevers Square, Kensington, W.

BROWN, John George, N.A., American figure painter, was born at Durham, England, Nov. 11, 1831. He began his art studies at the age of eighteen, at first at Newcastle-on-Tyne, and afterwards spent a year at the Edinburgh Royal Academy. Removing to America in 1853, he entered the schools of the National Academy of Design in New York, and in 1856 opened a studio in Brooklyn, where he remained until 1860, when he transferred his studio to New York City. He was made an Academician in 1863, and was one of the founders of the Water-Colour Society, of which for the past seven years he has been President. He has twice (1880 and 1885) exhibited at the London Royal Academy, and has received several medals and honourable mention in Paris. Eight of his pictures were exhibited at the Chicago Exposition in 1893. Among his more important productions are, "His First Cigar," "Curling in Central Park," "The Longshoreman's Noon," "Tough Customers," "The Thrilling Moment," "The Passing Show," "The Dress Parade," "The Three (Scape) Graces," "Left his Money on the Piano," "The Lost Child," "The Transit of Venus," "A Merry Air and a Sad Heart," "Clear the Track!" BROWNE, The Right Rev. George Forrest, D.D., Bishop of Bristol, Hon. Fellow of St. Catharine's College, and Hon. D.C.L. of Durham, son of George Browne, Proctor of the Ecclesiastical Court of York, and Anne, daughter of the Rev. R. Forrest, Precentor of York Minster, was born at York, Dec. 4, 1833, and educated at St. Peter's School, York, and Catharine Hall, Cambridge, graduating in 1856. He was Mathematical Master at Glenalmond, 1857; ordained Deacon 1858, Priest 1859, by the Bishop of Oxford; and appointed Theological Tutor and Bell Lecturer in Ecclesiastical History in the Episcopal Church of Scotland, 1862; Fellow and Lecturer of St. Catharine's, Cambridge, 1863. He vacated his Fellowship on his marriage with Mary Louisa, eldest daughter of Sir J. Stewart Richardson, Bart., of Pitfour Castle, Perthshire, and was rector of Ashley, 1869-74; Proctor of the University, 1869-71, 1876-78, 1879-81; Secretary of the University Commission, 1877-81; a Member of the Council of the Senate (1874-92), the General Board of Studies, and various Boards and Syndicates; Secretary of the Cambridge Local Examinations, 1869-92; and of Local Lectures, 1877-92; and editor of the official University Reporter, Statuta, Ordinances, Endowments, &c. He has been University Preacher on various occasions, is a Magistrate for the Borough of Cambridge, was Alderman of the County Council for Cambridgeshire, and is a member of the governing body of Selwyn College. As a member of the Alpine Club, Mr. Browne published in the Cornhill Magazine various papers on Alpine Expeditions; on "Subterranean Ice," in Fraser, &c., and a book on "The Ice Caves of France and Switzerland," 1864. He published "University Sermons," in 1879, 1880, and 1888; "The Venerable Bede," 1880; and since 1881 has published a number of papers on "English Sculptured Stones of pre-Norman Type." He was Disney Professor of Archaeology in the University of Cambridge from 1888 to 1893, and is a Vice-President of the Society of Antiquaries. From 1893 to 1897 he published five volumes of Early Church History, namely: (1) "Lessons of Early English Church History"; (2) "Christianity in these Islands before the Coming of Augustine"; (3) "Augustine and his Companions"; (4) "The Conversion of the Heptarchy"; (5) "Theodore and Wilfrith"; and in 1895, "Off the Mill," a collection of holiday essays. In 1891 he was made Canon of St. Paul's, in 1895 Bishop of Stepney, and in 1897 Bishop of Bristol, then separated from Gloucester. A considerable number of the publications of the Church Historical Society, of which he was the first chairman, were from his pen. Addresses: The Palace, Bristol; and Athenæum.

BROWNE, Sir J. Crichton. See CRICHTON-BROWNE.

BROWNE, John Hutton Balfour, Q.C., brother of Sir James Crichton-Browne, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S., was born Sept. 13, 1845, at Crichton House, Dumfries, Scotland. His father was Dr. W. A. F. Browne, F.R.S., at that time Medical Superintendent of the Crichton Royal Institution, Dumfries, but afterwards Commissioner in Lunacy for Scotland. His mother was a daughter of Dr. Andrew Balfour, of Edinburgh, a sister of J. H. Balfour, Professor of Botany in the University of Edinburgh, and also connected with Dr. Hutton, the geologist, whose work on "The Theory of the Earth" made an epoch in the history of geology. He was educated at the Dumfries Academy and the University of Edinburgh, where he obtained high distinction in Philosophy and in Literature. He was for several years President of the Speculative Society, and at one time intended to become a Scotch advocate. In 1868 he began to read for the English Bar, and was "called" to the Bar by the Middle Temple in June 1870. He went the Midland Circuit. In 1870 he published a work on "The Medical Jurisprudence of Insanity." In 1874, having written and published a work on the "Law of Carriers," he was appointed Registrar and Secretary to the Railway Commission, which appointment he held until 1881. He published in 1874 a work on "The Law of Rating," and afterwards several other legal works. In 1880 he published a well-known work on the "Law of Railways." In 1896 appeared his "Law of Compensation." He went to the Parliamentary Bar in 1874, and was made a Queen's Counsel in 1885. He has been engaged for the promoters in all the Bills for the formation of a Ship Canal to Manchester; is, perhaps, the leading authority on Gas and Water Bills, and conducted, as leader, the case of the Traders against all the Railway Companies, in 1889-90, in England, Scotland, and Ireland, before the Board of Trade in settling the Classification of Articles, and the Schedule of Rates, under the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888. He is a Justice of the Peace for the county of Dumfries, Justice of the Peace, and a Deputy-Lieutenant for Kirkcudbrightshire. In 1870 and 1871 he wrote and published several works of fiction, which were fairly popular; one, "For Very Life," was published first in the St. James's Magazine, and was praised by Lord Beaconsfield, at that time Mr. Disraeli; another, "Men were Deceivers Ever," was dedicated to Carlyle, who was a countryman, almost a townsman, of the author; another, "Sir Edward's Wife," went through several editions. In 1874 he married a daughter of Lord Justice Lush. Permanent address: Goldielea, near Dumfries, N.B.

BROWNE, General Sir Samuel James, G.C.B., K.C.S.I., &c., was born in 1824, and entered the Bengal Army in the 46th Bengal Native Infantry, Dec. 22, 1840; became lieutenant, Oct. 26, 1844; captain, Feb. 10, 1855; brevet major, July 20, 1858; major, Feb. 18, 1861; brevet lieutenant-colonel, April 26, 1859; lieutenant-colonel, Dec. 22, 1866; brevet colonel, Nov. 17, 1864; major-general,

Feb. 6, 1870; lieutenant-general, Oct. 1, 1877; general, Dec. 1, 1888. Sir Samuel James Brown served throughout the Punjaub Campaign of 1848-49, and was present at the passage of the Chenab, the actions of Ramnuggar, Sadvolapore, Chillianwallah, and Goojerat (medal with two clasps); was in command of the Punjaub Cavalry and Corps of Guides; served on the Derajat and Peshawur frontier from 1850 to 1869, including operations against Oomurzaie Wuzerees in 1851-52; the Bozdar Belooch Expedition in March 1857; the attacks on Narinjee (Eusofzai border) in July and August 1857; and in various minor skirmishes (medal with clasp); was in command of the 2nd Punjaub Cavalry during the Indian Mutiny Campaign of 1858, including the siege and capture of Lucknow (Brevet of Major), actions of Korsees, Rooyah, and Allygunge, and capture of Bareilly. He commanded a field force of cavalry and infantry in the attack and defeat of the enemy in their position at Seerpoorah, and capture of their guns and camp (several times mentioned in despatches, and thanked by the Commander-in-Chief, and by Government. Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel, C.B., Victoria Cross, and medal with clasp). He received the O.C. "for having, at Seerpoorah, in an engagement with the rebel forces under Khan Alie Khan, on Aug. 31, 1858, whilst advancing upon the enemy's position at day-break, pushed on, with one orderly sower, upon a 9-pounder gun that was commanding one of the approaches to the enemy's position, and attacked the gunners, thereby preventing them from reloading and firing upon the infantry, who were advancing to the attack. In doing this a personal conflict ensued, in which Major Browne, Commandant of the 2nd Punjaub Cavalry, received a severe sword-cut wound on the left knee, and shortly afterwards another sword-cut wound, which severed the left arm at the shoulder, not, however, before he had succeeded in cutting down one of his assailants. The gun was eventually captured by the infantry, and the gunners slain." In 1876 he was made K.C.S.I., and in the Afghan war of 1878-79 he commanded the 1st Division Peshawur Valley Field Force in the attack and capture of the Fort of Ali Musjid; the forcing of the Khyber Pass in November 1878, and subsequent operations till the end of the campaign (received the thanks of the Government of India, and of both Houses of Parliament, K.C.B., medal with clasp). He received the honour of G.C.B. in 1891. Addresses: The Wood, Ryde, I. W., and United Service Club.

BROWNE, Thomas Alexander, Australian novelist under the pseudonym

of "Rolf Boldrewood," was born in London, August 6, 1826, and is the eldest son of Captain Sylvester Browne and Eliza Ansell Alexander. He was educated at Sydney College, New South Wales, where he took the prize for English Composition in 1842. In early life he was one of the pioneer squatters in the goldfields of Victoria, and became a Police Magistrate and Warden of the Goldfields of New South Wales, from which post he retired in 1895. His first novel, "Robbery under Arms" was an instant success when published in England in 1888, and has run through scores of editions, the last of which has been a sixpenny one in 1898. His other works are: "The Miner's Right," and "A Colonial Reformer," 1890; "A Sydney-Side Saxon," 1891; "A Modern Buccaneer," 1894; "The Squatter's Dream," 1895; "Old Melbourne Memories," 1895; and "My Run Home," 1897. Address: Melbourne Club, Melbourne.

BROWNING, Oscar, M.A., Senior Fellow and Assistant-Tutor of King's College, Cambridge University; Lecturer in History and Principal of Cambridge University Day Training College, was born in Cumberland Terrace, Regent's Park, London, on Jan. 17, 1837, being the youngest son of William Skipton Browning, merchant, and Mariana Margaret Bridge, his wife. He was educated at Eton College, and became a Scholar of King's College, Cambridge, in 1856. While at the University he was President of the Union Society, and took his degree in 1860 as fourth in the first class of the Classical Tripos. He accepted a mastership at Eton in May 1860, and remained there till December 1875. After a short stay abroad he returned to Cambridge, and has since that time been chiefly engaged in College and University work. He is well acquainted with modern languages, and was made Officier d'Académie by the French Government in 1889. Soon after his return to Cambridge he became Secretary of the Teachers' Training Syndicate, a post which he still holds. He has taken a prominent part in all movements for the training of teachers. He was an intimate friend of the late Sir John Seeley, and under his influence has devoted himself at Cambridge mainly to the teaching of Political Science, and of modern Political History. He has always taken an interest in politics, and was one of the founders of the "Eighty Club." He has stood for Parliament as a Home Ruler in three general elections—for Norwood in 1886, East Worcestershire in 1892, where he fought a vigorous battle against Mr. Austen Chamberlain, and for the West Derby division of Liverpool in 1895. The demands of practical work have left him but little time for continuous literary labour, but he has published a considerable number of books, of which the following are the most important: "Modern England," 1879; "Modern France," 1880; "History of Educational Theories," 1881; "Political Memoranda of the Duke of Leeds," 1884; "Earl Gower's Despatches from Paris," 1885; "England and Napoleon in 1803," 1887; "History of England," in 4 vols., 1890; "Life of George Eliot," 1890; "Aspect of Education," 1888. He also contributed articles on "Dante" and "Goethe" to the last edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," which have since been republished. He has written a good deal for the Edinburgh, Quarterly, Fortnightly, and other Reviews, and has collected some of these articles in a volume entitled "The Flight to Varannes, and other Historical Essays," 1892. He has also published a "Life of Bartolommeo Colleoni," 1891; "The Citizen, his Rights and Responsibilities," being a handbook of practical politics, 1893; "Guelphs and Ghibellines," 1894; "The Age of the Condottieri," 1895; forming together a short history of mediæval Italy; "The Journal of Admiral Sir George Rooke," 1897; and a "Life of Peter the Great," 1898. He was an early member of the Alpine Club, and made a journey from Cambridge to Venice by way of Carinthia on a tricycle in 1882, being the first to cross the Alps on that kind of machine. Permanent addresses: King's College, Cambridge; 88 St. James' Street, London, S.W.; and Athenæum.

BROWNLOW, Earl, The Right Hon. Adelbert Wellington Brownlow Cust, was born in London in 1844, and succeeded his brother as 3rd Earl in 1867. After serving in the Grenadier Guards from 1863 to 1866, he represented North Shropshire in the House of Commons during the following year, when he was called to the Upper House. Appointed Parliamentary Secretary to the Local Government Board in 1885, he became Paymaster-General in 1887, and two years later was made Under Secretary of State for War, filling this last-mentioned office until 1892. Lord Brownlow is Lord Lieutenant of Lincolnshire, an Ecclesiastical Commissioner for England, was appointed a Trustee of the National Gallery in 1897, and in the same year became an A.D.C. to the Queen. He was married in 1868 to Adelaide, daughter of the 18th Earl of Shrewsbury and Talbot. Addresses: 8 Carlton House Terrace, S.W.; and Ashridge Park, Berkhamstead, Herts.

Rev. William Brownlow, Rector of Wilmslow, Cheshire, and Frances, only daughter of R. J. Chambers, Esq., and granddaughter of Sir Robert Chambers, Chief Justice of Bengal, and an intimate friend of Dr. Johnson. Bishop Brownlow was born July 4, 1830, and educated at Rugby under Dr. Tait, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took mathematical honours in 1852. He became a minister of the Established Church, and from 1853 to 1863 held curacies at Great Wyrley, St. Bartholomew's, Cripplegate, Tetbury, and St. John's, Torquay. In 1863 he was received into the Catholic Church by Dr. Newman at the Oratory, Birmingham, and made his studies for the priesthood at the English College, Rome, where he was ordained by Cardinal Patrizi in 1866. Returning to England, he was appointed to the charge of the Mission and Dominican Convent at St. Mary Church near Torquay, where he remained from 1867 until 1888. In 1878 he was appointed a Canon of Plymouth Cathedral, and Diocesan Inspector of Schools. In 1888 the Bishop of Plymouth appointed him his Vicar-General, and Administrator of the Cathedral Mission. In 1893 Pope Leo XIII. appointed him one of his Domestic Prelates; and by Brief, dated March 20, 1894, he was made Bishop of Clifton, in succession to the Hon. and Right Rev. Dr. Clifford, who had died in the preceding year. Mgr. Brownlow was consecrated in the Pro-Cathedral, Clifton, on May 1, 1894, by Cardinal Vaughan. While at Tetbury, Mr. Brownlow delivered and published a course of lectures on the History of the Church; he translated and edited the "Cur Deus Homo" of St. Anselm, and published a Memoir of his only sister. Since 1863 he has published several controversial pamphlets, "How and why I became a Catholic," a first and second "Letter to Anglican Friends who frequent St. John's, Torquay," five "Lectures on English Church History" for the magic lantern; a series of Dialogues between Catholics and Non-conformists, and "Episcopal Jurisdiction in Bristol," in reply to Dr. Bowne, the new Bishop of Bristol. Bishop Brownlow has also written a "Memoir of Sir James Marshall, late Chief Justice of the Gold Coast," and a "Life of Mother Rose Columba Adams," Foundress of the Dominican Convent at North Adelaide, formerly Prioress at St. Mary Church. In partnership with Dr. Northcote he assisted in the publication of the English "Roma Sotterranea," which embodied in 1869 the principal results of the researches of the great Roman archaeologist Commendatore De Rossi, and ten years later the further discoveries of the same eminent authority in a second edition in 2 vols., published by Longmans in 1879. They also edited the late Mr. William Palmer's "Early Christian Symbolism," illustrated with hand-painted plates, and published by Kegan Paul and Company. Mgr. Brownlow frequently lectured on the Catacombs before the Torquay Natural History Society, and gave a course of lectures on "Slavery and Serfdom in Europe," which were afterwards published. He also read papers before the Devonshire Association on St. Boniface, St. Willibald, and his Brother and Sister, on Bishop Grandisson, on St. Mary Church in mediæval times, and on mediæval clerical and social life in Devon. Address: Bishop's House, Park Place, Clifton, Bristol.

BRUANT, Aristide, French popular singer, was born at Courtenay, Loiret, May 6, 1851, of middle-class parents, and was educated at the Lycée of Sens. In 1870 he formed one of a band of free-lances that opposed the invading Germans. After the war he came to Paris, and entered the service of the Northern Railway Company. He then began to spend his leisure time in singing and composing songs. At last he became a public singer, first at the Epoque and then at the Scala, singing the songs he himself had composed and written. Later he would only sing at cafés and clubs, such as the Chat Noir, and then opened a café of his own in the Boulevard Rochechouart, called the Mirliton. He was proposed for the "Société des Gens de Lettres," by François Coppée (q.v.), and Oscar Méténier has written his biography. His best known songs are: "A la Villette," "Serrez vos rangs," "A la Roquette," "Auprès de ma Blonde," "A Biribi." He has written "Sur la Rue" and "Sur la Route," two collections of poetic songs and monologues, and he edits two newspapers, the Mirliton and the Lanterne de Bruant. He was a candidate for the Chamber of Deputies in May 1898 for the twentieth arrondissement of Paris.

BRUCE, Sir Charles, K.C.M.G., J.P., D.L., of Arnot, Kinross, of which county he is a Deputy-Lieutenant, is the son of the late Thomas Bruce, Esq., of Arnot, and was born in 1837, and educated at Harrow. He is the author of "Die Geschichte von Nala und Damayanti," a critical revision of the Sanscrit text, published by the Imperial Academy of St. Petersburg, 1862, and of other Sanscrit and Vedic studies. He published in 1863 a translation of "Nala und Damayanti" in English verse; in 1865, "The Story of Queen Guinivere, and Other Poems." He was appointed Assistant-Librarian at the British Museum in 1863; Professor of Sanscrit, King's College, 1865; Rector of the Royal College, Mauritius, 1868; Director of Public Instruction, Ceylon, 1878; was President of the Ceylon Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society; appointed Colonial Secretary of Mauritius, 1882; Lieut.-Governor and Government Secretary of British Guiana, 1885; and has on several occasions administered the Government of Mauritius and British Guiana. He was appointed Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Windward Islands, 1893. In 1889 he was made a K.C.M.G. In 1897 he was transferred to Mauritius, of which he is now Governor. He married in 1868 Clara, daughter of J. Lucas. Addresses: Arnot Tower, Leslie, Scotland; and Le Réduit, Mauritius.

BRUCE, Hon. Sir Gainsford, K.B., Q.C., D.C.L., Justice of the High Court, eldest son of the Rev. J. Collingwood Bruce, LL.D., D.C.L., F.S.A., of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, by Charlotte, daughter of T. Gainsford Bruce, Esq., of Gerrard's Cross, Bucks, was born in 1831, and educated at Glasgow University. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1859, and joined the Northern Circuit in the same year. In 1883 he became a Q.C., and in 1887 a Bench. He was Solicitor-General for the County Palatine of Durham from 1879 to 1886, Attorney-General from 1886 to 1887, and Temporal Chancellor from 1887 to 1892, when he was appointed a Judge of the High Court of Justice (Queen's Bench Division), and received the honour of knighthood. He was for fifteen years Recorder of Bradford. In April 1880 he unsuccessfully contested Gateshead, and afterwards stood for three northern constituencies without being returned, but in November 1888 he was elected for the Holborn Division of Finsbury, and sat till July 1892 as a Conservative. He is part-author of "Williams and Bruce's Admiralty Practice" and of "Maude and Pollock on Shipping." In 1868 he married Sophia, daughter of Francis Jackson, Esq., of Chertsey. Addresses: Yewhurst, Bromley, Kent; Gainslaw House, near Berwick-upon-Tweed; and Athenæum.

BRUCE-JOY, Albert, R.H.A., F.R.G.S., sculptor, was born in Dublin on Aug. 21, 1842, and is the son of the late Dr. W. Bruce-Joy. He was sent, at the age of nine, to Dr. Becker's school at Offenbach, near Frankfurt, and continued his education in Paris under a private tutor, and at King's College, London. At the age of seventeen he went to the South Kensington Schools of Art, and in 1862 became a pupil, for four years, of Foley. In 1863 he entered the Royal Academy Schools, and in 1866 went to Rome and studied art for three years. In 1866 he first exhibited at the Royal Academy, since which date he has been a large and constant contributor to its exhibitions. At the Paris Exhibition of 1878 he was voted one of the three medals awarded to Great Britain for sculpture, sharing this signal honour with Leighton and Boehm. At the Paris Salon of 1896 the only award made to busts by sculptors of all nationalities was made to Mr. Bruce-Joy. In 1885, at the Antwerp Exhibition, he represented Great Britain on the International Jury for Fine Arts. As a sculptor he has chiefly produced colossal statues. Of these the principal are a statue of Mr. John Laird, the Harvey Tercentenary Statue at Folkestone; the Graves Statue at the Royal College of Physicians, Dublin; the statue of Lord Chief-Justice Whiteside in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin; that of Mr. Gladstone in front of Bow Church, London; that of Mr. John Bright in the Art Gallery at Birmingham; and that of the same statesman in the Town Hall Square, Manchester; that of Oliver Heywood in the same square; that of Lord Frederick Cavendish at Burrow-in-Furness. He has also executed memorials of Admiral Sir E. Codrington (of Navarino) in St. Paul's; of Dean Daunt in Dublin; and of Mr. Pratt in Harrow School Chapel; besides many busts in marble and terra-cotta of celebrities past and present. Of these especial mention should be made of the bust of "Lord Farnborough," in the House of Commons; the "Berkeley" Statue in Cloyne Cathedral; the "Montgomery" Memorial in the India Office, and monument in St. Paul's Cathedral; the bust of Mr. Gladstone in the Walker Art Gallery, Liverpool; and that of Sir Edward Harland in Belfast Harbour; the city's bust of Lord Salisbury in the Mansion House; Archbishop Benson's bust; Lord Cairns's, in Lincoln's Inn; the "Astronomer Adams" monument in Westminster Abbey, where also is his bust of "Matthew Arnold"; the "Adams" memorial bust, St. John's College, Cambridge; the "Archdeacon Hannah" bust, in Brighton Pavilion; the bust of "Robert M'Donnell" (late President), in Royal College of Surgeons, Dublin; the "Whitley" statue, St. George's Hall, Liverpool; in which city also are his statues of "Alexander Balfour" and "Christopher Bushell"; the Mark Firth memorial bust in Firth College, Sheffield; and that of "Colonel Akroyd," in Halifax Museum, and "Davies" in Peel Park Museum, Manchester. Among American subjects we note his busts of Miss Mary Anderson; the Hon. Colonel Loudon-Snowden (late Ambassador to Spain); George W. Childs, of Philadelphæa Ledger; the Hon. Chauncey Depew, the property of the Lotos Club, New York; and a monument in Lowell. Among his ideal subjects, mention should be made of "The Young Apollo," "The Forsaken," "The Pets," "Moses and the Brazen Serpent," "The First Flight," and among his many medallion portraits of the late Duke of Albany and Sir Humphry Davy. This list is long, but it represents only a selection from over one hundred and fifty things in his catalogue. English addresses: The Studio, Beaumont Road, West Kensington, &c.; and Athenæum.

BRUCH, Max, musical composer, was born at Cologne, Jan. 6, 1838, and received his first musical instruction from his mother (née Almenröder), who was a highly esteemed teacher of music, and who often in her young days sang at the Rhenish musical festivals. At the age of eleven Bruch attempted compositions on a large scale, and at the age of fourteen he had already brought out a symphony at Cologne. From 1853 to 1857 he held the Mozart scholarship at Frankfort o/M., and in that capacity he was a special pupil of Ferdinand Hiller (then Conductor of the Cologne concerts, and Director of the Cologne Conservatorium) in the theory of music and composition; and of Karl Reinecke (till 1854), and of Ferdinand Breunung in playing the piano. After a short stay in Leipzig, he resided from 1858 to 1861 as musical teacher at Cologne, and was assiduous in composing. On the death of his father in 1861, he set out on an extensive tour of study, which, after brief stays at Berlin, Leipzig, Vienna, Dresden, and Munich, ended at Mannheim, where his opera "Lorelei" (after the text written by Geibel for Mendelssohn) was produced in 1863. At Mannheim, also, between 1862 and 1864 he wrote the chorus-works, "Frithjof," "Römischer Triumphgesang," "Gesang der heiligen drei Könige," and "Flucht der heiligen Familie." In 1864-65 he was again on his travels, visiting Hamburg, Hanover, Dresden, Breslau, Munich, Brussels, and Paris. Then he brought out his "Frithjof" with success at Aix-la-Chapelle, Leipzig, and Vienna. From 1865 to 1867 he was musical director at Coblenz, and from 1867 to 1870 Director of the Court Orchestra at Sondershausen. At Coblenz he wrote among other things, his well-known First Concerto for the Violin, and at Sondershausen two symphonies and portions of a Mass. The opera "Hermione," which was produced in 1872 in Berlin, where Bruch resided from 1871 to 1873, had only a suocès d'estime. The choral work, or secular cantata, "Odysseus," likewise belongs to the period of the composer's residence at Berlin. After he had been five years (1873-78) at Bonn, devoting his time exclusively to composing "Arminius," "The Lay of the Bell," and his Second Concerto for the Violin, and after he had paid two visits to this country for the purpose of producing some of his works, he became in 1878, on the resignation of Stockhausen, Director of Stern's Singing Academy at Berlin; and in 1880 he was nominated to succeed Sir Julius Benedict as Director of the Philharmonic Society at Liverpool. In 1881 he married the vocalist, Miss Tuczek, of Berlin.

BRUNET-DESBAINES, Louis Alfred, French painter and engraver, is the son of a distinguished architect, and was born at Havre on Nov. 5, 1845. He followed the artistic courses of M. Pils and M. Lalaune, and then devoted himself to painting. Among his works are many architectural paintings, some water-colours, and copies of the great masters, including Constable, Corot, and Turner. Among his best known engravings are "Nine Aquatint Engravings, after Turner," 1877; "Daphnis and Chloé," after François; "Chill October," after Millais, 1884; "Parting Days," after Leader, 1887. M. Brunet-Desbaines gained a medal of the first class in 1886, and a gold medal at the Paris Exhibition of 1889. He is chiefly noted for his etchings of architectural and natural beauties, few great illustrated works appearing without one of his masterpieces.

BRUNETIÈRE, Ferdinand, French author, was born at Toulon, July 19, 1849, and educated at the Lycée Louis-le-Grand. On failing for the Ecole Normale, he turned to literature, and in 1875 won distinction by a criticism on Wallon's "Saint Louis et son Temps," in the Revue Bleue. He then joined the staff of the Revue des Deux Mondes, of which he became secretary, and finally chief editor, the post he now holds. In 1886 he was Professor of French Literature at the Ecole Normale, and was decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1887. His chief works are, "Études critiques sur l'histoire de la Langue Française," 1880, which was crowned by the French Academy; "Nouvelles études critiques," 1882; "Le Roman naturaliste," 1883; "L'Évolution des genres de Littérature," 1890, in which he applied the Darwinian theory to literature. His Essays have been translated by Mr. D. N. Smith, and were published in 1898.

BRUNNER, Sir John Tomlinson, Bart., M.P., the son of the Rev. John Brunner of Zürich, who eventually became a schoolmaster at Everton, Liverpool, was born at Everton in 1842, and was educated at his father's school. Entering business at Liverpool in 1857, he eventually, assisted by the well-known chemist Ludwig Mond, F.R.S. (q.v.), established the Winnington Alkali Works at Northwich, which are now the largest of their kind in the world. He is a member of the Council of University College, Liverpool; and he has been a considerable benefactor to both that institution, and to several schools and public libraries as well. He has presented Northwich with a free library. Elected as Liberal member for Northwich in 1885, he represented that constituency until 1886. He was again elected for the same borough in 1887, and still holds the seat. Sir John has published handbooks on Public Education in Cheshire in 1890 and 1896. Address: 9 Ennismore Gardens, S.W.; and Winnington Old Hall, Northwich, Cheshire.

BRUNTON, Thomas Lauder, M.D., F.R.S., was born in Roxburghshire in 1844, and educated at Edinburgh University, where he graduated M.D. and D.Sc., obtaining honours and a gold medal for his thesis "On Digitalis," and the Baxter Scholarship in Natural Science. In 1867 he made some observations on the pathology of angina pectoris, which, together with the knowledge he possessed of the physiological action of nitrate of amyl, led him to the successful application of the drug to the treatment of the disease. This application affords one of the earliest and best marked instances of rational as distinguished from empirical therapeutics. After spending about three years in foreign travel and study, he was appointed Lecturer on Materia Medica at the Middlesex Hospital, London, in 1870, and in the following year he was appointed to St. Bartholomew's Hospital. In 1874 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. In 1886 he was appointed a member of the commission to report upon the treatment of hydrophobia, and went to Paris to examine Pasteur's system. In 1889 he was deputed by the Lancet to represent it, at the invitation of the Nizam's Government, on the second commission appointed at Hyderabad, to investigate the action of chloroform. He wrote the section on Digestion, Secretion, and Animal Chemistry in Sander-son's "Handbook for the Physiological Laboratory," which was the first text-book of practical physiology published in this country. In conjunction with Sir Joseph Fayrer he investigated the action of snake poison, and discovered that life could be greatly prolonged, though not ultimately saved, by the use of artificial respiration. His work has been chiefly directed to ascertaining the action of drugs with a view to their application in disease; and he has published, alone or in conjunction with others, numerous papers on this subject, as well as the Goulstonian lectures on "Pharmacology and Therapeutics," in 1877; the Croonian lectures at the Royal College of Physicians in 1889 on "The Connection between Chemical Structure and Physiological Action"; and a text-book in which he has treated the action of drugs from a physiological point of view. His lectures on the "Action of Medicines," delivered in 1896, were published in 1897. He delivered the Harveian Oration before the Royal College of Physicians on Oct. 18, 1894, and the general address for England at the twelfth International Medical Congress at Moscow on Aug. 19, 1897. Address: 10 Stratford Place, W.

BRYAN, George Hartley, D.Sc., F.R.S., the only son of Robert Purdie Bryan, of Clare College, Cambridge, was born at Cambridge on March 1, 1864. He was educated at Peterhouse College, Cambridge, graduated in the Mathematical Tripos in 1886, was Smith's Prizeman in 1888, and held a Fellowship at Peterhouse from 1889 to 1895. He now occupies the Chair of Pure and Applied Mathematics in the University College of North Wales. Address: Plas Gwyn, Bangor, Carnarvonshire.

BRYAN, William Jennings, American political leader, was born at Salem, Marion County, Illinois, March 19, 1860, and was educated at local schools, and at Illinois College, where he graduated in 1881. He studied law at Chicago for two years, and began the practice of his profession at Jacksonville, Illinois, where a year later he married Mary E. Bard of Perry, Illinois. In 1887 they removed to Lincoln, the capital of the State of Nebraska, where his wife was also admitted to the Bar, and gave him efficient aid in the practice of his profession. He became widely known as an orator, advocating a tariff for revenue only. In 1890 he was elected to Congress, and was re-elected in 1892, but refused a third nomination in 1894. In Congress he actively supported the Democratic view of the tariff, and became a conspicuous advocate of the free coinage of silver, gaining notice also by his readiness as a speaker and his skill in parliamentary tactics. In 1896 he was a member of the National Democratic Convention, and was put in nomination as a presidential candidate on July 10, although his nomination had not been thought of as possible until the delivery by him of an oration before the Convention advocating the free coinage of silver. At the election (November 1896) he received 176 electoral votes, while his opponent received 271.

Mr. Bryan has devoted his time since that election principally to lecturing and political agitation.

BRYANT, Sophie (née Willock), D.Sc., London, is the daughter of the late Rev. W. A. Willock, D.D., formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin. She was born in Dublin, and spent her childhood in the northern county of Fermanagh, where her father played a prominent part in the Irish National Educational Movement. After the family moved to London, she gained an Arnott Scholarship at Bedford College. At nineteen she married Dr. William Hicks Bryant of Plymouth, and after his death—a year later—resumed her work as a student, more especially in mathematics and philosophy, and became Mathematical Mistress in the North London Collegiate School for Girls, under Miss Frances Mary Buss, whom she afterwards succeeded in 1895 as Headmistress of the school. In January 1879, when the University of London was first opened to women, Mrs. Bryant took the second place in the Matriculation Examination, and in 1881 graduated in Science, with Mathematical and Moral Science honours. In 1884 she took the degree of Doctor of Science in the Moral Science Branch, being the first woman to take that degree. In 1894, Mrs. Bryant, with Lady Frederick Cavendish and Mrs. Henry Sidgwick, was selected to serve upon the Royal Commission on Secondary Education. Besides contributing various philosophical and scientific articles to Mind, the Philosophical Magazine, the International Journal of Ethics, the Contemporary Review, the Journal of the Anthropological Institute, Proceedings of the Aristotelian Society, the Proceedings of the London Mathematical Society, Dublin University Review, and the Economic Journal; and educational articles to the Journal of Education, the Educational Review, and the Educational Times, Mrs. Bryant has published the following books: "Educational Ends" (Longmans, Green & Co.); "Celtic Ireland" (Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner and Co.); "Studies in Character" (Swan Sonnenschein & Co.); "The Teaching of Morality in the Family and the School" (Swan Sonnenschein & Co.), 1898; and "The Teaching of Christ on Life and Conduct" (Swan Sonnenschein & Co.), 1898. Mrs. Bryant takes an active part, especially as a lecturer and speaker, in various educational, social, and political movements, is one of the promoters of the London School of Ethics, and is noted for the warm interest which she takes in all phases of the Irish question, and the close and continuous attention with which she follows it. Address: North London Collegiate School for Girls.

BRYANT, Thomas, F.R.C.S. England and Ireland, M.Ch.R.U. Ireland, Consulting Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Surgeon Extraordinary to the Queen, was the son of the late T. Egerton Bryant, a medical practitioner of South London, and Fothergillian Medallist and President of the Medical Society of London. He was born on May 20, 1828, and was educated at King's College School, and as a medical student at Guy's Hospital. He became a Member of the College of Surgeons in 1849, and a Fellow in 1853, and was elected a Member of the Council of the College in 1880, and of the Court of Examiners in 1882. In 1890 he was made President of the College, and had the distinction of being re-elected on two occasions. He has also served as Hunterian and Bradshaw Lecturer at the College, and in 1893, on the centenary of John Hunter's death, he was the Hunterian orator—an occasion on which the Prince of Wales and the Duke of York honoured him by their presence. He is now a Member of the Council of his College, and its representative on the General Medical Council, of which he is Joint-Treasurer. As honorary degrees, he possesses the M.Ch. of the Royal University of Ireland, the M.D. of the Dublin University, and the F.R.C.S. of the Irish College of Surgeons; he is also a Member of the Surgical Society of Paris. At Guy's Hospital Mr. Bryant worked as a surgeon from 1857 to 1888, and for thirteen years he lectured on surgery in the school; he is now Consulting Surgeon to the Hospital. He is at present President of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society, and has been President of the Medical Society of London, of the Clinical Society, the Hunterian Society, and the Harveian Society; he has also been Vice-President of the Pathological Society. As a writer he has done much work; in 1863 he published his "Lettsonian Lectures on the Surgical Diseases of Children"; in 1872 he published his work on "Surgery," which ran through three editions in a brief period, for the fourth was issued in 1884; in 1887 he wrote his book on "Diseases of the Breast." In the Guy's Hospital Reports and the Transactions of the Medical and Chirurgical Society many papers from his pen are to be found; in the Guy's Reports, on "Ovariotomy," "Diseases of the Testicle," "Hernia," "Strictures," "Stone in the Bladder," and on "Operative Surgery"; in the Medical and Chirurgical Society's Transactions, those on the "Torsion of Arteries," "Torsion of the Testicle," "Prolapse of the Female Urethra," and "Intussusception due to the Presence of a Villous Growth in the Rectum," being the most important. In the Lancet, he has, during the past few years, been giving some interesting records of his general surgical experience, including a paper on "Abdominal Injuries," printed in 1895, and one on "Rectal Surgery" in 1898. Addresses: 65 Grosvenor Street, W.; and Athenæum Club.

BRYCE, Right Hon. James, D.C.L., M.P., F.R.S., the son of James Bryce, LL.D., of Glasgow, and Margaret, eldest daughter of James Young, Esq., of Abbeyville, co. Antrim, was born at Belfast, May 10, 1838, and educated at the High School and University of Glasgow, and at Trinity College, Oxford (of which he was a scholar), graduating B.A. 1862, with a double first class. He obtained various University prizes, and proceeded to study for a time at Heidelberg. He was elected Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford, 1862, and became a barrister at Lincoln's Inn in 1867, practising for some years. In 1870 he was appointed Regius Professor of Civil Law in Oxford University, a post which he resigned in 1893, and in 1880 was elected Liberal member for the Tower Hamlets. He was Assistant-Commissioner to the Schools Inquiry Commission, 1865-66, and in 1894-95 was Chairman of the Royal Commission on Secondary Education. He is Hon. LL.D. of Glasgow and Edinburgh Universities, Hon. Doctor of the Universities of Buda Pesth and Michigan, and Corresponding Member of the Institute of France, and of the Academies of Turin and Brussels. In 1885 he was elected member for South Aberdeen, which he now represents, and was appointed Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in Mr. Gladstone's Government in 1886. He was one of the chief supporters of the Home Rule Bill, and after the dissolution was returned unopposed for South Aberdeen in 1886. In 1892 he was appointed Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster with a seat in Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet, and in 1894 succeeded Mr. Mundella as President of the Board of Trade. Mr. Bryce's literary works are: "The Holy Roman Empire" (1st edit., 1864, 12th edit., 1895; translated into German, 1873; do. into Italian, 1886; do. into French, 1889); "The Trade Marks Registration Acts, 1875 and 1876, with Introduction and Notes," 1877; "Transcaucasia and Ararat, a Narrative of a Journey in Asiatic Russia in the Autumn of 1876, with an Account of the Author's Ascent of Mount Ararat," 1877 (3rd edit., 1878; 4th edit., 1896); numerous articles in magazines, mostly political, historical, or geographical, including descriptions of Iceland, and of the highlands of Hungary and Poland; "Two Centuries of Irish History," 1888, edited by him, with an Introductory Chapter; "The American Commonwealth," 1888 (2nd edit., 1889; 3rd edit., 1893); and an important work entitled, "Impressions of South Africa," 1897. He has been active on various political and social subjects, such as the Abolition of University Tests, the Protection of the Christian Subjects of the Sultan and the Extension of the Frontiers of Greece, the Preservation of Commons and Open Spaces, the Reform of Endowments, the Revision and Consolidation of the Statute Law, the Establishment of a Universal International Copyright, and the Creation of a Teaching University in London; and he has carried Acts for the Reform of City Parochial Charities and for the Amendment of the Law of Guardianship (known as the "Infants Bill"), and the International and Colonial Copyright Act, 1886. Mr. Bryce married in 1889 Elizabeth Marion, daughter of Thomas Ashton, Esq., of Ford Bank, Didsbury, near Manchester, ex-High Sheriff of Lancashire. Addresses: 54 Portland Place, W.; and Athenæum.

BUCCLEUCH, Duke of, William Henry Walter Montagu Douglas Scott, K.G., K.T., J.P., D.L., was born in London on Sept. 9, 1831, and succeeded his father as 6th Duke in 1884. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, and sat in the House of Commons as Conservative member for Midlothian from 1853 to 1868, and from 1874 to 1880. He was Lieut.-Colonel of the Midlothian Yeomanry from 1856 to 1872, and is now Lieut.-General of the Royal Company of Archers (the Queen's Bodyguard in Scotland), and is also Lord Lieutenant of Dumfriesshire. He was married in 1859 to the third daughter of the 1st Duke of Abercorn, and he sits in the House of Lords under the title of Earl of Doncaster. Addresses: Montagu House, Whitehall, S.W.; Boughton House, Kettering; and numerous other country seats.

BUCHAN, Alexander, M.A., LL.D., born at Kinnesswood, in Kinross-shire, on April 11, 1829, is the son of Alexander Buchan and Janet Hill. He was educated at the Free Church Training College, Edinburgh, and at the Edinburgh University, where he graduated as Master of Arts. He was engaged as a public teacher till Christmas 1860, when he was appointed Secretary of the Scottish Meteorological Society. He is the author of "The Handy Book of Meteorology," 1867 (2nd ed., 1868); and "Introductory Text Book of Meteorology," 1871; the article "Meteorology" in the last edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," "Reports on Atmospheric Circulation and Oceanic Circulation," being two of the reports of the Challenger Expedition; besides numerous monographs in the publications of the learned societies at home and abroad, including "The Mean Pressure and Prevailing Winds of the Globe," "Weather and Health of London," "Climatology of the British Isles," &c. He is M.A. Edinburgh University; LL.D. Glasgow University; Curator of the Library and Museum of the Royal Society, Edinburgh; Member of Meteorological Council; Foreign Member of the Royal Society of Sciences of Upsala; Hon. Member of the Philosophical Society, Manchester; Corresponding Member of the Philosophical Society, Glasgow; Corresponding Member of the Philosophical Society, Emden; Hon. Member of the Meteorological Societies of Austria, Germany, Algiers, Mauritius, &c. He was married to Sarah, daughter of David Ritchie, Musselburgh, in July 1864. Address: Heriot Row, Edinburgh.

BUCHANAN, George William, was born at Copenhagen on Nov. 25, 1854, and is the son of Sir Andrew Buchanan, Bart., G.C.B. He was educated at Wellington, and entered the Foreign Office as Attaché in 1875. He held posts at Vienna, Rome, and Tokio, and in 1890 he acted as Chargé d'Affaires at Berne. In 1893 he was appointed to his present post of Chargé d'Affaires at Darmstadt and Carlsruhe. He married Lady Georgiana, daughter of the 6th Earl of Bathurst, in 1885. Address: The British Legation, Darmstadt.

BUCHANAN, John Young, M.A., F.R.S., the son of John Buchanan of Downhill, was born in Scotland, Feb. 20, 1844, and was educated at Glasgow High School; at the Universities of Glasgow, Marburg, Leipzig, and Bonn; and at the Ecole de Médecine, Paris. He served as chemist and physicist on the Challenger Expedition, and was subsequently Lecturer in Geography in the University of Cambridge. He now devotes his time to chemical studies and investigations. Address: Christ's College, Cambridge.

BUCHANAN, Robert Williams, poet and prose writer, was born at Caverswall, Staffordshire, on Aug. 18, 1841, and is the only son of Robert Buchanan, socialist, missionary, and journalist, and his wife, Margaret Williams, of Stoke-upon-Trent. He was educated at the High School and the University of Glasgow. His first work, "Undertones," appeared in 1862, and was followed by "Idylls and Legends of Inverburn," in 1863, and "London Poems," in 1866. Mr. Buchanan edited "Wayside Posies," and translated the National Ballads of Denmark in 1866.

Then followed "North Coast Poems," 1867; "The Bar of Orm," 1869; "Napoleon Fallen: a Lyrical Drama," 1871; "The Land of Lorne; including the Cruise of the Tern to the Outer Hebrides," 1871; "The Drama of Kings," 1871; "The Fleshly School of Poetry," an attack on the poems of Mr. D. G. Rossetti and Mr. Swinburne, 1872; and "Master Spirits," 1873. Many years ago his tragedy of "The Witchfinder" was brought out at Sadlers Wells Theatre; and a comedy by him, in three acts, entitled "A Madcap Prince," was acted at the Haymarket in August 1874. He has also contributed to the stage, "A Nine Days' Queen," in which his sister-in-law, Miss Harriet Jay, the novelist, first appeared as an actress; and a dramatic version of her novel, "The Queen of Connaught." In 1869 Mr. Buchanan gave, in the Hanover Square Rooms, a series of "Readings" of selections from his own poetical works. A collected edition of his poems was published in 3 vols., 1874. Previously to that he had issued anonymously two works which achieved instant popularity; "St. Abe and his Seven Wives," and "White Rose and Red," both humorous stories in verse. In 1876 Mr. Buchanan published his first novel, "The Shadow of the Sword," which has been since followed by "A Child of Nature," 1879; "God and the Man," 1881; "The Martyrdom of Madeline," 1882; and several other novels from time to time. A new volume of poems, entitled "Ballads of Life, Love, and Humour," and a "Selection" from his various poems, were issued simultaneously in 1882. His novel, "Love Me for Ever," appeared in 1883, and his comedy, "Lady Clare," was brought out at the Globe Theatre on April 11 in the same year. "Alone in London," a drama written in conjunction with Miss Harriet Jay, was produced at the Olympic, Nov. 2, 1885, and "Sophia," an adaptation of Fielding's "Tom Jones," at the Vaudeville on April 12, 1886. This play had a phenomenal run of close upon two years. His play, "Joseph's Sweetheart," was produced early in 1888, and ran for eighteen months. In the same year he published an epic poem, entitled, "The City of Dream." In 1890 the drama, "A Man's Shadow," was produced at the Haymarket. In 1891 his works were, "The Moment After," "The Gifted Lady" (a satire on Ibsen), "The Coming Terror," a collection of papers reprinted from newspapers, and "The Outcast"; and in 1892, "Come Live with Me and be my Love." Early in 1893 he published "The Wandering Jew," a poem which led to long correspondence in the Daily Chronicle. In 1894 his play, "Dick Sheridan," was produced at the Comedy Theatre, and shortly afterwards "The Charlatan" at the Haymarket. Mr. Buchanan's more recent contributions to literature have been "The Devil's Case" (a work which provoked much controversy), the "Ballad of Mary the Mother," and a prose story, the "Rev. Annabel Lee." A complete edition of his poetical works, in 1 vol., was published by Messrs. Chatto & Windus in 1885. Address: 36 Gerrard Street, Shaftesbury Avenue, W.

BUCHHEIM, Charles Adolphus, Phil. Doc. (Rostock), F.C.P., was born in Moravia, Jan. 22, 1828. After having completed his academical studies, including a course of Pädagogik at the University of Vienna, he devoted himself, both at that town and successively at Leipzig, Brussels, and Paris, to the production of belletristic and historical works, which occupation he continued for some time after his arrival in 1852 in this country. He also translated some of Dickens' works into German, and towards the end of the fifties he devoted himself to the teaching profession and to the production of educational works (including an annotated edition of Schiller's "Wallenstein"), which were most favourably received. His popularity in this country and in America is based on his annotated editions of German classics, issued at the Clarendon Press. In the thirteen volumes hitherto published Professor Buchheim has practically shown for the first time that the works of Lessing, Goethe, Schiller, and Heine are as worthy as the ancient classics of a scholarly treatment, and the result is that his editions are largely used wherever German is taught through the medium of English, and have even been introduced into German schools. Dr. Buchheim is also the editor of the "Deutsche Lyrik," the "Balladen und Romanzen," and "Heine's Lieder und Gedichte," in the "Golden Treasury Series," and in 1883 he issued, conjointly with the Rev. Dr. Wace, the Principal of King's College, a volume entitled "First Principles of the Reformation," to which he contributed an essay on the "Political Course of the Reformation," and a translation of one of Luther's celebrated "Reformationsschriften." In 1863 Dr. Buchheim was appointed Professor of the German Language and Literature in King's College, London, and later on he was elected Fellow of the College of Preceptors. He filled the post of Examiner in German to the University of London during three periods of five years each, and he also acted, and still acts, as examiner for various public examining bodies in Great Britain and Ireland, especially so for the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and New Zealand. In December 1897 the University of Oxford conferred upon him the honorary degree of M.A. He was at one time German tutor to the children of the Prince and Princess of Wales. Address: 47 Leamington Road Villas, W.

BÜCHNER, Friedrich Karl Christian Ludwig, M.D., a German philosopher, born at Darmstadt, March 29, 1824, is the son of a distinguished physician in that town. After a preliminary education, he was sent in 1843 to the University of Giessen, where he studied philosophy, though he subsequently at Strasburg turned his attention to medicine, in compliance with the wishes of his family. He took his doctor's degree at Giessen in 1848, and then continued his studies in the universities of Würzburg and Vienna. After practising medicine for some time in his native place, he settled at Tübingen as a private lecturer, being also appointed Assistant Clinical Professor. He was deprived of this position, however, by the authorities, in consequence of the philosophical doctrines propounded in his famous book on "Force and Matter," 1855. He thereupon returned to Darmstadt, and resumed practice as a physician. In the work referred to—which is entitled in German "Kraft und Stoff" (1855; 16th edit., 1888), and which has been translated into most European languages—Dr. Büchner explains the principles of his system of philosophy, which he contends is in harmony with the discoveries of modern science. He insists on the eternity of matter, the immortality of force, the universal simultaneousness of light and life, and the infinity of forms of being in time and space. Dr. Büchner has further explained his system in "Nature and Spirit," 3rd edit., 1876; "Physiological Sketches," 2nd edit., 1875; and "Nature and Science," 3rd edit., 1874; "Man, and his Place in Nature," 3rd edit., 1889; "The Intellectual Life of Animals," 3rd edit., 1880; "The Theory of Darwin," 5th edit., 1890; "Light and Life," 1882; "The Future Life and Modern Science," 1889, and several other works. He has also contributed to periodical publications various treatises on physiology, pathology, and medical jurisprudence. Dr. Büchner's brother George, who was born in 1813, and died in 1837, was also a doctor by profession, but was distinguished as a poet. His sister Louise, who was born in 1823, and died in 1877, wrote novels and poems.

BUCK, Dudley, American musical composer, was born at Hartford, Connecticut, March 10, 1839. He studied three years at Leipzig and in Dresden, and one in Paris, under Hauptmann, Richter, Rietz, Moscheles, Plaidy, and Schneider. In 1862 he returned to America, and in 1864 began a series of organ concerts in the principal cities and towns of the United States, which were continued for a period of fifteen years, and which made him widely known to the American public both as a performer and as a composer. From Hartford, where, since his return from Europe, he has been organist of the North Congregational Church, he removed in 1869 to Chicago, to assume charge of the music in St. James's Church, but immediately after the great fire there in 1871, where he met with severe losses (including unpublished compositions), he went back to the East and took the musical direction of St. Paul's Church, Boston, and shortly afterwards was appointed organist of the Music Hall in the same city. These positions he retained for three years, relinquishing them in 1875 to become assistant conductor in Theodore Thomas' (N.Y.) Central Park Garden Concerts. In the following year his cantata, "The Centennial Meditation of Columbia," was performed under the direction of Mr. Thomas by a chorus of 1000 voices and an orchestra of nearly 200 pieces at the inauguration of the Centennial Exhibition in Philadelphia. Later in the same year (1876) he became organist of the Holy Trinity Church, Brooklyn, where he still remains. Among his numerous compositions may be mentioned two "Motett Collections," a series of "Studies in Pedal Phrasing," several groups of songs, a "Symphonic Overture" to Scott's "Marmion," the "Forty-sixth Psalm," and "The Legend of Don Munio," a romantic cantata of which the text is a metrical version of Irving's "Alhambra." The largest of his works is "The Light of Asia" (the text from Sir Edwin Arnold's poem), published in 1885. In the same year he wrote "The Voyage of Columbus" (a cantata), which was first performed by the Apollo Club, a Brooklyn Society of male voices founded and conducted by Mr. Buck. His "Golden Legend," based on Longfellow's poem of the same title, received the prize offered by the Cincinnati Music Festival Association for the best composition for solo voices, chorus and orchestra ($1000). Other of his works are a comic opera, "Deseret," produced in New York in 1880; "Illustrations in Choir Accompaniment," 1877; and a number of literary-musico treatises on themes connected with his profession. Among his latest works are two cantatas for church use, "The Story of the Cross" and "The Triumph of David," and a "Communion Service in C," in nine numbers. Mr. Buck is on the editorial staff of "The People's Cyclopaedia."

BUCKLE, Vice-Admiral Claude Edward, was born in February 1839, and entered the navy in August 1852. As a cadet he served in the Black Sea during the Russian war, and was engaged in the operations connected with the embarkation of the allied army at Varna. He joined H.M.S. Valorous as midshipman in 1854, and was present in two night attacks on the sea front of Sebastopol, and also at the capture of Kertch and Kinburn, for which he was awarded the Crimean and Turkish medals with Sebastopol clasp. In 1856 he proceeded to China in the Inflexible, and was engaged in the destruction of the Chinese Fleet at Escape Creek. Mr. (now Admiral) Buckle was afterwards attached to a detachment which succeeded in dragging its two field-guns up the wall of Canton. These he brought into action at a very opportune moment, and for this service was mentioned in despatches. As a Lieutenant in H.M.S. Magicienne, he took part in the attack on Pei-ho Forts, being in command of a gun and scaling ladders, was twice severely wounded, and again mentioned in despatches by the Commander-in-Chief. He received the China medal and three clasps. He was a Lieutenant in H.M.S. Hero, when she took H.R.H. the Prince of Wales to Canada. He was promoted Commander in 1866, and Captain in 1877, and was appointed A.D.C. to the Queen, and Senior Naval Officer at Gibraltar in 1889. He hoisted his flag as Rear-Admiral in H.M.S. Howe during 1895, having been selected to take over the duties of Senior Officer on the Coast of Ireland. During this command he had a narrow escape from drowning. In company with a dockyard labourer, Admiral Buckle was examining some large subterranean water tanks in Haulbowline Yard, when the man, who was showing the way by the light of a candle, struck his head against a beam, and fell half-stunned into a tank. The Admiral promptly jumped in after him, and with great difficulty succeeded in saving him, after which the Admiral himself was assisted out. He also holds the Royal Humane Society's medal for saving life in Queens-town Harbour. Vice-Admiral Buckle was promoted to his present rank in December 1897.

BUCKLE, George Earle, the editor of the Times, is the eldest son of the Rev. George Buckle, Canon and Precentor of Wells, and was born June 10, 1854, at Twerton Vicarage, near Bath, and educated at Honiton Grammar School, 1863-65, and Winchester College, where he was a scholar on the Foundation, 1866-72. He was a scholar of New College, Oxford, 1872-77, where he won the Newdigate Prize for English Verse, 1875, and gained a first class in Literæ Humaniores, 1876, and a first class in Modern History, 1877; graduating B.A. 1876, and M.A. 1879. He was Fellow of All Souls' College, Oxford, 1877-85, and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, 1880. He entered the Times office on the editorial staff in 1880, and was appointed editor on Mr. Chenery's death in February 1884. He married in 1885 a daughter of Mr. James Payn, the novelist. Addresses: 76 Ashley Gardens, S.W.; and Athenæum.

BUCKNILL, Thomas Townshend, Q.C., M.P., the second son of Sir J. C. Bucknill, F.R.S., was born in 1845, and was educated at Westminster and at Geneva. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1868, became a Q.C. in 1885, and in the same year was appointed Recorder of Exeter. He is also a member of the Bar Committee, and was elected a Bencher in 1891. He has sat in the House of Commons since 1892 as Conservative member for the Epsom Division of Surrey, and he served as County Alderman for Surrey from 1889 to 1892. Mr. Bucknill has edited Cunningham's Reports and Sir S. Cook's Common Pleas Reports. Addresses: Hylands House, Epsom; 10 King's Bench Walk, Temple, E.C.; and Athenæum.

BUCKTON, George Bowdler, of Weycombe, Haslemere, Surrey, Fellow of the Royal, the Linnæan, the Chemical and Entomological Societies of London, and of the Entomological Society of France, was born in London on May 24, 1817. His father, George Buckton, Esq., of Oakfield, Hornsey, Proctor of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, Doctor's Commons, came of an old Yorkshire family, whilst his mother was eldest daughter of Richard Merricks, Esq., of Runcton House, Mundham, Sussex. Partial paralysis, through an accident in very early life, incapacitated him for a university career. He studied under the private tutorships of Rev. Oliver Lodge, Rector of Barking, and the Rev. Dr. Meuse, formerly Headmaster of the Cholmondeley School at Highgate. The early friendship of Thomas Bell, F.R.S., led to his introduction in 1845 to the Linnæan Society, on whose Council he served for several years. On the death of his father, he moved into London, and joined as a student the Royal College of Chemistry, under Professor A. W. Hofmann, who became his close friend. Singly and in conjunction with him, he published several papers on organic chemistry in the Transactions of the Royal and Chemical Societies, of which he became a member in 1857 and 1852 respectively, and on whose Councils he served, enjoying the society of Bell, Owen, Yarrell, Forbes, Sir J. Hooker, E. Day, and Westwood, on the physical side, of Brodie, Odling, Frankland, Abel, Crookes, and other chemists. In 1867 he was elected a member of the Philosophical club of the Royal Society. He was the first in this country, as an amateur, successfully to grind astronomical specula on Foucault's method of silver on glass. In 1865 he married Mary Ann, only daughter of George Odling, Esq., M.R.C.S., of Croydon, and settled in Haslemere, where he gathered materials for his monograph, in 4 vols., of the "British Aphides," published by the Ray Society in 1876, the coloured plate being lithographed by himself from nature. In 1890 his illustrated monograph of the "British Cicadæ" was published by Macmillan, and followed in 1895 by a monograph of "Eristalis tenax." Papers from his pen have appeared down to the present time in the Transactions of the Entomological Society of London, and in the Museum Notes of the Asiatic Society of Bengal. Address: Weycombe, Haslemere.

BUDGE, Ernest A. Wallis, Litt.D., F.S.A., was educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, where he became Assyrian Scholar and Tyrwhitt Hebrew Scholar of his university. He is now keeper of the Egyptian and Assyrian antiquities in the British Museum. Mr. Budge is the author of numerous publications, among which may be mentioned: "Assyrian Texts," 1880; "The History of Esarhaddon," 1881; "Babylonian Life and History," 1884; "The Dwellers on the Nile," 1885; "Martyrdom of St. George," 1888; "History of Alexander the Great," 1889; "The Nile," 1890; "Catalogue of the Fitz-William Egyptian Collection," 1893; "The Mummy," 1893; "Discourses of Philoxenus," 1894; "Rabban Hormizd," 1894; "St. Michael," 1894; "Book of the Dead" (Papyrus of Ani), 1895; "First Steps in Egyptian," 1895; "An Egyptian Reading Book for Beginners," 1896; "Life and Exploits of Alexander the Great," 1896; "Oriental Wit and Wisdom," 1896, &c. Address: 10 St. Lawrence Road, W.

BULGARIA, Prince of. See FERDINAND.

BULLER, Admiral Sir Alexander, K.C.B., son of the Rev. Richard Buller, of Lanreath, Cornwall, was born in June 1834, and entered the navy in 1848. He served as mate in H.M.S. Royal Albert in the Black Sea during the Crimean war, and as Lieutenant in H.M.S. Princess Royal was present at the capture of Kertch and Kinburn, and in all the operations before Sebastopol. For these services he received the Crimean and Turkish medals. He was promoted Commander in 1863, and Captain in 1869. In the latter rank he commanded the Naval Brigade landed for operations against the Malays in the Straits of Malacca during the Perak Campaign of 1875. He was created a C.B. and received the Perak Medal with clasp. Admiral Buller was appointed Aide-de-Camp to the Queen in 1884, and from 1889 to 1892 he filled the office of Admiral Superintendent of Malta dockyard. He proceeded to the China station as Commander-in-Chief in 1895, and owing to the aggression of certain European powers, the squadron under his command was increased in strength, becoming, after the Mediterranean fleet, the most important English force in foreign waters. He relinquished the command in January 1888, when he became a full Admiral. He was created a K.C.B. in May 1896, and also holds the Royal Humane Society's medal for assisting to save life while a Lieutenant in H.M.S. Edgar. He married in 1870 Emily, daughter of Henry Tritton, Esq., of Beddington, Surrey. Address: Erle Hall, Plympton, Devon.

BULLER, The Right Hon. Lieut.-General Sir Redvers Henry, B.C., G.C.B., K.C.M.G., is the eldest surviving son of the late James Wentworth Buller, M.P., of Downes, Crediton, Devonshire, and of Charlotte, daughter of the late Lord H. Howard, and was born in 1839. He entered the 30th Rifles May 23, 1858; lieutenant, Dec. 9, 1862; captain, May 28, 1870; major, April 1, 1874; lieutenant-colonel, Nov. 11, 1878; colonel, Sept. 27, 1879; Major-General, May 21, 1884. He served with the 2nd Battalion 60th Rifles throughout the campaign of 1860 in China (medal with two clasps); with the 1st Battalion on the Red River Expedition of 1870; accompanied Sir Garnet Wolseley to the Gold Coast in September 1873; and served as D.A. Adjutant and Quartermaster-General and Head of the Intelligence Department throughout the Ashantee War of 1873-74, including the action of Essaman, battle of Amoafu, advanced guard engagement at Jarbinbah, battle of Ordahai (slightly wounded), and capture of Coomassie (several times mentioned in despatches, brevet of Major, C.B., medal with clasp). He served in the Kaffir War of 1878-79, and commanded the Frontier Light Horse in the engagement of Tabaka Uroda, and in the operations at Molyneux Path and against Manyanya's stronghold (several times mentioned in despatches); also throughout the Zulu War of 1879, and commanded the cavalry in the engagements at Zeobane Mountain and Kambula; conducted the reconnaissance before Ulundi, and was present in the engagement at Ulundi (several times mentioned in despatches, thanked in General Orders, brevet of Lieut.-Colonel, Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, Victoria Cross, C.M.G., medal with clasp). The B.C. was given "for his gallant conduct at the retreat at Inhloband, on March 28, 1879, in having assisted, while hotly pursued by Zulus, in rescuing Captain C. D'Arcy of the Frontier Light Horse, who was retiring on foot, Colonel Buller carrying him on his horse until he overtook the rear-guard; also for having on the same day, and in the same circumstances, conveyed to a place of safety Lieutenant C. Everitt of the Frontier Light Horse, whose horse had been killed under him. Later on, Colonel Buller, in the same manner, saved a trooper of the Frontier Light Horse, whose horse was completely exhausted, and who otherwise would have been killed by the Zulus, who were within eighty yards of him." Colonel Buller served in the Boer War of 1881 as Chief of the Staff to Sir Evelyn Wood, with the local rank of Major-General; in the Egyptian War of 1882 in charge of the Intelligence Department, and was present in the action at Kassassin, September 9, and at the battle of Tel-el-Kebir (mentioned in despatches, K.C.M.G., medal with clasp, third class of the Osmanieh, and Khedive's Star); served in the Soudan Expedition under Sir Gerald Graham in 1884, in command of the 1st Infantry Brigade, and as second in command of the expedition, and was present in the engagement at El Teb and Temai (twice mentioned in despatches, promoted to Major-General for distinguished service in the field, medal and two clasps); served in the Soudan campaign in 1884-85 as Chief of the Staff to Lord Wolseley. When Sir Herbert Stewart was wounded, and Colonel Burnaby had been killed, he took command of the Desert Column, and withdrew it from Gubat to Gakdul in the face of the enemy, defeating them at Abu Klea Wells on February 16 and 17 (mentioned in despatches, K.C.B., medal and clasp). From 1887 to 1890 Sir Redvers Buller was Quartermaster-General of the Army, and in October of the latter year became Adjutant-General to the Forces in succession to Lord Wolseley. In April 1891 he was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant-General. G.C.B. 1894. He is married to Audrey, daughter of the 4th Marquis Townshend, and widow of the Hon. G. T. Howard. Addresses: 29 Bruton Street; Downes, Crediton; and Athenæum.

BULLER, Sir Walter Lawry, K.C.M.G., F.R.S., the descendant of an ancient Cornish family and the oldest surviving son of the late Rev. James Buller, was born at Newark, in the Bay of Islands, New Zealand, on Oct. 9, 1838. He received his early education at Auckland College, and afterwards became a pupil of William Swainson, F.R.S., the celebrated zoologist, who had settled in that colony. For a continuous period of fifteen years he held various official appointments, but chiefly in connection with native affairs, as he had early acquired a thorough knowledge of the Maori language; and on eight different occasions he received the special thanks of the Colonial Government. During this time he also contributed largely to zoological literature, and was elected a Fellow of the Linnean and of various other learned societies. From 1855 to 1860 he acted as Government Interpreter and Native Commissioner. In 1861 he was appointed editor-in-chief of The Maori Messenger, an English and Maori journal published by authority. At the age of twenty-four he was appointed a Resident Magistrate, and three years later a Judge of the Native Land Court. In 1865 he served as a volunteer on Sir George Grey's staff at the taking of the Weraroa Pa, for which he received the New Zealand War Medal. On that occasion, declining the protection of a military escort, he carried the Governor's despatches, at night, through forty miles of the enemy's country, attended only by a Maori orderly, for which gallant service he was mentioned in despatches. In 1871 he visited England, and two years later published a splendidly illustrated "History of the Birds of New Zealand." The Royal University of Tübingen bestowed upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Science, and he received several other foreign distinctions. In 1874 he was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple. In 1875 Her Majesty, in recognition of the value of his scientific work, created him a C.M.G.; and in 1876 he was elected F.R.S. In 1882 he published a "Manual of the Birds of New Zealand," for the use of students; and in 1883 was awarded the Gold Medal of the New Zealand Exhibition, "for Science and Literature." From 1875 to 1885 inclusive he practised his profession in the Colony with remarkable success. In 1886 he returned to England as New Zealand Commissioner at the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, and for his services on that occasion was promoted by Her Majesty to the rank of K.C.M.G. In 1887 he was awarded the Galileian Medal by the Royal University of Florence; and in 1888 he published a new and much enlarged edition of "The Birds of New Zealand" (imperial quarto). In 1889 he was a Member of the Mansion House Committee for the Paris Exhibition, and served on the Executive Council of that body. In the following year he proceeded to New Zealand, and in 1893 returned to England to represent that Colony on the permanent governing body of the Imperial Institute, retaining this position until 1896. Sir Walter Buller holds the rank of Officer in the Legion of Honour. He is also "Officier de l'Instruction Publique" (Gold Palms of the Academy), Knight first class of the Order of Francis Joseph of Austria, Knight first class of the Order of Frederick of Württemberg, and Knight first class of the Order of Merit of Hesse-Darmstadt. Address: The Terrace, Wellington, New Zealand.

BULLOCK, The Rev. Charles, B.D., was born in 1829. He was ordained to the Parish of Rotherham, and became Rector of St. Nicholas, Worcester, in 1860. Resigning this post in 1874, he devoted himself to popular literature; and in recognition of his services in this direction the Archbishop of Canterbury conferred on him the degree of B.D. The magazines edited by him are The Fireside (first published in 1864), Home Words, which in its localised form is known throughout the country, and The Day of Days, for Sunday reading. In 1876 he founded Hand and Heart, as a penny illustrated Church of England Social and Temperance Journal. More recently he has established "The News: a National Journal and Review." He is also author of several religious books, of which we may mention his "Memorials of Frances Ridley Havergal." Address: Coomrith, Eastbourne.

BÜLOW, Bernhard von, German Foreign Secretary, was born in 1850, and is a son of the Herr von Bülow who was Foreign Secretary of Germany between the years 1873 and 1879. In 1873, after entering the German Foreign Office, he became successively Secretary of Embassy in Rome, St. Petersburg, and Vienna. During the Russo-Turkish War he discharged the arduous duties of Chargé d'Affaires at Athens. He was one of the Secretaries of the Berlin Congress, served subsequently in diplomatic capacities in Paris and St. Petersburg, and was appointed Minister to Roumania in 1888. In 1893 he became Minister to Italy. In the absence from his post of Baron Marschall von Buberstein in 1897 he acted as Foreign Secretary in Berlin, and succeeded to that office on October 21.

BULWER, Sir Henry Ernest Gascoigne, G.C.M.G., was born on Dec. 11, 1836, and is the youngest son of the late W. E. Lytton Bulwer of Heydon, Norfolk, and Emily, daughter of the late General Gascoigne. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. After serving as private secretary to the Lieut.-Governor of Prince Edward's Island he became, in 1860, an official Resident of the Ionian Islands; in 1866, Receiver-General and Treasurer of Trinidad; in 1867, Administrator of Dominica; and from 1871 to 1875, Governor of Labuan, and Consul-General at Borneo. He was then appointed Lieut.-Governor of Natal, which post he held until 1880. In 1882 he was appointed Governor of Natal; in 1883 he was made G.C.M.G.; and in 1885, Lord High Commissioner of Cyprus. He retired from his Cyprus post in 1892. Addresses: 17 South Audley Street, W.; Heydon, Norwich; and Athenæum.

BULWER, James Redfoord, Q.C., J.P., Master in Lunacy, was born on May 22, 1820, and is the son of the Rev. James Bulwer. He was educated at King's College, London, and at Trinity College, Cambridge. Called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1847, he was Recorder of Ipswich from 1861 to 1866, and then for twenty years edited the Common Law Series of the Law Reports. In 1886 he was appointed Recorder of Cambridge. He represented Ipswich in the Conservative interest in Parliament from 1874 to 1880, and Cambridgeshire from 1881 to 1885. Address: 2 Temple Gardens, E.C.

BUNSEN, Professor Robert Wilhelm Eberhard, M.D., chemist and physicist, born March 13, 1811, at Göttingen, where his father was professor of Occidental literature; studied in the university the physical and natural sciences, and completed his education at Paris, Berlin, and Vienna. Having at Göttingen in 1833 taken his degrees for teaching chemistry, he succeeded Wöhler three years later as Professor of this science in the Polytechnic Institution at Cassel. In 1838 he was appointed Assistant Professor in the University of Marburg, became Titular Professor in 1841, then Director of the Chemical Institute. In 1851 he passed to the University of Breslau, and in 1852 to the University of Heidelberg. Some years ago Professor Bunsen declined a call to Berlin which he received at the same time as Professor Kirchhoff, with whom he is the founder of stellar chemistry (spectrum analysis). He has made many important discoveries, and the charcoal pile which bears his name is in very extensive use, as is the Bunsen burner and magnesium light. From the spectrum analysis down to the simplest manipulations of practical chemistry his numerous discoveries have rendered the most distinguished services to science. The University of Leyden conferred on him the honorary degree of M.D.

in February 1875. In July 1877 the University of Heidelberg commemorated the twenty-fifth anniversary of Professor Bunsen's election to the Chair of Experimental Chemistry. In January 1883 he was appointed one of the eight Foreign Associates of the Paris Academy of Sciences. He has written on hygrometry (1830); a work on gasometry (1857), which has been translated into English by Sir H. E. Roscoe; and on the analysis of ashes and mineral waters. In May 1898 the Society of Arts awarded him their Albert Medal "in recognition of his numerous and most valuable applications of chemistry and physics to the arts and to manufactures."

BURBURY, Samuel Hawksley, F.R.S., born at Kenilworth on May 18, 1831, was educated at Kensington Grammar School, and afterwards at Shrewsbury School, and at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he was Craven University Scholar in 1853; fifteenth Wrangler and second in the Classical Tripos and second Chancellor's Medallist, 1854; M.A. 1857. He was called to the Bar in 1858, and elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1890. He is joint author (with Rev. H. W. Watson) of "The Application of Generalised Co-ordinates to the Dynamics of a Material System," 1879; "The Mathematical Theory of Electricity and Magnetism," 1885 and 1889; author of a paper "On the Second Law of Thermodynamics in Connexion with the Kinetic Theory of Gases," Philosophical Magazine, 1876; "On a Theorem in the Dissipation of Energy," Philosophical Magazine, 1882; and various other papers on mathematical and physical subjects in that magazine. He is married to Alice, daughter of Thomas Edward Taylor, of Dodworth Hall, J.P., D.L. Addresses: 17 Upper Phillimore Gardens, Kensington; and 1 New Square, Lincoln's Inn.

BURDETT, Sir Henry Charles, K.C.B., is the son of the late Rev. Halford R. Burdett, of Northampton, and grandson of the Rev. D. J. Burdett, rector of Gilmorton, Leicestershire, a living which had been in the Burdett family almost uninterruptedly since the time of Queen Elizabeth. Mr. Burdett was born at Broughton, Kettering, on March 18, 1846, and began his active career in the Midland Bank, Birmingham. In 1868 he was appointed Secretary to the Queen's Hospital, Birmingham, and in a very short time succeeded in uniting the two rival medical colleges of that town under one management, thus constituting the present strong and useful medical school of the Midlands. He was for a time Secretary to the Society for exempting Charities from Rating; and was also the first to organise the system of training nurses according to modern ideas and methods, insisting specially upon the employment of young women only. The latter idea was much criticised at the time, and many evils were predicted of its future working. As all the world knows, however, its success has been great beyond the most sanguine expectations. In 1873 Mr. Burdett became a medical student, and, at Birmingham and Guy's Hospital, London, went through the whole curriculum necessary for medical examination and practice. A year later he was appointed House Governor of the Dreadnought Seaman's Hospital, Greenwich, and in six years raised the income of that institution from £7000 to £13,000 a year. In 1877 he established the well-known paying hospital for the middle and upper classes at Fitzroy House, Fitzroy Square, having succeeded in raising no less a sum than £26,000 for that purpose. Perhaps the most permanently valuable, as it is certainly the most interesting, of Mr. Burdett's public services was the founding in 1888 of the National Pension Fund for trained nurses and hospital officials. Among those who have helped in the establishment of the Fund, and without whose munificent aid indeed it would have been impossible for Mr. Burdett to realise his benevolent ideal, may be mentioned Lord Rothschild, Mr. J. S. Morgan, Mr. H. Hambro, and Mr. Huchs Gibbs, each of whom gave £5000 to form a bonus fund for the increase of pensions. Several other gentlemen contributed varying sums, and the Fund started with nearly £30,000 in hand. The Princess of Wales occupies the position of President and the Prince of Wales that of Patron to the Fund. In every department of hospital administration and finance Mr. Burdett is admittedly the chief authority in the whole of the British Empire. From 1883 to 1897 he was Secretary of the Share and Loan Department of the London Stock Exchange. He was created K.C.B. in 1897. He is founder and editor of The Hospital, and since 1881 has published and compiled the well-known "Burdett's Official Intelligence." He also annually publishes the handbook "Burdett's Hospitals and Charities," and was the author in 1891 of the standard work "The Hospitals and Asylums of the World," in four thick volumes, together with a portfolio of plans. He married in 1875 Helen, daughter of the late Gay Shute, F.R.C.S. Address: The Lodge, Porchester Square, W.

BURDETT - COUTTS, Baroness, Angela Georgina Burdett-Coutts, is the youngest daughter of the late Sir Francis Burdett, Baronet, and granddaughter of Mr. Thomas Coutts, the banker, and was born on April 26, 1814.

In 1837 she succeeded to the great wealth of Mr. Coutts, through his widow, once the fascinating Miss Mellon, who died Duchess of St. Albans. The extensive power of benefiting her less fortunate fellow-creatures thus conferred, the Baroness Burdett-Coutts has wisely exercised, chiefly by working out her own well-considered projects. A consistently liberal churchwoman in purse and opinions, her munificence to the Establishment is historical. Besides contributing large sums towards building new churches and new schools in various poor districts throughout the country, Miss Coutts erected and endowed at her sole cost the handsome church of St. Stephen's, Westminster, with its three schools and parsonage; and more recently, another church at Carlisle. She endowed, at an outlay of £50,000, the three colonial bishoprics of Adelaide, Cape Town, and British Columbia; besides founding an establishment in South Australia for the improvement of the aborigines. She also supplied the funds for Sir Henry James's Topographical Survey of Jerusalem; and offered to restore the ancient aqueducts of Solomon to supply that city with water—a work, however, which the Government did not fulfil. In no direction are the Baroness's sympathies so fully expressed as in favour of the poor and unfortunate of her own sex. Her exertions in the cause of reformation, as well as in that of education, have been numerous and successful. For young women who had lapsed out of well-doing she provided a shelter and a means of reform in a "Home" at Shepherd's Bush. Nearly half the cases which passed through her reformatory during the seven years it existed resulted in new and prosperous lives in the Colonies. Again, when Spitalfields became a mass of destitution, Miss Coutts began a sewing-school there for adult women, not only to be taught, but to be fed and provided with work; for which object Government contracts are undertaken and successfully executed. Nurses were sent daily from this unpretending charity in Brown's Lane, Spitalfields, amongst the sick, who were provided with medical comforts; while outfits were distributed to poor servants, and clothing to deserving women. In 1859 hundreds of destitute boys were fitted out for the Royal Navy, or placed in various industrial homes. In the terrible winter of 1861 the frozen-out tanners of Bermondsey were aided, and at the same time she suggested the formation of the East London Weavers' Aid Association, by whose assistance many of the sufferers from decaying trade were able to remove to Queensland. One of the black spots of London in that neighbourhood, once known to, and dreaded by, the police as Nova Scotia Gardens, was bought by Miss Coutts, and upon that area of squalor and refuse she erected the model dwellings called Columbia Square, consisting of separate tenements let at low weekly rentals to about two hundred families. Close to it is Columbia Market, one of the handsomest architectural ornaments of North-Eastern London. The Baroness takes great interest in judicious emigration. When a sharp cry of distress arose some years ago in the town of Girvan, in Scotland, she advanced a large sum to enable the starving families to seek better fortune in Australia. Again, the people of Cape Clear, Shirkin, close to Skibbereen, in Ireland, when dying of starvation, were relieved from the same source, by emigration, and by the establishment of a store of food and clothing, by efficient tackle, and by a vessel to help them in their chief means of livelihood—fishing. Miss Coutts materially assisted Sir James Brooke in improving the condition of the Dyaks of Sarawak, and a model farm is still entirely supported by her, from which the natives have learnt such valuable lessons in agriculture that the productiveness of their country has been materially improved. Taking a warm interest in the reverent preservation and ornamental improvement of our town churchyards, and having, as the possessor of the great tithes of the living of Old St. Pancras, a special connection with that parish, the Baroness, in 1877, laid out the churchyard as a garden for the enjoyment of the surrounding poor, besides erecting a memorial sundial to its illustrious dead. In the same year, when accounts were reaching this country of the sufferings of the Turkish peasantry flying from their homes before the Russian invasion, Lady Burdett-Coutts instituted the Turkish Compassionate Fund, a charitable organisation by means of which the sum of nearly £30,000, contributed in money and stores, was entrusted to Mr. Burdett-Coutts and to the British Ambassador for distribution, and saved thousands from starvation and death. In recognition of her important services the Order of the Medjidieh was conferred upon her. This is but an imperfect enumeration of the Baroness's good works as a public benefactress. The amount of her private charities it is impossible to estimate. She is a liberal patroness of artists in every department of art. In June 1871 Miss Coutts was surprised by the Prime Minister with the offer from her Majesty of a peerage, which honour was accepted. Her ladyship was admitted to the freedom of the City of London, July 11, 1872, and to the freedom of the City of Edinburgh, Jan. 15, 1874. On Nov. 1, 1880, the Haberdashers'

Company publicly conferred their freedom and livery on the Baroness Burdett-Coutts in recognition of her judicious and extensive benevolence and her munificent support of educational, charitable, and religious institutions and efforts throughout the country. She has since become a member of the Turners' Company, and was received with great enthusiasm during a recent visit to Ireland, where she had previously organised a fishing fleet, having its headquarters in Bantry Bay. The Baroness has also taken a leading part in promoting and supporting the Children's Protection Society, of which she was at once asked to become President on the death of the late Lord Shaftesbury. The Baroness was married on Feb. 12, 1881, to Mr. William Lehman Ashmead-Bartlett, who obtained the royal license to use the surname of Burdett-Coutts. Addresses: 1 Stratton Street, Piccadilly, W.; and Holly Lodge, Highgate.

BURGESS, James, C.I.E., LL.D., F.R.S.E., Hon. A.R.I.B.A., F.R.G.S., &c., was born in the parish of Kirkmahoe, Dumfriesshire, on Aug. 14, 1832. In 1855 he went to Calcutta as a Professor of Mathematics, and in 1858 wrote a paper "On Hypsometrical Measurements," and published editions of some English textbooks, with philological notes, &c., for the Calcutta University Examinations in 1859. Early in 1861 he removed to Bombay, and was engaged in educational work till 1873. There he contributed papers on the Tides, Hypsometry, &c., to the Philosophical Magazine, Transactions of the Bombay Geographical Society, &c. As Secretary to the Commission on the Colaba Observatory in 1865, he prepared the report for Government on that establishment. In 1869 he published a large folio on "The Temples of Shatrunjaya," illustrated by forty-five photographic views. This was followed by a similar volume on the antiquities at Somnāth, Gīrnār, and Junāgarh. In 1871, besides some educational class-books, appeared a monograph on "The Rock-Temples of Elephanta or Ghārapuri," illustrated; and in 1872 he started The Indian Antiquary, a monthly journal of Oriental archaeology, history, literature, and folk-lore, which he conducted for thirteen years, and which soon acquired a European reputation. He travelled through Gujarat and Rajputana in 1872, and wrote the letterpress for a large folio of views of the architecture and scenery of these countries. The Bombay Government nominated him in 1873 to organise and direct the Archaeological Survey of that Presidency and the neighbouring states, Gujarat, &c.; and since 1873 the results of this survey have been partly published in quarto volumes fully illustrated, viz.: "Report on the Antiquities in the Belgaum and Kaladgi Districts," 1874; "On the Antiquities of Kathiawar and Kachh," 1876; "On the Antiquities of Bidar and Aurangabad Districts," 1878; "The Buddhist Caves and their Inscriptions," "Caves of Elura and other Brahmanical and Jaina Caves in Western India," 1883; "The Muhammadan Architecture of Gujarat," 1896; and "The Antiquities of Dabhoi in Gujarat" (published by H.H. the Gaikwar of Baroda), 1888, in about a dozen occasional papers, 1874-85, and in a special volume on "The Cave-Temples of India," the caves in Northern and Eastern India being described by the late Mr. James Fergusson. Other volumes richly illustrated are in preparation. The superintendence of the Archaeological Survey of the Madras Presidency was added to that of Western India on its initiation in 1881, the results of which are published in "The Buddhist Stūpas of Amaravati and Jagga-yapeta," with numerous plates and woodcuts, and other volumes are in preparation. In 1885 he was put in charge also of the surveys in Northern India, and appointed Director-General of the Archaeological Survey of India. In 1888 he edited and published "The Sharqi Architecture of Jaunpur," from the reports of Dr. A. Führer and Mr. E. W. Smith, the provincial surveyors, with seventy-four sheets of architectural drawings. He also started and edited for Government The Epigraphia Indica, issued in fasciculi, forming two large quarto volumes, 1891 and 1894, containing important Sanskrit and Pali inscriptions translated by the most competent Oriental scholars. He retired from the Directorship of the Surveys in 1889, and the office was then abolished. He recently prepared "Constable's Hand-Gazetteer of India," 1898, and published a paper in the Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh on a definite Integral, that plays an important part in various departments of physical research, with very extensive tables of values. At its fiftieth anniversary, 1897, the Imperial Russian Archaeological Society elected him an honorary member; he is also an Honorary Corresponding Member of the Batavian Society of Arts and Sciences, and of the Berlin Society of Anthropology, Ethnology, &c. Hon. LL.D. Edinburgh, 1881; created C.I.E., 1886. Address: 22 Seton Place, Edinburgh.

BURNAND, Francis Cowley, born in 1837, and descended on his father's side from an old Savoyard family, and on his mother's from Hannah Cowley, the authoress, and educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, where, in his first year, he founded the Club known as the A.D.C., or Amateur Dramatic Club. Mr. Burnand took his degree in 1857-58, and for a time read for the Church under Canon Liddon at Cuddesdon. Afterwards he was called to the Bar in 1861, and occasionally practised. He married early, and began to write, being introduced by Mr. George Meredith to Once a Week. He is the author of about a hundred dramatic pieces, principally burlesques. His chief work for Punch was the now well-known serial "Happy Thoughts," and "Strapmore," a parody of Ouida's "Strathmore." His burlesque of Douglas Jerrold's nautical drama, "Black-eyed Susan," achieved what was in those days the unprecedented run of over four hundred consecutive nights at the Royalty Theatre, Dean Street, Soho; and later his comedy "The Colonel" ran for about a year and a half at the Prince's Theatre in Tottenham Court Road, which has now disappeared. In 1879 he published "The 'A.D.C.'"; being Personal Reminiscences of the University Amateur Dramatic Club, Cambridge"; and in July 1880 he became editor of Punch on the death of Tom Taylor. His connection with Punch dates from the publication of his burlesque novelette "Mokeanna" by Mark Lemon. In 1888 his parody of "Ariane," entitled "Airey-Annie," was produced at the Strand Theatre. He has of late years added "Very Much Abroad," "Quite at Home," and "Very Much at Sea," &c., to the "Happy Thought" books. Together with Sir Arthur Sullivan he wrote "The Chieftain," produced at the Savoy in 1894. Mr. Burnand divides his time between Ramsgate and London. Addresses: 27 The Boltons, S.W.; and 18 Royal Crescent, Ramsgate.

BURNETT, Mrs. Frances Hodgson, née Hodgson, was born at Manchester, Nov. 24, 1849. There she passed the first fifteen years of her life, acquired her education, and gained her knowledge of the Lancashire dialect and character. At the close of the American Civil War reverses of fortune led her parents to leave England for America, where they settled at Knoxville, Tennessee, 1865. She there began to write short stories for the magazines, the first of which appeared in 1867. In 1872 her dialect story, "Surly Tim's Trouble," was published in Scribner's Monthly (now The Century), and in book form in 1877. "That Lass o' Lowrie's" was first presented, serially, in Scribner, and its remarkable popularity demanded its immediate separate issue, 1877. In 1878-79 some of her earlier magazine stories were reprinted, viz.: "Kathleen Mavourneen," "Lindsay's Luck," "Miss Crespigny," "Pretty Polly Pemberton,"

"Theo," "Dolly" (also issued under the title of "Vagabondia"), "Jarl's Daughter," and "Quiet Life." "Haworth's" appeared in 1879, and was followed by "Louisiana," 1880; "A Fair Barbarian," 1881; "Through One Administration," 1883; "Little Lord Fauntleroy," 1886; "Sarah Crewe," 1888; "The Pretty Sister of José," 1889; and "Little Saint Elizabeth," 1890. From 1886 until 1894 her work was confined principally to studies of child life. Among these may be mentioned, "The One I knew the Best of All—A Memory of the Mind of a Child," which is autobiographical. Of her children's stories the most widely known is probably "Little Lord Fauntleroy," which has been published in nearly every Continental language. In 1896 Mrs. Burnett published a novel of the period of Queen Anne, entitled "A Lady of Quality," and in 1897 a second novel of the same period, entitled "His Grace of Osmonde." Mrs. Burnett's dramatic work has been—the play of "Esmeralda," a dramatisation (written in collaboration) of one of her short stories, successfully played in New York and London; "The Real Little Lord Fauntleroy," which was produced at Terry's Theatre, London, and the Broadway, New York, and which is still being played in England, America, France, and Germany; "Phyllis," produced in London and Boston; "Nixie" (in collaboration), played at Terry's and the Globe Theatre, London, in 1890; "The Showman's Daughter," produced at the Royalty Theatre, London, in 1892; "A Very Young Couple," which was played in America in 1892; "The First Gentleman of Europe" (in collaboration), produced at the Lyceum Theatre, New York, in 1897; and the drama "A Lady of Quality" (in collaboration), now playing in the United States. Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett, then Miss Hodgson, was married in 1873 to Dr. Burnett. She has resided much at Washington. Her present address is 63 Portland Place.

BURNS, John, M.P., L.C.C., labour leader, is the son of Alexander Burns, an engineer, formerly of Ayrshire, and was born in humble circumstances at Vauxhall in 1858. He was sent to Christ Church School, Battersea, and at the age of ten years was set to work in a local candle factory. He then became a rivet boy at a Vauxhall engineer's, and afterwards bound himself apprentice to an engineer at Millbank, under whom he served till he was twenty-one. Throughout his earlier years he read omnivorously, and imbibed Socialistic theories from a fellow-workman, a Frenchman, who had fled from Paris after the Commune. On coming of age he worked for a year as foreman engineer on the Niger, and on his return from West Africa spent his savings in a six months' tour of Europe. As a boy he had got into trouble with his employers for delivering an open-air address, but he did not come into public notice as a speaker until at an Industrial Remuneration Conference in London he delivered certain speeches on Socialism which attracted attention. Since that time he has constantly addressed workman audiences. Becoming prominent in his own union—the Amalgamated Engineers—he stood as a Socialist candidate for the western division of Nottingham at the General Election of 1885, but obtained only 598 votes. In 1886 he took a leading part in the unemployed agitation, and was one of the heads of the crowd which broke from its leaders and caused a riot in the West End on Feb. 8, 1887. Subsequently he contested the right of public meeting in Trafalgar Square, and underwent a short term of imprisonment (six weeks) for resisting the police. During the great Dock Strike of 1889 John Burns was the hero of the hour. He addressed dockers' meetings in the East End every day for weeks, walking from Battersea every morning and returning on foot at night. His main contention was that the docker deserved sixpence (a "tanner") more a day than he had hitherto been paid, but he was also indefatigable as an organiser and strike manager. When the dock labourers finally won a great victory in their long struggle for higher wages Burns's reputation as the first of labour leaders and labour organisers was made. He is now regarded as an authority on labour, and the mouthpiece of respectable artisan opinion in London, and his help and advice are constantly sought by workmen and their organisations. He has been four times elected to the London County Council as member for Battersea, and he has been returned to Parliament twice for the same division. Address: 108 Lavender Hill, Battersea.

BURNSIDE, Sir Bruce Lockhart, Kt., second son of the late Hon. J. J. Burnside, Surveyor-General of the Bahamas, was born on July 26, 1833, at Bahamas, and was educated at King's College there and privately. He was called to the Bar by Lincoln's Inn in 1856; and during the war which shortly afterwards broke out between the North and the South in America he was conspicuous for the active part which he took as legal adviser to what was called the Confederacy in the many delicate questions of international law which were at that time raised in consequence of the blockade of the Southern ports and of the fitting out of armed cruisers by the Confederate Government.

He successfully defended the Alexandra, the Orelo, and the Florida, prosecuted in the B. A. Court for breaches of the Foreign Enlistment Act. He was Speaker of the House, Solicitor, and Attorney-General of the Bahamas, and was made one of Her Majesty's Council. He prepared a valuable "Manual for Justices of the Peace," for which he received the thanks of the Colonial Government. In 1879 he was appointed Queen's Advocate of Ceylon, and was employed at Downing Street for a considerable time in preparing a "Penal Code" and a "Criminal Procedure Code," which were afterwards passed by the legislature, and for which he was specially commended by Lord Derby, the Secretary of State. In 1883 he was appointed Chief-Justice of Ceylon, there being at the time most scandalous arrears in the Supreme Court, which had attracted public attention and condemnation. He retired in 1893. Sir Bruce was knighted in 1885. He married in 1856 Mary, daughter of R. Francis. Address: Fincastle, Colombo.

BURROWS, Montagu, R.N., M.A., F.S.A., third son of Lieut.-General Montagu Burrows and of Mary Anne, daughter of Captain Larcom, R.N., Commissioner of Malta Dockyard, was born at Hadley, Middlesex, Oct. 27, 1819, and educated at the Royal Naval College, Portsmouth, where he obtained the "First Medal" in 1834. On passing through the R.N. College as a mate in 1842 he obtained a First Class in Mathematics. He served continuously in the Royal Navy until he obtained the rank of Commander in 1852, and became a retired Post-Captain in 1862. He matriculated at Oxford University early in 1853, and obtained a Double First Class (Classics and Modern History); took the degree of M.A. there in 1856, and received an Hon. M.A. degree at Cambridge in 1859; was elected to the Chichele Professorship of Modern History (the first since its foundation) in 1862; became a Fellow of All Souls in 1870; Chairman of the Oxford School Board in 1873; and Member of the Hebdomadal Council of his University in 1876. During his service in the navy he was engaged in several actions with Malay pirates, under Captain Chads, and he received medals from the English and Turkish Governments for the capture of St. Jean d'Acre in 1840. He was employed on the coast of Africa for some years in the suppression of the slave trade, and was made Commander for his services on the staff of H.M.S. Excellent. He is the author of "Pass and Class: An Oxford Guide-Book through the courses of Literæ Humaniores, Mathematics, Natural Science, Law, and Modern History," 3rd edit., 1866; "Constitutional Progress: a series of Lectures delivered before the University of Oxford," 1869; "A Memoir of Admiral Sir H. Chads, G.C.B.," 1869; "Worthies of All Souls:—Four Centuries of English History illustrated from the College Archives," 1874; "Parliament and the Church of England," 1875; "Imperial England," 1880; "Oxford University during the Commonwealth" (Camden Society), 1881; "Wiclif's Place in History," 1882 (new edit. 1884); "Life of Admiral Lord Hawke," 1883 (2nd edit. 1896); "History of the Brocas Family of Beaurepaire and Roche Court," 1886; "History of the Cinque Ports," 1888 (4th edit. 1895); "Memoir of William Grocyn" (in "Collectanea," vol. ii., of the Oxford Historical Society), 1890; "Commentaries on the History of England," 1893; "History of the Foreign Policy of Great Britain," 1895 (2nd edit. 1897); articles in the Quarterly and Edinburgh Reviews, &c. In 1892, for services to France in relation to the publication of the Gascon Rolls, he was made "Officier de l'Instruction Publique." He married in 1849 Mary Anna, daughter of Sir James W. S. Gardiner, Bart., of Roche Court, Hants; and has three sons and one daughter—Edward Henry, H.M. Inspector of Schools, married to Dorothy, daughter of Ralph Assheton, Esq., of Downham Park; Stephen Montagu, H.M. Civil Service, Ceylon, married to Isabel Cruickshank, Sydney, Australia; the Rev. Alfred; and F. Emily, married to Bishop Scott of N. China. Address: 9 Norham Gardens, Oxford.

BURT, Thomas, M.P., was born Nov. 12, 1837, at Murton Row, near Percy Main, Northumberland, and is the son of Peter Burt, a coal miner. While he was yet a child seventeen months old, his parents went to Whitley, whence they had to remove about a year afterwards, when the pit was thrown out of gear by an explosion. Their next place of abode was New Row, Seghill, now styled Blake Town, where they remained five years, and at a later period they settled at the Seaton Delaval Colliery. Young Burt, who had been working in the coal pits from ten years of age, here began that course of self-culture which has gone so far to supply the deficiencies of his previous education. In 1860 he removed to Choppington, and in 1865 he was appointed Secretary to the Northumberland Miners' Mutual Association. In this capacity he rendered himself so popular among the miners that it was determined to nominate him as the working-class candidate for the representation of Morpeth at the general election of February 1874. He was returned by 3332 votes against 585 given for Captain Duncan, the Conservative candidate. In June 1880 he was elected a member of the Reform Club by the Political Committee, under the rule empowering the body to elect two candidates in each year for marked and obvious services to the Liberal cause. He is President of the Miners' National Union, and has presided over several important conferences of miners held at Manchester, Birmingham, and elsewhere. He has been President of the Trades Union Congress, Newcastle-on-Tyne, in 1891. He has also presided at several International Miners' Conferences held in Paris, Brussels, and other places on the Continent. Mr. Burt has been a member of several Royal Commissions, including those inquiring into accidents in mines, loss of life at sea, mining royalties, and the Labour Commission, of which the Duke of Devonshire was President. He was one of the British delegates to the International Labour Conference held at Berlin in March 1890. Mr. Burt was invited by Mr. Gladstone in 1892 to join his administration as Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade, a post which he accepted and held until the general election of 1895. He is the author of articles in the Nineteenth Century, Contemporary, and Fortnightly. In 1860 he married Mary, daughter of Thomas Weatherburn. Address: 20 Burdon Terrace, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

BURT, T. Seymour, F.R.S., M.R.A.S., &c., is the fourth son of the late Rev. Charles Henry Burt, and was student of Wadham College, Oxford; then Curate of Plympton St. Mary, Devon; next of Westgate House, Bridgwater, Somerset, and for upwards of twenty years Vicar of Cannington, in the same county; a chaplain-in-ordinary to H.R.H. the Duke of Sussex; an acting magistrate for Somerset; a retired chaplain to the 24th Light Dragoons. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society, and a Member of the Royal Astronomical Society; and has published the following works:—"Papers on Scientific Subjects," vols. 1, 2, 3, 1837 and 1858; "Trip in Search of Ancient Inscriptions," 1838; "Metrical Epitome of the History of England," 1852; "Poems by Koi Hai," 1853; "Account of a Voyage to India via the Mediterranean," 1857; "A Translation into Blank Verse of all Virgil's Works," vols. 1, 2, 3, &c., 1883-84; "Transposition into Blank Verse of Wesley's translation of T. à Kempis," 1883-1884; "Transposition into Blank Verse of Hamilton's Translation of Sacred History," 1883-84; "Transposition into Blank Verse of the Rev. Newman Hall's 'Come to Jesus,'" 1883-84. He is likewise the author of numerous papers published in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal,—"Description of the Mode of Extracting Salt from the damp sandbeds of the River Jumna as practised by the Inhabitants of Bundelkhund"; "Inscription found near Bhabra, three marches from Jeypore on the road from Delhi to Nusseerabad"; "Description of an Instrument for trisecting angles"; "Notice of an Inscription on a Slab discovered in February, 1883"; "Inscription taken from a Baolee at Bussuntgurb, at the foot of the Southern range of hills running parallel to Mount Aboo"; "Observations on a second Inscription taken in facsimile from the neighbourhood of Mount Aboo"; "Description with Drawings of the ancient stone pillar at Allahabad called Bhim Sen's Gadā or Club, with accompanying copies of four inscriptions engraven in different characters upon its surface."

BURTON, Sir Frederic William, R.H.A., F.S.A., Hon. LL.D. Dublin, ex-Director of the National Gallery, third son of Samuel Burton, of Mungret, co. Limerick, and grandson of Edward William Burton, of Clifden House, co. Clare, was born in Ireland in 1816, and educated at Dublin, where he first studied drawing under the brothers Brocas. He was elected Associate of the Royal Hibernian Academy of Arts in 1837, and R. H. Academician in 1839, in which latter year his picture (in water colours), "The Blind Girl at the Holy Well," was chosen for publication by the Irish Art Union, and was engraved by Ryall. In the following year the picture of "The Arran Fisherman's Drowned Child" also was engraved for the Irish Art Union. A large composition of the same year, "The Connaught Toilet," representing peasant girls at a stream, preparing themselves to enter the market town, was, together with the former, exhibited at the Royal Academy in London in 1842. The latter picture was afterwards destroyed by fire at the Pantechnicon, where it had been temporarily deposited by its owner. From 1832 to 1861 his time was occupied in portrait painting. About 1840 he was elected member of the Royal Irish Academy of Science, Antiquities, and Belles Lettres, and for many years sat in the Council of Antiquities. In 1851 he went to Munich. There, at Nuremberg, and in various wanderings in Upper Franconia, where he found ample subjects for the pencil, about seven years were passed. In 1855 he became Associate, and in the following year full Member of the (now Royal) Society of Painters in Water Colours, and continued to exhibit annually at their rooms until 1870, when he retired from the Society. In November 1886 he was elected an Honorary Member. He exhibited also on various occasions at the Royal Academy and the Dudley Gallery. In 1874, Sir William Boxall having resigned the Directorship of the National Gallery, Mr. Burton was nominated to that post, from which he retired in March 1894. He is primarily responsible for the large and very important additions to the collection which have been made during the past twenty years, and which include Leonardo da Vinci's "Virgin of the Rocks," Raphael's "Ansidei Madonna," Vandyck's "Equestrian Portrait of Charles I." (the last two from Blenheim), the "Ambassadors," by Holbein, and the "Portrait of Admiral Parca," by Velazquez (both from the Radnor collection), and the various purchases from the Hamilton and other famous sales. Since 1863 Sir F. W. Burton has been a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. In 1884 he received the honour of knighthood, and in 1889 the hon. degree of LL.D. of Dublin. Addresses: 43 Argyll Road, W.; and Athenæum.

BUSCH, Moritz, German author and journalist, was born Feb. 13, 1821, at Dresden, and educated at the University of Leipzig. On the completion of his theological and philosophical studies he became a journalist, and was employed on the staff of various newspapers. In 1851 he visited America, and on his return in 1853 published an account of his tour. Subsequently he travelled for some years in the East, then took up journalism again, and finally, in 1870, settled in Berlin, where he obtained an appointment at the Foreign Office. From that time up to Prince Bismarck's death in July 1898, Dr. Busch was the inseparable companion and confidant of the old Chancellor, taking daily notes of his sayings, and earning for himself the title of "Bismarck's Boswell." In 1880 he published an account of the life of his hero, writing soon after a second instalment, since famous under the title of "Our Chancellor." Bismarck himself declared in 1891 that "little Busch" should some day write "a secret history of our time from good sources," and, during the short interval between his dismissal and his death, Bismarck used every opportunity of informing his faithful scribe on those matters which were to be explained to an expectant world after his decease. But forty-eight hours from the death of his beloved master Dr. Busch contributed to the Times newspaper an important article, "Bismarck and William I.," and round this essay, for a season, centred the comment of a world. It opened with an analysis of the character of the old

Emperor, passed to a consideration of the constitutional struggle and the momentous Congress of Princes in 1863, and proceeded to explain "how Bismarck prepared the French War" and the tragic incident of the "Ems Despatch," concluding with the testimony of the old Emperor's gratitude when he wrote in 1872 that he returned thanks to Heaven for having placed Bismarck at his side in the decisive hour, thus giving to his reign "a fullness which exceeded all thought and comprehension." This remarkable contribution to Bismarck-lore was eclipsed in September 1898 by the issue of a three-volume work, "Bismarck: Some Secret Pages of his History," being the record of a diary kept by Dr. Moritz Busch during twenty-five years of official and private intercourse with the great Chancellor. The publication of these memoirs naturally excited considerable notice, and evoked strong expressions both of approval and disapproval. In England the volumes were welcomed, on the whole, as probably the nearest approach to an authentic revelation that the world would see, and were described by a journal, certainly not over-critical, as "one of the most remarkable, if not the most agreeable, books of the century." On the Continent, however, the work has been vigorously assailed as pedantic, inaccurate, and, indeed, scarcely appreciably valuable. This criticism may be the result of unpleasant surprises, for we in England can understand the probable correctness of the Saturday Review's remark that the diary "is a book which may well bring a blush to the cheek of every Hohenzollern who reads it." While the storm of criticism was at its height Dr. Moritz Busch was understood to have disappeared, or to have become lost to the world's eye. This unusual proceeding was either an enforced retirement owing to Imperial displeasure, or but a mere, yet timely, exercise of an instinct of self-preservation. Dr. Moritz Busch was still invisible at the beginning of October 1898.

BUSH, The Rev. Joseph, late President of the Wesleyan Conference, was born March 8, 1826, in the village of Ashby, near Spilsby, Lincoln. He was educated at Spilsby Academy and Grammar School. In November 1840 he was apprenticed at Horncastle with Mr. Mark Holdsworth. In March 1849, on the nomination of the Rev. Joseph Fowler, he was recommended for the work of the ministry by the City Road Quarterly Meeting. After passing the May District Meeting and the July Committee he was accepted by the Conference for the Home Work, and his name was placed on the List of Reserve. In February 1850 he was sent by the President, the Rev. Thomas Jackson, to the Maidstone Circuit as supply for the Rev. George Hambly Rowe, who died a few days after Mr. Bush's arrival in the circuit. He remained at Marden until the end of August, when he was received into Richmond College. At the Conference of 1853 Mr. Bush was appointed as Mr. Rattenbury's assistant in Leeds. In 1854 he went to London (Hinde Street); in 1857, to Islington; in 1860, to York; in 1863, to Bolton; in 1866, to Manchester; in 1869, to Brixton Hill; in 1872, to Newcastle-on-Tyne; in 1875, to Edinburgh; in 1878, to Bradford; in 1881, to Altrincham; and in 1884, to Highbury. He was then appointed the General Superintendent of the North-west Essex Mission. In 1871 Mr. Bush was appointed one of the Conference official Letter-writers, and held the office fifteen years—until, in 1886, he was associated with the Secretary of the Conference in the compiling and editing of the "Minutes." In 1872 he was elected Chairman of the Newcastle District, and has since been Chairman of the Edinburgh and Aberdeen, the Halifax and Bradford Districts, and the First London District. In 1873, on the nomination of Dr. Gervase Smith, he was elected into the Legal Hundred, having then served twenty-one years in the ministry. From time to time Mr. Bush has used his pen in the service of Methodism. He has published the following:—"The Sabbath: Whose Day Is It?"; "Bread from Heaven"; "The Class Meeting"; "Courtship and Marriage"; "Mary Bell Hodgson: a Memorial"; "Character, and other Sermons"; "Methodist Sunday Schools"; "What to Preach, and How"; "How to Keep our Members: Practical Counsels addressed to Class Leaders"; "The Intermediate State; or, The Condition of Human Souls between the Hour of Death and the Day of Judgment." In addition Mr. Bush has written on various subjects for the monthly periodicals and the London Quarterly. He has also edited "The Mission of the Spirit"; "The Pillar and Ground of the Truth"; and "The Life of the Rev. William O. Simpson." Some years ago, by direction of the Conference, Mr. Bush re-cast the "Liverpool Minutes," and also collected and classified all resolutions of the Conference on Pastoral Work from 1811 to 1884, interweaving and embodying the whole in one homogeneous document. This pamphlet is the "Methodist Manual of Pastoral Duty."

BUTCHER, Professor Samuel Henry, M.A., Hon. LL.D. (Glasgow), Hon. Litt. D. (Dublin, on the occasion of the Tercentenary celebration of that University), J.P. for co. Kerry, is the eldest son of the late Samuel Butcher, Bishop of Meath, and of Mary, daughter of the late John Leahy, Esq., of Southhill, Killarney; was born in Dublin, April 16, 1850, and educated at Marlborough College, under Dr. Bradley, now Dean of Westminster. He was elected to a Minor Scholarship at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1869; to a Foundation Scholarship in that college, and to the Bell University Scholarship, in 1870; to the Waddington University Scholarship in 1871; and obtained the Powis Medal for Latin Hexameters in 1871 and 1872. He was Senior Classic and Chancellor's Medallist in 1873, and held a Mastership at Eton College for a short time. He was elected to a Fellowship at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1874, and held an Assistant Tutorship there till 1876. Having vacated his Fellowship at Cambridge by marriage, he was elected to an Extraordinary Fellowship, without examination, at University College, Oxford, where he was Lecturer till 1882, when he was elected to the Chair of Greek at Edinburgh University, on the retirement of Professor Blackie. He published in 1879, in conjunction with Mr. Andrew Lang, a prose translation of the "Odyssey," now in its tenth edition; in 1881 a small volume on "Demosthenes," in Macmillan's Classical Series; in 1891 "Some Aspects of the Greek Genius" (Macmillan and Co.), now in a second edition; in 1895 "Aristotle's Theory of Poetry and Fine Art, with a Critical Text and Translation of the Poetics," a second edition of which appeared in 1898. In March 1886 he was elected a member of the Athenæum Club, without ballot, by the committee. In 1889 he was appointed a Member of the Scottish Universities Commission. Since 1889 he has been one of the representatives of the Edinburgh Senatus Academicus on the University Court of Edinburgh University. Since 1886 he has vigorously supported the Unionist cause by speaking and writing. He is brother of J. G. Butcher, Q.C., M.P., and in 1876 married Rose Julia, youngest daughter of the late Archbishop Trench. Addresses: 27 Palmerston Place, Edinburgh; and Athenæum.

BUTE, Marquis of, John Patrick Crichton Stuart, K.T., LL.D., is the son of the 2nd Marquis, and was born at Mount Stuart House, in the isle of Bute, Sept. 12, 1847, succeeded to the title on the death of his father in 1848, and received his education at Harrow School, whence he proceeded to Christ Church, Oxford. He was admitted into the Roman Catholic Church by Monsignor Capel, in London, on Dec. 1, 1868. He was created a Knight of the Order of the Thistle in February 1875, and is Lord-Lieutenant of the county of Bute. The honorary degree of LL.D. has been conferred upon him by the Universities of Glasgow, Edinburgh, and St. Andrews. He presented the Great Hall to the buildings of the former. Lord Bute has published "The Roman Breviary, translated out of Latin into English"; "The Coptic Morning Service for the Lord's Day, translated into English"; Bikelas' "Essays upon Christian Greece"; "The Arms of the Royal and Parliamentary Burghs of Scotland," as well as lectures and essays, mostly upon Scottish and Continental subjects. These include a description of some Christian monuments of Athens and of a personal visit to Patmos. The Marquis of Bute has also written on the language of the aborigines of Teneriffe, "The Altus of St. Columba," &c. He was elected Mayor of Cardiff in 1891 (being the first Peer chosen for such an office since the Reform Bill), and Provost of Rothesay in 1896; and Lord Rector of St. Andrews University in 1892, and again in 1895. His lordship married in 1872 the Hon. Gwendoline Mary Anne, eldest daughter of Lord Howard of Glossop, and has issue, living, three sons and a daughter. Addresses: St. John's Lodge, Regent's Park; Cardiff Castle, &c.; and Athenæum.

BUTLER, Lady Elizabeth Southerden, daughter of the late Mr. Thomas J. Thompson, by Christiana, daughter of Mr. T. E. Weller, was born at Lausanne, in Switzerland. Her parents removed to Prestbury, near Cheltenham, where, at the age of five years, Miss Thompson first began to handle the pencil. After two or three years' sojourn at Prestbury, Mr. and Mrs. Thompson went to live in Italy, and the young artist continued her studies at Florence. In 1870 the family returned to England, and took up their abode at Ventnor, where they remained till the great success of Miss Thompson's picture of the "Roll Call" made a removal to London desirable. At one period she studied in the Government School of Art, Kensington. For some years she exhibited at the Dudley and other galleries. Her first picture at the Royal Academy was "Missing," 1873. It was followed in 1874 by the "Roll Call," a picture which attracted universal attention, and which was purchased by the Queen. "The 28th Regiment at Quatre Bras" was exhibited at the Academy in 1875; "Balacava," in Bond Street, in 1876; and "Inkerman," in Bond Street, in 1877. In later years she has painted: "Listed for the Connaught Rangers," "The Remnants of an Army," 1879; "The Defence of Rorke's Drift," 1881; "Floreat Etona!" 1882, an incident in the attack on Laing's Nek; a picture representing the famous charge of the Scots Greys at Waterloo, 1882; "Tel-el-Kebir," 1885; "To the Front," 1889; "Evicted," 1890; "The Camel Corps," 1894; "Halt on a Forced March," "The Dawn of Waterloo," 1895; and "Steady, the Drums and Fifes," 1897. Miss Thompson became the wife of Major-General Sir William Francis Butler, K.C.B., June 11, 1877. Addresses: Cape Town; Monavoe, Delgany, Ireland.

BUTLER, The Very Rev. Henry Montagu, D.D., LL.D. (Glasgow), late Dean of Gloucester, Master of Trinity, Camb., and ex-Vice-Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, is the fourth and youngest son of the late Rev. George Butler, D.D., Head Master of Harrow, and afterwards Dean of Peterborough, and was born July 2, 1833, and educated at Harrow, under Dr. Vaughan, and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He was elected Bell University Scholar in 1852, and Battie University Scholar in 1853. In 1853 he won Sir W. Browne's medal for the Greek ode, and in 1854 the Porson Prize for the Greek ode, the Camden medal for Latin hexameters, and the Members' Prize for a Latin essay. In 1855 he graduated B.A. as Senior Classic, and in the same year was elected Fellow of his college. On the retirement of Dr. Vaughan, at Christmas 1859, he was elected to the head-mastership of the school, over which his father had presided for twenty-four years, from 1805 to 1829. He held this post until 1885, when he was appointed Dean of Gloucester. In 1886 he resigned the Deanery, being nominated by the Crown Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, in succession to the late Dr. Hepworth Thompson. He was Vice-Chancellor of the University in 1889 and 1890. He was Honorary Chaplain to the Queen, 1875-1877; Chaplain-in-Ordinary, 1877; Prebendary of St. Paul's and Examining Chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Tait, 1879, and to his successor, Archbishop Benson, 1883. He has been several times Select Preacher at the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge; and he published in 1861 and in 1866 volumes of "Sermons preached in the Chapel of Harrow School." He is brother of Canon Butler, and was married in August 1888 to Miss Ramsay of Girton College, who distinguished herself by taking the first place in the Cambridge Classical Tripos in 1887. Address: Trinity Lodge, Cambridge.

BUTLER, Major-General Sir William Francis, K.C.B., A.D.C. to the Queen, was born in the county of Tipperary, Ireland, in 1838, and educated at Dublin. He was appointed Ensign of the 69th Regiment, Sept. 17, 1858; Lieutenant, November 1863; Captain, 1872; Major, 1874; and Deputy-Adjutant-Quartermaster-General, Headquarter Staff, 1876. Major Butler served on the Red River Expedition; was sent on a special mission to the Saskatchewan Territories in 1870-71; and served on the Ashanti Expedition in 1873, in command of the West Akim native forces. He was several times mentioned in despatches of Sir Garnet Wolseley, and in the House of Lords by the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief. He was appointed a Companion of the Bath in 1874. In February 1879 he was despatched to Natal to assume the responsible post of Staff Officer at the port of disembarkation. In the subsequent expeditions under Lord Wolseley, Major-General Butler has generally held an important post, and especially in the Soudan Expedition. On the return of the forces he was left behind in command of the British advanced posts. He was Colonel on the Staff in Egypt from 1890 to 1892, and Brigadier-General in Egypt from December 1892 to November 1893, when he was appointed Major-General at Aldershot. He till lately held the South-Eastern District command, with headquarters at Dover, and was appointed to the command of the troops at the Cape in 1898. General Butler is the author of "The Great Lone Land," 1872; "The Wild North Land," 1873; "Akimfoo," 1875; and "Far Out: Rovings Retold," 1880; "Red Cloud, the Solitary Sioux," 1882; "The Campaign of the Cataracts," 1887; "Charles George Gordon," 1889; "Sir Charles Napier," 1891. He was married June 11, 1877, at the church of the Servite Fathers, Fulham Road, London, to Miss Elizabeth Thompson, the painter. Address: Cape Town.

BUTLIN, Henry Trentham, born at Camborne, Cornwall, son of the Rev. W. W. Butlin, was educated at home and at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London. He is a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of England; D.C.L. (hon. causâ) of the University of Durham; and Surgeon to St. Bartholomew's Hospital. During the year 1896-97 he was President of the Pathological Society of London, of the Laryngological Society, and of the Metropolitan Branch of the British Medical Association, and was for six years Treasurer of the British Medical Association. He is now a Member of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons of England. As Erasmus Wilson Professor of Pathology, and later Professor of Pathology and Surgery to the College of Surgeons, he delivered a series of lectures on malignant disease; and he has published several works on malignant disease and on the operative surgery of the same. Address: 82 Harley Street, W.

BUTTERFIELD, William, F.S.A., architect, was born Sept. 7, 1814. He early devoted himself to a study of the various periods of Gothic architecture, and consequently found himself in warm sympathy and intercourse with the Cambridge Camden Society, which was just then coming into existence, and which played an important part in the revival of Gothic architecture. He has in his practice introduced various colours to a large extent into ecclesiastical and domestic buildings by the help of brick, stone, marble, and mosaic combined; and he has made great use of tiles which have figures and subjects painted upon them, and which are afterwards fired. Amongst the buildings designed by him are: St. Augustine's College, Canterbury; the entire buildings of Keble College, Oxford; Balliol College Chapel, Oxford; St. Michael's Hospital, Axburgh; the County Hospital, Winchester; the School Buildings at Winchester College; the Grammar School, Exeter; the Chapel, Quadrangle, and many other large buildings at Rugby School; the rebuilding of Rugby Parish Church; Heath's Court, Ottery St. Mary; the Guards' Chapel, Caterham Barracks; All Saints, Margaret Street, London; St. Alban's, Holborn; St. Augustine's, Queen's Gate; Gordon Boys' Home Buildings, near Bagshot; St. Thomas, Leeds; together with a large number of other new churches, such as St. Mary Magdalene's Church and the Vicarage at Enfield; and old buildings and churches restored, as St. Cross, Church and Hospital Buildings, near Winchester; St. Mary's Church in Dover Castle, and the Parish Church, Tottenham. He has also added the new buildings to Merton College, Oxford, and has restored its chapel. St. Augustine's new Church, Bournemouth; Parish Church, Barnet; Chapel and other works at Fulham Palace; Ardleigh Church, Essex; Chapel and Domestic Buildings at Ascot Priory are further instances of his method and style. Addresses: 42 Bedford Square, W.C.; and Athenæum.

BUXTON, Sydney, M.P., was born in 1853, and is the grandson of Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, and the son of Charles Buxton, M.P., and of Emily, daughter of Sir Henry Holland the physician. He was educated at Clifton College and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was a Member of the London School Board from 1876 to 1881. In 1880 he unsuccessfully contested Boston at the General Election, was returned for Peterborough in 1883, and defeated in 1885. In 1886 he stood for Croydon at a bye-election, but was not returned. In the same year he was elected for Poplar, and re-elected in 1892 and again in 1895. In 1892 he was appointed Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies. In 1882-84 Mr. Sydney Buxton acted as Hon. Secretary of Mr. Tuke's Irish Emigration Fund, and was instrumental in emigrating some 10,000 persons, in families, from the congested districts of Ireland. In 1889 he, with the late Cardinal Manning and the Lord Mayor, constituted the "Mansion House Committee of Conciliation," which helped to bring the great dock strike of the year to a satisfactory conclusion. From 1886 to 1889 he was a Member of the Royal Commission on Elementary Education. In 1891 he moved the "Fair Wages Resolution" in the House of Commons, and in the same year was successful in raising the age of "half-timers" from ten to eleven. He is the author of a "Handbook to Political Questions," 1880 (now in its ninth edition); "A Political Manual"; "Finance and Politics: an Historical Study, 1796-1884," 1889; a "Handbook to Death Duties," 1890; besides numerous pamphlets and articles on political and financial subjects. In 1882 Mr. Sydney Buxton married Constance, daughter of Sir John Lubbock. She died in 1892. In 1896 he married Mildred, daughter of Hugh Colin Smith. Addresses: 15 Eaton Place, S.W.; and Athenæum.

BUXTON, Sir Thomas Fowell, Bart., G.C.M.G., son of the late Sir Edward North Buxton, M.P., and grandson of the well-known philanthropist, was born Jan. 26, 1837, and succeeded his father as 3rd baronet in 1858. He was educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge, and sat in the House of Commons as Liberal Member for King's Lynn from 1865 to 1868. He acted as High Sheriff of Norfolk in 1876, and was Colonel of the 2nd Tower Hamlet Volunteers from 1864 to 1883. In April 1895 Sir Thomas Buxton was appointed Governor of South Australia. He has retired from this Governorship. He has made himself conspicuous as a philanthropist, is of Evangelical principles; and was married in 1862 to Victoria, daughter of the 1st Earl of Gainsborough. Addresses: 14 Grosvenor Crescent, S.W.; and Warlies, Waltham Abbey.

the College. M.R.C.S. 1854, graduated M.B. in the University of London 1857, and M.D. 1860; University Medical Scholar and gold medallist; Fellow of King's College, London; M.R.C.P. London 1867, and F.R.C.P. 1873; Physician to the National Hospital for the Paralyzed and Epileptic, Queen Square, Bloomsbury. Dr. Buzzard was President of the Harveian Society of London in 1889; President of the Neurological Society of London in 1890; President of the Clinical Society of London in 1895-96. He is Fellow of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society of London; Member of the Pathological, Clinical, and Ophthalmological Societies; and author of several works on the subject of Neurology, besides numerous contributions to medical and other journals. Dr. Buzzard was attached to the Headquarters of H.H. Omer Pasha in the Crimean Campaign in 1855-56. He was present at the siege of Sebastopol; with the second expedition to Kertch; and at the battle of the Tchernaiia. After the fall of Sebastopol he accompanied the army of Omer Pasha to the Caucasus in its winter campaign, and took part in the establishment and conduct of a base hospital for Turkish troops at Trebizonde, in Asia Minor. Address: 74 Grosvenor Street, W.

BYLES, William Pollard, the son of William Byles, founder of the Bradford Observer, was born Feb. 13, 1839, and was educated privately. He represented the Shipley Division of Yorkshire in the House of Commons from 1892 to 1895, and has very decided opinions as a Radical and a Social Reformer. He is now proprietor of the paper which his father founded, viz., the Bradford Observer. Address: Oakfield, Bradford.

CABLE, George Washington, novelist, son of George W. Cable, of Virginia, was born in New Orleans on Oct. 12, 1844, where he resided almost uninterruptedly until 1884, when he removed to New England. His present residence is in Northampton, Massachusetts. At the age of fourteen his father died, leaving his family in such reduced circumstances as to compel his son to leave school in order to aid in the support of his mother and sisters. From that time until 1863 he was usually employed as a clerk. In that year he entered the Confederate army, where he remained until the close of the Civil War. Returning to New Orleans, he made such a living as he could—at first as an errand boy (though he was nearly twenty-one years of age), then in book-keeping, and finally secured a position in a prominent house of cotton factors, which he left in 1879 to devote himself exclusively to literature. His first literary work was in the form of contributions to the New Orleans Picayune, under the signature of "Drop-Shot." His work, however, did not attract any very general attention until his Creole sketches appeared in Scribner's Monthly, now The Century Magazine. These were published in book form in 1879, under the title of "Old Creole Days." They were followed by "The Grandissimes," 1880; "Madame Delphine," 1881; "The Creoles of Louisiana," 1884; "Dr. Sevier," 1884; "The Silent South," 1885; "Bonaventure," 1887; "Strange True Stories of Louisiana," 1889; "The Negro Question," 1890; and "John March, Southerner," 1894. In these Mr. Cable has shown such a mastery of the Louisiana dialect and such an insight into the Creole character as to give him a prominent place among American writers; and the public readings from his works which he has given during the past few years in Northern cities have been very largely attended. Although writing additional essays from time to time, and a few short stories, he has devoted his later years almost entirely to the platform and to the establishment of charitable societies, notably the Home Culture Clubs for the educational benefit of the working poor. Address: Tarryawhile, Northampton, Massachusetts.

CADGE, William, F.R.C.S., received his medical education at University College Hospital, London, where he was at one time Assistant-Surgeon and Demonstrator in Anatomy. He was formerly Member of Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, England; is Fellow of the Royal Medical Chirurgical Society, and Consulting Surgeon to the Norfolk and Norwich Hospital, to which he has given two donations, the first being anonymous, of £10,000 each. As Hunterian Professor of Surgery and Pathology he lectured at the Royal College of Surgeons in 1886 on the surgical treatment of stone, and contributed to Morton's "Surgical Anatomy" the "Surgical Anatomy of the Head and Neck and other limbs," and to the Lancet of 1847 a brief account of the last illness and autopsy of Liston. In 1874 he delivered an address on Surgery to the British Medical Association. Address: 49 St. Giles's Street, Norwich.

CADOGAN, Earl, The Right Hon. George Henry Cadogan, K.G., J.P., Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, eldest son of the 4th Earl, was born at Durham on May 12, 1840. He succeeded to the title on the death of his father in 1873, having been for a few months previously M.P. for Bath. He was appointed Parliamentary Under-Secretary for War in May 1875; and Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies in March 1878, in succession to Mr. J. Lowther, who had been advanced to the post of Chief Secretary for Ireland. He went out of office with the Conservative party in April 1880. In Lord Salisbury's second administration, 1886, he was appointed Lord Privy Seal, without a seat in the Cabinet, but he joined the Cabinet in 1887, and was appointed Chairman of Grand Committees in 1889. In Lord Salisbury's third administration he was appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, with a seat in the Cabinet, 1895. He is a Hereditary Trustee of the British Museum. He married in 1873 Beatrix, daughter of the 2nd Earl of Craven, M.P. for Bath. Addresses: Viceregal Lodge, Dublin; Chelsea House, Cadogan Place, S.W.; Culford Hall, Bury.

CAFFYN, Kathleen Mannington, ("Iota"), widow of the late Mr. Mannington Caffyn, was born at Waterloo House, co. Tipperary, and is the daughter of William Hunt and Louisa Going. The future novelist was educated under English and German governesses, and then went through a short course of training at St. Thomas's Hospital preparatory to becoming a nurse under the National and Metropolitan Nursing Association. Shortly after entering on this career she married Mr. Mannington Caffyn, a surgeon and writer of some repute, his novel, "Miss Milne and I," having been one of the notable books of its time. He died when, shortly after their marriage, they had gone out to Sydney. Mrs. Mannington Caffyn began her literary career during her early widowhood in the Colonies. At first she contributed to the papers, and in 1894 sprang into sudden fame by her "Yellow Aster," which proved a sensational example of the problem novel at a time when "The Heavenly Twins" had made that style of writing momentarily popular and important. Her subsequent works have been: "Children of Circumstances," 1894; "A Comedy of Spasms," 1895; and "A Quaker Grandmother," 1896. Address: 6 Cedar Gardens, Putney, S.W.

CAILLARD, Sir Vincent Henry Penalver, was born on Oct. 23, 1856, and is the son of Judge Caillard and Emma Louisa Reynolds, first cousin once removed to the late Lord Beaconsfield. He was educated at Eton and at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, where he was Pollock Gold Medallist, and obtained a commission in the Royal Engineers in 1875. Early in 1879 he was appointed to assist the English Commissioner on the Montenegro Frontier Commission; in the October of that year he was on the Arab Tabia Commission. In 1880 he rejoined the Montenegrin Commission, and in July was sent on a special political mission to Epirus in behalf of the Report to the Berlin Congress. At the naval demonstration at Dulcigno in September he was specially attached to Sir Beauchamp Seymour; in 1882 he was in the service of the Intelligence Department, and in the August of that year he was attached to the Headquarter Staff during the Egyptian campaign. He had thus gained a very wide and varied experience of Levantine affairs when, in October 1883, he was appointed President of the Ottoman Public Debt Council. He has held this arduous post for more than fourteen years, and has also been Financial Representative of England, Holland, and Belgium in Constantinople. In April 1898 it was announced that he was about to relinquish his post as Administrator of the Public Debt, in order to take up his residence in London, at the instance of certain leading financiers who desire the advantage of his experience in the matter of financial organisation and administration. He has various orders, including the Medal and Bronze Star, Egyptian campaign, 1882; Grand Cordon of the Medjidieh; Grand Cordon of Ordre pour le Mérite Civile, &c. He married in 1886 Eliza Frances, sister of Sir John Hanham, Bart. Club: St. James's.

CAINE, Thomas Henry Hall, novelist and dramatist, was born in 1853. He began life as an architect, but at an early period turned his attention to literature. He lived with Dante Rossetti in London during the trying twelve months preceding that poet's death in 1882, and published "Recollections of Rossetti" in the same year. He published "Sonnets of Three Centuries" in 1882; "Cobwebs of Criticism," 1883. Then he began his career as a novelist, publishing "The Shadow of a Crime" in 1885; "A Son of Hagar" in 1887; also "The Deemster," 1887, which was dramatised under the title of "Ben-my-Chree," 1888. In 1890 he published "The Bondman"; "The Scapegoat," 1891; "The Manxman," 1894 (twice dramatised under the same name, 1894 and 1895); and "The Christian," 1897. The last mentioned provoked much controversy, and passed through a first edition of 50,000 copies within a month. Mr. Hall Caine was principal agent in the abolition of the English three-volume novel. In 1895 he went to Canada as the ambassador of the Society of Authors to protest against the proposed Canadian copyright legislation. He framed a compromise, which was accepted by the interested parties and, with modifications, by the Dominion Government and the Colonial Office as a basis of fresh legislation. His permanent address is Greeba Castle, Isle of Man.

CAINE, William Sproston, J.P., was born at Seacombe, Cheshire, March 26, 1842, and is the son of Nathaniel Caine, J.P. for Lancashire and Liverpool, a Liverpool merchant. He was educated privately by the Rev. Richard Wall, M.A.; married in 1868 to Alice, daughter of Rev. Hugh Stowel Brown, of Liverpool. In 1873 he contested Liverpool in the Liberal interest at a bye-election, and afterwards at the General Election in 1874, both times unsuccessfully. In 1880 he was returned for Scarborough, and again in 1884 on his appointment to the office of Civil Lord of the Admiralty in Mr. Gladstone's administration of 1880-85. In 1885 he consented to contest the county of Middlesex at the following General Election, and on the passing of the Redistribution Act stood for the Tottenham division of that county in 1885 without success. At a bye-election in April 1886 he was returned for Barrow-in-Furness by a large majority, and was again returned at the General Election. In 1892 he was elected for the Eastern Division of Bradford, and was defeated for the same constituency in 1895. He is a J.P. for the North Riding of Yorkshire and the county of London, and is largely engaged in the iron trade of Cumberland. He was Chairman of a Special Commission for the reorganisation of the Metropolitan Constituencies in the Liberal interest, and is now a Member of the Royal Commission on Indian Expenditure and the Royal Commission on the Licensing Laws. Mr. Caine separated from Mr. Gladstone on the Home Rule question, and has been one of the whips of the Liberal Unionist party, but rejoined the Liberal party in 1890, accepting Mr. Gladstone's amended scheme for the government of Ireland. He is an active leader in the Temperance Reformation, and is President of the British Temperance League and the National Temperance Federation, and is a Director of the United Kingdom Temperance and Provident Institution. He is the author of "A Trip Round the World in 1887-88"; "Hugh Stowell Brown: a Memorial Volume," 1888; "Picturesque India," 1890; and "Young India," 1891. Address: North Side, Clapham Common, S.W.

CAIRD, Edward, M.A., Hon. D.C.L., Master of Balliol, was educated at Glasgow University and Balliol College, Oxford, of which he was a Snell Exhibitioner. In 1861 he was Pusey and Ellerton Scholar, took a first class in Classical Moderations in 1862, and a first class in Literæ Humaniores in 1863. He was subsequently elected to a Fellowship at Merton College, where he was for two years a tutor until appointed to the Chair of Moral Philosophy at Glasgow. On the death of Dr. Jowett he was elected Master of Balliol (Nov. 14, 1893). He has published the following works: "The Critical Philosophy of Immanuel Kant," 2 vols.; "The Social Philosophy and Religion of Comte"; "The Evolution of Religion," 2 vols. (being the Gifford Lectures at St. Andrews, 1891-92), 1893; "Hegel," in Blackwood's Philosophical Classics; "Essays in Religion and Philosophy," 1892. Address: Balliol College, Oxford.

CAIRD, Mrs. Mona, authoress, only daughter of John Alison, inventor of the vertical boiler, was born at Ryde, in the Isle of Wight. Her first acknowledged work was "Whom Nature Leadeth." This was followed in 1887 by "One that Wins," and in the spring of 1889 by "The Wing of Azrael." In the Westminster Review for August and November 1888 Mrs. Mona Caird wrote articles on "Marriage" and "Ideal Marriage," which led to a voluminous correspondence in the Daily Telegraph, entitled "Is Marriage a Failure?" She afterwards contributed to the Fortnightly an article entitled "The Morality of Marriage," which was a reply to Mrs. Lynn Linton's attack on the "Wild Woman" in the Nineteenth Century. Other works from her pen are: "A Romance of the Moors," 1891; "The Yellow Drawing-Room and other Short Stories," "The Daughters of Danaus," 1894; "A Sentimental View of Vivisection," "Beyond the Pale," 1896; "The Morality of Marriage," 1897. Club: Pioneer.

CALLENDAR, Professor Hugh Longbourne, F.R.S., F.R.S.C., LL.D., son of the Rev. Hugh Callendar, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Magdalene College, Cambridge, who died in 1867, was born on April 18, 1863, at Hatherop, Gloucestershire. He was educated at Marlborough College, of which he was head boy in 1880-82. He entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in Sept. 1882, and was elected Mayor Scholar in December of the same year, and Bell University Scholar in Feb. 1883. He was in the first class in Classics in 1884, was 14th Wrangler in 1885, and was elected to a College Fellowship in Natural Science in 1886. He became a University Extension Lecturer in 1892, Professor of Physics at the Royal Holloway College in 1893, and M'Donald Professor of Physics at M'Gill University, Montreal, in Oct. 1893. In 1897 he was appointed Professor of Physics at University College, London. In June 1894, he was elected F.R.S., and was made LL.D. in 1898. He has written various papers on subjects connected with the measurement of temperature, the most important of which have appeared in the Phil. Trans. A, 1887, and A, 1891. He has also devised a system of shorthand, published by the Cambridge University Press under the titles of "Phonetic Cursive," 1889, and "Orthographic Cursive," 1891. Address: University College, Gower Street, W.C.

CALVÉ, Madame Emma, operatic singer, was born in France in 1866, her father being a civil engineer. She took her first lessons from M. Laborde, and subsequently with Madame Marchesi, and made her début at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Brussels, 1882, in Gounod's "Faust." She played in Paris in 1884 at the Théâtre Italien, with MM. Maurel and Edouard de Reszke, in "Aben Hamet," and then at the Opéra Comique, where she sang in the following rôles: The Countess in Mozart's "Nozze di Figaro"; the heroine of Félicien David's "Lalla Rookh"; and Pamina in Mozart's "Il Flauto Magico"; and afterwards made a tour in Italy, visiting Milan, Rome, Naples, and Florence, including in her repertoire Ophelia in Ambroise Thomas's "Hamlet," and Leila in Bizet's "Pêcheurs des Perles." She appeared at Covent Garden in 1892 as Santuzza in "Cavalleria Rusticana," and in "L'Amico Fritz," the leading soprano part in which she had created at the Costanza Theatre, Rome, in October 1891. She sang in both at Windsor Castle by command of the Queen in July 1893. She visits Covent Garden annually in the season. Her Paris address is 1 Rue Dumont d'Urville.

CAMBON, Pierre Paul, French diplomatist, was born on Jan. 20, 1843, and his first appointment was that of Secretary of the Alpes-Maritimes Department in April 1871. In 1872 he was promoted to be Préfet of the Aube, and he has held the same post in the Departments of the Doubs and Nord. In 1882 he became Resident in Tunis, and distinguished himself for his organising activity in the new French Protectorate—law, finance, and public works being entirely reconstituted. In this work he came into conflict with General Boulanger, the military governor, and although he was supported by the government then in power, he had to resign when Boulanger was appointed Minister of War. In 1886 he was appointed Ambassador at Madrid, whence he succeeded the Count de Montebello at Constantinople in 1890. Here he distinguished himself in the deliberations following on the Græco-Turkish War. In September 1898 he was appointed Ambassador at the Court of St. James' in succession to the Baron de Courcel (q.v.). His younger brother, Jules Martin, born 1845, after being Governor-General of Algeria, was appointed Ambassador at Washington, where he was the intermediary between Spain and the United States after the Cuban War in August 1898. M. Paul Cambon is a Grand Officier of the Legion of Honour; and his Paris address is 15 Rue de Milan.

CAMBRAY-DIGNY, Louis Guillaume, Conti di, Italian statesman, was born at Florence Aug. 8, 1820, and is the son of Conti Louis di Cambray-Digny, who rose from cobbler to be the chief minister of Ferdinand III., Grand Duke of Tuscany. He was educated at Pisa, and at the age of twenty-two returned to Florence, where he became one of the counsellors of the Grand Duke Leopold II., and advised him, even up to the last moment, to grant concessions to the people and renounce his Austrian alliance. In 1859 the Grand Duke was compelled to fly, and Tuscany joined Piedmont. The Count was thereupon elected deputy for Tuscany in the new Parliament. In 1865 he presided at the sixcentenary celebration of Dante's birth, and delivered an oration before his monument. In 1867 he became Minister of Finance of the kingdom of Italy, and found a deficit of 900,000,000 lire. He proposed to meet this by a tax on corn-grinding, which was very unpopular, but was accepted out of necessity. He also brought forward a bill for bringing the manufacture of tobacco under the administration of the State, which, after violent opposition, passed in August 1868. His Ministry fell in November 1869 on a minor point, and he has since lived in retirement.

CAMBRIDGE, Duke of, the Right Hon. Field-Marshal H.R.H. George William Frederick Charles, K.G., K.P., G.C.M.G., G.C.H., G.C.B., G.C.S.I., son of Adolphus Frederick, the 1st Duke, grandson of King George III., and first cousin to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, was born at Hanover, March 26, 1819, and succeeded his father July 8, 1850. He became a Colonel in the army Nov. 3, 1837, was advanced to the rank of Major-General in 1854, when he was appointed to command the two brigades of Highlanders and Guards, united to form the first division of the army sent in aid of Turkey against the Emperor of Russia; and was promoted to the rank of General in 1856. In 1861 he was appointed Colonel of the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers, and was promoted to the rank of Field-Marshal Nov. 9, 1862. His Royal Highness has been successively Colonel of the 17th Light Dragoons, of the Scots Fusilier Guards, and in succession to the late Prince Consort, of the Grenadier Guards. At the battle of the Alma his Royal Highness led his division into action in a manner that won the confidence of his men and the respect of the veteran officers with whom he served. At Inkerman he was actively engaged, and had a horse shot under him. Shortly after this, in consequence of impaired health, he was ordered by the medical authorities to Pera for change of air, and after staying there some time proceeded to Malta; whence, his health still failing, he was directed to return to England. At a later period his Royal Highness gave the result of his camp experience in evidence before the Committee of the House of Commons appointed to investigate the manner in which the war had been conducted. On the resignation of Viscount Hardinge in 1856 the Duke of Cambridge was appointed to succeed as Commander-in-Chief, and continued to hold that post till the autumn of 1895, the appointment being perpetuated by Letters Patent in 1887. In 1895 the new scheme of Army Reform led to the Duke's retirement. His mother, the Duchess of Cambridge, died April 6, 1889, at the advanced age of ninety-two. He is Ranger of Hyde Park and Richmond Park.

CAMERON, Sir Charles, Bart., M.P. (Glasgow, Bridgeton Division), son of the late John Cameron, newspaper proprietor, of Glasgow and Dublin, by his marriage with Miss Galloway, was born at Dublin in 1841. He married in 1869

Frances Caroline, youngest daughter of the late J. W. Macauley, M.D. He was educated at Madras College, St. Andrews, and at Trinity College, Dublin. He studied medicine at Dublin University School, and was gold medallist of the Pathological Society, Dublin. He graduated B.A. as First Senior Moderator, and gold medallist in Experimental and Natural Sciences in 1862, and took the first place in examinations for degrees of M.B. and Master in Surgery. He also studied at the medical schools of Paris, Berlin, and Vienna; proceeded to the degrees of M.D. and M.A. in 1865; and in 1871 took out those of LL.B. and LL.D. He edited the North British Daily Mail newspaper from 1864 to 1874. He served as a member for the City of Glasgow in the Parliaments of 1874 and 1880, and on the subdivision of the constituency sat for the College Division of Glasgow in the three succeeding Parliaments until 1895, when he was defeated. He was elected member for the Bridgeton Division of Glasgow on the retirement of Sir George Trevelyan in 1897. He was President of the Health Section, Social Science Congress, in 1881, and of the Public Medicine Section, British Medical Association Congress, in 1884. He was created a baronet in 1893, and D.L. of Glasgow in 1894. In 1876 he succeeded in carrying the Publicans' Certificate (Scotland) Act, a measure which conferred on the popularly elected magistrates of Scottish burghs the power of refusing new liquor licenses. To him, too, are due the introduction of the Inebriates Acts, the abolition of imprisonment for debt in Scotland in 1880, an amendment of the Scottish Marriage Laws, 1878, and the resolution to the effect that the minimum charge for inland telegrams should be reduced from a shilling, at which it then stood, to sixpence, the carriage of which in the House of Commons in 1883 led to the introduction of the present system of sixpenny telegrams. Sir C. Cameron served in 1894 as Chairman of a Departmental Committee appointed by the President of the Board of Agriculture to report on the coastwise transit of cattle. In 1894-95 he was Chairman of a Departmental Committee appointed by the Secretary for Scotland to inquire into the alleged increase of habitual offenders, vagrants, and inebriates in Scotland, and the best manner of dealing with it; and in 1896 he was appointed a Member of Lord Peel's Royal Commission on the Liquor Licensing Laws. Address: Balclutha, Greenock.

CAMERON, Professor Sir Charles Alexander, C.B. (1898), M.D., R.U.I., F.R.S.C.I., M.K. and Q.C.P.I., D.P.H., and

ex-Examiner, Cambridge University, A.H. (hon. causâ), D.P.H., R.C.S.I. (hon. causâ), was born in Dublin on July 16, 1830. His father, Captain Ewen Cameron, was grandson of the unfortunate Archibald Cameron, younger brother of "Lochiel," who was executed for taking part in the Jacobite rising in 1745. Sir Charles's mother was Belinda Smith, a county Cavan lady. Sir Charles was educated at schools in Dublin and Guernsey. He studied medical and chemical science in Dublin and Germany, graduating as Doctor of Medicine and Doctor of Philosophy in 1856. At first he devoted much attention to agricultural chemistry. In 1867 he read a paper before the British Association detailing experiments which proved that urea could be assimilated by plants, and that all the nitrogen which they required could be taken from it. In 1862 he contributed a series of papers to the Chemical News on "The Inorganic Constituents of Plants." In 1862 he was elected Public Analyst for the city of Dublin, and was the only analyst in the United Kingdom who succeeded in applying the provisions of the first and very defective Adulteration of Food Act of 1860. He next turned his attention to sanitary science, and in 1867 was elected Professor of Hygiene or Political Medicine in the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland. He was for some years Lecturer on Chemistry and Physics in two medical schools—Steevens Hospital Medical College, and Ledwich School of Medicine. Sir Charles's public lectures on Hygiene, open to ladies, were numerously attended. He is an Hon. Member and Professor of Chemistry and ex-Professor of Anatomy to the Royal Hibernian Academy of the Fine Arts, &c., Lecturer on Agricultural Chemistry and Geology in the Albert (Government) Model Farm, Glasnevin, and he is Public Analyst for the greater number of Irish counties and boroughs, as well as Consultant to nearly all the Public Departments. He holds the Professorships of Chemistry and Hygiene in the College of Surgeons, and he has the entire control of the Public Health Department of the Dublin Corporation, being both Executive and Superintendent Medical Officer of Health. Under his régime an immense improvement has taken place in the dwellings of the working classes, and the state of public health has been greatly improved. Sir Charles and the Irish Registrar-General were appointed in 1888 to inquire into the conditions of the Royal Barracks in Dublin. Sir Charles served on the juries of several of the great exhibitions, including that of Paris in 1867. He was President of the Royal College of Surgeons, 1885-86; President of the British Public Health Medical Society, 1880-90; Vice-President of the Institute of Chemistry, 1884-90; President of the British Institute of Public Health, 1890-93; of the Irish Medical Association, 1891-92; of the Society of Public Analysts; and Hon. Member of many Medical Societies abroad and in America. His chief works are a voluminous "History of the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland, and of the Irish Medical Institutions, including 300 Biographies," and a "Manual of Hygiene, and Compendium of the Sanitary Laws." His smaller works, including translations of poems from the German, are numerous. His "Elementary Agricultural Chemistry and Geology" is on the list of the school books of the National Education Commissioners. His original papers chiefly appear in the Proceedings of the Royal Society and the Royal Dublin Society, the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy and of the Royal Academy of Medicine, the Chemical News, the Dublin Journal of Medicine. In pure chemistry he is best known for his numerous papers on Selenium Compounds. Sir Charles was knighted in 1886, "in recognition of his services in the improvement of Public Health, and his scientific researches." He is Hon. Member of the Academy of Medicine of Sweden, the State Medical Society of California, the Hygiene Societies of France, Paris, Bordeaux, Belgium, the Institute of Architects, the Institute of Civil Engineers. In social life Sir Charles has a great reputation as an after-dinner speaker, and he frequently occupies the chair at public dinners. He has presided at the Sanitary Congress, Portsmouth, 1892, and at many public gatherings in London, Dublin, and other places. In 1862 he married Lucie, daughter of John Macnamara, solicitor, of Dublin. She died in 1883, leaving seven children, of whom five survive. Address: 51 Pembroke Road, Dublin.

CAMPBELL, Lady Colin, née Gertrude Blood ("G. Bruneille," "Vera Tsaritsyn," "Q.E.D.," "Fiamma," &c.), author and journalist, is the daughter of Edmond Maghlin Blood, who died in 1891, and whose estates in county Clare have been held in the family since the middle of the reign of Queen Elizabeth. Miss Gertrude Blood was not sixteen when she published an account of foreign travel in Cassell's. In the same year she published, under the pseudonym of "G. E. Bruneille," a story of child-life in Italy, entitled "Topo," which was illustrated by Miss Kate Greenaway. At the same time she studied painting in Florentine studios, and, under her father's guidance, became acquainted with the best work of Continental masters, both old and modern.

As a journalist Lady Colin Campbell has been at various times English correspondent for sundry Italian and American papers, as well as for the Parisian Le Gaulois. The first article she sent to the Saturday Review resulted in her being requested to join the staff of that then famous literary journal; and her contributions ranged from book-reviewing and essays, art and musical criticisms, to papers on sporting subjects, but treated from a purely literary standpoint. One series of these latter was re-issued under the title of "The Book of the Running Brook and of Still Waters." Other essays on fishing, and the art of fencing, from her pen, form part of the "Gentlewoman's Book of Sports." Upon the latter subject, indeed, Lady Colin (owing to her acquaintance with the play of nearly every swordsman of note and her own practice under the greatest masters of the Continent) is recognised as one of the best woman experts living. As art critic Lady Colin has contributed at different times to many other papers and periodicals, among others to the Art Journal, the Pall Mall Gazette, the National Review, and Les Lettres et les Arts. But above all, "Q.E.D.'s" accounts of her own impressions "In the Picture Galleries," which since 1889 have appeared almost weekly in the World, will remain as a critical conspectus, year by year, of English painting. Although Lady Colin Campbell's first novel, "Darell Blake," ran through many editions, the literary form she affects most, which no doubt fits in best with her multifarious tastes and interests, is that of small and very definite compass. She has published a number of short stories, all marked with much "point." But perhaps the most original style, among Lady Colin's various styles, is to be appreciated in her characteristic "Woman's Walks," of which nearly some two hundred have already appeared (the matter of half-a-dozen octavo volumes at least) in the columns of the World. Lady Colin Campbell is distinguished not only with the pen. She has an admirable contralto voice, trained in early days by Baci (the pupil and successor of the Romani who formed most of the great singers of his time) and later by Tosti. In painting she was the pupil of Duveneck; in fencing, of Camille Prévost himself and Philippe Bourgeois; she is a rider of the haute-école as well as of the hunting-field; a noted swimmer; adept in fly-fishing; and she was one of the early promoters of ladies' cycling. She was married in 1881 to Lord Colin Campbell, fifth son of the Duke of Argyll, and at that time M.P. for Argyllshire. Two years later she obtained a divorce on the ground of cruelty, which was upheld against appeal. Lord Colin Campbell died in 1895. Address: 67 Carlisle Mansions, Victoria, S.W.

CAMPBELL, The Rev. Lewis, M.A., LL.D., Emeritus Professor of Greek in the University of St. Andrews, son of Robert Campbell, R.N., sometime Governor of Ascension Isle, and cousin of Campbell the poet, was born in Edinburgh Sept. 3, 1830. He was educated at the Edinburgh Academy, at Glasgow University, and at Trinity and Balliol Colleges, Oxford, in the former as Scholar, in the latter as Snell Exhibitioner. He was thus brought into contact with the late Master of Balliol (Professor Jowett), whose influence as a college tutor was already conspicuous. He took a first-class in Classics in 1853, was Fellow of Queen's from 1855 to 1858, and tutor from 1856 to 1858. In 1857 he was ordained by the Bishop of Oxford, and in 1858 became Vicar of Milford, Hants. He remained there until 1863, when he was appointed Professor of Greek in the University of St. Andrews, a post from which he retired in 1892. Professor Campbell has published many works on classical subjects, of which the chief are: "The Theatetus of Plato," 1861 (2nd edit., 1883); "The Sophistes and Politicus of Plato," 1867; "Sophocles—The Plays and Fragments," Vol. I, 1871 (2nd edit., 1879); Vol. II, 1881; Verse Translations of Sophocles, 1873–83, and of Æschylus, 1890; "Sophocles" in Macmillan's series of Classical Writers, 1879. The 1883 edition of "Sophocles in English Verse" having been exhausted, a final edition was published by Murray in 1896. Professor Campbell has also written articles on Plato and Sophocles in the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and contributed various papers to the Quarterly, National, and Classical Reviews, the American Journal of Philology, and other home and foreign periodicals. He fortnightly published in 1877 a volume of sermons, "The Christian Ideal," and in 1882 (in conjunction with Mr. Garnett), "The Life of James Clerk Maxwell." Since 1892 he has been resident in London, and from the time of Professor Jowett's death in 1893 has been active as one of his literary executors. In 1894 he republished by his friends' desire the work on the Epistles of St. Paul, which had been the subject of a violent controversy in the author's lifetime. The work was republished by Murray & Co. The commentary is condensed, but the essays, including the famous Essay on the Interpretation of Scripture, contributed to "Essays and Reviews" in 1860, are reprinted entire. In the same year, 1894, there appeared the edition of Plato's "Republic" (3 vols. 8vo), on which Professors Jowett and Campbell had long been engaged together; and in the spring of 1897 was published "The Life and Letters of Benjamin Jowett," 2 vols. 8vo, by Abbott and Campbell, which in a few months reached a third edition. An edition of the text of Æschylus for Macmillan's Parnassus Series has been amongst the labours of these last years; and the smaller edition of Sophocles by Campbell and Abbott is being prepared for a new issue at the Clarendon Press. In 1894–95 Professor Campbell held the Gifford Lectureship at St. Andrews, and he hopes shortly to publish the substance of his lectures in a volume on "Religion in Greek Literature." He also contemplates the preparation, in collaboration with others, of a new Concordance or Lexicon to Plato. A new and original theory of the Order of the Platonic Dialogues, propounded by Professor Campbell in 1867, has lately met with wide recognition. Addresses: 32 Camden House Chambers, W.; and Athenæum.

CAMPBELL, Mrs. Patrick, who has become famous in the title-rôle of "Mrs. Tanqueray" at the St. James's Theatre, was born at Forest House, Kensington Gardens, and is the youngest daughter of John Tanner and Louisa Romanini. She was married in 1884 to Patrick Campbell, third son of Patrick Campbell, of Stranraer. She was educated at private schools and in Paris, gained a scholarship at the Guildhall School of Music, and made her name as an amateur actress long before she was known in professional circles. Her early amateur successes were gained with a West Norwood dramatic society, "The Anomalies," in 1886–87. From 1888 to 1891 she toured with various dramatic companies, including Mr. Ben Greet's, and first attracted the attention of the critics while playing the part of Helen in an amateur performance of "The Hunchback," given at Colchester. In 1890 she gained an opportunity of appearing on the London stage in a matinée performance of Mr. Louis Parker's "A Buried Talent" at the Vaudeville. Here she again made so favourable an impression as to be encouraged to try a theatrical venture on her own account. In June 1891 she took the Shaftesbury Theatre in order to essay Rosalind. In August she obtained an engagement at the Adelphi, where, except for an interruption by illness, she remained till she went to the St. James's to act Paula in "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray." At the Adelphi Mrs. Campbell created four parts: as Astrea in "The Trumpet Call," Elizabeth Cromwell in the "White Rose," Tress in "The Lights of Home," and Clarice Berton in "The Black Domino." "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" had a long run.

In November 1894 Mrs. Campbell appeared as Kate Cloud, the heroine of "John a'Dreams," at the Haymarket Theatre. She has also appeared as Agnes in "The Notorious Mrs. Ebbsmith," as Fedora, as Juliet in the revival of "Romeo and Juliet" by Mr. Forbes Robertson at the Lyceum in September 1895, as Lady Teazle in "The School for Scandal," and as Ophelia in "Hamlet," also in company with Mr. Forbes Robertson at the Lyceum. In October 1898 she played Lady Macbeth at the same theatre, with the last-named actor as Macbeth. Address: Milford, Surrey.

CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN, The Right Hon. Sir Henry, G.C.B., M.P., LL.D., D.L., J.P., is the second son of the late Sir James Campbell, of Stracathro, Forfarshire, some time Lord Provost of Glasgow, by Janet, youngest daughter of the late Mr. Henry Bannerman, of Manchester, and was born in 1836. He was educated at the University of Glasgow and at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A., 1858; M.A., 1861). In 1872 he assumed the additional surname of Bannerman, under the will of his uncle, Mr. Henry Bannerman, of Hunton Court, Kent. Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, who is a magistrate for the counties of Lanark and Kent, has represented the Stirling district of burghs in the Liberal interest since December 1868. He was Financial Secretary at the War Office from 1871 to 1874; was again appointed to that office in 1880; and in May 1882 was nominated Secretary to the Admiralty. He was Chief Secretary for Ireland, 1884-85, during which time he was said by Mr. Tim Healy to be governing Irishmen with "Scotch jokes"; and in Mr. Gladstone's third Cabinet, 1886, held the office of Secretary of State for War, and was again appointed to the same office in Mr. Gladstone's Ministry, 1892. The Unionists suggested him as a candidate for the Speakership to which Mr. Gully was appointed. He is a man of great wealth, a moderate and cool politician, and somewhat of an opportunist, and has been described as "a survival of that rapidly decaying type of M.P. which declines to be perturbed overmuch about insignificant trifles." At the time of going to press he has been elected by his party as Sir William Harcourt's successor in the leadership of the Liberal party in the House of Commons. He has received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the University of Glasgow. He married in 1860 Charlotte, daughter of the late Major-General Sir Charles Bruce, K.C.B. Addresses: 8 Grosvenor Place, S.W.; Belmont Castle, Meigle, Scotland; and Athenaeum.

CAMPOS, Arsenio Martinez, a Spanish general and statesman, born in 1834, the son of a brigadier-general, left the Staff School at Madrid with the rank of lieutenant, went through the campaign in Morocco, in 1859, as a member of the staff of the commander-in-chief, O'Donnell, and was there promoted to the rank of major. In 1864 he joined the army of Cuba as colonel, and he remained six years in that island. On his return to Spain in 1870 he was sent, with the title of brigadier-general, to join the Army of the North, which was engaged in repelling the Carlist rebellion. After the abdication of King Amadeo he declined to give in his adhesion to the new order of things, and made no secret of his antipathy to the Republic. He was put on the retired list in 1873, and shortly afterwards was confined in a fortress as a conspirator. From his prison he addressed to General Zabala, Minister of War, the well-known letter in which he requested permission to go and fight, as a private, under the orders of General Concha, the Carlist forces in Navarre and the Basque Provinces. This letter obtained for him his liberty, and he was sent to the Army of the North, in April 1874, to command a division of the Third Corps. He took part in the engagements of Las Munecas and Galdames, which led to the siege of Bilbao being raised, and he was the first to enter the liberated city on May 1, 1874. When General Concha reorganised the Liberal army, Martinez Campos was appointed General in command of the Third Corps. He fought at the head of his troops on the 25th, the 26th, and particularly on the 27th of June, the day on which the Commander-in-Chief, General Concha, was killed in the attack on Monte Moru, near Estella. General Martinez Campos, besieged at Zurugay, on the same day, by the main body of the Carlists, opened a passage through the enemy's ranks, at the head of a column which numbered barely 1800 men, and went to rejoin, at Murillo, the headquarters, where he was able to organise the retreat of the army on Tafalla. Returning to Madrid, he continued to conspire almost overtly in favour of Don Alfonso, whilst Marshal Serrano, chief of the executive power, was operating against the Carlists. In conjunction with General Jovellar he made the military pronunciamiento of Sagunto, which gave the throne of Spain to Alfonso XII. The new Government sent him into Catalonia, as Captain-General and Commander-in-Chief of that military district. In less than a month he pacified the country, put down the Carlist bands, and took the command of the Army of the North. He brought the civil war to a close by the defeat of Dou Carlos at Pena de Plata, in March 1876. The high dignity of Captain-General of the Army, which is equivalent to that of a Marshal of France, was the recompense for his signal services. A year afterwards he was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the army in Cuba, which the rebels had held in check for seven years. Under his leadership the Spaniards were uniformly victorious, but neither these triumphs nor the strategical talents of the Commander-in-Chief would have succeeded in bringing about the complete pacification of the island if the recognition of the political rights of the Cubans and new Liberal concessions had not satisfied the demands of the insurgents. On his return to Spain, General Martinez Campos accepted the portfolio of War and the Presidency of the Council (March 7, 1879), and endeavoured to procure the fulfilment of the promises made to the Cubans; but not obtaining the support of the Cortes he resigned, and was succeeded by Señor Cánovas del Castillo (Dec. 9, 1879). Early in 1881 the Conservative Government of Señor Cánovas del Castillo was overthrown, and a coalition between Señor Sagasta and General Martinez Campos came into power, and retained it till October 1883, when it resigned in consequence of being unable to obtain from the French Government a satisfactory apology for the insult offered to King Alfonso by the Paris mob on his visit to Paris. In March 1883 he warmly opposed the project for a Pyrenean railroad, on the ground that it would lay Spain open to French attacks. On Jan. 18, 1884, he received the command of the Spanish Army of the North, and resigned it in February 1885. The following December he was elected President of the Senate. In 1888 he was appointed Captain-General of New Castille. This post he left in order to proceed to Cuba, where the refusal to grant reform had rekindled the insurrection. He arrived at Havana, April 26, 1895, and successfully met the rebels in several engagements. In September he forwarded a petition for Home Rule, and throughout he was in favour of meeting the rebels half-way. This petition, however, did not meet with favour at home, and he was recalled in January 1896, to be succeeded by General Weyler (q.v.). Since then he has been Governor of Madrid, and during the threatened dynastic troubles he has been the chief counsellor of the Queen Regent (q.v.).

CANDOLLE, Anne Casimir Pyramus de, Hon. Doctor of the University of Rostock, son of Alphonse, grandson of Augustin Pyramus, born at Geneva, Feb. 20, 1836; has published several papers on anatomy of plants and descriptive botany in the "Prodromus" and the Monographies of his father as well as in "Mémoires de la Société de Physique et d'Histoire naturelle de Genève," a society of which he was President in the year 1882.

CANDY, George, M.A., Q.C., was born in Bombay, Oct. 14, 1841, being the third son of the Rev. George Candy, then Incumbent of Trinity Church, Bombay. He was educated privately at Cheltenham, Bristol, and at the Islington Proprietary School, whence he went in 1860 with an Open Scholarship to Wadham College, Oxford. At Oxford he went in for athletics, winning, in 1862, the Prize Foils at Maclaren's Gymnasium, and rowing stroke of the College Torpids, and seven of the College Eight. He obtained a second class in Classical Moderations, and a second class in Greats, reading privately with T. H. Green of Balliol, afterwards Professor of Moral Philosophy, and with Edward Caird, afterwards Master of Balliol. He accepted in 1865 a mastership at St. Peter's College, Radley, but resigned through ill-health. He then resided in Oxford, taking private pupils, and edited Gray's Poems for the "British India Classics," afterwards becoming successively Master at Wellington, Marlborough, and Manchester. He was called to the Bar in November 1869, joined the Oxford Circuit, and went the Oxford and Gloucester Sessions. He married in 1873 Emily, daughter of Colonel Joseph Reade Revell of Round Oak, Englefield Green, by whom he has issue. He joined the Home Circuit in 1874, and went the Surrey Sessions. He took Silk in 1886. He published in 1879 a "Treatise on the Jurisdiction, Practice, and Procedure of the Mayor's Court, London"; in 1883 a "Treatise on the Powers and Discretion of Licensing Justices" ("Is Local Option a Fact?"); in 1888 "Registration versus Muzzling," with suggestions for a reform of the Dog Laws; in 1893 "The First Step to Prohibition," a criticism of the Local Control Bill of Sir W. Harcourt; in 1897 "The Public and the Publican," the decision of the House of Lords in "Boulter v. Kent Justices" examined. In February 1896 he unsuccessfully contested Southampton in the Unionist interest, being rejected by 35 votes out of a total poll of 11,077. He has been a journalist nearly all his life, having written for the Globe, Pall Mall Gazette, Echo, and Morning Advertiser. Addresses: 84 St. George's Square, S.W.; 3 Harcourt Buildings, Temple; and the Maze, Gold Hill, Chalfont St. Peter's, Bucks.

CANNING, Sir Samuel, C.E., upon whom the responsibility of laying the Atlantic cables of 1865, 1866, and 1869

devolved, is the son of the late Robert Canning, Esq., of Ogbourne St. Andrew, Wiltshire, and was born in 1823. He began his career as assistant to the late Mr. Joseph Locke, C.E., F.R.S., from 1844 to 1849, and was resident engineer during the formation of the Liverpool, Ormskirk, and Preston Railway. Since then he has been engaged in the manufacture and submersion of the most important lines of submarine telegraph cables almost from their initiation in 1850. He was among the pioneers of Atlantic cables, and achieved the submergence of the first line of 1858, and that of other Atlantic lines. To his skill and energy the success of the Atlantic expedition of 1866 is undoubtedly due; he perfected the paying-out and the recovering and grappling machinery for that cable, which so materially aided its submersion, and the recovery of the cable lost in the preceding year. He has also connected England with Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria, and laid other important lines of cable connecting various countries in the Mediterranean, North Sea, &c. He received the honour of knighthood in 1866, a Gold Medal from the Chamber of Commerce of Liverpool March 14, 1867, and the Insignia of the Order of St. Jago d'Espada from the King of Portugal. He married in 1859 Elizabeth, daughter of the late W. H. Gale. Address: 1 Inverness Gardens, W.

CANNON, Joseph G., American statesman, was born at Guilford, North Carolina, May 7, 1836, and received a liberal education. He studied law, and was admitted to the Bar, commencing the practice of his profession at Tuscola, Illinois. He was States Attorney from March 1861 to December 1868; and was elected to the Forty-third Congress, and re-elected to the Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh, Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, Fifty-first, Fifty-third, Fifty-fourth, and Fifty-fifth Congresses. He is leader of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives.

CANTERBURY, Archbishop of.
See TEMPLE, THE MOST REV. FREDERICK.

CAPEL, The Right Reverend Monsignor Thomas John, D.D., was born Oct. 28, 1836. Having completed his education by six years' private tuition under the Rev. J. M. Glennie, B.A., Oxon., in the autumn of 1860 he was ordained priest by Cardinal Wiseman. In January 1854 he became co-founder and Vice-Principal of St. Mary's Normal College at Hammersmith. Shortly after ordination he was obliged to go to a southern climate to recruit his strength. When staying at Pau, he established the English Catholic Mission, and was formally appointed its chaplain. Subsequently, his health having improved, he returned to London, where his sermons and doctrinal lectures in various churches, and more especially at the Pro-Cathedral at Kensington, soon raised him to the foremost rank among English preachers. During several visits to Rome he also delivered courses of English sermons in that city by the express command of the Sovereign Pontiff. Monsignor Capel, while labouring at Pau in the work of "conversions," was named private chamberlain to Pope Pius IX. in 1868, and after his return to England domestic prelate in 1873. With returning health Monsignor Capel once more took to the work of education, and in February 1873 established the Roman Catholic Public School at Kensington. He was appointed Rector of the College of Higher Studies at Kensington—the nucleus of the Roman Catholic English University—in 1874, by the unanimous vote of the Roman Catholic Bishops, and he held that appointment until he resigned it in 1878. Then having delivered a series of conferences on the Doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church in Florence by the wish of Leo XIII., Monsignor Capel carried out his long-proposed visit to America. There, in all the great cities, he lectured and preached to large audiences on religious, social, political, and literary subjects. In 1882 Monsignor Capel wrote "Great Britain and Rome," urging the importance of having a Papal Nuncio accredited to England, and during his tour in America he published treatises on "Confession," "The Holy Catholic Church," "The Name Catholic," "The Pope the Head of the Christian Church," besides re-editing the well-known work, "Faith of Catholics." He is now resident in California.

CAPRIVI DE CAPRERA DE MONTECUCCOLI, Count Georg Leo von, late German Chancellor, is the eldest of the four sons of Julius Edward von Caprivi, who was a high legal functionary in the service of the Prussian State. General von Caprivi was born at Charlottenburg on Feb. 24, 1831. Entering a general regiment in his eighteenth year he won rapid promotion, and served with distinction in the campaigns of 1864 and 1866. In 1870 he acted as Chief of the Staff to the 10th Corps, of which he is now the Commander, and reaped fresh laurels in all the battles on the Loire. Swiftly ascending the other steps of the military ladder, he was appointed in 1883 to the command of the 30th Division at

Metz; and next year, passing from the army to the navy, he succeeded Herr von Stosch, on the latter's retirement from the head of the Admiralty. In a short time naval men by profession were amazed at the mastery of their art and the perception of their interests which were displayed by a mere landsman and soldier. Soon after the present Emperor's accession, on the death of Count Monts, he reorganised the navy; the command of the Imperial fleet being vested in Admiral von der Goltz, while something like a ministry of marine was created under Rear-Admiral von Heusner; and it was on this occasion that General von Caprivi, sharing in the redistribution of military commands, was rewarded for his loyalty to the army, no less than for his naval services, with the 10th or Hanoverian Army Corps, which is one of the finest in the whole army. During the manœuvres of the autumn of 1889, when the Hanoverians and Westphalians met in mimic warfare, with smokeless powder and other innovations on their trial, the Emperor had opportunity enough anew to study the character of General von Caprivi, and this general's character and ability to serve him in a political capacity must have fairly convinced his Majesty, otherwise he would never have asked him to assume the enormous burden of responsibility which Prince Bismarck had laid down. It was not without grave scruples and self-distrust that General von Caprivi listened to the proposals of the Emperor; but his Majesty, it is said, had finally decided to have a soldier for his new Chancellor, thinking, as he does, with Frederick the Great, that a General must be the surest conductor of a foreign policy, as knowing best how far he can go with the army behind him. On March 19, 1890, the appointment of General Caprivi as successor to Prince Bismarck was made public. The General received the title of Count from the Emperor in December 1891. He gave up his position as Prussian Prime Minister to Count von Eulenberg in March 1892, but remained Chancellor and Minister for Foreign Affairs. In 1892 and 1893, despite of prolonged opposition, he conducted the German Army Bills successfully through Parliament. He unexpectedly resigned in October 1894, owing to friction with Count Eulenberg in the matter of the Agrarian League malcontents. The Emperor, to show that his resignation was only due to personal reasons, gave him the Black Eagle set in diamonds, and his successor, Prince Hohenlohe, carried out his policy.

CARAN D'ACHE. See POIRÉ, EMANUEL.

CARATHEODORY PASHA, Alexander, a native of Constantinople, belongs to one of the most distinguished families of the Greek community in the Turkish capital, and through his wife is connected with the noble family of the Aristarchi. He was brought up at Constantinople, and was sixteen years of age when he was sent to the west of Europe to complete his studies. On his return to Turkey he was employed in the Government offices of the Sublime Porte, and soon attracted notice by his assiduity and intelligence. In several capitals of Europe he occupied the post of First Secretary of Embassy, and he was appointed, for the first time, Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs during the Grand-Vizieriat of the late A'ali Pasha. About this period he was nominated Minister of the Sultan at the Court of Rome, where he resided for two years. He was recalled to occupy, for the second time, the post of Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and was sent, as chief plenipotentiary of Turkey, to the Congress of the Great Powers which assembled at Berlin in 1878 to revise the provisions of the Treaty of San Stefano. He had previously been raised to the rank of Muchir. Afterwards he became Minister of Public Works, and in November 1878 he was appointed Governor-General of Crete. In May 1885 he was appointed Prince of Samos and adjoining islands, which were accorded a measure of autonomy under the suzerainty of the Porte.

CARDEN, Colonel Sir Frederick, K.C.M.G., was born in 1839, and was educated at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst. Entering the Bengal Army in 1858 he served on the North-West Frontier of India in 1863, and was mentioned in despatches. He was Deputy-Assistant Quartermaster-General at Aldershot from 1872 to 1878, and in the following year went out to South Africa to take part in the Zulu War of 1879-81, when he was again mentioned in despatches. He was engaged in the Transvaal in 1881, and acted as Assistant Military Secretary in China from 1882 to 1883. After being Sub-Commissioner for Zululand from 1884 to 1886 he was appointed Resident Commissioner in 1890. He now occupies the position of Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Sierra Leone, and was created a K.C.M.G. in 1897. He married in 1887, as his second wife, Katherine, daughter of the late J. Saville, and widow of Colonel Kent Jones. Address: Government House, Freetown, Sierra Leone.

CARDUCCI, Giosué, Italian poet and critic, is the son of a physician, and was born at Val-di-Castello, near Pietra Santa, on July 27, 1836, and educated at the college of the Scolopii at Florence, where he early gave proof of his talents. In 1858 he founded a literary review, the Poliziano, in which he proposed to render the Italian language classical in form though modern in thought. At the same time he published his Juvenilia, and several critical essays on the old Italian poets. These writings obtained him, in 1860, an appointment as Professor of Italian Literature at the University of Bologna. He was returned, in 1876, to the Italian Chamber as a Republican, and became a senator in 1890. Among Signor Carducci's poetical works may be mentioned his famous "Hymn to Satan," published under the pseudonym of "Enotrio Romano"; "Levia Gravia," 1875; "Odi Barbari," Odes in irregular metres, 1880; "September, 1792," 1883. M. Luzol has translated the Barbaric Odes into French, and Mr. G. A. Greene has published some translations of Carducci in his "Italian Lyrists of To-day." A complete edition of his poetical works in twenty volumes began to be published at Bologna in 1889. Among Carducci's critical works may be mentioned "Literary Studies," 1874; "Commentaries on Petrarch," 1879; "Critical Conversations" and "Lives and Portraits," 1884. Address: Bologna.

CARINI, Isidore, was born at Palermo (Sicily) on Jan. 7, 1843, and ordained Priest in 1866, Canon of the Cathedral of Palermo in 1875, Professor of Palæography and Curator of the Archives of Palermo in 1877. In 1882 he was sent by the Government into Spain to collect and publish documents relative to the Sicilian Vespers; and recalled to Rome by His Holiness Leo XIII. as assistant archivist and first Professor of Palæography at the new Vatican school in 1884. In 1889 he was appointed Premier Préfet at the Vatican Library. Canon Carini has been a prolific writer, not merely upon archaeological subjects, but also on religion, literature, languages, bibliography, &c. He is a member of various literary societies, and for his services during the cholera in 1885 received a gold medal from the King of Italy.

CARLE. See SARDOU, VICTORIEN.

CARLING, Hon. Sir John, K.C.M.G., was born in London, Ontario, on Jan. 23, 1828, and was educated in the public schools of his native place. For a number of years he was a member of the firm of Carling & Co., brewers, London, and was a director of the Great Western Railway, the London, Huron, and Bruce Railway, and the London and Port Stanley Railway. He was elected Trustee of the Board of Education, London, in 1850, and held this office until in 1854 he became a member of the Board of Aldermen for the same city. In 1857 he was returned as a member for London to the General Assembly, holding the seat continuously until the Confederation. He was Receiver-General of Canada in 1862; was elected to the Commons in 1867, holding the seat to 1874, and was also returned to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario in 1867. He was Minister of Agriculture and Public Works from July 1867 until December 1871; was sworn of the Privy Council, and was Postmaster-General from May 23, 1882, until Sept. 25, 1885, when he resigned this portfolio and accepted that of the Minister of Agriculture. He was re-elected to the Commons in 1878, and continued to sit for London until 1891. He was called to the Senate in 1891, but resigned his seat in the spring of 1892, and again successfully contested London for the Commons. He retained the portfolio of Minister of Agriculture until September 1892; since then he has been a member of the Cabinet without portfolio. He was called to the Senate in 1896. He was created K.C.M.G. in 1893. He is married to Hannah, daughter of Henry Dalton, London, Ontario. Address: London, Ontario.

CARLISLE, Bishop of. See BARDSLEY, THE RIGHT REV. JOHN WAREING.

CARLISLE, Earl of, George James Howard, born Aug. 12, 1843, is the son of the Hon. Charles, fourth son of the 6th Earl, and succeeded to the title as 9th Earl in 1889. He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, and sat in the House of Commons as Liberal Member for East Cumberland from 1879 to 1880, and from 1881 to 1885. He is a Justice of the Peace and a Trustee of the National Gallery. He was married in 1864 to Rosalind, youngest daughter of Lord Stanley of Alderley. Addresses: 1 Palace Green, Kensington, W.; and Northworth Castle, Carlisle.

CARLISLE, John Griffin, American statesman, was born in Campbell (now Kenton) County, Kentucky, Sept. 5, 1835. He received a common school education, studied law, and began its practice in 1858. From 1859 to 1861 he was a member of the Kentucky House of Representatives, and of the State Senate from 1866 to 1871, resigning his seat to accept the office of Lieut.-Governor, to which he was elected in August 1871, and which he occupied until 1875. In 1876 he was elected a member of the lower branch of Congress, where he continued to sit until May 1890, when he was sent to the United States Senate to fill the unexpired term of the late Senator Beck (to 1895). From 1883 to 1889 he was the (Democratic) Speaker of the House of Representatives, and from 1893 to 1897 Secretary of the Treasury under President Cleveland.

CARLOS I., Dom Carlos, King of Portugal and the Algarves, son of Louis I., was born in Lisbon on Sept. 28, 1863, married in Lisbon, May 22, 1886, Amélie, Princess of Orléans-Bourbon, daughter of the late Comte de Paris, and has two children. He succeeded to the throne on Oct. 19, 1889. During a financial crisis in 1892 King Carlos and the Royal Family renounced a fifth of their yearly income for the benefit of the nation. In April 1893 an attempt was made on the king's life as he was being driven through Lisbon. He visited England in November 1895.

CARLOS, Don, Duke of Madrid, Carlos Maria de los Dolores Juan Isidoro Josef Francisco Quirino Antonio Miguel Gabriel Rafael, who claims, under the special law of succession established by Philip V., to be the legitimate King of Spain by the title of Charles VII., was born at Laybach, in Austria, on March 30, 1848. His father, Don Juan, was the brother of Don Carlos, Charles VI., known as the Count de Montemolin, in support of whose claims the Carlist risings of 1848, 1855, and 1860 were organised. As Charles VI. died without children, Jan. 13, 1861, his rights devolved upon his brother, Don Juan, who had married on Feb. 6, 1847, the Archduchess Maria Teresa of Austria, Princess of Modena, who is still living at Gratz, in Austria. Their son, the present Don Carlos, who was educated principally in Austria, married on Feb. 4, 1867, Margaret de Bourbon, of Bourbon, Princess of Parma, daughter of the late Duke Ferdinand Charles III., Mademoiselle de France, Duchess of Parma, and sister of the late Comte de Chambord (Henry V. of France). In October 1868 Don Juan abdicated in favour of his son, whose standard was raised in the north of Spain by some of his partisans, April 21, 1872. On July 16 in that year Don Carlos published a proclamation, addressed to the inhabitants of Catalonia, Aragon, and Valencia, calling upon them to take up arms in his cause, and promising to restore to them their ancient liberties; and in the following December Don Alfonso, the brother of Don Carlos, assumed the command of the Carlist bands in Catalonia. Don Carlos himself made his entry into Spain July 15, 1873, announcing that he came for the purpose of saving the country. From that period the war was waged with remarkable vigour, and the various governments which came into power at Madrid strove in vain to dislodge the Carlists from their strongholds in the north of Spain. When the Republic came to an end, and the eldest son of the ex-Queen Isabella returned to Spain as Alfonso XII., Don Carlos issued a proclamation, dated at his headquarters at Vera, Jan. 6, 1875, calling upon Spain to adhere to his side. The contest was carried on with great stubbornness and gallantry by the Carlists for more than a twelvemonth after that; but in January 1876 Tolosa, their last stronghold, fell, and its defenders, flying in disorder, sought refuge on French territory. This war is called the "Four Years' War," to distinguish it from the "Seven Years' War" of 1833 to 1840. In both several prominent Englishmen fought on the Legitimist side. Don Carlos passed through France to London and travelled in the United States and Mexico, and in 1877 joined the Russian army in Turkey and fought at Plevna, where he was decorated by the Emperor for charging the enemy at the head of his own escort. In 1880 he returned to France, but was expelled the country by President Grévy (Aug. 12, 1881) for having attended Mass with French Royalists on St. Henry's Day (July 15), in honour of the Comte de Chambord. This order has never been rescinded. In 1884 he visited India, and was the guest of the Duke of Connaught at Meerut; he returned through Ceylon and Egypt. In 1887 he visited South America, being the first member of the Spanish Bourbons to see these old Spanish possessions. Alfonso XII. made every possible effort to restore the lost prosperity of his kingdom and to secure and consolidate his own dynasty, but in 1885 he died prematurely. The fight for the succession now raged between Maria Christina of Austria, the widow of Alfonso XII., and Don Carlos. However, the posthumous birth of the present king in the following year, 1886, kindled in the nation a feeling of loyalty to the varying fortunes of the House of Bourbon, which has continued to exist up to the present time. Many rumours have been current as to the intentions of Don Carlos, but up till now he has not taken any definite step toward reasserting his old claim. It is considered, however, that he is merely waiting for a favourable opportunity. He lives for the most part of the year in his palace on the Grand Canal at Venice, welcoming all Spaniards who offer him their respects. Tall, handsome, and with engaging manners, he is said to be a consummate horseman, and was without doubt one of the pluckiest of soldiers during the Carlist war. His father, Don Juan, died at Brighton Nov. 18, 1887, where he resided incognito. Don Carlos lost his first wife at Viareggio in 1893, and in the next year married the Princess Berthe de Rohan, a descendant of the old sovereigns of Brittany. His only son, Don Jaime, is at present serving in the Russian army, gaining experience for a probable Spanish campaign, signs of the approach of which are not lacking. The following skeleton table will show his claim:—

CARLOS IV.

Don Carlos has five children—the Infanta Blanca, born Sept. 7, 1868; the Infante Jaime (Don Jaime), Prince of the Asturias, born June 27, 1870; the Infanta Elvira, born July 28, 1871; the Infanta Beatrix, born March 21, 1874; and the Infanta Alicia, born June 29, 1876.

CARMEN SYLVA. See ELIZABETH, QUEEN OF ROUMANIA.

CARNEGIE, Andrew, the "Iron King," an American manufacturer, was born at Dunfermline, Scotland, Nov. 25, 1837. His family removed to the United States in 1848 and settled at Pittsburgh, Pa., and two years later Andrew began his business career by attending a small stationary engine. This he soon left to become a telegraph messenger, and later he became an operator. While clerk of the superintendent of the telegraph lines of the Pennsylvania R. R. Co. at Pittsburgh, he aided in the adoption by that company of the Woodruff sleeping-car, and this gave him the nucleus of his present great fortune. He was made superintendent of the Pittsburgh division of the Pennsylvania road, and soon afterwards acquired an interest in some oil wells that proved very profitable. Subsequently he became associated with others in establishing a rolling-mill, which has grown to be the largest and most complete system of iron and steel industries in the world ever controlled by one individual. He has spent large sums of money for educational and charitable purposes. At his native place he erected, in 1879, commodious swimming-baths for the use of the people, and in the following year gave it $40,000 for a free library. He gave $50,000 in 1884 to the Bellevue Hospital Medical College at New York for a histological laboratory. Since 1885 he has expended nearly two millions of dollars on a music-hall, library, and art gallery at Pittsburgh and Alleghany City, Pa. A large music-hall in 1890 was built in New York through his generosity, at a cost of $1,125,000. Edinburgh has also received $250,000 from him for a free library; and other libraries have been established by him at Braddock, Pa., and elsewhere. His latest benefaction is the gift of $50,000 for a public library at Ayr. He has frequently contributed to periodicals on the labour question and similar economic topics, and has published in book form "An American Four-in-Hand in Britain," 1883; "Round the World," 1884; and "Triumphant Democracy," 1886 (new edition 1893), besides several pamphlets.

CARON, Hon. Sir Joseph Philippe René Adolphe, Canadian statesman, was born in the city of Quebec Dec. 24, 1843. He was educated in the seminary there, and graduated B.C.L. at McGill University in 1865. He was called to the Bar soon after, and for some years devoted himself to his profession, and was created a Q.C. by the Marquis of Lorne in 1879. He sat in the House of Commons for the county of Quebec from March 1873 to 1891, when he was returned for Rimouski. At the General Election of 1896 he was elected for Three Rivers and St. Maurice. He entered Sir John Macdonald's government as Minister of Militia Nov. 9, 1880, and was continued in that office under Sir John Abbott until Jan. 25, 1892, when he became Postmaster-General. He remained at the head of the Post Office Department under Sir John Thompson and Sir Mackenzie Bowell, and retired from office with the latter April 27, 1896. For his services while at the head of the Militia Department during the Riel rebellion in 1885 he was created a K.C.M.G.

CARPENTER, George Alfred, M.D. London, and M.R.C.P., was born in 1859. He is the son of the late John William Carpenter, M.D., St. Andrews, and nephew of that distinguished pioneer in and exponent of hygiene, the late Alfred Carpenter, M.D., of Croydon. He was educated at Epsom College and at King's College, London, matriculating at the London University in 1879. The following year he entered as a student at St. Thomas's Hospital, and during a very successful career he obtained many prizes.

He became a Member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England in 1885, and graduated M.B. of London University in 1886, proceeding M.D. in 1890, his thesis being "Tuberculosis of the Choroid," a subject to which he has given much attention. In November 1885 he was appointed Registrar and Pathologist to the Evelina Hospital for Sick Children, and some two years later Resident Medical Officer, a post which he held until his appointment on the full staff of the Hospital as Physician to out-patients in January 1889. During his connection with the Evelina Hospital as a junior Dr. Carpenter entered as a student at Guy's Hospital. Formerly he was Deputy Medical Superintendent of the Coppice Lunatic Hospital, Nottingham, and is now Medical Officer of Health for Beckenham, Kent. Dr. Carpenter is a frequent contributor to medical literature in this country and America. The following papers on various subjects are a few of the more important which have come from his pen: "Cases of Hereditary Ataxia," 1888; "Craniotabes in Young Children: a Record of 100 Cases," 1889; "Tubercular Peritonitis," 1891; "Congenital Syphilis," "Impetigo Gangrenosa, with Tuberculosis of the Lungs," 1894; "Fibroid Disease of the Heart in an Infant," "Double Optic Neuritis," "On the Value of Rectal Exploration as an Aid to Diagnosis in Children's Diseases," 1896; "On Infant Feeding," 1898. A separate work on "Congenital Affections of the Heart" appeared in 1894. Dr. Carpenter is also the author of the fifteenth edition of Chavasse's "Advice to a Mother," which, with but few and trifling exceptions, has been re-written by him. It is a work which has been translated into most of the European and Asiatic languages. Dr. Carpenter is also the editor of Pediatrics, the well-known medical journal.

CARPENTER, The Right Rev. William Boyd, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop of Ripon, born March 26, 1841, was educated at St. Catherine's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1864, M.A. 1867). He is the son of the Rev. Henry Carpenter, Incumbent of St. Michael's, Liverpool, and of Hester, daughter of Archibald Boyd, Londonderry, Ireland. After holding various curacies he was, in 1870, appointed Vicar of St. James's, Holloway, where he remained until, in 1879, he became Vicar of Christ Church, Lancaster Gate, W. He was Select Preacher at Cambridge in 1875 and 1877; Hulsean Lecturer at Cambridge, 1878; Honorary Chaplain to the Queen, 1878; Select Preacher at Oxford in 1882; Bampton Lecturer, 1887; and received from the University of Oxford an honorary

D.C.L. in 1889. In 1882 he was appointed to a vacant canonry at Windsor. On the death of the late Dr. Bickersteth he was, in 1884, consecrated Bishop of Ripon. He presided over the Church Congress held at Wakefield in 1886, and at Bradford in 1898; and in 1887 he was selected by the House of Commons to preach the Jubilee Sermon at St. Margaret's, Westminster. He is the author of "Thoughts on Prayer," 1871; "Narcissus"; "Heart Healing"; "The Witness of the Heart to Christ" (Hulsean Lectures), 1879; and a Commentary on Revelation in the same year; "Truth in Tale," "Permanent Elements of Religion" (Bampton Lectures), 1889; "Lectures on Preaching," "Christian Reunion," and the "Great Character of Christ," 1895, &c. Addresses: The Palace, Ripon; 71 Carlisle Place, S.W.; and Athenæum.

CARR, Joseph William Comyns, was born in 1849. In 1870 he matriculated at the London University, and afterwards passed in the honours division of the first examination for the degree of Bachelor of Laws. He became a student of the Inner Temple in 1869, and was called to the Bar in 1872, having gained a studentship in Roman and International Law at the Inns of Court. Mr. Comyns Carr then joined the Northern Circuit, but shortly afterwards ceased to practise at the Bar, and devoted himself to literature and journalism. From 1870 to 1880 he was a constant contributor to the principal literary reviews and magazines. Writing especially upon subjects connected with art, he held for some years the post of art critic on the Pall Mall Gazette, and in 1875 he accepted the English editorship of L'Art. He was also associated with Sir Coutts-Lindsay in the establishment of the Grosvenor Gallery, and was one of the directors of that institution. His works on art include "Drawings by the Old Masters," 1877; "The Abbey Church of St. Albans," 1878; "Examples of Contemporary Art," 1878; "Essays on Art," "Art in Provincial France," 1883; and "Papers on Art," 1884. Mr. Carr has also written for the stage. In 1882 he produced a dramatised version of Mr. Hardy's novel, "Far from the Madding Crowd"; and in 1884 he collaborated with the late Hugh Conway in the drama of "Called Back," founded upon the popular story of that name. "King Arthur," acted at the Lyceum in 1895, was from his pen. Together with Mr. Haddon Chambers, Mr. Comyns Carr wrote "In the Days of the Duke," acted at the Adelphi in 1897, and in 1898 he was one of the collaborators in the musical play, "The Beauty Stone," produced at the Savoy. Address: 18 Eldon Road, Kensington.

CARR GLYN. See GLYN, THE RIGHT REV. HON. EDWARD CARR.

CARRINGTON, Earl, The Right Hon. Sir Charles Robert Wynn-Carrington, G.C.M.G., Joint Hereditary Lord Great Chamberlain of England, was born in 1843, and educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of B.A. in 1863. Subsequently he entered the Royal Horse Guards, where he rose to the rank of Captain, and afterwards became Lieut.-Colonel of the 3rd Battalion of the Oxfordshire Light Infantry. From 1865 to 1868 he was M.P. for Wycombe. He was Captain of the Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms from 1881 to 1885; Governor of New South Wales from 1885 to 1890; Lord Chamberlain of the Queen's Household from 1892 to 1895; and is a member of the London County Council, in which he represents West St. Pancras as a Progressive. Lord Carrington was A.D.C. to the Prince of Wales on his visit to India in 1875-76, and has travelled in the United States and the Colonies. He was appointed Chairman of the Welsh Land Commission in 1893. In July 1895 Lord Carrington was granted the dignities of a Viscount and an Earl by the names, styles, and titles of Viscount Wendover of Chepping Wycombe, in the county of Buckingham, and Earl Carrington. In politics he is a strong Liberal. In July 1878 he married Cecilia, eldest daughter of Charles, 5th Lord Suffield. Addresses: Gwydyr Castle, Llanrwst, &c.; and 50 Grosvenor Street, W.

CARRINGTON, Major-General Sir Frederick, K.C.M.G., K.C.B., is the son of Edmund Carrington, Esq., of Cheltenham, where he was born on Aug. 23, 1844. He entered the army as Ensign in the 24th Foot, now known as the South Wales Borderers, and was promoted Lieutenant in 1867 and Captain in 1878. In the expedition to Griqualand, West South Africa, of 1875 he organised and commanded the Mounted Infantry. During the Kaffir War of 1877-81 he saw considerable war service as commander of the Frontier Light Horse, which was afterwards called "Carrington's Horse." He was present at the battle of Quintana, and the subsequent operations in the Transkei and in the Peri Bush, being mentioned in despatches. During 1878-79, as Commandant of the Transvaal Volunteer Force, he had charge of the advance guard and the left attacking party at the storming and taking of the stronghold of Sekukuni, a rebellious Kaffir chief. He was mentioned in despatches, and received the Brevet of Major and Lieutenant-Colonel, and also a C.M.G. In the Basutoland campaign of 1880-81 Sir Frederick Carrington commanded the Cape Mounted Rifles during the siege of Mafeteng by the Basutos, who were repulsed with great loss. Subsequently obtaining supreme command of the Colonial Forces in the further operations he gained many victories over the rebels, on one occasion being severely wounded. He was promoted to Colonel in 1884, and in the Bechuanaland Expedition of that year he commanded the 2nd Mounted Rifles. He was for several years employed on special service in South Africa and the Bechuanaland Border Police Force, and was promoted to Major-General in 1893 in consideration of these services. During the operations in Zululand of 1888 he commanded the native levies. In May 1895 Sir Frederick went to Gibraltar to take over the command of the Infantry Brigade. He married in 1897 Susan Margaret, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elmes, Colesbourne. Address: College Lawn, Cheltenham.

CARRINGTON, Very Rev. Henry, M.A., Dean and Rector of Bocking, was born in 1814, and was educated at Charterhouse and Caius College, Cambridge, where he took his M.A. degree. He became Dean of Bocking in 1845, an appointment which he still holds. He has translated Victor Hugo's poems, and has also published a metrical translation of Thomas à Kempis. In 1842 Mr. Carrington married a daughter of Captain Haseldine Lyell, R.N., and has two daughters, one of whom, Evelyn Lillian Haseldine, is now Contessa Martinengo, and is the authoress of "Studies in Folk-lore," "Italian Characters," and "The Liberation of Italy." Address: Bocking Deanery, Braintree, Essex.

CARRUTHERS, William, F.R.S., F.L.S., was born at Moffat, Scotland, in 1830, and educated at the Academy there, and afterwards at the University and New College, Edinburgh. He entered the British Museum as assistant in the department of Botany in 1859, and succeeded Mr. J. J. Bennett as keeper of that department on his retirement in 1871. He has now retired. Mr. Carruthers has conducted many original investigations on living and fossil plants, and has published numerous memoirs on fossil botany in the journals and transactions of learned societies. He re-edited Lindley and Hutton's "Fossil Flora," and was afterwards engaged in preparing an account of the fossil plants of Britain, supplementary to that work. Address: 14 Vermont Road, Norwood, S.E.

CARSON, The Right Hon. Edward Henry, Q.C., M.P., is the second son of the late Edward Henry Carson, C.E., of Dublin, and Isabella, daughter of Captain Lambert, of Castle Ellen, co. Galway. He was born in 1854, and educated at Portlushington School and Trinity College, Dublin, of which he is M.A. He went to the Irish Bar, and in time became Bencher of the King's Inns, Dublin, and in 1889 Q.C. (Irish). At the time that Mr. Arthur Balfour held the Irish Secretaryship and spoke of the necessity of resolute government for twenty years to come, Mr. Carson was much in his counsels. In 1892 he was Solicitor-General for Ireland. In the same year he was returned to Parliament for that anti-Nationalist stronghold, Dublin University, and was re-elected in 1895. He has transferred the scene of his legal activity from Ireland to England, and in 1894 became a Q.C., having been called to the English Bar in 1893. Here he has won a very high reputation as a cross-examiner, having figured in many famous trials. In Parliament he sits as a Conservative, but in 1898 criticised Mr. Gerald Balfour's Irish Local Bill with great candour. He was sworn of the Irish Privy Council in 1896. Address: 39 Rutland Gate, S.W.

CARTER, Sir Gilbert Thomas, K.C.M.G., Governor of the Bahamas since 1897, was born in 1868, and educated at the Royal Naval School, Greenwich, whence he entered the Royal Navy in 1864. He was appointed Administrator of the Gambia Settlement in 1888, and from 1891 to 1897 he was Governor of Lagos. In 1893, he was created a K.C.M.G. Address: Government House, Nassau, Bahamas.

CARTER, Robert Brudenell, son of Thomas Carter, Major, Royal Marines, by his second wife Louisa, daughter of Richard Jeffreys of Basingstoke, in the county of Hants, Esq., was born on Oct. 2, 1828, at Little Wittenham, Berks, of which parish his grandfather, the Rev. Henry Carter, a younger brother of Elizabeth Carter, the translator of "Epictetus," and famous letter-writer, was Rector for more than fifty years. Educated at private schools and at the London Hospital, Mr. Carter became a Member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England in 1851, and a Licentiate of the Society of Apothecaries in 1852. He served during the Crimean War with the local rank of Staff-Surgeon, obtaining the English and Turkish Crimean medals. In 1864 he became a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, and in 1868 settled in London to practise as an ophthalmic specialist. He was appointed Surgeon to the Royal South London Ophthalmic Hospital in 1869, Ophthalmic Surgeon to St. George's Hospital in 1870 (and retired as Consulting Ophthalmic Surgeon in 1893), Ophthalmic Surgeon to the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Consulting Surgeon to the Shropshire Eye, Ear, and Throat Hospital, and to the Ophthalmic Hospital of the Order of St. John at Jerusalem. He is a Member (representing the Society of Apothecaries) of the General Medical Council; has been Orator, Lettoman Lecturer, and President of the Medical Society of London; Hunterian Professor of Pathology and Surgery to the Royal College of Surgeons; a Vice-President of the Clinical Society; and, besides membership of the other medical societies of London, is a Corresponding Member of the Medico-Chirurgical Society of Edinburgh, and a Foreign Associate of the French Society of Hygiene. He is a Knight of Grace of the Order of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem in England. He has written a large number of books and essays on medical, ophthalmological, and educational subjects, the principal being: "The Pathology and Treatment of Hysteria," 1853; "The Influence of Education and Training in preventing Diseases of the Nervous System," 1855; "On the Artificial Production of Stupidity in Schools," 1857; "A Practical Treatise on Diseases of the Eye," 1875; "Eyesight, Good and Bad," 1879; "Lectures on Cataract," 1884; the articles on Diseases of the Eye in Quain's "Dictionary of Medicine," and in Heath's "Dictionary of Surgery"; and the article on Medical Ophthalmology in Allbutt's "System of Medicine." Addresses: 31 Harley Street, W.; "Kenilworth," Clapham Common, S.W.; and Athenæum.

CARTWRIGHT, The Right Hon. Sir Richard John, K.C.M.G., Canadian statesman, was born at Kingston, Dec. 4, 1835. He was educated at his native city and at Trinity College, Dublin, and entered the Canadian Parliament as a Conservative in 1863, but in 1870 left that party, and has since been one of the Liberal leaders of the Dominion. In 1873 he was made Minister of Finance in the Mackenzie Government, an office he retained until the general defeat of the Liberals in 1878. In July 1896 he became Minister of Trade and Commerce in Sir Wilfred Laurier's Government, and during Mr. Laurier's absence from Canada in 1897, he was temporary leader of the Government in the House of Commons. He is now Member for Central Huron. In 1879 he was created a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George and G.C.M.G. in 1897. In 1859 he married Frances, daughter of Colonel Alexander Law, of the East India Company's Service. Address: Kingston, Canada, &c.

CARYSFORT, Earl of, William Proby, K.P., J.P., born at Glenart Castle, co. Wicklow, in 1836, succeeded his brother as 5th Earl in 1872. He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge (M.A.), and is Lord-Lieutenant of the county of Wicklow. He is the possessor of some celebrated pictures by Sir Joshua Reynolds, Hobbema, Gerard Dow, Franz Hals, Landseer, Romney, &c., most of which are kept at Elton Hall, Peterborough; also of an extensive library containing several Caxton Bibles and a Prayer-book of Henry VIII. He was married in 1860 to Charlotte, eldest daughter of the Rev. Boothby Heathcote, of Friday Hill, Chingford, Essex. Addresses: 10 Hereford Gardens, Park Lane, W.; and Elton Hall, Peterborough.

CASATI, Gaetano, is the son of a doctor at Monza, where he was born in 1838. He studied at Monza, Milan, and Pavia, devoting himself more especially to mathematics. When one-and-twenty, inspired by the youthful ardour of those days for the independence of Italy, he became a soldier in Piedmont, joining the corps of Bersagliere. He obtained advancement, and in 1867 was elevated to the rank of captain. But service in the army did not offer him sufficient scope for his energy. He set his mind on becoming an African explorer, and to this end gave in his resignation in 1879. Regarded as a man of great promise and capacity, he was commissioned by the Società d'Esplorazione Commerciale d'Africa to proceed to that country at their expense, and he sailed from Genoa on Dec. 24, 1879. He went by way of Suakim and Berber to Khartoum, where he arrived about the middle of May 1880, his immediate object being to reach the Bahr-el-Ghazel, and there see his fellow-countryman, Gessi Pacha, then governor of that particular region. In this he succeeded, and the meeting of the two was of a touching character. Gessi soon afterwards nursed Casati through a dangerous fever, paying him the most devoted attention, and refusing to leave him until he was thoroughly restored to health. Then, however, Gessi moved on to Khartoum, intending to return to Europe, though he got no farther than Suez, where he died. After Gessi's departure Casati had another severe attack of fever, this time of prolonged duration, but he was able, on Oct. 14, 1880, to proceed to Rumbeck. After this nothing was heard about him, by his friends until a letter reached them from Tangasi, dated Dec. 29, 1881, stating that he had been kept a prisoner by a certain chief, Azanga by name, and had only succeeded in making his escape on the 7th of that month.

Getting on the march again in 1881, Casati made his way to the Niam-Niam territory, which lies immediately to the west of what was once Emin Pacha's province, and has since been visited and described by George Schweinfurth. In a letter dated April 13, 1883, Casati describes his cordial reception by Emin Pacha at Lado, where he saw also Junker, the Russian explorer. Emin Pacha, he says, treated him with "rare liberality and generosity." At that time, however, the Mahdi was assuming a very threatening attitude, and thus the three Europeans found themselves "united but shut in" in this extreme corner of the Egyptian possessions. Two expeditions were organised to effect their rescue, one conducted by Dr. Fischer, which got as far as the east of Victoria Nyanza, and then had to return for want of the requisite goods for barter; and the other led by Dr. Lenz, who proceeded by way of the Congo, but also was obliged to abandon his attempt, leaving, as we all know, the real honours of the rescue to be obtained by Stanley. At the request of Emin Pacha he went to live as "resident" in the territory of King Kabba Rega, son of M'tesa, of Unyoro. In this capacity part of his duty was to play the rôle of Emin's postmaster. Emin forwarded to him all his correspondence for Europe, and he had to devise the means as best he could by which it was to be sent to the coast. At first Casati was well treated by the king; but, after the lapse of about twenty months, Kabba Rega changed his humour, and condemned him to death, together with an Arab merchant named Biri, who, Casati heard, was actually killed. Casati, however, though at first tied with cords round his neck, arms, and legs, managed to escape with some of his men. Chased from place to place, he got over sufficient ground during the night to reach at last the Albert Nyanza, where lay his sole hope of safety, though even then he ran the risk of being caught by a certain chief in that region who, as he heard, had received orders from the king to capture and murder him. Happily they found a boat, in which one of the men went off to tell Emin Pacha what had happened. Two days afterwards Emin Pacha arrived in his steamer, and rescued Casati from his perilous situation. It was high time. For three days Casati had not had a morsel of food to eat. "I am now in safety, it is true," wrote he from the Albert Nyanza on March 25, 1888, "but I am oppressed with grief at the loss of all my notes. The work of so many years has vanished like smoke!" But Casati had previously sent home sufficient information to show that he had already done valuable service to the cause of African exploration.

CASHÉL, Bishop of. See DAY, THE RIGHT REV. MAURICE FITZGERALD.

CASIMIR-PERIER, Jean Paul Pierre, ex-President of the French Republic, is the son and grandson of statesmen, his father, Auguste Casimir-Perier, the diplomatist, having been Minister of the Interior in 1871, whilst his grandfather was leader of the Opposition on the accession of Louis-Philippe, and afterwards Premier. The ex-President was born on Nov. 8, 1847. After a brilliant career as a student of literature and history he received the University degree of licencié ès lettres, and in the Franco-Prussian War joined the Mobs of the Aube who were summoned to Paris, where during the siege he behaved with such gallantry as to be mentioned in an Order of the Day, and afterwards to receive the decoration of the Legion of Honour. When his father joined the first Republican Cabinet of M. Thiers, he became chef du cabinet under him at the Ministry of the Interior. In order to open to him a political career his father resigned his position as Councillor-General of the Aube in April 1874, and introduced him to the electors of Nogent-sur-Seine, under the sanction of the Perier political tradition. He was elected Deputy without opposition on July 18. The same year he conducted a brisk electoral campaign in his department in support of the Republican candidature of General Saussier. At the general elections of February 1878, he was elected unopposed for Nogent-sur-Seine. His profession of faith was resolutely Republican, and he joined the Left Centre and the Republican Left in the Chamber of Deputies, voting constantly with the majority supported by these groups. After the crisis of May 1877, he was one of the 363 deputies who refused to pass a vote of confidence in the Broglie Ministry. At the succeeding elections he was returned by a large majority over the Bonapartist candidate, M. Walkenaer, and when in December a purely Republican Cabinet was formed he was appointed, under M. Bordoux, Under-Secretary of State at the Ministry of Public Instruction. He retained this post until the Cabinet Dufaure went out of office in January 1879. Three months later he abandoned the Left Centre for the Republican Left. Re-elected for Nogent-sur-Seine in August 1881, he joined the Union Républicaine. In February 1883, he retired from the Chamber on the law being passed to exclude members of French royal families from public employments. In this he followed family tradition, and is in consequence still regarded as Orleanist in tendency. In the following March he consented to re-enter Parliament, and on Oct. 17, 1883, was appointed Under-Secretary of State at the Ministry of War, and remained there till his superior Minister, General Campenan, retired in January 1885. In the October elections of the same year he was returned by a large majority for the Aube. In September 1889 he was again elected for Nogent-sur-Seine. In each successive Parliament M. Casimir-Perier has enjoyed great personal influence among the Republican majority. In 1890 he was elected Vice-President of the Chamber and President of the Budget Committee. In the summer of 1894 he was elected President of the French Republic, immediately after the assassination of the late President Carnot. His political tradition was not so purely revolutionary as that of the Carnots, but his election took place at a crisis in the affairs of France when an essentially strong and courageous man was needed at the head of the State. But in Casimir-Perier the French Chambers, and, indeed, the French people thought they had at last found a "strong man" who would defend them against the combined assaults of predatory radicalism and of a form of revolutionary socialism inimical to all social order. It is not too much to say that the election of M. Casimir-Perier was hailed by all Europe as an indication of the determination of the French nation to combat the destructive agencies which threatened the national security. Hence, Casimir-Perier became the mark of the motley crowd of maligners who were the recognised apostles of social disorder. The President was traduced and openly insulted in every possible manner, and so persistent did these disgraceful tactics become that the Government at last took action, and prosecuted M. Girault-Richard, a writer of small repute, who had published libels on Casimir-Perier, which were described as nothing less than "atrocious." Girault-Richard was sentenced to six months' imprisonment; and one of the advanced Radical arrondissements of Paris, thinking the affair an excellent opportunity for placing on record their absolute indifference to the critical issues at stake, elected the scribe as a Deputy, and the Socialists, carrying the campaign on to a further point, demanded that Girault-Richard should be "given to the Chamber"—that is, released. Although the release by Napoleon III. of M. Rochefort, while under sentence for a political offence, provided a precedent for this proposed action, the Government determinedly refused the Socialist demand, and after a debate, which was not so violent as was anticipated, the Chamber supported the Government by 309 votes to 219. Naturally, immense interest was taken in this vote, especially as it was whispered that the President would consider an adverse vote as personal to himself. Meanwhile, however, serious differences began to arise between M. Casimir-Perier and his supporters. Mention has already been made of the fact that his election to the Presidency was hailed by France, and by Moderate Europe as well, as a supreme triumph of Moderate ideas. Considerable dissatisfaction was aroused, therefore, when the notion gained currency that the President was not always inclined to present so bold a front to the advances of the Radicals as had been expected. This feeling came to a head on the election of a President of the Chamber. The Radical leader himself, M. Brisson, ran for the chair, and it was felt that his defeat could be assured only by the counter-nomination of a Minister. But Casimir-Perier would not allow the nomination to be made. He was willing to stand against M. Brisson for the chief place in the State, but he would not permit one of his Ministers to stand against him for the chief place in the Chamber. Consequently the election of M. Brisson resulted. During the week following, the Government were defeated on a resolution which they had refused to endorse, and M. Dupuy and his colleagues, justly regarding this as a vote of "No confidence," immediately left the Chamber, and tendered their resignations. To the astonishment of the Ministry, and, indeed, of the whole nation, the President did not accept the resignations, but informed the Premier that he must retain power for a time, since he (Casimir-Perier) had determined to resign the Presidential Chair. M. Dupuy, suddenly confronted with a crisis of the utmost gravity, protested against the President's step, but all to no purpose. M. Casimir-Perier persisted in his intention; and in a few hours his formal letter of resignation was read in both Chambers. In this document, which was received in the Chamber with comparative silence, but in the Senate with jeering interruptions, the President said that "the attempt to mislead public opinion has succeeded"; that his twenty years of public life had not convinced Republicans of the sincerity and ardour of his political faith; that for six months a campaign of insult had been waged against him, as well as against Parliament and the Magistracy; that he could not acknowledge it to be his duty to bear such insult, and that he consequently laid down his functions. "Perhaps in doing so I shall have marked out the path of duty to those who are solicitous for the dignity of power and the good name of France in the world." It is difficult to decide how far Casimir-Perier was justified in suddenly leaving the helm of State. At the time, the best informed English opinion averred that the action was condemned by all Europe. However, there was but one course for the French Parliament to adopt, and his resignation was accepted. During the Zola trial of 1898, it became known that the real reason for his resignation was the fact that his Cabinet concealed material facts of their policy from him, so that he nearly found himself in a serious quarrel with Germany, owing to his ignorance of the Dreyfus scandal. It was even said that private documents on the Dreyfus affair from the German Ambassador in Paris to his Emperor had been abstracted and photographed en route. In order to dissociate himself from such acts, and prevent an immediate declaration of war, M. Casimir-Perier retired from the Presidency and from political life. Addresses: 23 Rue Nitot, Paris; and Château de Pout-sur-Seine, Aube.

CASSAGNAC, Granier de. See GRANIER DE CASSAGNAC, PAUL DE.

CASTELAR, Emilio, for long a Spanish statesman, and one of the most eloquent orators of the age, was born at Cadiz on Sept. 8, 1832. His father was a mercantile man and a strong Liberal, but died when his son was only seven. Emilio was brought up at Elda, a village not very far from the famous Elche, sometimes called Elche of the Palms. From Elche he was sent to Alicante with the object of further pursuing his studies in that provincial capital. He remained at Alicante till he was sixteen years of age, a studious lad, evincing little, if any, inclination for the customary recreations of his fellow-students. However, he is said to have been at this time passionately attached to the study of history, with a sustained enthusiasm for the classics, and evidencing early and brilliant promise of literary power and of a high and poetic imagination. In October 1848 he migrated to Madrid, the city destined to be the scene of his greatest achievements. For six years he worked steadily on, attracting considerable attention by reason of his contributions to newspapers and reviews. Suddenly, in September 1854, he electrified Madrid and the country by a speech at a great electoral meeting in the capital. A vast concourse, tired and listless owing to much platform declamation, was unexpectedly thrilled in a few minutes by young Castelar's oration, and, in an hour, the hardly known youthful democrat had become a celebrity. Hundreds of thousands of copies of his address were scattered throughout the country, and the Liberal papers, conscious of the advent of a new champion, did their utmost to obtain his co-operation. A few weeks later, he further increased his widening reputation by several speeches made in the defence of various journals which had been prosecuted for political articles. The ideas which he preached in these early days have crystallised into a philosophy of life, for, in his political ideals, Castelar has scarcely changed. These theories of the State and its functions gained for him a notoriety almost unexampled in one so young, nevertheless carrying with it recognition and encouragement in high quarters. He was appointed Professor of History and Philosophy in the University of Madrid; but, unlike many similarly favoured, this position did not shut his mouth, and in 1866 he took a prominent part in the revolutionary movement which was finally crushed by Serrano. On this occasion he was condemned to death, but he made good his escape, and sought refuge first at Geneva and afterwards in France. When the revolution broke out in September 1868, he returned to his native country, and was one of the most energetic leaders of the Republican movement. He exerted himself to the utmost in order to bring about the establishment of a Republic, but at the general election for the Constituent Cortes in February 1869, the Republicans succeeded in returning only a small proportion of their candidates, among whom, however, was Señor Castelar. In the discussions respecting the new constitution of Spain, Señor Castelar advocated, but unsuccessfully, the principle of Republican institutions. In June 1869 he vigorously opposed the project of a regency, and he was also concerned in the Republican insurrections which occurred in October of that year. In the government chosen by the Cortes after the abdication of King Amadeo, Señor Castelar was Minister of Foreign Affairs. On Aug. 24, 1873, he was elected President of the Cortes by 135 votes against 73, but he vacated that post on September 6, when he was nominated President of the Executive Power. His first measure was the prorogation of the Cortes and the assumption of dictatorial power. He next took energetic, but ineffectual, measures to suppress the Carlist insurrection, and despatched the Minister of War in person to Cuba to protect Spanish interests in that island. When, however, the Cortes re-assembled on Jan. 2, 1874, it refused by 120 votes against 100, to pass a vote of confidence in President Castelar, who resigned. Thereupon General Pavia, as Captain-General of Madrid, forcibly dissolved the Cortes, and appointed a provisional government, with Marshal Serrano at its head. Soon after the pronunciamiento in favour of Alfonso XII., Señor Castelar quitted Madrid and proceeded to Geneva, January 1875. While in that city, being disgusted at the educational decree promulgated by the Spanish Government, he resigned the Chair of History in the University of Madrid, March 6, 1875. Subsequently he returned to Spain, and succeeded, though not without considerable difficulty, in obtaining a seat in the Cortes as Deputy for Madrid, at the elections of January 1876. Since that time he has spoken frequently, and always with effect; but he has been a politician without a party, too advanced for Sagasta and too moderate for the Zorrillists. Señor Castelar has never formally renounced his Republican convictions, but he came to recognise that the existing monarchical régime had realised, except in so far as concerned the form of government, every article of his old programme, bestowing on the country order and peace, and no small share of material prosperity. Accordingly, in 1893, he retired from public life, and advised his adherents to join the Liberal party, although he himself was not prepared to do so. His many friends naturally concluded that his brilliant career had closed, but in May 1898, during the war with America, Castelar wrote an article in a French magazine reproaching the Queen-Regent with unjustifiably interfering in political affairs, drawing a parallel between the then position of her Majesty and that of Marie Antoinette on the eve of the French Revolution. The article in question raised a storm of indignation in Spanish political circles, but scarcely outside, since the Queen-Regent, at the time, was becoming very unpopular with the people. One of the more chivalrous Republican journals said that it was not for the Queen-Regent, wounded as woman, mother, and queen, that men with human feelings felt most pity; nor was it for Spain, in the hour of supreme danger, to receive from him who was once her favourite son no better assistance than those miserable suggestions in the article referred to; it was for Don Emilio Castelar, who might be one of the greatest figures of this century, and who seemed obstinately resolved to prevent his glory from surviving him. Some biting references to Señor Castelar were made in the Contemporary Review for June 1898, in an article by Dr. E. J. Dillon on "The Ruin of Spain." Señor Castelar has been a voluminous writer, and the following are included amongst his collected works: "Lucan: his Life, his Genius, his Poems"; "A History of Civilisation during the First Five Centuries of Christianity"; "Portraits of European Celebrities (Semblanzas)"; "Sonvenirs of Italy"; "History of the Republican Movement in Europe"; "The Religious Revolution"; "Historical Studies in the Middle Ages"; "The History of a Heart"; "Historical Gallery of Celebrated Women"; "The Formula of Progress"; "Political and Social Questions"; "The Rajism of the Slave"; "Letters on European Politics"; "Tragedies of History"; "Contemporary Russia," 1881; "The Life of Lord Byron," and numberless articles, essays, and contributions to contemporary literary, philosophical, political, and historical thought. It is being freely whispered among public men in Spain that Señor Castelar is beginning to feel some slight mental strain after so many years of toil. His friends—and they are to be found in all grades and places—thus seek to account for the revolutionary character of his latest writings during the Hispano-American War.

CASTLETOWN, Lord, Bernard Edward Barnaby FitzPatrick, 2nd Baron Castletown, of Upper Ossory, was born in London on July 29, 1849, and educated at Eton and Brasenose College, Oxford, graduating, after obtaining a place in Class II. of the Law and Modern History School (B.A.) He went through the Franco-Prussian campaign as assistant under the Red Cross Society, and was present in Paris during the earlier days of the Commune. From 1871 to 1875 he served in the 1st Life Guards, and was with the Household Cavalry in the Egyptian Campaign of 1882, gaining the medal and clasp after Tel-el-Kebir. He has travelled extensively in Lapland, the little-known parts of Asia Minor, the Rocky Mountains, and British North America. He sat in Parliament for three years as Conservative member for Portarlington (1880-83), and took a prominent part in the discussion of Irish questions. Since his accession to the House of Lords his political attitude has always been that of a "Moderate." In 1885 he was appointed Chairman of the Barrow Drainage Royal Commission, and he is a D.L. and J.P. for Queen's County, Ireland. He married in 1875 Ursula, only child of Viscount Doneraile. Address: Doneraile Court, Doneraile, Ireland, &c.

CATES, Arthur, F.R.I.B.A., F.S.I., &c., architect, born in London, April 29, 1829, was educated at King's College School, and became a pupil of Sydney Smirke, R.A. In 1870 he succeeded Sir James Pennethorne as Architect to the Land Revenues of the Crown in London, under the Commissioners of her Majesty's Woods and Forests. He succeeded Sydney Smirke, R.A., as Surveyor to the Honourable Society of the Inner Temple, and on retiring from practice at the end of 1897 resigned these and other appointments. For some years he was Hon. Secretary to, and is now a Vice-President of, the Society of Biblical Archaeology. He was Hon. Secretary to the Architectural Publication Society, and brought "The Dictionary of Architecture" to a successful termination. He has been (1887-91) a Vice-President of the Royal Institute of British Architects, and is Chairman of "The Tribunal of Appeal" constituted under the London Building Act, 1894.

CAUSTON, Richard Knight, M.P., son of the late Sir J. Causton, was born in 1843. He represented Colchester in the House of Commons from 1880 to 1885, and since 1895 has been Liberal member for West Southwark. He was Master of the Skinners' Company during the year 1877-78, and during the last administration was a Junior Lord of the Treasury from 1892 to 1895. He is Director of the firm of Sir Joseph Causton & Sons, Limited, a Commissioner of Lieutenancy for London, Chairman of the London Liberal and Radical Union, and a member of the Executive Committee of the London Chamber of Commerce. He was married in 1871 to Selina Mary, eldest daughter of the late Sir T. Chambers. Address: 12 Devonshire Place, W.

CAVAIGNAC, Jacques Marie Eugène Godefroy, French Minister of War, was born May 22, 1853, and is the son of General Eugène Cavaignac, who was the Chief of the State in 1848, and the principal rival of Louis Napoleon for the Presidency. The family, like that of the Carnots and Casimir-Periers, is a famous one in the history of French Republicanism, for the first well-known Cavaignac was a Member of the Convention, and voted for the death of Louis XVI. The subject of our biography was a distinguished scholar at the Lycée Louis le Grand, and in 1867 had taken many prizes. The Prince Imperial, then twelve years old, was to distribute them, but young Cavaignac refused to accept his from the hands of the son of his father's successful rival, who had basely betrayed the Republic. During the Franco-Prussian War he volunteered, and gained the Military Medal for his bravery at Avron. In 1872 he entered the École Polytechnique, and obtained a post as engineer at Angoulême. He returned to Paris to study law, and in 1881 obtained a post in the Conseil d'État. He was elected to the Chamber in 1882 for Saint-Calais, and sat with the Republicans. In 1885 he became Under-Secretary of War under General Campanon in the Brisson Cabinet, and in 1891 he was Minister of Marine. During the Panama scandals in 1890 he proposed a famous resolution for the cleansing of political life. At the fall of the Méline Cabinet in June 1898 he was chosen by M. Brisson for the Ministry of War, and he incurred some blame by continuing General Billot's (q.v.) policy with regard to the Dreyfus affair. He made a speech in the Chamber in which he declared his belief in Dreyfus' guilt, and it was posted up throughout France. However, on examining the dossier he discovered a forged document by Colonel Henry, which led to that officer's suicide. On M. Brisson declaring a new trial necessary, he declared his continued belief in the justice of the original sentence, and sooner than give way he resigned in the early days of September 1898. He is looked upon as one of those who may one day be called to the Presidency, unless he suffer his father's fate.

CAVAN, Earl of, The Right Hon. Frederick Edward Gould Lambart, K.P., J.P., was born in 1839, and succeeded his father as 9th Earl in 1887. He was educated at Harrow, and entering the navy, he was present as a Lieutenant at the siege of Sebastopol in 1854, and at the bombardment of Canton in 1856. He sat in the House of Commons as member for the East Division of Somerset from 1885 to 1892, and held office as Vice-Chamberlain in 1886. He is the author of "With Yacht, Camera, and Cycle in the Mediterranean"; "With Yacht and Camera in Eastern Waters." Lord Cavan is the owner of the yacht Roseneath, some of whose cruises have been published; and is the President of the Lawn Tennis Association of England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales. He was married in 1863 to Mary, daughter of the Rev. John Olive, Rector of Ayot St. Lawrence, Herts. Address: Wheathampstead House, Wheathampstead.

CAVENDISH. See JONES, HENRY.

CECIL, Lord Eustace Brownlow Henry, second surviving son of the 2nd Marquis of Salisbury, by his first wife, was born in London in 1834, and educated at Harrow and Sandhurst. He entered the army in 1851, served in the Crimea, and retired as Captain and Lieutenant-Colonel, Coldstream Guards, in 1863. He represented South Essex in the House of Commons, in the Conservative interest, from July 1865 to December 1868, and West Essex from 1868 until 1885. In February 1875 he was appointed Surveyor-General of Ordnance, which post he retained until the resignation of his party in 1880. Lord Eustace Cecil is the author of "Impressions of Life at Home and Abroad," 1865. He is a magistrate for Middlesex, Essex, and Dorset, and a county alderman of Dorset. Addresses: 111 Eaton Square, S.W.; and Lytchett Heath, Poole.

CENTURION. See BOWER, SIR GRAHAM JOHN.

CESNOLA, Count, Luigi Palma di, LL.D., archaeologist, was born at Rivarolo, near Turin, Italy, June 29, 1832. He received a collegiate education, after which he was placed in a seminary with a view to his entering the priesthood. Preferring, however, a more active life, he left the seminary to enter the Sardinian army on the outbreak of the war with Austria in 1848. In February 1849 he was promoted to a Lieutenantancy on the battle-field for bravery. On the close of the war, he was ordered to the Royal Military Academy at Cherasco (near Turin), from which he graduated in 1851. After remaining in the army several years, he went to New York in 1860, and in 1861 was made a Lieutenant-Colonel in the Volunteer service of the U. S. army, and subsequently Colonel of the 4th New York Cavalry, and served throughout the war, commanding a brigade of cavalry much of the time. At Aldie, Va., June 17, 1863, he was presented by General Kilpatrick with his own sword for heroic conduct on the battle-field, and at the next charge he was severely wounded, made a prisoner of war, and was confined in Libby Prison for over nine months. At the close of the Civil War he was appointed American Consul at Cyprus, where he remained until the Consulate was abolished (1865-77). It was while he occupied that position that he made the discovery of antiquities with which his name is now associated. He has been made an honorary member of many scientific and literary societies, both in Europe and in America, and the kings of Italy and Bavaria have bestowed knightly orders upon him. Both Columbia and Princeton Colleges conferred on him the degree of LL.D. In 1873 the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York secured by purchase the Cypriote antiquities collected up to that date, and Cesnola was granted an extended leave of absence to visit New York and arrange and classify them. Returning to Cyprus in 1873, he made further discoveries and collections, which also were secured to the Metropolitan Museum. In 1877 he settled permanently in New York. In 1878 he was made a Trustee of the Museum, and Secretary of the Board of Trustees. In 1879, when the museum was removed to Central Park, he was appointed Director of it. Since that day his time has been chiefly devoted to promoting the growth of the Museum, which is to-day one of the leading Museums of the world. He published a narrative of the discoveries and excavations in 1878 under the title of "Cyprus: its Ancient Cities, Tombs, and Temples"; and in 1882 a description of the "Metropolitan Museum of Art." In 1890 he issued the second volume of the "Atlas of the Cesnola Collection," under the auspices of the Museum.

CHADWICK, Right Rev. George Alexander, D.D., Bishop of Derry and Raphoe, was born in 1840. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and was ordained in 1863, becoming Rector of Armagh in 1872, and holding that preferment until 1896. He was Dean of Armagh from 1886 to 1896, and in the latter year was consecrated Bishop of Derry and Raphoe. He is author of "Christ Bearing Witness to Himself" (Donnellan Lectures), 1879; "As he that Serveth," 1880; "My Devotional Life," 1882; and of "Exodus" and "St. Mark," in the Expositor's Bible. Address: The Palace, Londonderry.

CHAMBERLAIN, The Right Hon. Joseph, M.P., Secretary of State for the Colonies, was born in London in July 1836. He is the eldest son of the late Joseph Chamberlain, a member of one of the City Companies, and his mother was a daughter of Mr. Henry Harben. He was educated at University College School, and afterwards became a member of a firm of screw manufacturers at Birmingham, Messrs. Nettlefold and Chamberlain, which his father had joined in 1854. He retired from business in 1874, shortly after the decease of his father. Mr. Chamberlain had at this time obtained a certain local celebrity in consequence of his advanced Radical opinions, and the fluency of speech with which he expressed them in one of the Birmingham debating societies. In 1868 he was appointed Chairman of the first Executive Committee of the Education League, and in November of the same year a member of the Birmingham Town Council. In 1873 he became Chairman of the Birmingham School Board, of which he was first elected a member in 1870. Mr. Chamberlain is also an alderman of Birmingham, and was three times in succession elected Mayor of the borough. To his energy was due the transfer of the Gas and Water Works to the borough authorities, and he was the author of the improvement scheme which has entirely transformed the face of central Birmingham. His name was first brought before the public in February 1874, when he came forward at the general election to oppose Mr. Roebuck at Sheffield. He was not successful, but in June 1876 he was returned unopposed for Birmingham, to fill up the vacancy occasioned by the retirement of Mr. Dixon. He soon made his mark in Parliament, and at the general election of April 1880, he was returned with Mr. Muntz and Mr. Bright for Birmingham, the three Liberals having a large majority over the Conservative candidates. On the formation of Mr. Gladstone's administration immediately after that election, Mr. Chamberlain was nominated President of the Board of Trade, with a seat in the Cabinet. As such he prepared and passed the Bankruptcy Act which is now in force, and attempted, but in vain, to pass a strong Merchant Shipping Bill. Meanwhile his influence was rapidly increasing outside the House; he came to be regarded as the leader of the extreme Radical party, and enunciated schemes for the regeneration of the masses which were based on the doctrine of the "restitution" of land and the "ransom" of property. During the general election of 1886 he was most severe in his strictures on the moderate Liberals, and produced an "unauthorised" programme, which included the re-adjustment of taxation, free schools, and the creation of allotments for compulsory purchase. He was returned free of expense by the western division of Birmingham in February 1886, and became President of the Local Government Board, but resigned in March because of his strong objection to Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule Bill, and after the "Round Table" conference had failed to re-unite the Liberal party, he assumed an attitude of uncompromising hostility to his old leader's new policy. He visited Ulster in 1887, and did much to strengthen the Unionist cause there. Mr. Chamberlain is of opinion that Unionism, in order to remain a power in politics, should abandon its merely negative policy. Shortly afterwards he went to America as Chairman of the Fisheries Commission, which had been appointed to settle the fishery disputes between the United States and Canada. On the elevation of Lord Hartington to the Peerage as Duke of Devonshire, he was nominated the leader of the Liberal Unionist party in the House of Commons. During the general election of 1892 he spoke and worked with marked effect. He strongly opposed the Government in most of their measures during 1894, but took practically no part in the Disestablishment debate. In the autumn he delivered several speeches in the North, and in the course of one of them made the significant statement that the gulf between him and the Liberal party could not now be bridged over. On the formation of the Coalition Ministry in June 1895, Mr. Chamberlain took office under Lord Salisbury as Colonial Secretary, and has proved a remarkably successful Minister. In his first year of office he had trouble with Prempeh, King of Ashanti, who was endeavouring to evade the Treaty of 1874. Mr. Chamberlain refused to meet the ambassadors sent to England by Prempeh, and decided to despatch a punitive expedition to the Gold Coast. Sir Francis Scott was appointed in charge, and by forced marches soon reached Kumassi. The king was dethroned and a British resident installed. There was no bloodshed, and the excellent medical arrangements enabled the force successfully to withstand the pestilential climate. Prince Henry of Battenberg, however, who was accompanying the expedition as a volunteer, had an attack of fever, and returned to the coast. He afterwards embarked on a cruiser for Madeira, and died on the way. In the autumn of 1895 serious trouble with the Transvaal was anticipated, owing to the closing of the Drifts by Mr. Kruger. Mr. Chamberlain promptly sent an ultimatum to the Boer President, and the Drifts were at once re-opened. The question of the Drifts proved to be only one of a long series of grievances of the English residents in the Transvaal, and agitation for constitutional reform increased in intensity during 1896, and culminated in the Jameson Raid in December of that year. As soon as the news of this incursion reached England, Mr. Chamberlain ordered the High Commissioner of South Africa publicly to repudiate Dr. Jameson's proceedings. At the same time he ordered a proclamation to be issued calling upon the British residents in Johannesburg to disarm, which at once placed them entirely in the hands of the Boers. Immediately after the battle of Krugersdorp, on receiving the rumour that Jameson and his fellow-prisoners were to be shot, Mr. Chamberlain wired to the Transvaal President, that he relied upon his generosity in the hour of victory. All the consequences of the raid were met by Mr. Chamberlain with unswerving spirit, and his able engineering at the Colonial Office averted a grave crisis. A congratulatory telegram by the German Emperor to Mr. Kruger did not improve matters, and much indignation was felt both in England and the Cape at Germany's interference. Mr. Chamberlain was subjected to a great deal of acrimonious criticism in the House, and also in certain sections of the press, as it was believed by some that he was implicated in the movement which led to the raid. Time has proved the absolute falsity of that opinion. In February he gave his view of the situation in the Transvaal, and explained the policy of the British Government in a despatch to Sir Hercules Robinson, which was simultaneously published in London, and for the publication of which before it had reached Pretoria Mr. Chamberlain was gravely rebuked by Mr. Kruger. In his despatch Mr. Chamberlain suggested local self-government, but to this the President would not agree. In Parliament the Jameson Raid came in for a full share of discussion, and the Colonial Secretary made a statement regarding the agitation in Johannesburg, the raid, and other matters. In July Mr. Chamberlain moved: "That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the origin and circumstances of the incursion into the Transvaal by an armed force, and into the administration of the British South Africa Company, and to report thereon." The Committee was appointed, and met under the chairmanship of Mr. Jackson on the day Parliament was prorogued, and it was decided to put off the business until the next session. Accordingly, early in 1897 the same Committee was re-appointed. During the proceedings Mr. Chamberlain elected to go into the witness chair. He gave evidence in which he said, "I desire to say in the most explicit manner that I did not then have, and that I never had, any knowledge or the slightest suspicion of anything in the nature of a hostile or armed invasion of the Transvaal." In the Report of the Committee it was stated that there was not the slightest evidence to show that any one in the Colonial Office had a foreknowledge of the raid. A debate took place in Parliament upon the report, which was not very favourably received, mainly owing to the fact that the Committee had not insisted upon the production of certain telegrams which had passed between Mr. Rhodes and his representative in London, Dr. Rutherford Harris, previous to the raid. These telegrams had been read by Mr. Chamberlain at an interview he had with Dr. Harris at the Colonial Office. In reply to a question in the House, Mr. Chamberlain said that he had perused the missing telegrams confidentially, but as far as he was concerned he had no objection whatever to their production and publication. With regard to Mr. Rhodes he said, that although a very great fault had been committed by him, there existed nothing against his personal character as a man of honour, and that the Government had no intention of punishing him. In the early part of 1897 Mr. Chamberlain took part in a debate upon Egyptian affairs, and made a vigorous reply to Mr. Morley, who strongly condemned the British advance in the Soudan. In the course of his speech he said, "All authorities agreed that to leave Egypt now, would mean that all the beneficent work which had arisen out of the British occupation would be undone." The Workmen's Compensation Act of 1897 was greatly indebted to Mr. Chamberlain's advocacy during its passage through the House. In June 1897 advantage was taken of the presence of the Premiers of the self-governing colonies in London during the Jubilee celebrations, to hold a conference for the discussion of the political and commercial relations between the mother-country and the colonies. Several meetings were held at the Colonial Office under the presidency of Mr. Chamberlain, to whom must be attributed much of the success of the conference. Upon the subject of Imperial Federation, Mr. Chamberlain made an important speech to the members of the Congress of Chambers of Commerce of the Empire, in which he gave more direct countenance to proposals for a commercial union of the Empire than any of his predecessors in office. He found it necessary, however, to emphasise his declaration that the principle to be accepted, if we are to make any, even the slightest progress, is that within the different parts of the Empire protection must disappear, and that the duties must be revenue duties, and not protection duties in the sense of protecting the products of one part of the Empire against those of another part. Mr. Chamberlain is also very much in favour of an Anglo-American alliance. In October 1896 he was elected Lord Rector of Glasgow University, and is also a D.C.L. of Oxford, and LL.D. of Cambridge. Mr. Chamberlain has been three times married, his present wife being Mary, only daughter of W. C. Endicott, Secretary for War of the United States, and late Judge of the Supreme Court, New York. His eldest son is Mr. Austen Chamberlain (q.v.), Civil Lord of the Admiralty. Addresses: 40 Princes Gardens, S.W., and Highbury, Moor Green, Birmingham.

CHAMBERLAIN, Joseph Austen, M.P., and Civil Lord of Admiralty, is the eldest son of the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, and Harriet, daughter of the late Archibald Kenrick of Birmingham. He was born in 1863, and educated at Rugby, and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took his M.A. degree in 1889. He also studied in Berlin and Paris. In 1892 he was returned to Parliament as a Liberal Unionist for Worcestershire East, and was re-elected in 1895, when he was appointed a Civil Lord of the Admiralty in July. Addresses: Highbury, Moor Green, Birmingham; and 40 Princes Gardens, S.W.

CHAMBERLAIN, General Sir Neville Bowles, G.C.B., G.C.S.I., the

third son of the late Sir Henry Chamberlain, Bart. (who was for some years Consul-General and Chargé d'Affaires in Brazil), born at Rio, Jan. 10, 1820, was appointed to the Indian Army in 1837. He served as a subaltern with much distinction in Afghanistan, and was wounded at Kandahar and at Ghuznee. In 1842 he was attached to the Governor-General's body-guards, and in 1843 appointed Deputy-Assistant Quartermaster-General to the Army. In 1846 he was appointed Military Secretary to the Governor of Bombay. In 1848 he was nominated by Lord Dalhousie one of his aides-de-camp, and commanded the 8th Irregular Cavalry, attached to the army in the Punjab. He was present at the battles of Chillianwallah and Gujerat in 1849. In 1855, having previously discharged some important civil duties as Military Secretary to the Chief Commissioner (Sir John Lawrence), he was placed in command of a force of irregular troops, which he retained until the breaking-out of the Indian Mutiny. On the death of Colonel Chester before Delhi, Colonel Chamberlain (then Brigadier-General) succeeded to the post of Adjutant-General of the Bengal Army, and was severely wounded in the sortie of July 18. He was nominated a C.B. in 1857, and in reward for his services in the Mutiny, was appointed aide-de-camp to the Queen. He afterwards gained distinction by his services against the hill-tribes, led the Umbeylah campaign, and has been wounded more frequently than any other officer in the service. He was made Major-General for distinguished service in 1864; was advanced to the rank of Lieutenant-General in May 1872; appointed Colonel of the Bengal Infantry in May 1874; a member of Council of the Governor of Madras in 1875; Commander-in-Chief of the Madras Army in December 1875; and General in 1877. In August 1878 he was appointed the head of the English special mission to Cabul. This mission was abruptly stopped by the refusal of the Ameer of Afghanistan's officer at Ali Musjid to permit it to advance (September 21). He was military member of the Council of the Governor-General of India. He retired in 1886. Address: Lordwood, Southampton.

CHAMBERS, Charles Haddon, dramatist, was born at Stanmore, Sydney, New South Wales, on April 22, 1860, and is son of John Ritchie Chambers of the New South Wales Civil Service, formerly of Ulster, and Frances, eldest daughter of William Kellet, Waterford, Ireland. He was educated at home, and at Marrickville and Fort Street Public Schools, Sydney. In 1875 he entered the Civil Service of his colony; in 1877 became stockrider in the bush; and in 1880 visited England and Ireland. In 1882 he came and settled in England, and took up journalism and authorship. He has written the following plays: "Captain Swift," Mr. Beerbohm Tree's part; "The Idler," one of Mr. Alexander's most successful rôles; "The Honourable Herbert"; "The Old Lady"; "John-a-Dreams"; and has collaborated in the authorship of "The Fatal Card," and "Boys Together." Address: Westgate.

CHAMPNEYS, Basil, architect, son of the late Dean of Lichfield, was born in 1842, and educated at Charterhouse, being elected Foundation Scholar and Gold Medallist in 1860, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in classical honours in 1864. He studied architecture under the late John Prichard, diocesan architect of Llandaff, and began practice in 1867. Amongst other works he has designed the following public buildings: at Cambridge the Divinity and Literary Schools, all the buildings of Newnham College, the Archæological Museum, and All Saints' Memorial; at Oxford, the Indian Institute, the new buildings at New College, including the Robinson Memorial Tower, and Mansfield College; at Bedford, the Girls' Schools and new Grammar School buildings for the Harpur Trust; at Harrow, the new school buildings and Butler Museum; at Mill Hill College, Hendon, the new chapel; at Winchester, the Quincentenary Museum; and the Rylands Library in Manchester. He has designed the following churches: St. Luke's, Kentish Town; St. Peter-le-Bailey, Oxford; St. Mary Star of the Sea, Hastings; Havering-atte-Bowe, in Essex; Matfield, in Kent; Glascote, in Warwickshire; Stonefold and Laneside, in Lancashire; and Slindon, in Staffordshire. Mr. Champneys has carried out the restoration of Tatenhill, Tamworth, Wednesbury, and Alrewas, in Staffordshire; Bexley, in Kent; Upholland, in Lancashire; Chilcote, in Derbyshire; Okewood, in Surrey; St. Dunstan's, Stepney; St. Bride's, Fleet Street; St. Alphege, Greenwich; St. George's, Camberwell, and St. George the Martyr, Southwark, in the London district. He is also the designer of the Royal Palace Hotel, in Kensington. On the death of Mr. Crowther, he was appointed architect to the Cathedral of Manchester, for which he erected the new boundaries, reredos, Victoria West porch, &c. Among his domestic works are St. Bride's Vicarage, 70 Gunismore Gardens; Hasleybury, Bournemouth; Bannach Edge, Witley; the Grange and Cronborough Wood, Matfield. Mr. Champneys is the author of a work entitled, "A Quiet Corner of England," published in 1875. Address: Hall Oak, Frogna, Hampstead.

CHANDLER, Charles Frederick, M.D., Ph.D., LL.D., American chemist, born at Lancaster, Massachusetts, Dec. 6, 1836, studied at the Lawrence Scientific School of Harvard College, and afterwards at the Universities of Göttingen and Berlin, receiving his degree of Ph.D. at Göttingen in 1856. In 1857 he was placed in charge of the chemical department of Union College, and in 1858 was appointed to the chair of Chemistry in the New York College of Pharmacy. In 1864 he was made Professor of Analytical and Applied Chemistry in the newly instituted School of Mines connected with Columbia College, New York, and on the reorganisation of the school in 1877 became Professor of Chemistry both in the school and in the college. In 1865 he was appointed Chemist to the New York Metropolitan Board of Health, of which for a number of years he was President. In 1870, in connection with his brother, he established the American Chemist, a monthly periodical, in which the results of his principal investigations have appeared, but which was discontinued in 1877. He became connected with the New York College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1872 as Adjunct Professor of Chemistry and Medical Jurisprudence, succeeding to the full Professorship in 1876. The degree of M.D. was conferred upon him by the University of the City of New York in 1873, and that of LL.D. by Union College in the same year. He is a Member of the Chemical Societies of London, Berlin, Paris, and New York, of the National Academy of Sciences, and of a large number of other scientific associations. While a member of the Board of Health Dr. Chandler did much to improve the sanitary condition of New York by establishing a rigid inspection of milk and food supplied, by securing the passage of the Tenement House Act, by regulating the location of slaughter-houses, and in numerous other ways. He has published "The Inaugural Dissertation," 1856; "Report on Water for Locomotives," 1865; "Examination of Various Rocks and Minerals," which appeared in the geological reports of Iowa and Wisconsin; "Investigations on Mineral Waters," and papers on the water supply of cities, on petroleum, on the purification of coal-gas; and has also contributed numerous scientific articles to Johnson's "Universal Cyclopædia," 1874-77.

CHANEY, Henry James, F.R.A.S., born at Windsor in 1842, was educated at a private school, entered the Civil Service in 1859, was appointed in 1860 to the Exchequer to take charge of the technical duties arising under the Sale of Gas Act, 1859, became Secretary to the Royal Commissions on Standards, 1867-68, and, on the retirement in 1876 of the Warden of the Standards, he was appointed Superintendent, Standards Department, in the Board of Trade. He has been a member of various committees relating to units and standards of measurement; and represented Great Britain in Paris in 1889 at the General Conference of the International Committee of Weights and Measures. He is identified with improvements in the local administration of the laws relating to the weights and measures used in trade, and with recent demands for higher accuracy in weighing and measuring instruments used for scientific and manufacturing purposes. His printed papers, issued under the direction of the Board of Trade, include "Reports on Standards of Measurement for Gas"; "Verification of Standards for the Governments of India and Russia," 1877; "Screw Gages," 1881-83; "Apothecaries' Weights and Measures," 1881; "Calculations of Densities and Expansions," 1883; "On the Prevention of Fraud in the Sale of Coal and of Bread"; "Expansion of Palladium"; "Re-Comparison of the Imperial and Metric Units," 1883; "Verification of the New Parliamentary Standards of Length and Weight," 1881-83; "Mode of Testing Weighing-Machines," 1886; "Note on the Gold Coinage," 1886; "Redetermination of the Scientific Unit of Volume," 1889; "Treatise on Weights and Measures," 1897. Address: 29 Chalcot Crescent, Regent's Park, N.W.

CHANLER, Mrs. Amélie, née Rives, an American writer, was born at Richmond, Virginia, in 1863. She was educated chiefly at the home of her grandfather, William C. Rives, Castle Hill, Albemarle County, Virginia, and early showed a taste for literature. Her first published story was "A Brother to Dragons," and appeared in the Atlantic in 1886. This was followed by "Farrier Lass of Piping Peabworth," "Nurse Crumpey's Story," "Story of Arnon," and "Virginia of Virginia." In 1888 her "Quick or the Dead" was issued, and it at once attracted wide attention, and proved one of the literary sensations of the year. Her later works are a five-act Syrian tragedy entitled "Herod and Mariamne," "The Witness of the Sun," and "According to St. John." Miss Rives was married in June 1888 to John Armstrong Chanler of New York, a great-grandson of the late William B. Astor, and has spent considerable time since then in England and on the Continent of Europe.

CHANNELL, The Hon. Sir Arthur Moseley, a Justice of the Supreme Court of Queen's Bench, is the sole surviving son of the late Sir W. F. Channel, Baron of the Exchequer, and was born in London on Nov. 13, 1838. He was educated at Harrow and at Cambridge, where he graduated as 26th Wrangler, and was placed in Class II. of the Classical Tripos of 1861. While at college he gained much fame as an oar, winning the Colquhoun Skulls in 1860, the University Pairs in 1861, and rowing in the First Trinity boat which won the Grand Challenge Cup and the Ladies' Plate at Henley in 1861. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1863, and became a Q.C. in 1885. From 1888 to 1897 he was Recorder of Rochester. He became a Member of the Council of Law Reporting in 1894, and in 1895 Vice-Chairman of the General Council of the Bar. In the autumn of 1897 he was raised to the Bench, and received the customary honour of knighthood. He married (1) in 1865 Beatrice, fourth daughter of the late A. W. Wyndham, of Blandford, and (2) in 1877 Constance, only daughter of the late W. B. Trevelyan, of The Oaks, Hendon. Addresses: 1 Bramham Gardens, South Kensington, S.W.; Farrar's Building, Temple; and Athenæum.

CHANNING, Francis Allston, M.P., only son of the Rev. W. H. Channing, was born in 1841, was educated privately and at Oxford, taking honours in Classics and Mathematics, the Chancellor's Prize in 1865 for his essay on "Instinct," and the Arnold Prize in 1866 for "The Greek Orators as Historical Authorities." He was a Classical Scholar of Exeter, and afterwards Fellow of University College, where he was Lecturer in Philosophy. He was called to the Bar in Lincoln's Inn, but does not practise. In 1870, on leaving Oxford, Mr. Channing was offered an Examinership in the Education Office by Mr. W. E. Forster, but declined it for private reasons. He resided some years in Devonshire and afterwards at Brighton, where he was a Home Commissioner and Member of the School Board, and took an active part in the organisation of the Liberal party in Brighton and Sussex, and the Home Counties generally, as one of the founders of the London and Counties Liberal Union. In 1885 Mr. Channing was returned for East Northamptonshire by a majority of 2055 over Mr. R. Ramsden, Conservative (5414 to 3359), and in 1886 by 4428 to 3012 over the Hon. Leopold Agar Elliz, in 1892 by 5832 to 4348 over Mr. Potter, Q.C., and in 1895 by 6177 to 4961 over Mr. Lush Wilson. Mr. Channing was one of the group of advanced Liberals who rallied round Mr. Chamberlain in 1883, 1884, and 1885, but in the break-up of 1886 sided with Mr. Gladstone, believing that the "Radical Programme" of 1884—democratic local self-government, land for the people, disestablishment, free education, graduated taxation, &c.—could only be obtained through the Liberal party. In Parliament his chief work has been in connection with questions affecting labour, land, and agriculture, national education, and the protection of the Eastern Christians from Turkish oppression. His proposals for diminishing the risks and shortening the hours of railway servants were substantially enacted in the Railway Regulation Acts of 1889 and 1893. The principle of the latter Act, that the Board of Trade should have an elastic power to shorten the excessive hours of labour of adult males, on their complaint, and on the merits of each case, was a wholly original step in labour legislation. Mr. Channing was active in the Parliament of 1886 in pushing the allotments question, and as Chairman of the Liberal County Members in 1893-94 did much to shape the land acquisition proposals of the Parish Council Bill. He has promoted a long series of measures for the benefit of tenant farmers, including the most complete Agricultural Holdings Bill so far introduced, and the prevention of frauds as to feeding stuffs and fertilisers. He was elected Chairman of the Central and Associated Chambers of Agriculture in 1894, and during his year of office moved for and served on the Select Committee on Food Adulteration, which reported in 1897. In 1893 he was appointed one of the Royal Commission on Agricultural Depression, for which he prepared an exhaustive minority report in 1897. In reference to education, Mr. Channing has been one of the most strenuous supporters of a uniform system of State-paid schools under local representative control, merging the existing denominational schools in a national system, while reserving the right of the managers to use the buildings for specific doctrinal teaching outside the secular time-table. He also favours the close connection of secondary with elementary education. Mr. Channing has been from the first an active member of the Anglo-American and Grosvenor House and Cretan Committees. Mr. Channing is a magistrate for Northamptonshire. Mr. Channing has been a frequent contributor to the press and to periodical literature. His publications include "Instinct," "The Great Orators as Historical Authorities," "The Second Ballot," "The Truth about Agricultural Depression," &c. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Bryant, Esq., of Boston and Cohasset, U.S.A. Address: 40 Eaton Place, S.W.

CHANOINE, General, late French Minister of War, was born at Dijon in 1835. After passing through St. Cyr he served in the Zouaves and in the Dragoons, and in 1860 became Head of the Staff of the French Expedition to China. He next served as chief of a military mission to Japan. In 1869 he was aide-de-camp to General Bourbaki, and after going through the war of 1870, General Chanoine joined the General Staff at the War Office. He became Colonel of the 14th Cuirassiers in 1880, and was sent on a mission to the Far East. On his return he was promoted Brigadier-General in 1885, and Major-General in 1893. In that year he was given the command of the Lille garrison. On the resignation of General Zurlinden (Sept. 17, 1898), General Chanoine accepted the portfolio of Minister of War in the Brisson Cabinet. He is a good linguist, speaking Russian as well as English and German, and on this account he was despatched to the Russian manoeuvres in 1875. He also acted as the cicerone of the Russian naval visitors in 1893. Politically General Chanoine is a staunch Republican. He gave in his resignation in a most unexpected and sensational manner at the first meeting of the French Chamber of Deputies on Oct. 25, 1898. His plea was the usual one, "the army insulted," &c. His bluntly military and quite incoherent speech, delivered from the tribune as it were at the invitation of M. Deroulède, was rapturously applauded by the crowds of Chauvinists present, but the Brisson Ministry immediately stultified this show of outraged dignity by reading recent letters in his handwriting, which proved that he has repeatedly refused to allow newspapers to be prosecuted for attacks on the army.

CHAPLIN, The Right Hon. Henry, M.P., J.P., D.L., President of the Local Government Board, and late President of the Board of Agriculture, is the second son of the late Rev. Henry Chaplin, by Horatia, daughter of the late William Ellice, Esq. He was born in 1841, and educated at Harrow and at Christ Church, Oxford. From November 1868 to November 1885 he represented Mid-Lincolnshire in the House of Commons, since when he has sat for North Kesteven or for the Sleaford Division of Lincolnshire, which he now represents. Mr. Chaplin is a prominent member of the Conservative party, a frequent debater, and an authority on agricultural matters. From June 1885 to January 1886 he was Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and in 1889 was appointed the President of the newly-formed Board of Agriculture, with a seat in the Cabinet. He retained his position as President until 1892. He was appointed President of the Local Government Board in June 1895, and in 1896 conducted the Agricultural Rates Act through the House of Commons. He was sworn of the Privy Council in 1885. Mr. Chaplin is a representative country gentleman and a leading member of the turf. He is a J.P. and D.L. of Lincolnshire. In 1890 Edinburgh University conferred upon him its honorary LL.D. degree. He married in 1876 Lady Florence Leveson-Gower, daughter of the 3rd Duke of Sutherland. She died in 1881. Addresses: Blankney, Sleaford; Stafford House, St. James's, S.W.; and Athenæum.

CHARLES I., Charles Eitel Frederrick Zephirin Louis, King of Roumania, was born April 20, 1839, being the second son of Prince Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, head of the second of the non-reigning branches of the princely house of Hohenzollern. He was elected and proclaimed Prince Regnant of Roumania, with hereditary succession, by a plebiscite, taken April 8-20, 1866, and definitely recognised on Oct. 24 in that year by the Sublime Porte and the guaranteeing Powers. The Prince had previously been a Sub-Lieutenant in the 2nd Regiment of Prussian Dragoons, and it is believed that his candidature for the throne of Roumania, which had become vacant by the expulsion of Prince Alexander John, was proposed by Prussia, and supported by her diplomatic action. His reign has been marked throughout by internal dissensions and parliamentary crises. The unwarrantable persecution of the Jews in Moldavia elicited indignant protests from various foreign governments, who likewise complained that bands of armed men were allowed to be formed within the Roumanian territory, with the object of creating disturbances on the Lower Danube. The disputes in the Roumanian Chamber, and the incessant ministerial changes, led to a dissolution of the Chamber of Bucharest in 1869. A convention was concluded between his government and the Czar, permitting the Russians to cross the Danube in April 1877. The Roumanian army was then mobilised, and war declared against Turkey. In September and October 1877 Prince Charles held the nominal command of the Army of the West, and he fought at Plevna, where the Roumanians behaved with great gallantry, and suffered heavy losses. He received in acknowledgment of his services the Cross of St. George from Alexander II., to whom he sent in return the decoration of the Order of the Star of Roumania. He had the title of "Royal Highness" from 1878 till March 26, 1881, when he was proclaimed King of Roumania by a unanimous vote of the representatives of the nation. The coronation ceremony took place on May 22. As the King has no heirs, his nephew, Prince Ferdinand of Hohenzollern, was declared Prince Royal of Roumania by a decree of March 18, 1889, and in January 1893 he was married to the Princess Marie, daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh and Saxe-Coburg, and has issue, a son, Prince Carol, and a daughter, Princess Elizabeth. Charles I. married Nov. 15, 1869, Pauline Elizabeth Ottilie Louise (born 1843), daughter of the late Prince Hermann of Wied. (See ELIZABETH.)

CHARLES, Sir Arthur, K.B., is the youngest son of the late Robert Charles, Esq., of London and Carisbrooke, I.W., and was born in 1839. He received his education at University College, London, and graduated B.A. of London University with mathematical honours in 1858, subsequently receiving, in 1884, an hon. M.A. from the Archbishop of Canterbury, and an hon. D.C.L. from the University of Durham. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in January 1862, after obtaining a certificate of honour of the first class. He then joined the Western Circuit, and became one of its leaders. In February 1877 he took silk, and was elected a Bencher of his Inn in January 1880. From 1878 to 1887 he was Recorder of Bath, and from 1884 to 1887 Chancellor of Southwell Diocese, and Commissary of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. In September of the latter year he was appointed a Judge of the High Court of Justice, and was also knighted. He was for many years a member of Council and President of the Senate of University College, London, and a member of the Council of Legal Education. From 1877 to 1882 he examined in Common Law in London University, of which he unsuccessfully contested the Parliamentary representation in 1880. In the same year he was Chief Commissioner to inquire into corrupt practices at the Canterbury election, and in 1881-83 a Royal Commissioner to inquire into the working of Ecclesiastical Courts. He resigned his judicial office in March 1897. He married Rachel Christian, daughter of T. D. Newton, Plymouth, in 1866. Addresses: Shelley House, Chelsea Embankment, S.W.; and Athenæum.

CHARLEY, Sir William Thomas, Q.C., D.C.L., born at Woodbourne on March 5, 1833, is the youngest son of the late Matthew Charley, Esq., of Finaghy House, near Belfast. He was educated at St. John's College, Oxford, and took his degree of B.A. in 1856, and of B.C.L. and

D.C.L., by accumulation, in 1868. In 1865 he was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, having obtained the first certificate of honour of the first class, and the exhibition at the final examinations of Council of Legal Education. He was elected Common Serjeant of the City of London in April 1878, becoming a Commissioner of Oyer and Terminer at the Central Criminal Court and Judge of the Mayor's Court of London. On reaching the fifteenth year of his judicial service in 1892, he resigned the office of Common Serjeant, retiring on a pension of two-thirds of his judicial salary, which had been increased some years before. In 1880 he was made a Q.C. For twelve years, viz., from 1868 to 1880, he represented Salford in the House of Commons in the Conservative interest. He was unsuccessful at the election of 1880, and unsuccessfully contested Ipswich in 1883 and 1885. In the latter year the majority against him was very small, and his opponents were unseated for bribery by their agents. He was invited to stand again, but declined on account of ill-health. Two Conservatives were returned. Sir William Charley is a Past-Master of the Worshipful Company of Liners, a member of the Court of Lieutenancy of the City of London, and Hon. Colonel of the 3rd Volunteer Battalion of the Royal Fusiliers (City of London Regiment). He is also Trustee and Hon. Standing Counsel of the United Kingdom Beneficent Association, Trustee of the Church of England Young Men's Society, and Vice-President of the City of London Conservative Association, the Eastbourne Conservative and Unionist Association, the Church Defence Institution, and numerous other societies. He is the author of works on the "Real Property Acts" and "Judicature Acts," which have run through three editions; also of "The Crusade against the Constitution: an Historical Vindication of the House of Lords," a copy of which was accepted by the Queen. When in Parliament he carried several measures of social reform, such as the "Infant Life Protection Act, 1872," and the "Offences against the Person Act, 1875," the principles of which have been extended by subsequent legislation. He was knighted in 1880. In the spring of 1890 he married Miss Clara Harbord, daughter of F. G. Harbord, Esq., of Kirby Park, Cheshire, and has issue, Clara Noel, born on Christmas Day, 1890; and Estelle Dumergue, born Dec. 20, 1894. Addresses: Queen Anne's Mansions, S.W., and Court Lodge, Hartfield Square, Eastbourne.

CHARLOTTE, Ex-Empress of Mexico (Marie Charlotte Amélie

Auguste Victoire Clémentine Léopoldine), daughter of Leopold I., King of the Belgians, born June 7, 1840, was married July 27, 1857, to the ill-fated Maximilian, afterwards Emperor of Mexico, who was shot at Queretaro June 19, 1867, by the command of the inhuman Juarez. In the midst of his embarrassments, Maximilian sent his empress to Paris in 1866 to seek more effectual aid from the Emperor Napoleon. She failed entirely in her mission, and proceeded to Italy, where her reason gave way in consequence of the troubles she had already undergone, and of those which she foresaw her husband would experience. Her Majesty was removed to the palace of Laeken, near Brussels, and was there when it was destroyed by fire in 1890. It is said that during lucid intervals she formerly employed her time in writing Memoirs of the History of the Mexican Empire. Her recovery is considered hopeless.

CHARNOCK, Richard Stephen, Ph.D., F.S.A., born in London Aug. 11, 1820, is the son of Richard Charnock, Esq., of the Inner Temple, barrister-at-law. He was educated at King's College, London, and admitted an attorney in 1841. He has travelled through the whole of Europe, and has also visited the North of Africa and Asia Minor; and has devoted much time to the study of anthropology, archaeology, and philology, especially the Celtic and Oriental languages. Dr. Charnock is a member of many learned societies, and Doctor of Philosophy of the University of Göttingen. Among very many contributions to philology, anthropology, and science in general, Dr. Charnock is author of "Guide to the Tyrol," 1857; "Local Etymology," 1859; "Bradshaw's Guide to Spain and Portugal," 1865; "Verba Nominalia," 1866; "Ludus Patronymicus," 1868; "The Peoples of Transylvania," 1870; "Manorial Customs of Essex," 1870; "Patronymica Cornu-Britannica," 1870; "On the Physical, Mental, and Philological Characters of the Wallons," 1871; "Le Sette Commune," 1871; "A Glossary of the Essex Dialect," 1879; "Prenomina; or, the Etymology of the Principal Christian Names of Great Britain and Ireland," 1882; and "Nuces Etymologicæ," 1889.

CHARTERIS, Professor the Rev. Archibald Hamilton, M.A., D.D., eldest son of John Charteris, schoolmaster, born in Wamphray, Dumfriesshire, Dec. 13, 1835, was educated at the parish school and Edinburgh University, where he took the degree of B.A. in 1852, and of M.A. in 1853. He was presented to the parish of St. Quivox, Ayrshire, in 1858, to New-abbey in 1859, and called to the Park Church, Glasgow, in 1863. He was appointed one of her Majesty's Chaplains for Scotland in 1870, having previously received the degree of D.D. from Edinburgh University in 1868. He was appointed to the Chair of Biblical Criticism in the University of Edinburgh in 1868, which he resigned in 1898. Professor Charteris is the author of "The Life of James Robertson, D.D.," 1863; "Canonicity: a Collection of Early Testimonies to the Books of the New Testament," 1880; "The Christian Scriptures," being the Croall Lectures, 1888; "The Faithful Churchman," 1898, and of several occasional pamphlets and lectures. In ecclesiastical work he is best known as Vice-Convenor of the General Assembly's Committee for the Abolition of Patronage, which accomplished its work in 1874, and as Convenor of the General Assembly's Committee on Christian Life and Work from its first appointment (1869) to 1894. The purpose of this committee is to inquire into and report upon the methods of work employed in the various parishes of the Church of Scotland, so that through the influence of the General Assembly and of public opinion, those methods may be developed and improved. Through this committee many changes have been gradually, and with general approval, introduced, almost all in the direction of turning the forces of the Christian Church into channels of social helpfulness. The Young Men's Guild and the Woman's Guild, founded by it, have been largely imitated by other churches in Scotland, England, and America. Deaconesses have also been trained and appointed, and Guild Sisters (for special work among the poor) are trained by this committee. The speciality of all these agencies is that they are part of the organisation of the Church: authorised, regulated, and supervised by the Church Courts; not (as had been previously the case) originated and maintained by individuals or associations outside of ordinary church organisation. Professor Charteris was Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1892. In 1863 he married Catharine Morice, daughter of Sir Alexander Anderson of Aberdeen. Address: Cameron House, Edinburgh.

CHARTRES, Duc de, Robert Philippe-Louis-Eugène-Ferdinand d'Orléans, youngest son of the late Duke of Orléans, and grandson of the late King Louis Philippe, was born at Paris Nov. 9, 1840. When only two years of age he lost his father, and six years later the Revolution drove him into exile. The young duke was carefully brought up at Eisenach in Germany, and afterwards joined his family in England. He served in the Italian army, 1859, and in the Federal army in the first campaign of the American Civil War in 1862. After the Revolution of Sept. 4, 1870, he returned incognito to France, and served in General Chanzy's army under the assumed name of "Robert Lefort"; and in 1871, when the National Assembly had revoked the law of banishment against the Orleans family, he was appointed a Major, and served first in Algiers; he was subsequently appointed Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel. In 1883 his name was struck off the active list of the army by a decree of the Republican Government; and he was at once removed from the command of the 12th Chasseurs, and was peremptorily ordered on Feb. 25 to quit Rouen, at which city that regiment was stationed. He bade farewell to his regiment in a dignified order of the day, and asked leave of absence in order to travel in the Caucasus. In 1886, in obedience to the decree of June 22, his name was finally struck off the French army lists. He married, June 11, 1863, Françoise-Marie-Amélie of Orléans, eldest daughter of the Prince de Joinville, and has issue two daughters, born respectively Jan. 13, 1865, and Jan. 25, 1869, and two sons, born respectively, Oct. 16, 1867, and Sept. 4, 1874. The former is the famous explorer, Prince Henri d'Orléans (q.v.). Address in Paris: 27 Rue Jean-Gonjon; Château de St. Firmin, Oise; Villa de Fayères, Cannes.

CHASE, Marian R. T., second daughter of the late John Chase, member of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, was born in Upper Charlotte Street, Fitzroy Square, April 18, 1844. She was educated at home, excepting for two years and a half when she was at school at Ham, near Richmond. The foundation of her art-education she received from her father, who also taught her landscape painting. The late Miss Margaret Gillies kindly gave her lessons in figure painting. Miss Chase, however, has devoted herself principally to still-life and flower painting; and in this, the special style of her choice, the study of her still-life models and of the living flowers has been her sole means of instruction. She was elected a member of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours in 1876. She has frequently exhibited also at the Royal Academy, the Grosvenor Gallery, and the chief provincial exhibitions. Some of her principal works are "The Untidy Corner," "Music, Literature, and Art," "Gold," "Checkmate," "The Skill and Thought of Bygone Years," "Treasures," and "The Past and To-day." Miss Chase

CHASSEPOT, Antoine Alphonse, a French inventor, born March 4, 1833, is the son of a working gunsmith, to which trade he was himself brought up. Entering the Government workshops, he was attached in 1858 to that of St. Thomas, in Paris, as Controller of the second class; attained the rank of Controller of the first class in 1861, and that of Principal in 1864. The result of his study of the mechanism of small arms, especially of the famous Prussian needle-gun, was the invention of the Chassepot rifle, which was adopted by the French army; and, according to the official accounts, "did wonders" against the Garibaldians at Mentana. M. Chassepot was afterwards officially attached to the national manufactory of arms at Châtellerault, near Poitiers. He took out patents for his invention, and the royalty he received on the rifles manufactured brought him in a large income. He was decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1866, and promoted to the rank of officer of the same in 1870. The Chassepot was famous in the war of 1870, but has long since been superseded. He ultimately became a hotel-keeper at Nice.

CHATTERTON, The Right Hon. Hedges Eyre, was born at Cork in 1819, and was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, eventually obtaining the degree of LL.D. He was called to the Irish Bar in 1843, became Solicitor-General for Ireland in 1866, and Attorney-General in the following year. In 1867 he was raised to the Bench of Judges, and was appointed Vice-Chancellor of Ireland, having represented the University of Dublin in the House of Commons from February to August of the same year. He was married in 1845 to Mary, daughter of the Rev. William Halleran, Prebendary of Cloyne. Address: Newpark, Blackrock, Dublin.

CHAWNER, William, M.A., has been Master of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, since 1895. He was born in February 1838, and educated at Rossall School and Emmanuel College. He is the author of "The Influence of Christianity upon the Legislation of Constantine the Great," 1874. Address: Emmanuel College, Cambridge.

CHELMSFORD, Lord, General Frederic Augustus Thesiger, G.C.B., is the eldest son of the 1st Lord Chelmsford (who was twice Lord Chancellor in the Government of the late Lord Derby) by his wife Anna Maria, youngest daughter of Mr. William Tinning, of Southampton. He was born May 31,

1827, and educated at Eton. In 1844 he entered the Rifle Brigade. He was transferred in 1845 to the Grenadier Guards as ensign, and became captain, 1850; Brevet-Major, 1855; Lieut.-Colonel, 1857; Colonel, 1863; Major-General, 1868; Lieut.-General, 1882; and General, 1888. He served in the Crimean campaign as aide-de-camp to Major-General Markham, including the siege and fall of Sebastopol, and for this service he was promoted to a brevet majority. Having exchanged into the 95th Regiment as second Lieut.-Colonel, he served in the Indian Mutiny campaign, and subsequently as Deputy Adjutant-General, British troops, in the Bombay Presidency. He succeeded Colonel Raines, C.B., in the command of the 95th Regiment. As Deputy Adjutant-General in the Abyssinian campaign of 1868 he was present at the capture of Magdala. For his services in this campaign he was nominated a Companion of the Bath and one of her Majesty's aides-de-camp. He was Adjutant-General to the forces in India from 1869 till December 1874, when he was appointed to command the troops at Shorncliffe, and subsequently the 1st Infantry Brigade at Aldershot. In March 1877 he attained the rank of Major-General, and in January of the following year he was nominated to succeed General Sir Arthur Cunningham as Commander of the Forces and Lieut.-Governor of Cape Colony. He completed the subjugation of the Kaffirs, and restored Caffraria to a condition of tranquillity, and for these services was made a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath. He had succeeded to the peerage on his father's death in 1878. Lord Chelmsford was appointed to the chief command of the British troops in the Zulu War of 1879. Lieut.-Colonel Durnford's column, consisting of 1774 Englishmen and 650 natives, was encamped at Isandhlwana, when an attack was made on the fortified camp by the Zulus, resulting in the annihilation of half the garrison. A gallant defence was made the same day at Rorke's Drift, about ten miles from Isandhlwana, by Lieutenants Chard and Bromhead, who with 110 men of the 24th Regiment and twenty-nine others held the post against the desperate assaults of 3000 Zulus. Lord Chelmsford's troops arrived after the natives had been beaten off and had retired. On April 2, an attack was made by an army of 11,000 Zulus upon the fortified camp, of the British troops under Lord Chelmsford at Gingholova, on the road to Ekowe, but the Zulus were repulsed with great loss; and two days later the British troops, who had been surrounded at Ekowe by Zulus after the disaster of Isandhlwana, were relieved by the force under Lord Chelmsford's command. The decisive battle of Ulundi was fought on July 4, when the Zulu army was completely defeated. The credit of the victory admittedly belongs to Lord Chelmsford, but before this battle was fought Sir Garnet Wolseley had landed at Durban, Natal, to supersede him in the command of the British troops operating against the Zulus. Lord Chelmsford, having resigned the command, was created a Knight Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath, and arrived in England in August 1879. In 1884 he was appointed Lieutenant of the Tower of London, which he held until 1889. Lord Chelmsford retired in 1893. He married in 1867 Adria Fanny, daughter of Major-General Heath, of the Bombay army. Address: 5 Knaresborough Place, S.W.

CHERBULIEZ, Victor, son of a Professor of Greek at Geneva, was born in that city in 1829. His early education at Geneva was completed in Paris, at Bonn, and in Berlin, and after a voyage to the East he published his first essay, an antiquarian trifle entitled "A propos d'un Cheval, Causeries Athéniennes," 1860, reprinted in 1864 under the title of "Un Cheval de Phidias." After the death of his father in 1874 he settled in Paris, where he published a number of novels, all of which appeared originally in the columns of the Revue des Deux Mondes. Among them are "Le Comte Kostia," 1863; "Le Prince Vitale," 1864; "Paule Méré," 1864; "Le Roman d'une honnête Femme," 1866; "Le Grand Œuvre," 1867; "Prosper Randoe," 1868; "L'Aventure de Ladislas Bolski," 1869; "Le Fiancé de Mademoiselle de Saint-Maur," 1876; and "L'Idée de Jean Téterol," 1878, which was translated into English under the title of "The Wish of his Life." Later books are "Noirs et Rouges," "Olivier Maugant," "La Ferme du Choquard," 1884; "La Bête," 1887; "La Vocation du Comte Ghislam," 1888; "Une Gageure," 1890; "L'Art et la Nature," 1892; and "Le Secret du Précepteur," 1893. Most of M. Cherbuliez's works have been translated and published in America, and many have been translated into Danish, English, German, Italian, Polish, and Spanish. M. Cherbuliez is also a political writer of influence, the numerous articles in the Revue des Deux Mondes signed "G. Valbert" being from his pen. M. Cherbuliez has been reinstated in his rights as a French citizen, which had been lost through his ancestors having left France during the religious persecutions in the seventeenth century. On May 25, 1882, he was received into the French Academy as the successor of M. Dufaure. He is of the world widely, mixing with his fellows, and taking a vivid interest in their doings.

Indeed, his knowledge of men and things is encyclopædic. The many allusions met with in his works are not merely literary, but the result of personal investigation. His sympathies are universal, his tastes cosmopolitan. Knowing English and German as well as he does French, he introduces his characters, be they Russian or English, Italian or American, with the easy urbanity of a man of the world who knows most types of men and women. A recent French critic described him as "an attentive tourist whom nothing escapes." M. Cherbuliez is held in high estimation by those who are entitled to speak with authority on his work. His last novel, "Jacqueline Vanesse" (1898) shows no decline of his powers. Paris address: 12 Rue de Tournon.

CHERMSIDE, Major-General Sir Herbert Charles, G.C.M.G., C.B., late of the Royal Engineers, was born at Wilton, near Salisbury, on July 31, 1850, and is the second son of the Rev. Seymour Chermiside. He was educated at Eton, and entered the Army (Royal Engineers) in 1868, becoming a Lieutenant in 1870; Captain, 1882; Major, 1882; Lieut.-Colonel, 1885; Colonel, 1887. During the Russo-Turkish War he was Military Attaché with the Turks, 1877-78, and gained a medal. In 1878-79 he assisted in the Delimitation of the Frontiers of Turkey; was Military Vice-Consul in Anatolia, 1879-82; served during the Egyptian Expedition of 1882, being awarded medal and star; served with the Egyptian Army from 1883 to 1888, and in the Sudan and Suakim Expeditions of that period. From 1884 to 1886 he was Governor-General of the Red Sea Littoral, and from 1886 to 1888 commanded the Egyptian Nile Frontier. In the action at Sarrahs he was in command of the Egyptian forces, and obtained the brevet of Colonel. From 1888 to 1889 he was British Consul in Kurdistan, and from 1889 to 1896 Military Attaché at Constantinople. On March 17, 1897, he was appointed British Military Commissioner and Commander in Crete, on the same day that autonomy was declared in the island. He has the Second Class of the Medjidieh. He received the honour of the K.C.M.G. in 1897, and was created G.C.M.G. at New Year 1899. Club: United Service.

CHESNELONG, Pierre Charles, a French politician, was born at Orthez (Basses-Pyrénées), April 1820, and educated at Pau. Formerly he was a dealer in hams and tissues at Bayonne, at first in partnership with his father, but he afterwards handed over the management of the business to his eldest son, though still retaining an interest in it. In 1848 M. Chesnelong declared at a public meeting that "the republican form of government must be regarded as the only possible one in the present and in the future by all men who conscientiously take account of the movement of ideas and providential progress of facts." However, he afterwards changed his sentiments, and in 1865 became an official candidate, under the Empire, for the representation of the second circonscription of the Basses-Pyrénées. His candidature was successful, and he was re-elected in 1869. At the elections of January 1872, he was again returned to the National Assembly for the Basses-Pyrénées, and he took his seat among the monarchical majority. He took a very prominent part in the monarchical negotiations in October 1873. As a member of the Committee of Nine, he was sent to the Comte de Chambord, at Salzburg, in order to arrange with him the conditions of a monarchical restoration. M. Chesnelong took back a satisfactory account of his interview with the Pretender, and preparations were being made for the entry of the King into Paris when the manifesto of the 27th of October cast disorder and carried desolation into the Legitimist camp. At the general elections of Feb. 20, 1876, he was again chosen as Deputy for the arrondissement of Orthez, but the Chamber invalidated the election, and when M. Chesnelong sought the suffrages of the electors a second time he was defeated by his Republican opponent, M. Vignancourt (May 21, 1876). A few months later (Nov. 24, 1876), he was elected a senator for life. M. Chesnelong has taken a leading part in all Roman Catholic movements, both in and out of Parliament. He accompanied the pilgrimage to Paray-le-Monial, in honour of the Sacred Heart, and he subscribed the address of the Roman Catholic Deputies to Pope Pius IX. He was President of the general assemblies of the Roman Catholic Committees of France, held at Paris in 1874 and 1875. He is Vice-President of the Conseil-Général of the Basses-Pyrénées. Paris address: 16 Rue de la Bienfaisance.

CHESTER, Bishop of. See JAYNE, THE RIGHT REV. FRANCIS JOHN.

CHESTERFIELD, Earl of, The Right Hon. Edwyn Francis Scudamore Stanhope, J.P., was born March 15, 1854, and succeeded his father as 10th Earl in 1887. He was educated at Eton and Brasenose College, Oxford, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1880. He acted as Treasurer of the Queen's Household from 1892 to 1894, and was Captain of the Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms from 1894 to 1895. He is Captain of the 4th Battalion of the King's (Shropshire) Light Infantry. Addresses: 16 Pont Street, S.W.; and Holme Lacy, Hereford.

CHEVALIER, Albert, comedian and music-hall artiste, is the son of a former French master at Kensington Grammar School, and has also Irish and Welsh blood in his veins. He early gained some success as an amateur, but did not appear on the stage until 1877, when he acted, under the assumed name of Knight, in "An Unequal Match" at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, under the Bancrofts. Later he was with Mr. John Hare at the Court. In February 1891 began his now famous career as a singer of "coster" songs, the scene of his performance being the Pavilion Music Hall. For some years his manner of impersonating the London costermonger was the rage. He is said to have written the music and words for some forty of the fifty songs in his repertoire, which, in its way, is as famous as Mr. Kipling's "Soldiers' Three." He has refused large offers from theatrical managers anxious to retain his services. In the autumn of 1898 his play, "Tommy Dodd," in which he took a leading part, was produced at the Globe Theatre.

CHEYNE, Professor the Rev. Thomas Kelly, M.A., D.D., youngest son of the late Rev. Charles Cheyne, second master of Christ's Hospital, and grandson of the Rev. T. Horne, author of the once popular theological text-book on the "Introduction to the Holy Scriptures," was born in London, Sept. 18, 1841, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School and Worcester College, Oxford. While at the University he obtained the Chancellor's Prize for an English Essay, the Pusey and Ellerton and the Kennicott Hebrew Scholarships, the Johnson Theological Scholarship, and the Ellerton prize for a Theological Essay. In 1864 he was admitted to deacon's and in 1865 to priest's orders in the Church of England. In 1869 he was elected Fellow of Balliol College for attainments in Biblical criticism and Semitic philology, and became the first lecturer in Oxford who held and taught the main results of modern Old Testament criticism. Soon afterwards, at the instance of Professor Jowett, he was commissioned by Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode to edit the Old Testament portion of the now well-known "Variorum Bible," and selected as his co-editor the present Regius Professor of Hebrew at Oxford. He was also a member of the Old Testament Revision Company, and contributed many articles on Old Testament criticism to the latest edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." In addition to this and other work he organised, under the late Dr. Appleton, the theological department of the original "Academy," which section became in his hands an organ of critical theology as understood by Continental scholars and their like-minded English colleagues. The publication of his larger work on Isaiah in 1880-81 foreshadowed the new movement for the reconciliation of criticism and an enlightened Church theology, and in 1881 he gave an earnest of his revived attachment to the Church by accepting the college living of Tendring, Essex. In 1884, at the tercentenary celebration of the University of Edinburgh, he received the degree of D.D. At the end of 1885 he was elected to the Oriel Professorship of the Interpretation of Holy Scripture at Oxford, to which chair a canonry in Rochester Cathedral is attached. Between November 1897 and January 1898, he delivered a course of lectures on Jewish Religious Life in Post-Exilic Times in some of the chief literary and academical centres of the United States (in the press). The object of these was to help to bridge over the gulf between advanced critics and the general public. Professor Cheyne is the author of many works on the Old Testament, including, "Notes and Criticisms on the Hebrew Text of Isaiah," 1869; "The Book of Isaiah Chronologically Arranged," 1870; "The Prophecies of Isaiah," 2 vols., 1880-81, 3rd edit., 1885; "The Books of Micah and Hosea," Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges, 1882, 1884; "Exposition of Jeremiah and Lamentations," Pulpit Commentary, 1883, 1885; "The Book of Psalms," a new version, Parchment Library, 1884; "Job and Solomon; or, the Wisdom of the Hebrews," 1886; "The Book of Psalms; a New Translation and Commentary," 1888; "The Life and Times of Jeremiah," 1888; "The Hallowing of Criticism," 1888; "The Origin and Religious Contents of the Psalter," 1891 (Bampton Lectures for 1889); "Aids to the Devout Study of Criticism (I. the David Narratives: II. The Book of Psalms)," 1892; "Founders of Old Testament Criticism" (including a survey of the questions in debate between the moderate and advanced schools of Old Testament criticism), 1893; "Introduction to the Book of Isaiah," 1896; and the translation of Isaiah in the "Polychrome Bible," 1898. The introduction to the work on "The Origin of the Psalter" contains a sketch of Professor Cheyne's development as a critical scholar, which was called for by the attacks of which his Bampton Lectures were the object during and after their delivery. His position as a Churchman may be understood from parts of the same introduction, and from his two Church Congress papers on "Faith and Criticism," reprinted respectively in "Job and Solomon," pp. 1-9, and "Hallowing of Criticism," pp. 183-207, with which an article on "Reform in the Teaching of the Bible" (Contemporary Review, August 1890), may be compared. Some animadversions on his views offered by Mr. Gladstone called forth a detailed reply from Professor Cheyne in the Nineteenth Century, December 1891 ("Ancient Beliefs in Immortality"). He married Frances E., third daughter of the late Rev. T. R. Godfrey, Fellow of Queen's, Oxford, and Rector of Stow-Bedon, Norfolk. Addresses: South Elms, Oxford; The Precincts, Rochester.

CHEYNE, William Watson, M.B., F.R.C.S., F.R.S., Professor of Surgery at King's College, London, was born in the Shetland Islands, and educated in Edinburgh University, in the Medical School of which he obtained his M.B. and C.M. with first-class honours in 1875. He studied also in Vienna, Paris, and Strassburg, and is generally considered Lord Lister's most brilliant pupil. In 1879 he became F.R.C.S. of England; obtained the Syme Surgical Fellowship in 1877; was Boylston Medical Prizeman and Gold Medallist in 1880; Jacksonian Prizeman in 1881; Astley Cooper Prizeman in 1889. He was appointed to the chair of surgery at King's College, London, in 1880, is a Surgeon at King's College Hospital, Surgeon at Paddington-Green Children's Hospital, and Consulting Surgeon and Surgeon of a number of other institutions. He is an Examiner in Surgery at Cambridge University, has examined in surgery at the Victoria and Edinburgh Universities, was Demonstrator of Anatomy at the University of Edinburgh, and in 1891 was Hunterian Professor at the Royal College of Surgeons of England. He is author of "Antiseptic Surgery: its Principles, Practice, History, and Results; Treatment of Wounds, Ulcers, and Abscesses," 1894 (new edit., 1898), and other valuable and standard works on surgical subjects. He has contributed "Lectures on Tubercular Diseases of Bones and Joints" to the British Medical Journal, 1890-92, and papers to the Lancet. Address: 75 Harley Street, W.

CHINNERY-HALDANE, The Right Rev. James Robert Alexander, LL.B., D.D., Bishop of Argyll and the Isles, is the only son of the late Alexander Haldane, Barrister-at-Law, heir male of the family of Haldane of Gleneagles, and was born on Aug. 14, 1842, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took his degree of LL.B., 1864, and D.D., 1888. He was ordained Deacon in 1866, and Priest in 1867, both by the Bishop of Salisbury; and after serving for two years as Curate under the Rev. John Duncan, Vicar of Calne, he became Assistant Curate of All Saints, Edinburgh, which curacy he held for about seven years. He was afterwards incumbent of St. Bride's, Nether Lochaber, 1876; Dean of Argyll and the Isles, 1881; Bishop of Argyll and the Isles, 1883. Among his publications should be mentioned, "The Scottish Communicant," and "The Communicant's Guide." He married in 1864 Anna Elizabeth Frances Margaretta, only child and heiress of Rev. Sir Nicholas Chinnery, Bart., of Flintville, co. Cork, when he assumed the additional name of Chinnery. Address: Ballachulish, N.B.

CHIROL, Valentine, born in 1852, and educated chiefly in France and Germany (Bachelier-ès-lettres of the University of Paris), was appointed in 1872 to a clerkship in the Foreign Office, which he resigned in 1876. He has travelled extensively in Oriental countries, and has been a frequent contributor to the leading magazines and newspapers. In 1892 he joined the permanent staff of the Times. He is the author of "Twixt Greek and Turk" (Blackwood, 1881), and of "The Far Eastern Question" (Macmillan, 1895). Address: 59 St. Ermin's Mansions, Westminster.

CHITTY, The Right Hon. Sir Joseph William, K.B., is the second and only surviving son of the late Mr. Thomas Chitty, of the Inner Temple, and was born in London in 1828. He was educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford, where he won the Vinerian Scholarship and graduated in 1851, taking a first class in Classics. Subsequently he was elected a Fellow of Exeter College, and proceeded M.A. in 1854. At college he was famous as an oar, and was thrice stroke of the Oxford boat. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1856, and was appointed a Queen's Counsel in 1874. Mr. Chitty for some years enjoyed a very extensive practice in the Rolls Court, of which he was the leader. He was formerly a Major in the Inns of Court Volunteers. To the general public, however, Mr. Chitty's name was once most familiarly known in his capacity as umpire at the Oxford and Cambridge boat race, which post he filled for some years. He entered Parliament at the General Election of 1880 as one of the Liberal members for Oxford. In September 1881 he was appointed a Judge of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice, in place of Sir George Jessel, the Master of the Rolls, who had been transferred to the Court of Appeal. Shortly afterwards he received the customary honour of knighthood. In January 1897 he was appointed a Lord Justice of the Court of Appeal, and was sworn of the Privy Council. He married in 1858 Clara Jessie, sixth daughter of the late Right Hon. Sir Frederick Pollock. Addresses: 33 Queen's Gate Gardens, W.; and Athenæum.

CHOATE, Joseph Hodges, American lawyer, Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, was born at Salem, Massachusetts, Jan. 24, 1832, and graduated at Harvard University in 1852. He studied law, and was admitted to the Bar in Massachusetts in 1855, and in New York in 1856, where he has since practised his profession, and has grown to be one of the leaders of the Bar there. He was Chairman of the Convention to revise the Constitution of the State of New York in 1894. He has argued many important cases, notably that involving the constitutionality of the provisions of the income tax in the tariff law of 1894, in which case the Supreme Court of the United States upheld his contention that the income tax could not be collected, but leaving the remainder of the tariff law in force. Mr. Choate in 1898 was appointed to succeed Mr. Hay as United States ambassador to Great Britain. He arrived in England on March 1, 1899.

CHREE, Charles, was born in 1860, at the Manse, Lintrathen, Forfarshire, being the second son of the Rev. Charles Chree, D.D., minister of Lintrathen, and his wife, a daughter of Mr. W. Bain, Kirkwall, Orkney. He received his early education at home, and at the Grammar School, Old Aberdeen; entered Aberdeen University in October 1875, and during his career there obtained many class prizes; graduated in the spring of 1879 with first-class honours in Mathematics, obtaining the Simpson Mathematical Prize, the gold medal awarded annually to the most distinguished graduate in Arts, and later in the year the Fullerton Mathematical Scholarship; entered King's College, Cambridge, in October 1879; was elected to a foundation scholarship in 1880, and graduated B.A. in 1883, being bracketed sixth wrangler; obtained a first division in the third part of the Mathematical Tripos, and a first class (in Physics) in the second part of the Natural Sciences Tripos; was elected Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, in 1885, and re-elected five years later as "Research" Fellow; appointed Superintendent of Kew Observatory in 1893. Mr. Chree has written upwards of forty original papers on Mathematics and Physics. His principal mathematical papers have dealt with the theory of Elasticity and its applications to Engineering, to theories of the Earth, and to Seismology. They have appeared at intervals since 1885 in the Transactions and Proceedings of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, the Quarterly Journal of Pure and Applied Mathematics, the Philosophical Magazine, the American Journal of Mathematics, and the Proceedings of the Royal Society. His principal physical investigations have treated of the conduction of heat in liquids, the magnetic properties of cobalt, thermometry, terrestrial magnetism, and atmospheric electricity. They have been described in the publications of the Royal Society, the Cambridge Philosophical Society, and the British Association, and in the Philosophical Magazine. Mr. Chree is M.A. and LL.D. of Aberdeen, M.A. and Sc.D. of Cambridge; he is a Fellow of the Cambridge Philosophical Society and the Physical Society of London, and was elected an F.R.S. in 1897. Official address: Kew Observatory, Richmond, Surrey.

CHRISTIAN IX., King of Denmark, fourth son of the late Duke William of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Glücksburg, was born April 8, 1818. Before his accession to the crown he was Inspector-General and Commander-in-Chief of the Danish Cavalry. The succession was vested in him by the protocol of London, May 8, 1852, and he ascended the throne on the death of Frederic VII., Nov. 15, 1863. On his accession the position of affairs with respect to Schleswig-Holstein was completely changed. The son of the Duke of Augustenburg immediately laid claim to the sovereignty of the duchies, although his father had for a compensation resigned all his rights in 1852. The independence of Holstein more especially, and of a portion of Schleswig, was warmly espoused by the German Diet, which forthwith ordered the advance of a Federal army to occupy the debatable territory, for the purpose of enforcing its enfranchisement from Danish rule. Before matters had proceeded far, Austria and Prussia determined to interfere, and by a combined armed occupation of the disputed territory to bring the question to an issue independently of the Diet, and in opposition to the wishes of that body. They accordingly invaded the duchies, which, after a hotly contested campaign, they succeeded in wresting from Denmark, also taking temporary possession of Jutland. Christian IX., disappointed in not obtaining assistance from some European power, after the failure of the conference convened in London in 1864—which failure was in some measure attributable to the obstinacy of the Danish Government—entered into negotiations for peace with Prussia and Austria, and a treaty was signed at Vienna Oct. 30, 1864. The King of Denmark renounced all his rights to Schleswig-Holstein and Lauenburg, and in 1866 the two German powers quarrelled over the spoil. Since then His Majesty has sought to develop the interior resources and popular institutions of his country. A new constitution was inaugurated in November 1866, when the King opened the first Rigsdag, the members of which were elected in accordance with the new electoral law. The army and navy have also been thoroughly reorganised, agriculture and commerce have received a great stimulus, and several railways have been constructed. In spite of this, however, the social state of the country is far from satisfactory; the hostility between the leaders of the people and the Court party is intense, and the Crown is by no means universally popular. Christian IX. and the late Queen Louise visited the Princess of Wales at Marlborough House, London, in March 1867. The marriage of the Crown Prince of Denmark with the Princess Louisa, daughter of the King of Sweden, at Stockholm, on July 28, 1869, was hailed as a pledge of union between the two countries. His Majesty granted a new constitution to Iceland, which came into operation in August 1874, that being the thousandth year of Iceland's existence as a nation. He went to Reikiavik on the occasion of the anniversary being celebrated, and on his return paid a flying visit to Leith and Edinburgh, Aug. 18, 1874. He visited the Emperor William II. of Germany at Berlin in August 1888, and in the autumn of 1889 was visited by the Emperor of Russia and his family. In 1842 King Christian married the Princess Louise, daughter of the Landgrave William of Hesse-Cassel, by whom he has had six children, and among them the Crown Prince Frederick, the King of Greece, Her Royal Highness the Princess Alexandra of Wales, and the Princess Dagmar, married to the late Tsar Alexander III. of Russia. On July 22, 1896, the second son of the Crown Prince of Denmark, Prince Charles, married Princess Maud of Wales. On May 26, 1892, the King and Queen of Denmark celebrated their golden wedding amid many demonstrations of loyalty and popular rejoicing. They were present at the marriage of the Duke of York and Princess May of Teck in July 1893. The Queen of Denmark died, greatly lamented, in the autumn of 1898.

CHRISTIAN, Prince, His Royal Highness Frederick-Christian-Charles-Augustus, Prince of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg, K.G., born Jan. 22, 1831, married July 5, 1866, Helena Augusta Victoria, Princess of Great Britain and Ireland. Prince Christian received the title of Royal Highness by command of Her Majesty, and was made a Knight of the Garter in July 1866. He is on the active list of Generals in the British Army, is a personal Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, and is Ranger of Windsor Park.

CHRISTIAN, Princess, Her Royal Highness Helena Augusta Victoria, Princess of Great Britain and Ireland, and the Duchess of Saxony, third daughter of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, was born May 25, 1846, and married at Windsor Castle July 5, 1866, to His Royal Highness Frederick-Christian-Charles-Augustus, Prince of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Augustenburg, and has five children, viz., Christian V. (see under SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN, H.H. Prince Christian Victor A. L. E. A. of), born April 14, 1867; Albert J., born Feb. 26, 1869; Victoria L., born May 3, 1870; Louise A., born Aug. 12, 1872, and married on July 6, 1891, to Prince Aribert of Anhalt; and Harold, who was born and died in May 1876. On Her Royal Highness's marriage a dower of £30,000 and an annuity of £6000 was granted to her by Parliament. The Princess is a Member of the Royal Order of Victoria and Albert (1st Class), and a Lady of the Imperial Order of the Crown of India, and of the Royal Red Cross, &c. She is well known for her active interest in every kind of philanthropic movement. Princess Christian takes a warm interest in nurses and the nursing profession, and she has been President of the Royal British Nurses' Association for many years. She is moreover a prominent patroness of the National Health Society. The Princess is an accomplished musician, and with her daughter frequently attends the practices of the Windsor Madrigal Society.

CHRISTIE, William Henry Mahoney, C.B., F.R.S., P.R.A.S., Astronomer-

Royal, was born at Woolwich in 1845, and is the son of the late Professor S. H. Christie, F.R.S. He was educated at King's College School, London, and Trinity College, Cambridge, and became a Fellow of his College. He graduated B.A. 1868 as fourth wrangler; was appointed in 1870 Chief Assistant at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich. On Sir G. B. Airy's retirement in 1881 Mr. Christie was appointed Astronomer-Royal. He is the author of the "Manual of Elementary Astronomy," and has contributed valuable papers to the Proceedings of the Royal Society, of which he was elected Fellow in 1881, and the Royal Astronomical Society, of which he was elected Fellow in 1871. Address: Royal Observatory, Greenwich.

CHRISTINA, Queen-Regent of Spain. See MARIA CHRISTINA.

CHURCH, The Rev. Alfred John, M.A., born in London, Jan. 29, 1829, third son of John Thomas Church, solicitor, was educated at King's College, London, and Lincoln College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1851 (second class in Lit. Hum.). He was ordained in 1853, and held the curacy of Charlton, Malmesbury, till the end of 1856. He was successively Assistant Master at the Royal Institution School, Liverpool, and at Merchant Taylors' School, London, 1857-70; and Head Master of Henley, 1870-72; and of Retford Grammar Schools, 1873-80. In 1880 he was appointed to the Chair of Latin at University College, London; this he resigned in 1889. From 1892-97 he was Rector of Ashley, Tetbury, Wilts. He has published, in conjunction with the Rev. W. J. Brodribb, a translation of "Tacitus," 1862-77, and of Livy, xxi.-xxv., an edition of "Select Letters of Pliny, and Pliny the Younger," in "Blackwood's Ancient Classics for English Readers," "Tacitus," in "Macmillan's Series of Literature Primers," and editions of "Tacitus, Annals VI." and "Agricola" and "Germania." He contributed "Ovid" to Blackwood's series above mentioned, and is conductor of "Seeley's Cheap School Books," several of which come from his pen. He also edited, in 1868, a collection of translations from Tennyson into Latin verse, under the title of "Hora Tennysonianæ." But the works by which he is best known are a series of volumes which aim at popularising some of the great Greek and Latin classics. "Stories from Homer" appeared in 1877, and were followed by "Stories from Virgil," "Stories from the Greek Tragedians," "Stories from the East," "The Story of the Persian War," "Stories from Livy," "Roman Life in the Days of Cicero," "A Traveller's True Tale, after Lucian." "The Story of Jerusalem," and "Heroes and Kings," belong to the same series. Other books for the young written by him are "The Chantry Priest of Bar-net"; "With the King at Oxford"; "Two Thousand Years Ago: or, the Adventures of a Roman Boy"; "Lord of the World," a tale of the fall of Carthage and Corinth; "Stories of the Magicians"; and "To the Lions!" a tale of the early Church. He has also written "Carthage" and "Early Britain," in Messrs G. P. Putnam & Sons' "Series of the Story of the Nations." Mr. Church obtained in 1884, at Oxford, the prize for a poem on a sacred subject. The subject was "The Sea of Galilee." Permanent address: The Wilderness, Clevedon.

CHURCH, Arthur Herbert, F.R.S., F.S.A., F.C.S., fourth and youngest son of the late John Thomas Church, solicitor, of Bedford Row, was born June 2, 1834, educated at King's College and the Royal College of Chemistry, London, and at Lincoln College, Oxford; first class in Natural Science School, Oxford; B.A. 1860, M.A. 1863; has been Professor of Chemistry in the Royal Academy of Arts in London since 1879; Lecturer on Organic Chemistry at Cooper's Hill College since 1888. He was formerly, 1863-79, Professor of Chemistry in the Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester. Mr. Church is the discoverer of Turacin, an animal pigment containing copper, and of several new mineral species, including the only British cerium mineral. He is the author of "Precious Stones," 1883; "English Earthenware," 1884; "English Porcelain," 1886; "The Laboratory Guide for Agricultural Students," 6th edit. 1888; "Food Grains of India," 1886; "Colour," 2nd edit. 1887; "Food," 2nd edit. 1889, &c.; also of researches on Vegetable Albinism, on Colein or Erythrophyll, on Aluminium in Vascular Cryptogams, &c. He was elected Fellow of the Chemical Society in 1856; Fellow of the Royal Society in 1888. Address: Shelsley, Kew Gardens.

CHURCH, Frederic Edwin, an American artist, was born at Hartford, Connecticut, May 4, 1826. He early developed a fondness for art, and became a pupil of Thomas Cole. Among his first notable works were some views in the Catskill Mountains. He visited South America in 1853, and again in 1857, and on his return from his second visit finished his great picture, "The Heart of the Andes." In 1857 he completed a large painting, "The Great Fall, Niagara," which at once gave him a high rank among landscape artists. This was followed in 1868 by "Niagara" (a still larger painting, comprising both Falls), which was exhibited both in England and in the United States. He has since painted "Cotopaxi," "Morning," "On the Cordilleras," "Under Niagara," "The Icebergs," "Sunset on Mount Desert Island," and "Moonlight under the Tropics." In 1868 he visited Europe and the Holy Land. Among the paintings inspired by this visit are "Damascus," 1869; "Jerusalem," 1870; and "The Parthenon," 1871. His "Tropical Scenery," painted from sketches made during a trip in the West Indies, was exhibited in New York in 1873. He has been an Academician since 1849. Among the more important of his later productions are "Ægean Sea," 1875; "Syria by the Sea," 1876; "Morning in the Tropics," 1877; "The Monastery," 1878; "Valley of Santa Marta," 1879.

CHURCH, William Selby, M.D., was born Dec. 4, 1837, at Woodside, Hatfield, Herts, and was the second son of John Church of that place, and Isabella, daughter of George Selby of Twizell House, Northumberland. He was educated at Harrow and Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1860, after obtaining a first class in the Natural Science School. He was elected Dr. Lee's Reader in Anatomy at Christ Church, Oxford, in 1860; took the M.B. degree in 1864, and the M.D. in 1868. He became a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of London in 1870; was Harveian Orator of that College in 1895, and Senior Censor in 1896. He has been the representative for the University of Oxford in the General Council of Medical Education since 1889. After holding several junior posts in the Medical School of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, he was appointed Assistant Physician in 1867, and became Physician to the Hospital in 1875. He is Consulting Physician to the Royal General Dispensary, to which he was formerly Physician, and he was also Assistant Physician to the City of London Hospital for Diseases of the Chest. He is the author of the article on "Acute Rheumatism" in Allbutt's "System of Medicine," 1897; and of various papers in the "St. Bartholomew's Hospital Reports," and other journals. Dr. Church is a J.P. for Hertfordshire, and a member of the Hatfield Rural District Council. Addresses: 130 Harley Street, W.; and Woodside, Hatfield, Herts.

CLAIRMONTE, Mrs. Egerton ("George Egerton"), was born at Melbourne, Australia, and is the eldest daughter of Captain John J. Dunne, Queen's County, Ireland, and Isabel George Bynon, Glamorganshire. She married (1), in 1888, H. W. Melville, Esq., who died in 1889; and (2), in 1891, Egerton Clairmonte, Esq., eldest son of Adolphus J. Clairmonte, of Lakelands, Nova Scotia. She was educated privately, and was originally intended for an artist. Family affairs, however, stood in the way, and prevented her from following this career. She has been a great traveller, having visited the United States, South America, and most of the countries of Europe. Her publications are: "Keynotes," 1893; "Discords," 1894; "Young Ofig's Ditties," 1895; "Symphonies," "Fantasies," 1897; "The Wheel of God," 1898. Addresses: 5 Danes Inn, Strand, W.C.; and Milford, near Witley, Surrey.

CLANCY, John Joseph, M.A., M.P., son of William Clancy, of Carragh, was born in Galway on July 15, 1847, and was educated at the College of the Immaculate Conception, Athlone, at Queen's College, Galway, and at the Royal University of Ireland, where he graduated with honours in Classics. After spending three years as Classical Master of the Holy Cross School, Tralee, he became, in 1870, assistant editor of the Nation, remaining on the staff of that journal till 1885. He was called to the Irish Bar in 1887, acted as editor of the Irish Press Agency in England from 1886 to 1890, and has been a member of the staff of the Irish Daily Independent since 1891. He has represented the Northern Division of Dublin county, as a Parnellite Member, in the House of Commons since 1885. Mr. Clancy has written a good many political pamphlets, and has published various essays in the Nineteenth Century, the Fortnightly Review, and the Contemporary Review. Address: 53 Rutland Square, Dublin.

CLANWILLIAM, Earl of, Sir Richard James Meade, Bart., G.C.B., K.C.M.G., Admiral of the Fleet, is the son of the 3rd Earl by Elizabeth, daughter of the 11th Earl of Pembroke, and was born on Oct. 3, 1832. He entered the Navy in 1845, and was promoted Lieutenant in 1852. In that rank his Lordship served in H.M.S. Impérieuse, which was employed during 1854 in blockading the Gulf of Finland. On his return to England he received the Baltic medal. In 1857 he proceeded to China, and took part in the destruction of the Chinese fleet at Escape Creek, and also the destruction of the Fatschau flotilla. At the capture of Canton his arm was broken by a gingle ball, and he was specially mentioned in despatches for various services. He was promoted to the rank of Commander, and received the China medal with two clasps. His Lordship was appointed aide-de-camp to the Queen in 1872, holding that appointment until promoted to the rank of Rear-Admiral in 1876. The following year he was created a C.B. He was also a Lord Commissioner of the Admiralty from 1874 to 1880, when he hoisted his flag as Commander-in-Chief of a flying squadron. H.M.S. Bacchante, in which were the late Duke of Clarence and the Duke of York, formed part of that fleet, and after a cruise of about two years, during which time many parts of the world were visited for the benefit of the two princes, the squadron returned to England and was dismissed. Lord Clanwilliam was created a K.C.M.G. in commemoration of the cruise. He was appointed Commander-in-Chief on the North American Station in 1885, and also held the Portsmouth command from 1891 to 1894. His Lordship is a Commissioner of the Patriotic Fund, and an F.R.G.S. He married the eldest daughter of Sir Arthur Kennedy, late Governor of Queensland, in 1867, and his son and heir, Lord Gilford, is a Lieutenant in the Royal Navy. Addresses: 32 Belgrave Square, S.W.; and Gill Hall, Dromore, co. Down.

CLARETIE, Jules Arsène Arnaud, a French writer, was born at Limoges, Dec. 3, 1840, and was educated in the Lycée Bonaparte at Paris. Adopting literature as a profession, he contributed a very large number of articles to various French and Belgian journals, including La Patrie, La France, La Revue Française, Le Figaro, and L'Indépendance Belge. In 1866 he followed in Italy the campaign against Austria, in the capacity of correspondent of L'Avenir National. Two series of lectures, delivered by him in Paris in 1865 and 1868, were interdicted by the Imperial authorities. In 1869 he was condemned to pay a fine of 1000 francs for having described, in Le Figaro, under the pseudonym of "Candide," the double execution of Martin, called Bidouré, by order of the Prefect Pastoureau, in the department of the Var. In the following year he succeeded M. Francisque Sarcey as dramatic critic of L'Opinion Nationale, and subsequently he followed the French army to Metz, and sent letters from the seat of war to L'Opinion Nationale, L'Illustration and Le Rappel. After the fall of the Empire he was appointed by M. Gambetta to the post of secretary of the Commission of the papers of the Tuileries; but he soon resigned that office, and he was next charged by M. Etienne Arago, Mayor of Paris, with the duty of organising a library and lecture-hall in each of the twenty arrondissements of Paris. For a very short time he commanded the second battalion of the volunteers of the National Guard, which was dissolved by General Clément Thomas when those volunteers were replaced by the mobilised National Guards. M. Jules Claretie was present at nearly all the engagements which took place under the walls of Paris; and on Jan. 20, 1871, in the capacity of an officer of the staff, he negotiated with the aide-de-camp of the Crown Prince of Prussia the truce which gave an opportunity for removing the dead from the field of battle at Buzenval. At the general elections of Feb. 8, 1871, he stood as a candidate in the department of Haute-Vienne, in the Republican interest; but, being unsuccessful, he resumed his journalistic and literary pursuits. He has published thirty or forty volumes of causeries, history, and fiction, of which the most celebrated are: "Une Drôlesse," 1862; "L'Assassin," 1866; "La Libre Parole," 1868; "La Débâcle," 1871; "Paris Assiégé," 1871; "Portraits Contemporains," 1875; "Le Troisième Dessous," 1878; "Le Drapeau," 1879; "Monsieur le Ministre," 1881; "Le Prince Zilah," 1884; "La Cigarette," 1890; and "Le Million." On the death of M. Perrin, M. Claretie was appointed Director of the Théâtre Français, 1885, and in the summer of 1893 brought the company of the theatre to London, where a successful season was inaugurated at Drury Lane. A poem by M. Claretie, commemorative of this unusual artistic event, was distributed in the theatre at the first-night representation. M. Claretie was created Officer of the Legion of Honour in 1887, and Commander in 1894, and elected into the Académie Française in 1889, where he succeeded Cuvillier Fleury. His Paris address is 10 Rue de Douai.

CLARK, Charles E., United States naval officer, was born in Vermont, Sept. 29, 1840. He finished his education at the United States Naval Academy, which he entered Sept. 29, 1860; became Acting Ensign Oct. 1, 1863; Master, May 10, 1866; Lieutenant, Feb. 21, 1867; Lieutenant-Commander, March 12, 1868; Commander, Nov. 15, 1881; and Captain, June 21, 1896. Early in March 1898 he was in command of the battleship Oregon on the Pacific coast of the United States, and received orders to take his ship to the North Atlantic Station. He took her through the Straits of Magellan and up the Atlantic coast, touching at Callao, Peru, Punta Arenas, Rio de Janeiro, Bahia, Barbadoes, and arrived at Key West, Florida, May 26, with his ship in perfect order and ready to go on duty at once, after a journey of over 14,000 miles. His vessel performed an important part in the battle of July 3, 1898, in which the American fleet destroyed entirely the Spanish fleet commanded by Admiral Cervera.

CLARK, Edwin Charles, LL.D. of Cambridge, F.S.A.; Barrister-at-Law of Lincoln's Inn; Regius Professor of Civil Law, Cambridge; late Professor of Roman Law to the London Council of Legal Education; Present Fellow of St. John's, and late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge; was born in 1835 at Ellinthorpe Hall, Boroughbridge, Yorkshire; educated at Richmond School, Yorkshire, Shrewsbury School, and Trinity College, Cambridge, and was 7th Senior Optime in Mathematical Tripos, Senior Classic, and Senior Chancellor's Medallist (Classical), 1858. His publications are: "Early Roman Law," 1872; "An Analysis of Criminal Liability," 1880; "Practical Jurisprudence," 1883; "Cambridge Legal Studies," 1888; and various papers published by the Royal Archaeological Institute, and the Cambridge Antiquarian Society. Address: Newnham House, Cambridge.

CLARK, Latimer, C.E., F.R.S., F.R.A.S., M.I.C.E., Past President of the Institution of Electrical Engineers, and Chevalier of the Légion d'Honneur, was born at Great Marlow, in Buckinghamshire on March 10, 1822, and in the year 1847 he commenced railway surveying, and his brother, Mr. Edwin Clark, who had been engaged in making a number of experiments preliminary to the construction of the Britannia Tubular Bridge across the Menai Strait, having been appointed Superintending Engineer of that great work, Mr. Latimer Clark became his Assistant Engineer, and afterwards published a small work entitled, "A Description of the Britannia and Conway Tubular Bridges," which has run through several editions. In 1850 he entered the service of the Electric Telegraph Company as Assistant Engineer, under his brother. He afterwards became their Engineer-in-Chief and Consulting Engineer, an office which he held until the General Post Office finally took over the telegraphs in January 1870. In the year 1853 he made a long series of researches on the subject of the underground telegraph wires, the results of which were afterwards fully set forth in the Government Report, issued in 1861, on Submarine Telegraph Cables. In the course of the experiments he was the first to witness the retardation of electric signals in submarine lines, and to demonstrate that currents of low tension travel as fast as those of high tension. At the request of Professor Airy, the late Astronomer-Royal, some of these experiments were repeated before Professor Faraday, and formed the subject of a lecture at the Royal Institution, delivered in January 1854. They are fully described in Faraday's "Experimental Researches." He also aided Professor Airy in the simultaneous announcement of time throughout the country, and assisted in magnetic research, and in 1857 was the means of affording the interesting information that during a display of Aurora Borealis the magnetic needles were strongly affected by the magnetic storm of which this northern light is a sign. He wrote to the Astronomer Royal suggesting that magnetic observatories should be furnished with wires stretching out towards the four cardinal points, to act as feelers for electric currents. This suggestion has since been acted upon, with valuable results to science. During his brief intervals of leisure he amused himself with photography, and in 1853 devised a plan of obtaining stereoscopic pictures with a single camera. In 1858 he became a member of the Institution of Civil Engineers. In the succeeding year, after the failure of the first Atlantic cable, he became for a short time Engineer to the Atlantic Cable Telegraph Company, and in 1860 he was chosen a member of the Committee appointed jointly by the Government and that Company to inquire into the whole subject of Submarine Telegraph Cables. This investigation lasted for some time, and resulted in the publication of an elaborate and valuable report of considerable extent, embodying all that up to the period of its issue was known with relation to submarine telegraphy. In 1861 he read a paper before the British Association, "On the Principles to be observed in Forming Standards of Electric Measurements." In this paper he suggested the names of Ohm, Farad, and Volt, to be employed for the electrical units, names which have since become so familiar to electricians. Mr. Latimer Clark also for many years was Engineer to the Indian Government Cable lines in the Persian Gulf. On one occasion the expedition of which he had charge was wrecked in the Carnatic on the Island of Shadwan, in the Red Sea, and he narrowly escaped with his life. As head of the firm of Clark, Forde & Co., and in connection with other engineers, he has superintended the submergence of about fifty thousand miles of submarine cables in all parts of the globe. In 1868 he published a work in which he laid down with great clearness the principles of electric measurement. It was translated into French, Italian, and Spanish, and eagerly perused by foreign savants, whose idea of its value may be gathered from the fact that when, some time afterwards, Mr. Latimer Clark was in Paris, and entered a scientific meeting then sitting, the President rose from his seat, and hailing with delight the advent of their visitor, stated that he had never fully appreciated the laws of electricity until he had read that work. In 1871 Mr. Latimer Clark published, in conjunction with Mr. Robert Sabine, "Electrical Tables and Formulæ for Operators in Submarine Cables." In 1873 he read before the Royal Society a paper on "A Single-Cell Battery as a Standard of Electromotive Force," now in general use under the name of "Clark's Standard Cell." In 1875 he was elected the fourth President of the Society of Electric Telegraph Engineers, and in his inaugural address gave some highly interesting outlines of the harbingers, and even what might be called premonitions of the electric telegraph, mentioning the idea of some old writers, that two magnetic needles would vibrate in unison at any distance apart, though unconnected with each other. He referred to the fact that a Scotchman, named Charles Marshall, or Morrison, of Paisley, had in 1758 published a full and clear description of a practicable electric telegraph, suggesting that the wires should be coated with an insulating material; and he referred to the electric telegraph erected by the late Sir Francis Ronalds, in the year 1816, in his garden at Hammersmith. He bore testimony to the remarkable foresight of Sir F. Ronalds with regard to the value of the telegraph, which, in 1823, he had proposed that the Government should establish all over the kingdom. Mr. Latimer Clark has taken out about 150 patents in different countries to secure the value of his various inventions, relating not only to electrical telegraphy, but also to engineering work in general. He is the inventor of the well-known system of covering submarine cables with "Clark's Compound," which is in universal use. He also designed the well-known double-cupped insulators, which are in use on almost all land lines throughout the world. Mr. Clark also invented and introduced the system of pneumatic tubes for the mechanical transmission of messages, which is also in universal use. He published in 1868 his "Elementary Treatise on Electrical Measurement"; and in 1882, "A Treatise on the Transit Instrument," besides several smaller works. Addresses: 31 The Grove, Boltons, South Kensington, S.W.; and Little Halt, Maidenhead.

CLARKE, Lieut.-General the Hon. Sir Andrew, R.E., G.C.M.G., C.B., C.I.E. eldest son of the late Colonel Andrew Clarke, of Belmont, co. Donegal, Governor of West Australia, was born at Southsea on July 27, 1824, and educated at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich. He entered the Royal Engineers as second-lieutenant, 1844; became captain, 1854; lieutenant-colonel, 1867; colonel, 1872; major-general, 1884; lieutenant-general, 1886. He was aide-de-camp and then private secretary to Sir W. Denison, the Governor of Van Diemen's Land; subsequently a member of the Legislative Council of that colony; served in New Zealand during the years 1847-48 (medal). In 1853 he was appointed Surveyor-General of Victoria. He was elected to the Victorian Assembly for Melbourne, under the new constitution, and became Minister for Public Lands; but he resigned office in 1857, and returned to this country in the following year. He commanded the Royal Engineers of the Eastern and Midland districts of England till 1863, when he went on special service to the West Coast of Africa respecting the Ashanti difficulties. On his return he was appointed, in August 1864, Director of the Works of the Navy, which office he held till June 1873. From the latter date till February 1875, he was Governor of the Straits Settlements, and when there brought the Malay States under the protection of Great Britain. He was next appointed Minister for Public Works in India. He was Commandant of the School of Military Engineering at Chatham from 1881 to 1882, when he was appointed Inspector-General of Fortifications. In November 1882, he was despatched to Cairo, charged with the duty of inquiring into the causes of the sickness and mortality which were prevailing among the British army of occupation, and was invested with full power to make any alterations which he might consider necessary in the sanitary arrangements. From 1881 to 1886 Sir Andrew Clarke was Inspector-General of Fortifications. He has constructed defences for coaling-stations from plans of his own. Sir Andrew Clarke is the author of several works on engineering. Addresses: 42 Portland Place, W., and Athenæum.

CLARKE, Sir Campbell, was born Oct. 3, 1835, and was educated at Bonn on the Rhine. He was during eighteen years a Librarian in the British Museum, 1852-78. He has since 1872 been Paris Correspondent of the Daily Telegraph. He was appointed one of the Lieutenants of the City of London in 1874. He is an Officer of the Legion of Honour; Officer of Public Instruction; Grand Officer of the Medjidie; Officer of the Lion and Sun of Persia, and of the Redeemer of Greece; Knight of Charles III. of Spain, &c. He has been a special correspondent in several European countries, was a member of the Jury at the two Paris Exhibitions of 1878 and 1889, and has translated papers for the Philological Society. He married in 1870 Annie, daughter of the late J. M. Levy, J.P. Addresses: 116 Avenue des Champs-

Elysées, Paris; and Athenæum Club, London.

CLARKE, Caspar Purdon, Director of the Arts Department of the South Kensington Museum, may be said to be a son of the Museum, having been trained there for the profession of architect, and having gained, in 1865, the National Medallion for a set of designs for an old English house. When Dr. Percy began to reorganise the heating and ventilation of the Houses of Parliament, young Purdon Clarke was employed to make a complete set of drawings of the whole of Barry's masterpiece, the great architect's original plans being undiscoverable. The task was executed in two years. Promoted to be assistant to General Scott, Director of the Museum Works, he was sent to Italy as Superintendent of Reproductions for South Kensington, afterwards travelling in Egypt and Turkey in Europe and Palestine, where he made extensive purchases for the Museum. He was next sent to Persia as Superintendent of H.M.'s works at the Embassy, which he completed. The task was semi-political, and was thoroughly well performed. He at the same time made an exhaustive artistic tour of Persia in the interests of South Kensington Museum. In 1878 he acted as agent of the Indian Government at the Paris Exhibition, being created Chevalier of the Legion of Honour, and in the same year was so fortunate as to obtain the loan of the Prince of Wales's collection, thereby making the finest display of Indian art ever seen in Europe. In 1880 the Science and Art Department sent him to India, and his tour was so successful that he was made C.I.E. In 1885 he was again sent to India on special duty. In 1883 he was appointed Divisional Keeper of the Indian Section, and rearranged the collections three times. In 1890 he was made Keeper of the Art Collections, and soon after Assistant Director of the Museum. He was promoted to his present position in the summer of 1896. Mr. Purdon Clarke is an authority on textile manufactures, wood and stone carving, &c., furniture, and the embroideries, pottery, and tiles of Southern Europe. He saved Paul Pindar's beautiful house-front for the Museum. He has read technical papers before the Iron and Steel Institute, the Society of Arts, the Royal Institute of British Architects, and the Society of Antiquaries (his paper there being on the subterraneous rooms under St. Clemente in Rome). Address: South Kensington Museum.

CLARKE, Charles Baron, M.A., F.R.S., F.L.S., F.G.S., born June 17, 1832, at Andover, Hants, is the eldest son of the late Turner Poulter Clarke, of Andover, J.P., and was educated, from eight to fourteen, under the Rev. Lewis Tomlinson, of Salisbury, from fourteen to nineteen at King's College School, London, then at Trinity and Queen's Colleges, Cambridge, where he took the degree of B.A. in January 1856 (bracketed third Wrangler). He was called to the Bar in 1858 at Lincoln's Inn, was elected Fellow of Queen's College, Cambridge, 1857. He was Mathematical Lecturer of Queen's College, Cambridge, from 1858-65, entered the Bengal Educational Service in 1866, was superannuated 1887. He has published "Speculations from Political Economy," 1886; and numerous other papers on Political Economy; various papers on music (as in Nature, January 1883); the "Class-Book of Geography," 1889; and other textbooks; also an account of Khasi Dolmen in the Journal of the Anthropological Society. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society, of the Linnæan Society, of the Geological Society of London, &c.; and has been for some years past almost exclusively devoted to the studies of Morphological Botany and English History. His principal botanic work is published in the De Candolle Monographies, in Sir J. D. Hooker's "Flora of British India," and in the Journals and Transactions of the Linnæan Society. Address: 13 Kew Gardens Road, Kew, Surrey.

CLARKE, Sir Edward George, Q.C., M.P., eldest son of Mr. J. C. Clarke, of Moorgate Street, E.C., and Frances, daughter of H. George, Bath, was born on Feb. 15, 1841, and educated at College House, Edmonton, and the City Commercial School, Lombard Street, E.C. In 1859 he obtained a writership in the India Office, but retired, 1860. Afterwards he was a reporter in the House of Commons, and was on the literary staff of the Standard and Morning Herald. He obtained the Tancred Law Studentship in 1861, and was called to the Bar in 1864 at Lincoln's Inn, and joined the Home Circuit. In 1880 he was created a Queen's Counsel, and two years later was elected a Bencher of his Inn. He was elected member for Southwark a few weeks before the dissolution of 1880, but lost his seat at the general election. Since July 1880 he has represented Plymouth in the Conservative interest. His first great professional success was made in the well-known "Penge Mystery," and he made a great impression by his able speech in the Pimlico case, in defence of Mrs. Bartlett, in the Baccarat case, 1891, and in the Jameson case, 1896. On the accession of Lord Salisbury's second Government to power in August 1886, Sir (then Mr.) Edward Clarke was made Solicitor-General, and received the honour of Knighthood. He declined to resume this office upon the formation of Lord Salisbury's third Administration in 1895. He is author of a "Treatise on the Law of Extradition," of which a third edition appeared in 1888, and has published two series of Public Speeches, the second being chiefly forensic. He married (1) Annie, daughter of G. Mitchell, in 1866 (she died in 1881), and (2) Kathleen Mathilda, daughter of A. W. Bryant, in 1882. Addresses: 37 Russell Square, W.C.; Thorncote, Staines.

CLARKE, Colonel Sir George Sydenham, K.C.M.G., F.R.S., the eldest son of the Rev. W. J. Clarke, was born on July 4, 1848. He was educated at Rossall and Haileybury, and had the advantage of being a sixth-form boy under the Rev. A. G. Butler at the latter school. Although early showing a decided taste for mechanical science, he owes much to the classical training he received at Haileybury. After a year's special preparation at Wimbledon school he passed first in the open competition for the R. M. Academy, Woolwich, in December 1866, and in June 1868 he passed first out of the Academy, winning the Pollock medal and seven prizes. In July he received a commission in the Royal Engineers, and in 1871 he was selected by the late Sir G. Chesney to be instructor in engineering drawing at the R. I. Engineering College. While carrying out the duties of this appointment, he published four books: "Practical Geometry and Engineering Drawing," a translation of Von Ott's Graphischen Statik, "Principles of Graphic Statics," and "Plevna," a study of the Russo-Turkish War, together with many miscellaneous papers on military and scientific subjects. He also became an Examiner to the Science and Art Department, which post he held for years. On promotion to the rank of Captain in 1880, he resigned his appointment at Cooper's Hill, ceiving the thanks of the India Office, and served as a regimental officer in Bermuda and Gibraltar till the outbreak of hostilities in Egypt in 1882, writing several military papers during this period, and especially a study of "Provisional Fortifications." He took part in the Egyptian Expedition of 1882, and wrote an exhaustive official report on the defences of Alexandria and the effects of the bombardment. Returning to England in October 1882, Captain Clarke was employed at the War Office until 1892. This was a turning-point in his career. The experience obtained at Alexandria not only led him to take strong views on the altered conditions of fortifications, but caused him to study the whole question of Imperial defence, more especially in relation to the Navy. From 1893 he began to write largely upon naval questions, and all matters relating to "Imperial defences," a term which he originated. While still connected with the War Office, he served on the staff of Sir G. Graham's expeditionary force in the Sudan in 1885, was present in several engagements, and was mentioned in despatches. He was also employed on official missions to Bucharest, Sweden, Malta, Gibraltar, United States, Halifax, Berlin, Paris, Belgium, Linz, and Magdeburg. He was appointed Secretary of the Colonial Defence Committee on return from the Sudan, and received a C.M.G. in 1887, and a K.C.M.G. in 1893 for his services in organising the Colonial defences. His services were also acknowledged by the Colonial Office and Admiralty. Major Clarke was Secretary of the Royal Commission on the Administration of the Admiralty and War Office, presided over by Lord Hartington. During this period he wrote many papers and articles on naval and military subjects, and published "Fortifications, Past, Present, and Future," which work has exercised a marked influence upon the science of fortifications at home and abroad. After serving as second in command of the Engineers at Malta, and becoming a Lieut.-Colonel on April 1, 1894, he was appointed Superintendent of the Royal Carriage Department at Woolwich, which post he still occupies, receiving a brevet Colonelcy in the present year. At the Carriage Department he has proposed and carried out great changes in the mounting of guns for coast defence, has taken out three important patents, which have been assigned to the Secretary of State for War, and devised and perfected an automatic sight lately adopted into the service, which will have an important effect in increasing the powers of coast artillery. In addition to many professional papers and magazine articles on various subjects he has, during the last three years, published "The Navy and the Nation," in conjunction with Mr. J. R. Thursfield, and "Imperial Defence," dedicated to H.M. the Queen. Imperial and naval questions continue to be his principal interest, and he has been present at six of the annual naval manœuvres in the endeavour to understand naval matters so far as is possible for a landsman. In 1896 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. Addresses: 24 Arncliffe Gardens, Kensington; and Athenæum.

CLARKE, Lieut.-Col. Sir Marshal James, K.C.M.G., Resident Commissioner in Rhodesia, is the eldest son of the Rev.

Mark Clarke, of Shronell, Tipperary. He was born in 1841, and entered the Army as a Lieutenant of Royal Artillery in 1863, becoming Captain in 1875, Major in 1880, and two years afterwards retired from the Army with the honorary rank of Lieut.-Colonel. In 1874, Captain Clarke was appointed Resident Magistrate and Administrator of native law at Pietermaritzburg, Natal, and in 1876 he was chosen to be aide-de-camp to Sir Theophilus Shepstone, the Special Commissioner in South Africa, and in that capacity was employed on a mission to the Chief Sikukunis. From 1877 to 1880 he was Commissioner at Lydenburg, Transvaal, and acquired there a knowledge of the Boers and their national traits, which afterwards stood him in good stead. During the South African war he was appointed Political Officer and Special Commissioner, and sent to help to pacify the Boers. He was mentioned in despatches, and awarded a C.M.G. and the brevet of Major. In December 1880, Major Clarke arrived at Potchefstroom, the old capital of the Transvaal, and took over the command of the regulars and volunteers, numbering in all rather less than 300 men. A rumour having reached him that the Boers meant to appeal to arms, he moved the troops into a fort outside the city, and there waited the attack. He protested against the action of the Boers, but in vain. Close to the fort were the gaol and court-house, and Major Clarke himself, with thirty-four men, took charge of the latter. They were then attacked in great force, many of the Boers stationing themselves behind a wall within twelve feet from the court-house, from which they threw fire-balls on the thatched roof. After a gallant defence, their ammunition being exhausted and several men killed, Major Clarke and his little band surrendered unconditionally. In 1881 he was appointed Resident Magistrate at Outhing, Basutoland, and shortly after Commander of the Kaffrarian Police. He was much appreciated by the blacks, of whose prejudices and ideas he has a vast knowledge. He does not believe that it is necessary for the advance of civilisation that the native tribes should adopt the industrial or political methods of the whites; and his plan is, so far as possible, to leave their old customs untouched, and to employ their own chiefs to govern them. For about two years Sir Marshal Clarke was the Commander of the Turkish Reserve Egyptian Constabulary, but he returned to Basutoland in 1884 as Resident Commissioner; and in 1893 he was appointed to the same office in Zululand. He was created a K.C.M.G. in 1886, and also holds the Medjidie of the third class. He was appointed Resident Commissioner in Rhodesia.

desia in May 1898. Sir Marshal Clarke married in 1880 Annie, daughter of the late Major-General Bannastre Lloyd. Address: Eshowe, Zululand.

CLAUSEN, George, A.R.A., was born in London April 18, 1852, his father being a decorative artist, and studied at South Kensington, under the late E. Long, R.A. Here he gained several medals in the National Competitions and a National Scholarship. He continued his studies in Paris, under Fleury. He first exhibited at the Academy in 1876, his picture representing High Mass in a Zuyder Zee fishing village, and has since exhibited there, and at most other exhibitions. He paints principally rustic pictures and people in the open air—mowers, ploughmen, &c.; his picture, "Girl at the Gate," was purchased for the Chantrey Collection in 1889. Mr Clausen was elected an Associate of the Royal Water Colour Society in 1889, and a full Member in April 1898, and an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1895, and has received medals at Paris, Chicago, and Brussels (1897). He married in 1881 Agnes, daughter of George Webster, of Lynn. Address: Widdington, Newport, Essex.

CLAYDEN, Arthur William, M.A., Principal of the Technical and University Extension College, Exeter, born Dec. 12, 1855, at Boston, in Lincolnshire, is the eldest son of Mr. P. W. Clayden and his first wife Jane, and was educated at University College School and Christ's College, Cambridge. Mr. Clayden entered the University at the early age of seventeen, obtained a foundation scholarship in 1875, and graduated in the second class of the Natural Science Tripos of 1876, finishing all his examinations before his twenty-first birthday. In 1878 he was appointed Science Master at Bath College, a post which he held for nine years. In 1887 he resigned his post at Bath and removed to London on his appointment as a Lecturer on the University Extension Schemes of Cambridge and London. At the 1890 meeting of the British Association he was appointed Hon. Secretary of the Committee on Meteorological Photography. In 1893 he was made a Staff Lecturer to the Cambridge University Extension Syndicate, and was selected to fill the post of Principal in the Technical and University Extension College at Exeter, a new type of institution, under the joint control of the Exeter City Council and the University Syndicate. In addition to these appointments he was, in 1895, also made Superintendent Lecturer for the whole of the Devonshire district. Mr. Clayden is the author of numerous contributions to the Proceedings of the Physical Society, and the Quarterly Journal of the Royal Meteorological Society, and other scientific publications, being best known for his work in connection with meteorological photography, and for his working models of ocean currents. In recent years he has conducted a series of measurements of cloud altitudes by an original photographic method. He is a Fellow of the Chemical, Physical, Geological, Royal Astronomical, and Royal Meteorological Societies, and was for some years a Member of the Institute of Journalists. He married in 1888 Ethel, second daughter of A. S. Paterson, Esq. Address: St. John's, Polsloe Road, Exeter.

CLAYDEN, Peter William, eldest son of Peter Clayden, of Wallingford and Faringdon, Berks, was born at Wallingford, Oct. 20, 1827, educated privately for a business career, became minister of the Unitarian Congregation at Boston in 1855, Rochdale in 1859, and Nottingham in 1860. He joined the staff of the Daily News as a leader writer on the retirement of Miss Martineau, and on her recommendation, in 1866. In 1868, when the Daily News was reduced in price to one penny, Mr. Clayden removed to London, and became assistant editor. He acted as assistant editor and leader writer till August 1887, and then, till February 1896, was associated with Sir John Robinson in the editorship. Mr. Clayden was Liberal candidate for Nottingham, in conjunction with Mr. Charles Seely, now Sir Charles Seely, at the General Election in 1868. He unsuccessfully contested the Norwood Division of Lambeth in the Liberal interest in 1885, and the Northern Division of Islington in 1886. During his residence at Boston he edited the Boston Guardian, and at Rochdale wrote leaders for the Rochdale Observer. While at Nottingham he contributed to the Edinburgh Review, the Fortnightly Review, the Theological Review, the Cornhill Magazine, and later to various other periodicals. In 1873 he established the Reading Observer as an organ of Liberal principles in his native county, disposing of it to its present proprietors in 1879. Mr. Clayden is the author of many political and other pamphlets and books, of which these may be mentioned: "Religious Value of the Doctrine of Continuity," 1866; two works on Samuel Rogers; "England under the Coalition," 1892. He published "England under Lord Beaconsfield," 1880; "Samuel Sharpe, Egyptologist and Translator of the Bible," 1884; "The Early Life of Samuel Rogers," 1887; "Rogers and his Contemporaries," 2 vols., 1889; and "England under the Coalition" in 1892. Mr. Clayden is a member of the Executive of the National Liberal Federation, and Hon. Secretary of "The Liberal Forwards." Mr. Clayden has been President of the Institute of Journalists (1893-94), and took an active part in the successful effort to procure for the Institute a Royal Charter. He was also a President of the International Congress of the Press, held at Antwerp in 1894. Mr. Clayden has been twice married; first to Jane, eldest daughter of the late Mr. Charles Fowle, of Dorchester, in 1853 (died 1870); and second, in 1887, to Ellen (died 1897), eldest daughter of the late Mr. Henry Sharpe, whose recollections of his uncle, Samuel Rogers, have an important place in "Rogers and his Contemporaries." Address: 1 Upper Woburn Place, W.C.

CLEEVE, Lucas (Mrs. Kingscote), daughter of Sir Henry Drummond Wolff, and wife of Colonel Kingscote, is an authoress, and amongst her publications there may be mentioned: "Tales of the Sun," "Life of Eugénie Berni," "In the Ricefields," "Woman Who Wouldn't," 1895; "Lazarus," "Epicures," 1896; "The Monks of the Holy Tear," 1898, &c. She has, moreover, contributed articles to the Nineteenth Century. Address: The Beeches, Headington, Oxford.

CLELAND, Professor John, M.D. (Edinburgh), LL.D. (St. Andrews), D.Sc. (Q.U.I.), L.R.C.S.E., F.R.S., born at Perth, June 15, 1835, is the second son of the late John Cleland, surgeon at Perth, for some time Assistant Surgeon in 1st Dragoons. Dr. Cleland was appointed, in 1863, to the Chair of Anatomy and Physiology in Queen's College, Galway, and in 1877 Regius Professor of Anatomy in the University of Glasgow. He is the author of numerous Anatomical Contributions, and the following books: "Directory for the Dissection of the Human Body," 1876; "Animal Physiology," 1877; "Evolution," Expression, and Sensation," 1881; also "Scala Naturæ and other Poems," 1887. In conjunction with others he took part in the 7th edition of Quain's "Elements of Anatomy," 1867. In 1889 he published Vol. I. of "Memoirs and Memoranda in Anatomy," and "Human Anatomy, General and Descriptive," Cleland and Mackay, in 1896. He married in 1888 Ada, eldest daughter of the late Professor J. H. Balfour of the University of Edinburgh. Address: 2 University, Glasgow.

CLÉMENCEAU, Georges Benjamin, M.D., a French physician and politician, born at Moulleron-en-Pareds (Vendée) Sept. 28, 1841, began his professional studies at Nantes, and completed them in Paris, where in 1869 he was created a Doctor of Medicine, and practised at Montmartre. After the revolution of Sept. 4, 1870, he was appointed Mayor of the 18th arrondissement of Paris, and a member of the Commission of Communal Education. At the election of Feb. 8, 1871, he was elected a representative of the Department of the Seine in the National Assembly, where he took his place among the members of the Extreme Left, and voted against the preliminaries of peace. On the 18th of March he endeavoured to save the lives of the Generals Lecomte and Clément Thomas, but in vain, for he did not arrive at the Rue des Rosiers until after their execution. On this occasion the Central Committee of the Communists, which was sitting at the Hôtel de Ville, resolved that Dr. Clémenceau should be arrested; but he was fortunate enough to elude the vigilance of the insurrectionary police. When the murderers were put upon their trial, Nov. 29, 1871, some of the witnesses accused him of not having interfered as early as he might have done, but he was warmly defended by Colonel Langlois, whose testimony appeared to clear Dr. Clémenceau from all blame in the matter. However, the accusations led to a duel between Dr. Clémenceau and M. le Commandant de Poussargues, who was wounded in the leg by a pistol-shot. Dr. Clémenceau was prosecuted for this affair a month later, the result being that he was condemned by the Seventh Chamber of Correctional Police to be imprisoned for a fortnight, and to pay a fine of twenty-five francs. In the sitting of the 20th of March he introduced in the National Assembly a bill, signed by the Radical fraction of the Deputies of the Department of the Seine, to authorise the election of a Municipal Council for the city of Paris, to consist of eighty members; and he was one of those who signed the manifesto of deputies and mayors fixing the municipal elections on the 26th of that month. As a candidate at those elections he polled 752 votes, but was not elected. After having taken part in the unsuccessful attempts at conciliation between the Government and the Commune, he sent in his resignation both as Mayor and as Deputy, and retired for a short period into private life. On July 23, 1871, he was elected a member of the Municipal Council of Paris for the Clignancourt quarter, and he took a prominent part in the discussions concerning primary secular instruction and financial questions. On Nov. 29, 1874, he was re-elected a member of the Municipal Council, of which he became successively Secretary and Vice-President, and eventually President in November 1875. He was elected a Deputy for the Department of the Seine by the 18th arrondissement of Paris, Feb. 20, 1876, and afterwards he became Secretary of the Chamber. In the following April he resigned his place in the Municipal Council. He was again re-elected to the National Assembly by the 18th arrondissement of Paris at the General Elections of Oct. 14, 1877. Since that time he has been generally regarded as the leader of the Advanced Left, and as such he has made and unmade many Governments. His opposition to the Tonquin policy decided the fall of M. Ferry, and his support kept M. de Freycinet in office. He is editor and chief proprietor of the influential Radical journal La Justice. It was a resolution moved by M. Clémenceau, and insisting on a thorough investigation of the Wilson scandal, that led to the overthrow of the Rouvier Government, and the consequent fall of M. Grévy. M. Clémenceau was asked by the President to form a Ministry, but declined, and told the President plainly that the crisis was not a political, but a presidential one. He is regarded as one of the most expert swordsmen in France, and acted as one of the seconds to M. Floquet in his duel with General Boulanger in July 1888. At the General Elections of September 1889 M. Clémenceau was returned by a large majority for Draguignan, and in Parliament again made himself the mouthpiece of Radicalism. As such he uttered the famous epigram, "La Révolution est un bloc, dont on ne peut rien détacher, rien rejeter." This was spoken during a debate (January 1891) on Sardon's "Thermidor," the suppressed play. Somewhat later, on being asked if the Socialist Deputy Lafargue could be let out of prison, he announced that, Boulangism being no longer a danger, the alliance between the Radical and Opportunist Republicans was at an end, and thenceforward became an opponent of the Freycinet Ministry. During the Panama scandals he was persistently and violently attacked by opponents, who accused him of selling his country, but these accusations were found to be based on forgeries. He was, however, defeated at the General Election in September 1893, and has not since sat in the Chamber. Paris address: 8 Rue Franklin.

CLEMENS, Samuel Langhorne, generally known by his pseudonym of "Mark Twain," was born at Florida, Missouri, Nov. 30, 1835. At the age of thirteen he was apprenticed to a printer, and worked at the trade in St. Louis, Cincinnati, Philadelphia, and New York. In 1855 he became for a short time pilot on the Mississippi River, and in 1861 went to Nevada as private secretary to his brother, the Secretary of the territory. He then went to the mines, and afterwards for several months acted as reporter for Californian newspapers. He spent six months in the Hawaiian Islands in 1866, and after delivering humorous lectures in California and Nevada, returned to the East in 1867, where he published "The Jumping Frog." In that year he embarked, with a large number of other passengers, on a pleasure excursion up the Mediterranean to Egypt and the Holy Land, which he describes in "The Innocents Abroad," 1869. For a time he was editor of a daily newspaper published in Buffalo, New York State, where he married a lady possessed of a large fortune. In 1872 he visited England, giving several humorous lectures; and a London publisher made a collection, in four volumes, of his humorous papers, adding, however, many which the author asserts were never written by him. In 1874 he produced in New York a comedy, "The Gilded Age," which had a remarkable success, owing mainly to the personation, by Mr. Raymond, of the leading character, "Colonel Mulberry Sellers." Mr. Clemens is a frequent contributor to the magazines, and in addition to the books mentioned above has published: "Roughing It," 1872; "Adventures of Tom Sawyer," 1876; "Punch Brothers, Punch," 1878; "A Tramp Abroad," 1880; "The Prince and the Pauper," 1882; "The Stolen White Elephant, and other Tales," 1882; and "Life on the Mississippi," 1883. In 1884 he established in New York the publishing house of C. L. Webster & Co. (since gone out of business), which issued in 1885 a new story by him entitled "Adventures of Huckleberry Finn," a sequel to "Tom Sawyer," and brought out in that and the following year General Grant's "Memoirs," of which Mrs. Grant's share of the profits amounted to $480,000. Since then he has published "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," 1889; "The American Claimant," 1892; "Pudd'nhead Wilson," 1893; "Tom Sawyer Abroad," 1893; "The Tragedy of Pudd'nhead Wilson and The Comedy of those Extraordinary Twins," 1895; "Personal Recollections of Joan of Arc," 1896; "Following the Equator," 1897; and "How to Tell a Story, and other Stories," 1897. His books have been republished in England, and translations of the principal ones in Germany. Mr. Clemens is understood to have lost a fortune in a typesetting machine, but his deliverance from his financial troubles is, we trust, only a question of time. He is credibly rumoured to have acted heroically in the several transactions connected with his loss. In November 1897 and February 1898 he was brilliantly fêted in Vienna, and, before a German audience, had the courage to give one of his fine descriptions of the German language. His description of the Jubilee Procession in London in 1897 was published in the New York Journal, and was considered in America a magnificent performance. Address: Hartford, Connecticut.

CLEVELAND, Grover, late twenty-second President of the United States, was born at Caldwell, New Jersey, March 18, 1837. When he was three years of age his father, who was a Presbyterian minister, moved to Fayetteville, Onondaga County, New York, where they lived until 1851, when the family went to Clinton, Oneida County, leaving Grover in Fayetteville, where he remained about two years as a clerk in the village store. On the death of his father in 1853 he went to New York, and for about a year was book-keeper and assistant teacher in the Institution for the Blind. Thence he removed to Buffalo in 1855, where he studied law, and began its practice in 1859. In 1863 he was appointed Assistant District Attorney for Erie County, and in 1865 was the Democratic nominee for District Attorney, but failed to secure the election. From Jan. 1, 1871, to Jan. 1, 1874, he was Sheriff of that county, and in 1881 was elected Mayor of Buffalo. The reformed methods of administering the city's affairs instituted by him while filling that office, led to his election in the following year as Governor of the State of New York by a majority of 192,000 votes over his opponent, Judge Folger, the Republican Secretary of the United States Treasury. This phenomenal success, as indicative of the probability of his carrying New York and of attracting the Independent vote, secured him the Democratic nomination for the Presidency in 1884, and in November of that year he was elected over Mr. Blaine, the Republican candidate. Mr. Cleveland's administration, 1885-89, was marked by great prosperity to the country at large, by the admission of four new States—Washington, Montana, North Dakota, and South Dakota—to the Union, by an extension of the reform in the Civil Service begun under his predecessor, Mr. Arthur, and by a freer use of the veto-power than had generally been exercised by other Presidents. On the meeting of Congress in December 1887 he devoted his annual message mainly to the advocacy of a reduction in tariff duties in order to prevent the further increase of the surplus in the United States Treasury, which was already large, and which threatened to cause financial difficulties. This message occasioned a prolonged discussion of the principles of protection, and furnished the issue in the National Political Campaign of 1888, when Mr. Cleveland was renominated by the Democrats, and Mr. Harrison was chosen as the Republican candidate. Although the former received a popular majority larger than he had had in 1884, the latter had the greater number of electoral votes, and accordingly on March 4, 1889, Mr. Cleveland left Washington and removed to New York, where he remained in the practice of law till 1893. At the Presidential Election of Nov. 9, 1892, Mr. Cleveland defeated Mr. Harrison by another very large majority. The second inauguration of President Cleveland took place at Washington on March 4, 1893, amid great popular enthusiasm. In his inaugural address the President declared that the nation could never be prosperous without a sound and stable currency. On July 1 he convened Congress by proclamation for August 7, to consider the financial condition of the country. After a prolonged debate, and largely through the personal exertions and influence of Mr. Cleveland, the silver purchase provisions of the Sherman law were repealed by Congress, Nov. 1, 1893. The two other most important events in this administration were the controversy with Great Britain over the Venezuelan boundary line, and the passage of the Wilson tariff law. The former was happily settled without producing the serious difficulties between the two great English-speaking nations that at one time seemed possible. The Wilson Bill slightly reduced the tariff rate from that of the preceding Republican (McKinley) measure, but it also contained an income-tax clause of which President Cleveland could not approve. He did not, however, veto it, but allowed it to become a law without his signature. This provision of the Bill was subsequently declared unconstitutional by the United States Supreme Court. Mr. Cleveland was not a candidate for renomination, and since his retirement (March 4, 1897) has resided at Princeton, New Jersey.

CLIFFORD, Frederick, Q.C., was born in 1828, and called to the Bar of the Middle Temple in 1859. He served as Assistant Boundary Commissioner under the Reform Act of 1867, and was appointed one of her Majesty's Counsel in 1894. Mr. Clifford, who was for many years on the literary staff of the Times, and practises at the Parliamentary Bar, is the author of a treatise on "The Steamboat Powers of Railway Companies," 1865; and is joint author (with Mr. Pembroke Stephens, Q.C.) of a treatise on "The Practice of the Court of Referees on Private Bills in Parliament," 1870, a standard text-book in Private Bill Practice. He is also joint author of yearly volumes of Reports of cases as to the locus standi of Petitioners, decided each Session by the Court of Referees from 1867 down to the year 1884. But his chief work in this connection is a "History of Private Bill Legislation," in 2 vols., 1885-86, dedicated by permission to her Majesty the Queen; a work of great labour, research, and of general interest to historical students for the light it throws upon social progress in Great Britain. He published in 1875, "The Agricultural Lock-out of 1874; with Notes upon Farming and Farm Labour in the Eastern Counties," founded on a series of letters which appeared in the Times; and he is the author also of a treatise on "The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875"; of other Papers reprinted from the Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society; and of an article on "English Land Law," forming one of the treatises prepared under the direction of the Royal Agricultural Society, and translated and published by "La Société des Agriculteurs de France," for the "Congrès International de l'Agriculture" held in Paris in 1878. Mr. Clifford is joint proprietor with Sir William Leng of a Conservative provincial newspaper, the Sheffield Daily Telegraph, and the group of journals published by the firm of Leng & Co. in Sheffield and London. He was one of the founders and served as Chairman of the Press Association, a body of provincial newspaper proprietors, formed for the purpose of mutual and general news-supply, now developed into a very important and wide-spreading organisation, with its centre in London. Sir John Robinson, manager of the Daily News, and Mr. Clifford were the last surviving members of the Council of the Guild of Literature and Art, a charitable society, constituted by private Act of Parliament in 1858, under the patronage of the Queen and Prince Albert, chiefly by the efforts of Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, Charles Dickens, and some of the best-known literary men and artists of the day. As the benevolent objects of the founders were not fulfilled, a private Bill was promoted by Sir John Robinson and Mr. Clifford, and was passed in 1897, to dissolve the Guild and hand over its landed property (consisting of almshouses at Knebworth) and funded assets, to the Royal Literary Fund and the Artists' General Benevolent Fund, in equal shares. This work is now (in 1898) being carried out. Mr. Clifford married in 1853 Caroline, third daughter of Thomas Mason, ship-builder, of Hull. Residence: 24 Collingham Gardens, South Kensington.

CLIFFORD, John, D.D., B.Sc., LL.B., F.G.S., minister of Westbourne Park

Church, was born at Sawley, near Derby, Oct. 16, 1836, educated at the Nottingham Baptist College, 1855-58, and at University College, London, 1858-66, taking the London University degrees of B.A., 1861, B.Sc., 1862, with honours in Geology, Logic, and Moral Philosophy; M.A., 1864, bracketed first; LL.B., 1866, with honours in Principles of Legislation. Since 1858 he has been Pastor of the Westbourne Park Church, Paddington, London. He was President of the General Baptist Association, 1872; and Secretary, 1876-78, of the London Baptist Association; President, 1879; and from 1870 to 1883 (inclusive) edited The General Baptist Magazine; and was President of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland, 1888; and President of the National Council of Free Evangelical Churches of England and Wales, 1898. He is the author of "Familiar Talks on 'Starting in Life,'" London, 1872; "George Mostyn," 1874; "Is Life Worth Living? an Eightfold Answer," 1890, 7th edit., 1894; "English Baptists: Who they are, and What they have Done" (edited), 1883, 2nd edit., 1884; "Daily Strength for Daily Living, Expositions of Old Testament Themes," 3rd edit., 1890; "The Dawn of Manhood," a book for Young Men, 1886, 7th edit., 1894; "Baptist Theology," Contemporary Review, March, 1888; "The Great Forty Years," 1888; "The New City of God," 1888; "The Place of Baptists in the Evolution of British Christianity," Time, 1889; "Who are Christian Ministers?" Lippincott's Magazine, March 1890, &c.; "Christian Certainties," 1893, 4th thousand, 1897; and "The Inspiration and Authority of the Bible," 10th thousand, 1895. In 1862 Dr. Clifford married Rebecca, daughter of Dr. Carter of Newbury, Berks. Address: 50 St. Quintin Avenue, North Kensington.

CLIFFORD, Mrs. William Kingdon, novelist, is the daughter of John Lane, formerly of Barbados, son of a Speaker of Assembly in that Colony. She was married in 1875 to Professor W. K. Clifford, F.R.S., the brilliantly distinguished mathematician and philosopher, who died in 1879. At his death at the early age of thirty-three, she was granted a civil list pension, and was the recipient of a public testimonial, subscribed for by the many admirers of her husband's genius. As a girl Mrs. Clifford had already written stories, magazine articles, and an anonymous novel, and, in 1882, she published her first well-known book, "Very Short Stories and Anyhow Stories." This was followed by the powerful and painful novel or psychological study, "Mrs. Keith's Crime," 1885, by which she became famous, and this again was succeeded by "Love Letters of a Worldly Woman," 1891; "A Sad Comedy," "The Last Touches," and "Aunt Anne," 1893; "A Wild Proxy," 1894; "A Flash of Summer," 1895, and "Mere Stories," 1896. Address: 27 Colville Road, W.

CLIFTON, Professor Robert Belamy, M.A. (Cantab. et Oxon.), F.R.S., F.R.A.S., only child of the late Robert Clifton, Esq., was born at Gedney, Lincolnshire, March 13, 1836. After receiving his early education at private schools he entered University College, London, in 1852, and studied Mathematics under the late Professor de Morgan. In 1855 he proceeded to St. John's College, Cambridge, and in 1859 graduated (B.A.) as sixth Wrangler, gaining also the second Smith's Prize for proficiency in Mathematics and Natural Philosophy. In 1860 he was elected to a Fellowship in St. John's College, and also became Professor of Natural Philosophy in Owens College, Manchester, an appointment which he retained until elected Professor of Experimental Philosophy in the University of Oxford in 1865. In 1868 he was admitted a Fellow of the Royal Society. In 1869 a Fellowship in Merton College, Oxford, was conferred upon him, and he subsequently became also a Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford. Professor Clifton is the author of some papers on subjects connected with optics and electricity, but he has principally devoted himself to the development of physics as a branch of study, in the University of Oxford. The Clarendon Laboratory—the first laboratory erected in England specially for instruction in practical physics—was designed and organised by him. From 1879 to 1886 he was a member of the Royal Commission on Accidents in Mines, and he took an active part in the investigations involved in the prosecution of the inquiry. Professor Clifton has been President of the Physical Society of London, 1882–84; he is a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society, and of several other scientific societies in London, Cambridge, and Manchester. He is also a member of the Board of Visitors of the Royal Observatory at Greenwich. Addresses: 3 Bardwell Road, Banbury Road, Oxford; and Athenæum.

CLOGHER, Bishop of. See STACK, THE RIGHT REV. CHARLES MAURICE.

CLOWES, William Laird, is the eldest son of William Clowes, sometime one of the Registrars in Chancery, and was born at Hampstead, Feb. 1, 1856. Educated successively at Aldenham, King's College, London, and Lincoln's Inn, he at the last moment abandoned the Bar for journalism; and, as a special correspondent, or as a writer on technical subjects, chiefly naval, he afterwards served the Daily News, the Standard, and finally the Times, until 1895. Towards the end of the period he gradually relinquished journalism, and became a frequent contributor to the Nineteenth Century, the Fortnightly Review, the Contemporary, Blackwood, and similar publications, French and German, as well as British. Since 1883, moreover, he has specially devoted himself to the subject of naval improvement and reform, and to researches in naval history. His papers on the condition of the Navy, under the pseudonym "Nauticus"; on "The Needs of the Navy" (reprinted from the Daily Graphic); on the gunning of battle-ships (reprinted from the St. James's Gazette); on quick-firing guns; on the mission of torpedo-boats in war-time; and on the value of the ram, have been translated into many languages, and have probably, for good or evil, had an enormous influence upon naval as well as public opinion. Mr. Laird Clowes, who in 1882 married Ethel, second daughter of the late L. F. Edwards of Mitcham, served on the arts and general committees of the Royal Naval Exhibition of 1891; gained the gold medal of the United States Naval Institute in 1892; was elected a Fellow of King's College, London, in 1895; and was chosen an Hon. Member of the Royal United Service Institution, before which he has more than once lectured, in 1896. He has always been much interested in the cause of cheap literature, and it was he who induced Messrs. Cassell to begin the periodical publication of their "National Library." Equally interested in the cause of naval archæology, he first suggested in the columns of the Times the idea which later gave birth to the Navy Records Society. He is the author of numerous books, including "The Naval Pocket Book" (continued annually), "The Captain of the Mary Rose," "Blood is Thicker than Water," "The Great Peril," "The Double Emperor," and "Black America: a Study of the ex-Slave and his late Master," and he is now the editor of, and principal contributor to, "The Royal Navy: a History, from the Earliest Times to the Present," of which Vols. I., II., and III. have been published, and of which the two concluding volumes may be expected to appear in 1899. Mr. Laird Clowes, who is now permanently exiled from England on account of his health, lives at Davos, Switzerland.

CLUSERET, Gustave Paul, a French military adventurer and Communist general, was born at Paris, June 23, 1823. His father was an ancien officier of the First Empire, and became colonel of a regiment of the line under the monarchy of July. Young Cluseret studied in the military school of St. Cyr, and upon leaving, in 1845, was appointed a sub-lieutenant of his father's regiment, the 55th. In the revolution of February 1848, Cluseret was in command of a section of grenadiers told off for the protection of the Bank. When the National Guard of the quartier relieved the troops, Baron d'Argout hid the young officer and his soldiers for two days, and then assisted them to escape in disguise from the fury of the people. In the days of June, Cluseret was elected a chief of a battalion of National Guards, and for his bravery under fire was named Chevalier of the Legion of Honour. After the dissolution of the Garde Mobile he returned to his old regiment with the grade of lieutenant, and shortly afterwards was put on the retired list in consequence of a manifestation of politics adverse to the Prince-President. He was replaced at the intercession of Marshal Magnan, an old friend of his father's, and in 1853 was transferred to the Chasseurs-à-pied, with whom he went through the campaign in the Crimea, was made Captain, and, after the peace, went to Africa, where, as his biographer, M. Jules Richard, delicately puts it, "the elasticity of his principles in the matter of the ownership of property made it necessary for him to resign." In 1860 he turned up with the army of Garibaldi, where he became Lieutenant-Colonel. When the war broke out in America he joined the Federals, and fought against the South with the grade of a Colonel. After the close of the American war Cluseret founded the New Nation newspaper, and returned to France and took up the profession of journalism. Another indication of "elasticity of principles" led to the necessity of his quitting Paris, and he came over to England, where he mixed himself up with the Fenian agitation. Returning again to France, he got into trouble by reason of the publication of a newspaper article to which his name was appended, and was condemned to two months' imprisonment in St. Pelagie. There, in addition to the acquaintance of his biographer, he made that of certain agents of the International Society, the effect of which was shortly afterwards seen in his organising the strike of the shop-assistants in Paris in 1869. After the elections of June in that year, Cluseret was expelled from France at the instance of the Minister of War, who had reason to believe that the ex-captain was tampering with the sous-officiers of the garrison. Immediately upon the proclamation of the Provisional Government of Sept. 4, 1870, the exile turned up again, and his subsequent history is legibly written in the records of revolution at Marseilles, Lyons, and Paris. For a short time he was at the head of the military operations of the Paris Commune, but, like nearly all the other agents of that body, he soon fell under suspicion, and was arrested, though he was released from custody shortly before the entrance of the Versailles troops. It was reported that he was shot before Sept. 22-26, 1871; but, notwithstanding the vigilant search made for him by the police, he remained in concealment in Paris till the end of the month of December 1871, when he escaped to London. Soon afterwards he went to the United States. The Third Council of War, sitting at Versailles, condemned him to death, par contumace, Aug. 30, 1872. Cluseret and his publisher were, on Jan. 27, 1881, sentenced by default to two years' imprisonment and 3000 francs' fine for an article inciting soldiers to mutiny. He again left France and returned in 1884, when he exhibited his paintings, of which some have lately appeared in the Salon. In 1887-88 he published his Memoirs. They deal with the Second Siege of Paris, and are an apology for the Commune. In 1888 General Cluseret stood for Parliament in the Var, and was elected as a "revolutionist." He was re-elected at Toulon in 1889.

COBBE, Frances Power, daughter of Charles Cobbe, of Newbridge House, co. Dublin, D.L., J.P. (who fought at Assaye as lieutenant in the 19th Light Dragoons), was born Dec. 4, 1822, and educated at Brighton. She has been a frequent contributor to the periodicals of the day, and is the author of the following works: "An Essay on Intuitive Morals," 1855 (3rd. edit., 1859); "Religious Duty," 1857 (2nd edit., 1864); "Pursuits of Women," 1863; "Cities of the Past," 1863; "Broken Lights," 1864 (3rd edit., two American edits.); "Italics," 1864; "Studies Ethical and Social," 1865; "Hours of Work and Play," 1867; "Dawning Lights," 1868; "Alone, to the Alone," 1871 (3rd edit., 1881); "Darwinism in Morals," 1872; "Hopes of the Human Race," 1874, 1880; "Re-echoes," 1876; "False Beasts and True," 1875; "Duties of Women," 1880 (3rd English, 8th American edit., 1889); "The Peak in Darien," 1881; "A Faithless World," 1885; "The Scientific Spirit of the Age," 1888; "The Modern Rack," 1889; "The Friend of Man" (2nd edit., 1890. Beside these books Miss Cobbe has issued a great number of pamphlets, among which are: "The Workhouse as an Hospital," 1861; "Friendless Girls, and How to Help Them," 1861, containing an account of the original Preventive Mission at Bristol; "Female Education," 1862 (a plea for granting University Degrees to women), and more than two hundred pamphlets and leaflets on the vivisection question. Miss Cobbe resided for some years in Bristol with the late Mary Carpenter, for the purpose of working at her reformatory and ragged schools; and subsequently originated, in concert with Miss Elliot, a scheme for befriending young servants (now worked by the Metropolitan Association founded for that purpose); and another for the relief of destitute incurables. After journeys to Egypt, Palestine, and Greece, and several visits to Italy, Miss Cobbe joined her friend, Miss Lloyd, of Hengwrt, in taking a house in South Kensington, where she lived for twenty years. She was for a part of this time on the staff of the Echo, and subsequently on that of the Standard, and contributed largely to other newspapers and periodicals, the Quarterly Review, Fraser, &c. She was engaged, besides literary work, in promoting the Act (41 Vict. c. 19) of 1878, whereby wives whose husbands have been convicted of aggravated assaults upon them are enabled to obtain Separation Orders; and also in aiding the movement for obtaining Parliamentary suffrage for women. In 1880-81 she twice delivered to audiences of ladies a course of lectures on the Duties of Women, which have been largely circulated in America, and also translated and published in Danish, Italian, and French. During the last fifteen years Miss Cobbe has been principally occupied in founding and directing as Hon. Secretary the Victoria Street Society for the Protection of Animals from Vivisection, an Association of which the late Lord Shaftesbury was President. She resigned in 1884 her office and the editorship of the Zoophilist and the Society (now called the National Society). Having subsequently modified its programme, Miss Cobbe has withdrawn from it altogether. Miss Cobbe resides at Hengwrt, near Dolgelly; but continues to work on behalf of the cause of sentiment towards animals as opposed to the demands of biological science. Address: Hengwrt, Dolgelly, N. Wales.

COFFIN, Charles Hayden, was born at Manchester in 1862, his father and mother being Americans, who had come over from New England, U.S.A. He was educated at University College, London, intended originally to enter the medical profession, and passed the preliminary examinations. In 1885, however, he went on the stage, and being possessed of a good voice, he has gained a high reputation as a singer in comic and light opera.

He has recently appeared in "The Geisha" at Daly's Theatre, and was in 1898-99 engaged in "The Greek Slave" at the same theatre. He was married in 1892 to Adeline, daughter of Frederick de Leuw, of Gräfrath, Germany. Address: Campden Hill Cottage, Kensington, W.

COLCHESTER, Bishop Suffragan of. See JOHNSON, THE RIGHT REV. H. F.

COLERIDGE, The Hon. Stephen, second son of the 1st Lord Coleridge, was born in 1854, and married in 1879 Geraldine, daughter and co-heiress of the late Charles Manners Lushington, jun., of Norton Court, Kent, M.P. He was educated at Bradfield, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, graduating B.A. in 1876, and M.A. in 1880. He was called to the Bar in 1886. After leaving Cambridge he travelled in the East, and then went to South America for a year, where he was in Chili and Peru during the war between those countries. He visited Panama when Lesseps cut the first sod of the Canal, and he has frequently visited the United States. He was private secretary to his father, the late Lord Chief-Justice of England, from 1882 to 1890, when he was appointed Clerk of Assize on the South Wales Circuit, which office he still holds. He is the author of "Demetrius," 1887; and "The Sanctity of Confession," 1890; and has reviewed for several papers for some years. He is an artist, exhibiting his pictures regularly in the London and Provincial Galleries. But perhaps his greatest interest is in humanitarian causes. He is one of the Council of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and is a leader of the Anti-Vivisection Movement, being Hon. Secretary of the National Anti-Vivisection Society, into whose internal regulations he has introduced reforms, and over whose methods of carrying on the agitation he has exercised considerable influence. Addresses: 7 Egerton Mansions, South Kensington; and The Ford, Greywell, Hants.

COLLEN, Sir Edwin Henry Hayter, K.C.I.E., was born in 1843, and entered the Royal Artillery in 1863. He served in the Abyssinian War, 1868, in the Afghan War, 1880, and in the Soudan Expedition in 1885. In 1893 he was created a K.C.I.E. He is also a C.B. He is a Colonel on the Indian Staff Corps, and Secretary to the Military Department of the Government of India. Address: Calcutta.

COLLET, Sir Mark Wilks, Bart., J.P., was born in London in September 1816, is the second son of Mr. James Collet, a London merchant, and was educated abroad. He is a partner in the house of Brown, Shipley & Co., London; was elected a Director of the Bank of England in 1866; filled the office of Deputy Governor of the Bank from 1885 to 1887, and of Governor from 1887 to 1889. He was created a Baronet in 1888 in recognition of services rendered as Governor of the Bank in connection with the Conversion of the National Debt, effected in that year. He is a J.P. and Deputy Lieutenant for the County of Kent, and for the County of London, and also a Commissioner of Lientenancy for the City of London. Addresses: St. Clere, Kemsing, Kent; and 2 Sussex Square, W.

COLLIE, John Norman, Ph.D., F.R.S., was born at Alderley Edge, Cheshire, on Sept. 10, 1859, and was educated at Charterhouse and Clifton College. He is Professor of Chemistry to the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, Bloomsbury Square, London, W.C. He is a member of the Royal Society of Edinburgh; of the Geographical Society; of the Chemical Societies of London and Berlin; and of the Alpine Club, &c. &c. Address: 16 Campden Grove, Kensington.

COLLINGS, The Right Hon. Jesse, M.P., was born in 1831 in the parish of Littleham-cum-Exmouth in Devonshire. He comes of humble parentage, but received what in those days was considered a fair education, and at an early period of his life entered, as clerk, the Birmingham firm of Messrs. Samuel Booth & Co., subsequently becoming their representative in the South and West of England. He at length acquired their business and settled in Birmingham in 1866 as head partner in the firm of "Collings & Wallis." Taking, as he did, an active part in public work, he was in 1867 elected a member of the Birmingham Education Society, and early in 1868 published a vigorous pamphlet entitled "An Outline of the American School System: with Remarks on the Establishment of a Common School System in England." In this pamphlet, which had a large circulation, he advocated the formation of "a Society on the Principle of the Anti-Corn-Law League, national in name and constitution, refusing all compromise, its platform being National Secular (or unsectarian) Education, compulsory in rating and in attendance." Later in the same year "The National Education League" was formed, Mr. George Dixon being President, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain Chairman of the Executive Committee, and Mr. Jesse Collings Honorary Secretary. The action of the League materially assisted the passing of the National Education Act in 1870, and Mr. Collings was to the front in all its deliberations. In 1868 he became a member of the Town Council of Birmingham, and in 1878 was unanimously elected Mayor. His tenure of office was notable in many ways. In 1878-79 he did much to alleviate the prevalent distress among the poor of Birmingham by instituting the "Mayor's Fund," which gave relief to more than 10,000 families. In 1879 he was mainly instrumental in rebuilding the Central Free Libraries of Birmingham, which had been destroyed by fire. He became notorious in 1878 for his severe action against certain "Jingo" dissentients who disturbed a political meeting of which he was chairman. These persons—of whom there were some hundreds—created a disturbance at a political meeting called at the Town Hall "to consider the Afghan Policy of the Government," and were ejected by the police at Mr. Collings's request. Several of the rejected brought actions against the Mayor and others, and the case was tried in the Criminal Court, where Mr. Collings was defended by Sir Henry James. The Stipendiary, Mr. Kynnersley, declined to state a case, and the right of a chairman to eject uproarious opponents remains unsettled. About twenty years ago Mr. Collings assisted in the formation of the Agricultural Labourers' Union, and was for some time a member of its Executive Committee. His political life is intimately associated with the aims of this association. In 1880 he entered Parliament as Radical member for Ipswich, and represented that constituency till 1885. On entering Parliament he determined to devote himself chiefly to the cause of the agricultural labourer, and in 1882, after several defeats, he succeeded in passing the Allotments Extension Act. At the same time he introduced a General Allotments Bill and a Small Holdings Bill, which embodied the policy known as "Three Acres and a Cow." These bills were repeatedly defeated, until in 1886 Mr. Collings moved an amendment to the Address, setting forth the necessity for legislation favourable to the agricultural labourers. The amendment was carried, and caused the fall of the Conservative Government. In 1887 the Unionist Government passed the Allotments Bill with but slight alteration. The Small Holdings Bill was also adopted and passed in 1892, and the administration of the Act was placed in the hands of the County Councils. The Act tends to produce a peasant proprietary, and Mr. Collings holds "that not only the rural labourers, but the working men in towns and centres of industry, as well as shopkeepers, manufacturers, and traders generally, will all be benefited by the increased production of the smaller articles of food, which can alone be produced" by owners of small holdings. Mr. Collings has been a warm opponent of the action of the Charity Commissioners in rural districts. He has opposed their schemes, and to a great extent modified their policy towards the poorer classes in country districts. When in 1885 a bill was passed for disfranchising voters who had received parochial relief, he succeeded in carrying a proviso that a labourer who had been attended by a Poor Law Medical Officer should not lose his vote. In 1883 he founded the Allotments Association, but was turned out of it in 1886 owing to his having become a Unionist. He thereupon formed the present Rural Labourers' League, which aims at securing to the labourer the benefits given him under recent Acts. Mr. Jesse Collings was re-elected in 1892 to the Bordesley Division of Birmingham, which he has represented since 1886. He is author of several pamphlets on free education and peasant proprietorship. In 1858 he married the daughter of Mr. Edward Oxenbould, by whom he has one daughter, married to Mr. H. C. Field. He is a Unitarian in creed. In 1886 he was Parliamentary Secretary to the Local Government Board, and in 1891 was a member of the Royal Labour Commission. In 1895 he became a member of Lord Salisbury's Government as Under Secretary of State for the Home Department. Address: The Woodlands, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

COLLINGWOOD, Cuthbert, M.A. and B.M. Oxon., F.L.S., &c., was born at Greenwich, Dec. 25, 1826, and educated at King's College School, Christ Church, Oxford, Edinburgh University, and Guy's Hospital. He also studied in Paris and Vienna. From 1858 to 1866 he resided in Liverpool, occupying during that period the Chair of Botany in the Medical School, and that of Biology in the School of Science. He was also Senior Physician to the Liverpool Northern Hospital. Dr. Collingwood has been a Fellow of the Linnean Society since 1853, and sat on the Council in 1868. In 1866-67 he undertook as a volunteer, under the sanction of the Admiralty, a scientific voyage for the study of marine zoology, &c., visiting China, Formosa, Borneo, and Singapore, the results being recorded in "Rambles of a Naturalist on the Shores and Waters of the China Sea," 1868, in numerous papers read before scientific societies, and in scientific journals. He is the author of "A Vision of Creation," "The Travelling Birds," and numerous scientific papers. In 1876-77

Dr. Collingwood travelled in Palestine and Egypt, and published an account of his journey.

COLLINS, Right Hon. Sir Richard Henn, Lord Justice of Appeal, third son of Mr. Stephen Collins, Q.C., of Dublin, and Frances, daughter of William Henn and Susanna, sister of Sir Jonathan Lovett, of Liscombe, Bucks, Bart., was born in 1842, and was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took the highest honours in classics and moral science. He left Dublin without taking a degree, and proceeded to Downing College, Cambridge. He was bracketed fourth in the Classical Tripos, and was elected a Fellow of Downing in 1865, becoming an Hon. Fellow on the expiration of his Fellowship. Called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in November 1867, he joined the Northern Circuit, and was created a Q.C. in 1883, and elected a Bencher of his Inn in 1884. He enjoyed a large practice both as junior and as Queen's Counsel, and appeared latterly in the important licensing appeal of "Sharp v. Wakefield" in the House of Lords, and in the Clitheroe Abduction Case, in which he appeared as leading Counsel for Mr. Jackson in the Court of Appeal. He was for long well known as a sound and careful lawyer. In April 1891 he was elevated to the Bench in succession to the late Mr. Justice Stephen, who had then recently retired. He was for four years President of the Railway Commission. In 1897 he was raised to the Court of Appeal and made a Privy Councillor. He was for some years a member of the Bar Committee, and is joint editor of "Smith's Leading Cases." He married in 1868 Jane, daughter of the Very Rev. O. W. Moore, Dean of Clogher. Addresses: 3 Bramham Gardens, S.W.; and Athenæum.

COLLINS, Dr. William Job, M.D., B.Sc., F.R.C.S., D.L., J.P., is the eldest son of the late Dr. Collins of Regent's Park, and comes of a Warwickshire family. He is related through his mother and the Huguenot family of Garnault to Sir Samuel Romilly. He was born on May 9, 1859, and was educated at University College School and St. Bartholomew's Hospital, where his career was distinguished. He graduated M.B. at the University of London, with double first-class honours, and became F.R.C.S. before he was twenty-six. He was appointed Ophthalmic Surgeon to the North West London Hospital in 1884, and Assistant Surgeon and in 1896 Surgeon to the Royal Eye Hospital at Southwark. Since 1888 Dr. Collins has been Surgeon to the London Temperance Hospital. In 1892 he became a candidate, in the Progressive interest, for West St. Pancras, for the

London County Council, and was re-elected at the top of the poll in 1895 and 1898. He became Chief Whip to the Progressive Party, and later Chairman of the Party Committee. He served as Chairman of the Public Control Committee of the Council for two years, and in 1896-97 was unanimously appointed Vice-Chairman of the Council. He was elected Chairman of the London County Council in March 1897, and acted as spokesman for that body on numerous public occasions. He received the Prince and Princess of Wales when the former opened the great Thames Tunnel, at Blackwall, on behalf of the Queen, on May 22 of that year. On the occasion of the Diamond Jubilee Celebration, Dr. Collins wrote and read the first address presented to her Majesty by the London County Council. At the general election of 1895 he unsuccessfully contested West St. Pancras as a Liberal. He is a Justice of the Peace, and a Deputy Lieutenant for the County of London. He is a Fellow of the University of London, having been elected to the Senate of that body by his fellow graduates in 1893. He has taken a great interest in the question of University reform, and has given evidence before two Royal Commissions on behalf of Convocation, and in favour of maintaining the impartial and high standard of degrees for which the University has been famous. He has been a member of the London Technical Education Board from its commencement. From 1889 to 1896 he served on the Royal Commission which inquired into the working of the Vaccination Acts, and dissented from the final report of the majority of the Commission, as he objected to compulsory enforcement of the operation, and favoured a more extensive reliance on sanitary organisation and reform for the prevention of epidemics. Dr. Collins is the author of numerous contributions to medical and scientific periodicals and societies on Surgical, Ophthalmic, and Sanitary questions. He represented the London County Council and London University at the International Congress on Hygiene at Buda-Pesth in 1894, and read a paper there on the provision of Mortuaries. He took a leading part in establishing a laboratory at Claybury Asylum for the better study of the Pathology of Mental Diseases. He has endeavoured to bring the principle of evolution to bear on the nature and origin of diseases. He has published statistics of surgical operations, in which the non-alcoholic treatment has been adopted with success. In professional as in political matters he has adopted liberalism and progress. He is the author of a short account of the life and philosophy of Spinoza the Pantheist. On the formation of the new London

County Council in 1898, Dr. Collins was nominated as leader of the Progressives by a ballot of the whole party, but in May he informed the Progressive Whip that he could not undertake the responsibilities of the position. In August 1898 he married Jane S., daughter of John Wilson, M.P. for Govan. Address: 1 Albert Terrace, Regent's Park.

COLOMB, Sir John Charles Ready, K.C.M.G., D.L., J.P., Captain R.N., M.P., born May 1, 1838, is the son of General G. T. Colomb, by Mary, daughter of Sir A. B. King, Bart. He was educated privately and at the Royal Naval College, and served in the Royal Marine Artillery, 1854-69. He is the author of a series of lectures, 1869-86, delivered before the United Service Institution and Royal Colonial Institute, and subsequently published, "On the Distribution of Our War Forces"; "General Principles of Military Organisation"; "Russian Development"; "Our Naval and Military Position in the North Pacific," 1877; "The Naval and Military Resources of Our Colonies"; "The Protection of Commerce in War," 1867; "Imperial Strategy," 1871; "Colonial Defence and Colonial Opinion," 1876; "The Defence of Great and Greater Britain," 1879; "Naval Intelligence and Protection of Commerce," 1881; "The Use and Application of Marine Forces," 1883; and "Imperial Federation, Naval and Military," 1886; and has received the thanks of Colonial Governments. He has contributed to Blackwood, Fraser, Nineteenth Century, Murray's Magazine, &c. He was one of the founders of the Imperial Federation League in conjunction with the late Rt. Hon. W. E. Forster, M.P., was elected M.P. for the Bow and Bromley Division of the Tower Hamlets, 1886, and was made K.C.M.G. in 1889. He was defeated for Parliament in 1892, and elected by Great Yarmouth in 1895. He is a D.L. and J.P. for co. Kerry. He married Emily Anna, daughter of R. S. Palmer, and widow of Charles Augustus Paret, Lieut. R.N. Addresses: 75 Belgrave Road, S.W., and Dromquinna, Kenmare, co. Kerry.

COLOMB, Vice-Admiral Philip Howard, F.R.G.S., was born in Scotland on May 29, 1831, and is the third son of the late General G. T. Colomb and Mary, daughter of the late Sir A. B. King, Bart. He was educated privately, and entered the Navy in November 1846, and was promoted Lieutenant in February 1856. He was a Midshipman in H.M.S. Reynard during 1849-51, and engaged in the pursuit and capture of Chinese pirates. The Reynard was totally wrecked on the Plata Shoal in 1851. He was then appointed

Mate in H.M.S. Serpent, and took part in the Burmese War, for which he received the medal with Pegu clasp. As Mate in H.M.S. Phoenix he was in the Arctic Expedition of 1854, and was awarded the Arctic medal. During the Russian War Admiral Colomb saw considerable service in the Baltic, and as a lieutenant of H.M.S. Hastings, he engaged the batteries and gunboats on the night attack at Sveaborg. He was appointed Flag-Lieutenant to Rear-Admiral Sir T. Pasley in 1859, and during this service he invented the present system of flashing signals for night, day, and fog, and at the same time revised all the signal systems throughout. He also produced the present scheme of naval tactics, and in 1867 he was attached to the Royal Engineers to perfect military signalling. As Commander of H.M.S. Dryad he was engaged in the suppression of the slave trade. During 1874 he produced the adopted system of interior lighting, and the arrangement of voice-tubes in ships of war, and was shortly afterwards appointed Flag-Captain to Vice-Admiral Ryder on the China Station. In 1880 Admiral Colomb was chosen to command H.M.S. Thunderer, and the year following he became Captain-Superintendent of the Portsmouth Steam Reserve, which was entirely re-organised under his direction. His last appointment on the active list was that of Flag-Captain to Sir Geoffrey Hornby, G.C.B. He was placed on the retired list under the age clause in 1886, being promoted to Rear-Admiral the following year, and Vice-Admiral in 1892. Admiral Colomb's writings and essays on naval defence, and the possibilities open to modern ships of war, place him in the front rank of those who have brought the Fleet to its present state of efficiency. He is a great advocate of the torpedo boat destroyer, and believes that type of vessel will play a most important part in the next naval war. He has also been unpar-
 -paring in his efforts to induce the Admiralty to adopt a more satisfactory scheme of naval retirement. The following is a list of Admiral Colomb's works: "Slave Catching in the Indian Ocean"; "Our Peril Afloat"; "The Duel, a Naval War Game"; "The Dangers of the Modern Rule of the Road at Sea"; "Fifteen Years of Naval Retirement"; "Essays on Naval Defence"; "The Official System of Measuring the Manœuvring Powers of Ships"; "Naval Warfare"; "The Naval War Game"; "The Collision Diagram," 1896; and Editor of the "Naval Year Book." Admiral Colomb was a Lecturer on Naval Strategy and Tactics at the R.N. College, Greenwich, in 1887-88. He is a gold medallist of the Royal United Service Institution, a younger Brother of Trinity

House, and Nautical Assessor to the House of Lords. Addresses: Steeple Court, Botley, Hants; and Athenæum.

COLONNE, Jean, French musician, was born at Bordeaux, July 23, 1838, and studied at the Conservatoire, where Gierard and Sangay taught him the violin, and Ambroise Thomas counterpoint and harmony. In 1863 he obtained the first prize for violin-playing. He entered the Paris Opera as one of the first violins in the same year. In 1871 he threw up his post to found a National Concert, which afterwards became the Association artistique, whose winter concerts were first given at the Odéon, and then at the Théâtre du Châtelet. He welcomed the younger French composers, and produced the "Marie Madeleine" and "Scènes Pittoresques" of Massenet, the "Pièces d'orchestre" of Théodore Dubois, the "Fiesque" of Lalo, &c. He also gave a place to the chief works of Wagner and other foreign composers, and introduced Guilman, the organist, to Parisian audiences. In 1891 he was chosen by M. Bertrand, the Director of the Opera, as chief Conductor, and started on his duties in January 1892. He had great difficulty in getting Wagner a hearing in Paris, after the grossly insulting remarks the great Maestro had allowed himself to utter, but in 1893 he succeeded in producing "Lohengrin." M. Colonne brought his orchestra to London in 1897, and was most favourably received.

COLQUHOUN, Archibald Ross, Assoc. Mem. I.C.E., F.R.G.S., gold medallist of the Royal Geographical Society, was born off the Cape in March 1848, and is the son of the late Dr. Archibald Colquhoun, of Edinburgh, who gained renown in the H.E.I.C.S. during the first Afghan campaign. Mr. Colquhoun was educated in Scotland and on the Continent; entered the Indian Public Works Department as assistant engineer in 1871, and was first posted under Dr. Holt Hallett in the Tenasserim Division. This Division forms the Eastern portion of British Burma, and borders Siam and the Siamese Shan States. Having gained considerable experience in the railway, canal, and other divisions, in 1879 he was appointed secretary and second in command of the Government Mission despatched to Siam and the Siamese Shan States. In 1881 he returned to England on furlough, and together with Mr. Hallett formed the project for the connection of India and China and the opening up of Siam and Central Indo-China by railway, which led to the exploration by Messrs. Colquhoun and Wahab through Southern China and the Chinese Shan States in 1881-82, and by Mr. Holt

Hallett in Siam and the Siamese Shan States in 1883-84, during which they succeeded in tracing out the best route for their proposed system of railways. On his return to England Mr. Colquhoun was awarded the gold medal of the Royal Geographical Society; published "Across Chrysé," a book in two volumes, giving an account of his travels. He contributed many important letters to the Times on China and Indo-China, addressed several Chambers of Commerce, and awakened general interest in those parts of the East and in the proposed system of railways. "Among the Shans" was published in 1883. In June 1883 he left England for China and Tonquin as special correspondent of the Times; his able letters and descriptions of the people and country at once placed him in the foremost rank of correspondents, and were quickly republished. Returning to England in October, he again left for the Times in November, remaining in the East until the close of the Franco-Chinese war. He came back to England in July 1885, addressed the London Chamber of Commerce upon "English Commercial Policy in the East," proposed the annexation of Upper Burma, and the alliance of England and China so as to frustrate the aims of France and Russia in the East, and to advance the development of our commerce with China. Whilst in China he did all in his power to increase the friendly feeling of the Chinese Government for the English, and was entrusted by Li Hung Chang with a message to the Viceroy of India, proposing the early connection of India and China by telegraph, via Burma and the Burmese Shan States. In Siam he saw the King, and explained the proposed system of railways, and was subsequently informed by our Minister at Bangkok that the Siamese would construct their portion of the railway if the British would meet them with a line to the frontier. Mr. Colquhoun acted from 1885 to 1889 as a Deputy-Commissioner in Upper Burma, where he gained much credit for his able administration of affairs. In 1889 he left Burma on leave, and was appointed by Mr. Rhodes to the British South Africa Company, and employed in drawing up regulations for Mashonaland. In 1890 he accompanied the Pioneer Expedition for the occupation of Mashonaland, invested with a commission to assume the duties of Administrator and Chief Magistrate, which post he filled in 1890-91, organising the first settlement of that important colony. The Manika Treaty, which secured a valuable territory for Britain, was executed by him. In 1891 Mr. Colquhoun was invalided home, and retired from the service of the British South Africa Company in 1892. In November 1893 he retired on a pension from the service of the Government of India. In December 1893 he published "Matabeleland and our Position in South Africa," and subsequently addressed many of the leading Chambers of Commerce on "Matabeleland and our New Colony in South Africa." In 1892-93 he visited the United States, and in 1895 Central America, in order to examine the Nicaragua and Panama canal routes. He subsequently went to China. His last book (1895) is entitled "The Key of the Pacific." Club: Savage.

COLVILLE, Major-General Sir Henry Edward, K.C.M.G., C.B., was born at Kirkby Hall, Leicestershire, on July 10, 1852, his father being Charles Robert Colville, Esq., of Lullington, Burton-on-Trent, and his mother Katherine Sarah Georgina Russell, daughter of the 22nd Baroness de Clifford and Commander John Russell, R.N., son of Lord William Russell, brother of the 5th and 6th Dukes of Bedford. He is head of the senior branch of the families of Colville and Colville, which separated in the twelfth century. He was educated at Eton, and entered the Grenadier Guards in 1870. He was appointed A.D.C. to General the Hon. Sir Leicester Smythe, commanding the forces in South Africa, in 1880. He served on the Intelligence Department of the Suakim Expedition of 1884, was present at the battles of El Teb and Tamai, mentioned in despatches, and received the bronze star, medal, and clasp. He was employed on special service in the Sudan prior to the Nile Expedition of 1884-85, and during that Expedition served as D.A.A.G.; was mentioned in despatches; received the clasp, and was created C.B. At the close of the Expedition he was Chief of the Intelligence Department of the Frontier Force; was present at the action at Ginniss; was mentioned in despatches, and was promoted to the rank of Colonel. He was then attached to the Intelligence Department at headquarters, and wrote the official history of the Sudan Campaign. In 1893 he succeeded the late Sir Gerald Portal as Commissioner (Acting) for Uganda, commanded the Unyoro Expedition, which resulted in the inclusion of that country into the Protectorate; received the Central African medal, was created K.C.M.G., and received the second-class Brilliant Star of Zanzibar. He was selected for promotion to the rank of Major-General, April 12, 1898. He is the author of "A Ride in Petticoats and Slippers," 1879; an account of exploration in the Lesser Atlas; "The Accursed Land," 1884; an account of exploration in the Wady el Arabah; "History of the Sudan Campaign," compiled for the War Office, 1887; "The Land of the Nile Springs," 1895, an account of the Unyoro Campaign. He married (1) in 1880 Alice Rosa, daughter of the Hon. Robert Daly, who died in Natal in 1882; (2) in 1886 Zélie Isabelle, daughter of M. Pierre Richard de Préville, Château des Moudrans, Basses Pyrénées, by whom he has issue, Gilbert de Préville, born 1887. Addresses: Lullington, Burton-on-Trent; Lightwater, Bagshot.

COLVIN, Sir Auckland, K.C.M.G., K.C.S.I., C.I.E., son of the late John Russell Colvin, B.C.S., late Lieut.-Governor of the North-West Provinces of India, by Emma Sophia, daughter of the Rev. W. Sneyd, was born in 1838. He was educated at Eton and at Haileybury (East India) College, and entered the Indian Civil Service in 1858. In 1879 he was nominated to the charge of the Cadastre in Egypt, and became later in that year the British member of the Caisse de la Dette Publique. He was a member of the International Commission of Egyptian Liquidation in 1880, and was appointed British Controller-General in Egypt the same year. In 1881 he was created a Knight Commander of the Order of SS. Michael and George, in 1883 C.I.E., and in 1892 K.C.S.I. Sir Auckland Colvin took a prominent part in assisting and advising the Khedive on the occasion of Arabi Pasha's military demonstration on Sept. 9, 1881, and in July 1883 he received the thanks of her Majesty's Government for his services prior and subsequent to that event. After the abolition of the Dual Control (January 1883), he became Financial Adviser to the Khedive. In October 1883 he became Financial Member of the Council of the Governor-General of India, and in 1887 he was appointed Lieut.-Governor, North-West Provinces, and Chief Commissioner, Oudh, India. In 1892 he retired. He is Chairman of Burmah Railways Company and Egyptian Delta Light Railways Company. He has received the grand cordons both of the Order of the Medjidieh and of the Osmanieh. He has published "John Russell Colvin" in the "Rulers of India" Series, 1895. In 1859 he married Charlotte Elizabeth, daughter of the late Lieut.-General Charles Herbert, C.B. She died in 1865. Address: Earl Soham Lodge, Wickham Market, Suffolk.

COLVIN, Sidney, M.A., was born at Norwood, Surrey, June 18, 1845. He is the youngest son of the late Mr. Bazett D. Colvin, of the firm of Crauford, Colvin, and Co., of 71 Old Broad Street, and of Bealings, Woodbridge, Suffolk, by his wife Mary Steuart, eldest daughter of the late Mr. William Butterworth Bayley, of the East India Company's Civil Service. Mr. Colvin was educated at home and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was Chancellor's English Medalist in 1865, and where he graduated as third in the first class of the Classical Tripos in 1867. He was elected a Fellow of Trinity College in 1869; Slade Professor of Fine Arts, 1873 (re-elected 1876, 1879, 1882, and 1885); and was appointed Director of the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge, in 1876. Having been appointed Keeper of the Department of Prints and Drawings in the British Museum in December 1884, Mr. Colvin resigned the direction of the Fitzwilliam Museum at that date, and the post of Slade Professor in January 1886. He is a Member of the German Archæological Institute, and Corresponding Member of the Historical Society of Maine, U.S. Since 1867 he has been a frequent contributor, chiefly as a critic and historian of art and literature, to the Portfolio, Fortnightly Review, Cornhill Magazine, Nineteenth Century, Edinburgh Review, Macmillan's Magazine, and other periodicals. In addition to his being a contributor to periodical literature, he is the author of the following books: "Children in Italian and English Design," 1872; "Landor," in the "English Men of Letters" series, 1882; and "Keats," in the same series, 1886. He has also edited "Selections from the Writings of Walter Savage Landor," 1884; and "Letters of Keats," 1887. He is now preparing the "Life and Letters of Robert Louis Stevenson," and has during recent years edited the magnificent Edinburgh edition of Robert Louis Stevenson's collected works. Addresses: British Museum; and Athenæum.

COMMERELL, Admiral of the Fleet Sir John Edmund, G.C.B., &c., J.P., second son of Mr. John W. Commerell, of Stroud Park, Horsham, Sussex, by Sophia, daughter of Mr. William Bosanquet, of Harley Street, London, was born in London in 1829. Entering the Royal Navy in 1842, he became Lieutenant in 1848, Commander in 1855, Captain in 1859, Rear-Admiral in 1877, and Vice-Admiral in 1881. He served in China and South America, and took part in all the operations in the Parana (1845-46), especially at Punta Obligado, where he assisted in cutting the chain that defended the river. Afterwards he served in the Baltic and the Gulf of Bothnia (1854), and as Lieutenant of H.M.S. Weser was present at Sebastopol, and in several operations in the Sea of Azov. He was twice mentioned in despatches, and received the Victoria Cross for hazardous service in the Putrid Sea. He commanded H.M.S. Fury in 1859, and in July of that year he led a division of seamen in the attack on the Taku Forts. For this service he was highly praised in despatches, and promoted to H.M.S. Magicienne, in which he served during the subsequent operations in China. In 1866 he was in command of H.M.S. Terrible, and rendered active service in laying the Atlantic cable. He commanded H.M.S. Monarch on particular service in 1868-69, and in 1872-73 he served as Commodore of the second class, and senior officer in command off the Cape of Good Hope and West Coast of Africa. In August 1873, whilst reconnoitring up the river Prah to discover the position of the Ashantees, the boats were fired upon from the banks, and Commodore Commerell was so dangerously wounded as to necessitate his relinquishing the command of the station. After going to Cape Town for the cure of his wounds he returned to England, when he was nominated a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath, and appointed a Groom-in-Waiting to the Queen. Sir J. E. Commerell was second in command of the Mediterranean Fleet from July 1877 to October 1878, and was a Lord of the Admiralty from October 1879 to May 1880. He was appointed Commander-in-Chief, North American and West India Stations, in 1882, Admiral in 1886, and Admiral of the Fleet in 1892. He was Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth at the time of the Emperor of Germany's first visit to England in 1889, and was presented with a large bronze medal by the Queen to commemorate this event. From the Emperor he received a sword and an autograph letter in commemoration of the Naval Review at Spithead. Appointed Groom-in-Waiting to the Queen in June 1891, he was selected by her to be Senior Naval Officer in attendance on the German Emperor in 1891 and 1893. In December 1893 he was presented by the Sultan with the insignia of the Order of the Medjidieh of the First Class. He represented Southampton in Parliament from 1885 to 1888, and voted as a Conservative. He married in 1853 a daughter of J. Bushby, Esq. Address: 45 Rutland Gate, S.W.

COMMON, Andrew Ainslie, F.R.S., F.R.A.S., was born Aug. 7, 1841, at Newcastle-on-Tyne, and is the son of Thomas Common, surgeon. He was educated privately, was elected a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society in 1876, Fellow of the Royal Society in 1885, was President of the Royal Astronomical Society in 1895-96, and Gold Medallist for work in Celestial Photography, carried on principally at his observatory at Ealing, near London, where he has one of the largest equatorial telescopes, and has been most successful in obtaining photographs of the heavens, including nebulae and stars of the eleventh magnitude. He has also made many large reflecting equatorials, one of which is the largest known. Address: Eaton Rise, Ealing.

COMPTON, The Right Rev. Lord Alwyne Frederick, D.D., Bishop of Ely, is a younger son of the 2nd Marquis of Northampton, by the eldest daughter of the late Major-General Douglas Maclean Clephane, of Torloisk, N.B. He was born in 1825, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of M.A., coming out as a wrangler in 1848. He was appointed rector of Castle Ashby, Northamptonshire, in 1852, and nominated to an honorary canonry in Peterborough Cathedral in 1856. He was made rural dean of Preston Deanery in 1874, and in 1875 was appointed to the Archdeaconry of Oakham, which he held till October 1879, when he was nominated by Lord Beaconsfield to the Deanery of Worcester, in succession to the late Dr. Yorke. He held this post until 1885, when he was appointed Bishop of Ely in succession to the late Dr. Woodford. Lord Alwyne Compton was for some years an active and zealous member of the Convocation of the Clergy, both as Proctor for the diocese of Peterborough and also as Archdeacon. He was appointed Lord High Almoner in 1882. His Lordship is married to a daughter of the late Rev. Robert Anderson, of Brighton. Addresses: The Palace, Ely; Ely House, 37 Dover St., W.; and Athenæum.

CONGER, Edwin H., was born in Knox County, Illinois, March 7, 1843, and was graduated from Lombard University, Galesburg, Illinois, in 1862. Immediately after graduating he entered the Army, and became Lieutenant, Captain, and Brevet-Major for gallant and meritorious action in the field. After the war between the States was over he studied law, was admitted to the Bar, and practised his profession in Galesburg. In 1868 he removed to Iowa, and engaged in stock-raising and banking. He was Treasurer of the State of Iowa from 1882 to 1885, and was elected to Congress in 1884; served three terms in Congress, and was made United States Minister to Brazil by President Harrison. In 1897 he was sent as United States Minister to China.

CONGREVE, Richard, M.A., M.R.C.P. (1866), third son of Thomas and Julia Congreve, born at Leamington, Hastings, Warwickshire, Sept. 4, 1818, was educated at Rugby under Dr. Arnold, and became successively Scholar, Fellow, and Tutor of Wadham College, where he graduated B.A. in 1840, taking first-class Honours in Classics. Having acted for some time as an Assistant Master at Rugby, he returned to Oxford, where he resumed his Tutorship at Wadham College. In 1855 he published a small volume on the history of the Roman Empire of the West, and an edition of Aristotle's "Politics," with notes (2nd edit. 1874). He resigned his Fellowship, and after deeply studying the social and religious system of the late M. Comte, embraced it as the best solution of the social and religious difficulties which surrounded him. Mr. Congreve has since published "Gibraltar," a pamphlet on Indian matters, in which he recommends England to give up its Indian Empire as indefensible; "Italy and the Western Powers"; "Elizabeth of England"; various translations from Comte, such as "The Catechism of Positive Religion," 1858; "Essays: Political, Social, and Religious," 1874; and some sermons.

CONNAUGHT and STRATHEARN, Duchess of, Her Royal Highness the Princess Louise Margaret of Prussia, born July 25, 1860, and married at Windsor Castle March 13, 1879, is the third daughter of the late Prince Frederick Charles, and grand-niece of the late Emperor William of Germany. Her Royal Highness has three children—the Princess Margaret Victoria Charlotte Auguste Norah, born at Bagshot Park Jan. 16, 1882; the Prince Arthur Frederick Patrick Albert, born at Windsor Castle Jan. 13, 1883; and the Princess Victoria Patricia Helena Elizabeth, born March 17, 1886.

CONNAUGHT and STRATHEARN, Duke of, His Royal Highness Arthur William Patrick Albert, K.G., K.T., K.P., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., G.C.V.O., G.C.B., G.C.M.G., A.D.C., General, Prince of the United Kingdom, the third son of her Majesty Queen Victoria, was born at Buckingham Palace May 1, 1850. He entered the Military Academy at Woolwich as a cadet in 1866, became a Lieutenant in the Royal Engineers in 1868, and a Lieutenant in the Royal Artillery in February 1869. He was appointed a Lieutenant in the Rifle Brigade in August 1869, and a Captain in excess of the establishment of the regiment in 1871. On attaining his majority in the last-named year, Parliament voted him a grant of £15,000 per annum, and an addition of £10,000 was voted on his marriage in 1879. Prince Arthur was created Duke of Connaught and Strathearn, and Earl of Sussex, May 26, 1874, and took his seat in the House of Lords on the 8th of the following month. At a Council held at Windsor May 16, 1878, the Queen declared the intended marriage of the Duke of Connaught and Strathearn to Princess Louise Margaret of Prussia, third daughter of the late Prince Frederick Charles, and grand-niece of the late Emperor William of Germany. The marriage was celebrated at Windsor March 13, 1879. His Royal Highness's staff services are: Brigade-Major at Aldershot in 1873; Brigade-Major to the Cavalry Brigadier at the same quarters in 1875, in the October of which year he was appointed Assistant Adjutant-General at Gibraltar, which post he held until April 1876. In 1880 he was made a General of Brigade at Aldershot. He commanded the Guards Brigade in the First Division in the Expedition to Egypt in 1882; was present at the battles of Mahshuta and Tel-el-Kebir, and was three times mentioned in despatches. He thus fulfilled one of his dearest ambitions, which was to see active service. It was suggested at the time that he had been expressly kept out of danger, but this was categorically denied by Lord Wolseley. He was appointed in October 1882 Honorary Colonel of the 13th Bengal Lancers serving in Egypt. In 1883 he assumed command of the Meerut Division in the Bengal Presidency, and in 1886 was appointed to the command of the Bombay army. In September 1886 the Duke, accompanied by the Duchess, left England for India, arriving at Bombay September 27. His Royal Highness was Commander-in-Chief of the forces in the Bengal Presidency until 1890, and, on his returning home, of the Southern District in England. He was promoted to the full rank of General (April 1893), and was appointed Commander-in-Chief at Aldershot in August, in succession to Sir Evelyn Wood, vacating this post, in which he has been deservedly popular with all ranks, October 1898. In June 1898 he was made G.C.B. In 1898 he was present at the French autumn manoeuvres as the guest of the late President Faure.

CONNEMARA, Lord, The Right Hon. Robert Bourke, G.C.S.I., third son of the 5th Earl of Mayo, was born at Hayes, co. Meath, June 11, 1827, and educated at Enniskillen School, at Hall Place, Kent, and at Trinity College, Dublin. Called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1852, he went the South Wales Circuit, and attended the Knutsford sessions for twelve years. Mr. Bourke also had a large business at the Parliamentary Bar. He was elected M.P. for Lynn Regis, in the Conservative interest, at the general election of December 1868, and continued to represent that borough in the House of Commons until 1886. When Mr. Disraeli came into power in February 1874, Mr. Bourke was appointed Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and he held that office till April 1880, when he was added to the Privy Council. In 1880 he was commissioned to go to Turkey to arrange the external debt of that country, and succeeded in effecting a settlement of the question. In 1885 he resumed his former place at the Foreign Office under Lord Salisbury, and remained there till the defeat of the Government in January 1886. On the retirement of Sir M. E. Grant-Duff, in 1886, he was appointed Governor of Madras, and resigned that post in 1890. He was created 1st Lord Connemara in 1887, for distinguished service as Under-Secretary of Foreign Affairs. He has travelled in America, India, and the Holy Land, and contributed his views upon these countries to various magazines. He is also the author of "Parliamentary Precedents." He married in 1863 Lady Susan Georgiana, eldest daughter of the 1st Marquis of Dalhousie, and secondly, on Oct. 23, 1894, Gertrude, widow of Edward Coleman, Esq., of Stoke Park, and daughter of James Walsh, Esq., of Park Place, Hampton. She died on Nov. 23, 1898. Addresses: 43 Grosvenor Square; and Athenæum.

CONRAD, Joseph, novelist, is of Polish extraction, his early years having been spent in Poland. His grandfather was a soldier of the great Napoleon's Grande Armée, and his father was a Polish revolutionist, who underwent a term of imprisonment for his political principles, and died at Warsaw, whence his son, at the age of thirteen, reached Paris, and afterwards Marseilles, where he became a merchant seaman. He is now a captain in the merchant service. His first book, "Almayer's Folly," published in 1895, achieved instant success, and has been followed by "An Outcast of the Islands," 1896, and "The Nigger of the Narcissus," 1897, which was one of the literary sensations of the year. In 1898 he published "Tales of Unrest," and for this work obtained one of the three £50 prizes annually awarded by the Academy to writers of decided promise, the other winners being Mr. Sidney Lee and Mr. Maurice Hewlett, author of "The Forest Lovers." Address: Pent Farm, Stanford, Hythe, Kent.

CONROY, Sir John, Bart., M.A., F.R.S., the only child of Sir Edward Conroy and Lady Alicia, daughter of the 2nd Earl of Rosse, was born in Kensington on Aug. 16, 1845, and succeeded his father as 3rd Baronet in 1869. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated with first-class Honours in Natural Science in 1868. He was for many years Lecturer in Natural Science at Keble College, and is now Fellow and Bedford Lecturer of Balliol College. Addresses: Balliol College, Oxford; and Athenæum.

CONSTANS, Jean Antoine Ernest, French statesman, was born at Béziers, May 3, 1833, studied law at Toulouse, and then became Professor of Law at Douai, Dijon, and Toulouse. He was elected to the Chamber of Deputies in 1876 as member for Toulouse, and became part of the Republican majority, and voted against the Broglie Ministry on the vote of want of confidence which caused its fall in 1877. In 1879 he became Under-Secretary of the Interior, and on M. Lepère's resignation in 1880, he was promoted to Minister of the Interior in the Freycinet Cabinet, which post he retained in the Ferry Cabinet of the same year. He resigned with that Cabinet in 1881, when Gambetta took office, and supported the revision of the Voting Laws, substituting scrutin de liste for scrutin d'arrondissement, which passed into law in 1885. In 1886 he was sent by M. de Freycinet as Envoy Extraordinary to China, where he obtained valuable concessions for France as modifications of the Treaty of Tientsen. He was returning to Europe in 1887 when he received at sea his nomination as Governor-General of French Indo-China, a post that had been so fatal to his predecessors, Paul Bert and M'Ilipinni. After a few months of wise administration and conciliation to the natives, he returned on leave to Paris, where his views on Colonial policy did not meet with the approval of the Colonial Office. Accordingly, in 1888, he proposed a vote of censure in the Chamber on the Colonial Minister, which naturally led to the resignation of his post. In 1889 he was offered the portfolio of Minister of the Interior in the Tirard Cabinet, which he accepted, and in that year accomplished three great works: the organisation of the Universal Exhibition of that year, the struggle against Boulanger, and the direction of the elections under the new laws. The second of these obtained for him enormous notoriety, and led to the total defeat of the General, who fled to Belgium, April 2, 1889, and was condemned in his absence to transportation, August 14. The elections of 1889 were very violent, as the Conservatives and Boulangists united against the Republicans, but M. Constans was triumphantly re-elected for Toulouse, and two months after was elected to the Senate. In 1892 he was attacked by Rochefort in the Intransigeant, and two survivors of Boulangism brought up a vote of censure on him in the Chamber, during which a free fight occurred in consequence of M. Constans striking his accuser violently on his descent from the tribune. The vote was defeated by 339 votes to 43. M. Constans resigned his position in 1892, and has not since taken part in any Ministry. He has been often called "the strong man of France." Paris address: 93 Avenue des Champs Elysées.

CONSTANT, Jean Joseph Benjamin, a French painter, born at Paris, June 10, 1845, studied in the École des Beaux-Arts, and then entered the atelier of M. Cabanel. The first picture which he sent to the Salon was "Hamlet et le Roi," 1869; and he has since exhibited "Trop tard," 1870; "Samson et Déborah," 1872; "Femmes du Riff (Maroc)" and "Bouchers maures à Tanger," 1873; "Coin de Rue" and "Carrefour à Tanger," 1874; "Prisonniers Marocains," "Femmes de Harem à Maroc," and "Le Dr. Guéneau de Massy," 1875; "Mohamed II., le 29 Mai 1453," a picture of colossal dimensions, afterwards sent to the Exposition Universelle of 1878; "M. Emmanuel Arago," 1876; "La Soif," "Le Harem," and "Hamlet au Cimetière," 1878; "Le Soir sur les Terrasses au Maroc" and "Favorite de l'Emir," 1879; "Le dernier Rebelle," 1880; "Herodiade," 1881; "Le Lendemain d'une Victoire à l'Alhambra," 1882; "La Vengeance du Chérif," 1885, a large picture, which is typical of M. Constant's latest manner—an Oriental subject, as melodramatic as possible; ample opportunities for painting the nude; and strong effects of colour. He exhibited "Judith" and "Justinien," 1886; "Orphée" and "Theodora," 1887; decorative panels for the new Sorbonne, 1888; "Le Jour des Funérailles," a scene in Morocco, 1889; "Beethoven" and "Victrix," 1890. The painter has received several medals, and is one of the most successful and most studied members of the modern French school. M. Constant, who was promoted to the rank of Officer of the Legion of Honour in 1884, married one of the daughters of Rue Emmanuel Arago. Paris address: 27 Rue Pigalle.

CONWAY, Dr. Moncure Daniel, lately minister of the South Place Ethical Society, was born in Virginia on March 17, 1832, and is the son of Americans of the best Revolutionary stock, his father being Walker Peyton Conway, Justice of Stafford County, descended from the Washingtons, and his mother Margaret Eleanor Daniel, granddaughter of Thomas Stone, who was one of the signatories of the Declaration of Independence. Educated at Dickinson College, Pennsylvania, he studied law and entered the Methodist Ministry in 1850. In 1852 he entered the Unitarian Divinity College at Harvard, followed a course in Divinity, and became a Unitarian preacher at Washington in 1854. So strenuously did he denounce slavery from the pulpit that he was compelled to leave this cure. He became Unitarian minister in Cincinnati in 1857. In 1861 the war between North and South broke out, and he proceeded on a lecturing campaign against slavery in the Northern States. For this tour he accepted no pecuniary reward. Putting his belief in emancipation into practice, he colonised his father's slaves in Ohio. For a short time he lived at Concord, and while there was editor of the Boston Commonwealth. In 1863 he came to England to lecture on the war, and in the following year began his much-talked-of career as minister of South Place Chapel, the ethical or religious teaching of which community is of the most advanced kind. In the Franco-German War he was with the Germans as correspondent of the New York World. Mr. Moncure Conway, besides being well known as a lecturer and preacher of advanced views, has been for years a leading figure in the literary world of London and New York. He has written voluminously for the reviews and magazines, and has published: "Tracts for To-day," 1857; "The Rejected Stone," 1861; "The Golden Hour," 1862; "The Earthward Pilgrimage," "The Sacred Anthology," 1872; "Idols and Ideals," 1874; "Travels in South Kensington," 1875; "Demonology and Devil-lore," 1879; "The Wandering Jew," 1880; "Emerson at Home and Abroad," 1882; "Thomas Carlyle," 1886; "Life of Edmund Randolph," 1887; "Nathaniel Hawthorne," 1890; "Barons of the Potomack and Rappahannock," and "Life of Thomas Paine," 1892; and a standard edition of Tom Paine's works, which appeared between the years 1893 and 1896. In 1897 Dr. Moncure Conway resigned his ministry. He married in 1858 Ellen Davis Dana. Address: 305 West Seventieth Street, New York.

CONWAY, Sir William Martin, was born at Rochester in 1856, and is the son of the late Rev. William Conway, who became eventually Canon of Westminster. He was educated at Repton, and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took his M.A. degree, and continued to reside until about 1880. At Cambridge he was much influenced by Henry Bradshaw, the celebrated University Librarian, who took a keen interest in the early history of printing and wood-engraving; and at his suggestion Mr. Conway, after visiting the most important libraries of Europe, for the purpose of collecting material, published his "History of the Wood-cutters of the Netherlands," an authoritative work.

After lecturing for a short time on the History of Art under the University Extension, he was in 1884 appointed the first Professor of Art in University College, Liverpool, a post which he held for three years. Whilst at Liverpool he assisted in organising an association for the advancement of art, and succeeded in bringing about the holding of three congresses at Liverpool, Edinburgh, and Birmingham. After resigning his professorship, he spent nine months travelling in Egypt, on the Nile, in Syria, Greece, Turkey, and Asia Minor, also visiting Algiers and the south of Spain. On his return to England he published several books, of which there may be mentioned: "A History of Flemish Art"; a work on "The Literary Remains of Albert Dürer"; a "Study of Reynolds and Gainsborough"; and "The Dawn of Art," a work treating of prehistoric art and the arts of Chaldea, Assyria, Egypt, &c. In 1892 Mr. Conway, who, as a mere schoolboy, had gone in for mountain-climbing, and had soon become a member of the Alpine Club, conducted a mountaineering and exploring expedition to the Himalayas, receiving for this purpose grants from the Royal Society, the Royal Geographical Society, and the British Association. During the expedition he crossed the longest glacier pass in the world, and climbed a peak nearly 23,000 feet high—the greatest altitude reached till then, except in balloons. As a result of this feat in climbing, he published in 1893 two volumes entitled "Climbing and Exploration in the Kara-Koram Himalayas." In 1894 Mr. Conway traversed the whole range of the Alps from end to end; and in 1896 and 1897 he made the first exploration of the interior of Spitzbergen, which is described in "The First Crossing of Spitzbergen," 1897. In August 1898, having sailed for Bolivia with the experienced Swiss guides Antoine Maquignaz and Louis Pelissier, who made the first ascent of Mount St. Elias in Alaska in 1897 with the Duke of Abruzzi, he successfully accomplished the ascent of a high peak in the Andes (22,000 ft.), and has subsequently had many strange experiences while exploring and surveying in South America. He is a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, and of the Geographical Society; and has been Chairman of the Managing Committee of the Incorporated Society of Authors, being re-elected in 1898 in succession to Mr. Rider Haggard. In 1895 he received the honour of knighthood, and in the same year he contested Bath as a Parliamentary candidate in the Liberal interest. He married a daughter of C. Lambard of Maine, U.S.A. Address: The Red House, Thornton Street, Kensington, W.

COOK, Charles Henry ("John Bickerdyke"), M.A., novelist and journalist, was born in London in 1858. He was educated at Baden-Baden, and at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, where he graduated M.A. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1880. He is the author of "An Irish Midsummer Night's Dream," 1884; "With the Best Intentions," 1884; "The Curiosities of Ale and Beer" (in collaboration with J. M. Dixon), 1886; "Angling in Salt Water," 1887; "Book of the All-Round Angler," 1888; "Thames Rights and Thames Wrongs," 1894; "A Banished Beauty," 1894; "Days in Thule with Rod, Gun, and Camera," 1894; "Sea-Fishing" (Badminton Library), 1895; "Days of My Life on Waters Fresh and Salt," 1895; "The Best Cruise on the Broads," 1895; "Lady Val's Elopement," 1896; "Wild Sports in Ireland," 1897; "Daughters of Thespis," 1897; "Her Wild Oats," 1898; "Practical Letters to Young Sea-Fishers," 1898. He has been a regular contributor to the Field since 1884, and has written for Blackwood's Magazine, the Saturday Review, the Graphic, Chambers's Journal, Baily's Magazine, the New Review, &c., &c. He has done a good deal of work in connection with preserving public rights on the Thames, and in Thames Fishery preservation. He was founder of the Henley-on-Thames Fishery Preservation Society, and took a leading part in founding the British Sea-Anglers' Society. He is Hon. Counsel to the Reading and South Berks Footpath Preservation Society; is on the Committee on the National Footpath Preservation Society and Fly-Fishers' Club; is Vice-President of the British Sea-Anglers' Society; and is President of the Thames Restocking Association. Addresses: Elmlea, Southstoke, Oxon.; and Regatta View, Gurnard, Cowes, I.W.

COOK, Edward Tyas, M.A., editor of the Daily News, born at Brighton in 1857, is the fifth son of the late Mr. Silas Kemball Cook, Secretary and House Governor of the Seaman's Hospital, Greenwich. He was educated at Winchester College, 1869-76 (head of the school), and went with a Scholarship to New College, Oxford. First Class Classical Moderations, 1877; First Class Greats (Classics), 1880; President of the Union and of the Palmerston clubs; graduated B.A., 1880; M.A., 1883. He was Secretary of the London Society for the Extension of University Teaching, 1882-85; and joined the staff of the Pall Mall Gazette, 1883, of which he was appointed editor, in succession to Mr. W. T. Stead, 1890. On the sale of the paper to Mr. W. W. Astor, and a consequent change in its politics, he resigned the editorship (October 1892). A new Liberal journal, the Westminster Gazette, was thereupon founded by George Newnes, M.P., and Mr. Cook was appointed editor (Jan. 31, 1893). He is the author of "A Popular Handbook to the National Gallery" (5th edit., 1897); and "Studies in Ruskin" (2nd edit., 1891). In 1896 he was appointed editor of the Daily News. He married in 1884 Emily, daughter of the late John Forster Baird, Bowmont Hill, Northumberland. Address: 6 Tavistock Square, W.C.

COOK, The Rev. Joseph, LL.D., born at Ticonderoga, New York, Jan. 26, 1838, was educated at Yale and Harvard, graduating in 1865. He afterwards studied four years at the Andover Theological Seminary, and then spent two years in Germany and in foreign travel. Since his return to America he has resided principally at Boston, where he has delivered a series of more than two hundred "Boston Monday Lectures," for which he is principally noted. He has repeated these lectures in other cities of the United States, and has published them in eleven volumes, 1877-88, under titles of "Biology," "Conscience," "Hereditry," "Labor," "Marriage," "Orthodoxy," "Socialism," "Transcendentalism," "Occident," "Orient," and "Current Religious Perils." Numerous editions of these books have appeared in England. In 1880-83 Mr. Cook, with his wife, made a tour of the world as a lecturer on philosophical and religious topics, and spoke to great audiences in England, Scotland, Ireland, India, Japan, and Australia. In 1888 he founded Our Day, a monthly record and review of current reform, and is its editor, with the co-operation of ex-President Cyrus Hamlin and other eminent specialists. Mr. Cook took a prominent part in the "World's Parliament of Religions," held at Chicago during seventeen days of September 1893, in connection with the Columbian Exposition. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Howard University (Washington) in 1890.

COOK, Mrs. Russell, born in 1857, is the eldest daughter of Mr. T. Eustace Smith, late M.P. for Tynemouth. She lived, when a child, at Gosforth House, Newcastle-on-Tyne, was educated at Orleans, and passed the public examination for French schoolmistresses. In 1878 Mrs. Russell Cook, then Mrs. Ashton Dilke, became an active member of the Woman's Suffrage Society, and has delivered lectures and speeches on the subject of female suffrage all over England. She wrote in 1885 a book on the subject as part of the "Imperial Parliament Series," edited by Mr. Sydney Buxton, M.P. Mrs. Cook became in 1883 trustee for the Weekly Dispatch newspaper, over the policy and arrangements of which she has since then kept a general control. She has been active in the promotion of many schemes for the improvement of the position of women, and has served on the councils of many Working Men's and Radical Clubs. She was elected in November 1888 member of the London School Board for the West Lambeth Division, and as such was a strong advocate of free education and a progressive educational policy. She is not a member of the present London School Board. She married in 1876 Ashton W. Dilke, second son of the late Sir C. Wentworth Dilke, who became M.P. for Newcastle in 1880, and died in 1883 at Algiers. Her second husband is Mr. Russell Cook.

COOKE, Mordecai Cubitt, botanist, was born on July 12, 1825, at Horning, Norfolk, where his parents owned the general village shop. He received but scant education as a boy, pursuing his self-training whilst occupied as a schoolmaster. When employed in this capacity he studied economic botany, taught elementary botany to evening classes, and published his manual of "Structural Botany," which recently reached its thirty-fifth thousand. From this time also dates his first application to the study of fungi, in which he subsequently acquired his chief reputation. He has published, among a numerous collection of works, the "Manual of Botanic Terms," 1862; "A Plain and Easy Account of British Fungi"; "Rust, Smut, Mildew, and Mould"; "A Fern Book for Everybody," 1867; the "Handbook of British Fungi"; "Fungi: their Nature, Influence, and Uses," 1874; "Mycographia," 6 parts; "Illustrations of British Fungi," 8 vols., containing 1200 plates from outlines in pen and ink executed by himself; "British Fresh Water Algæ"; "Introduction to Fresh Water Algæ," 1890; "British Edible Fungi," 1891; "Vegetable Wasps and Plant Worms," 1892; "Edible and Poisonous Mushrooms," 1894; "An Introduction to the Study of Fungi," 1895. Mr. Cooke is an Associate of the Linnæan Society, and possesses the honorary degree of M.A. of the St. Lawrence University of New York, and of Yale University. In 1861 he entered upon his duties at the India Museum, in association with the impending Exhibition of 1862, and from that time to his retirement at the close of 1892 he was in the service of the Secretary of State for India as a scientific expert. During the last twelve years of that period, and after the disruption of the India Museum, he was detailed on special duty at Kew Gardens, where he had charge of and was referee on all subjects connected with fungi. Some years ago his entire herbarium and portfolios of drawings of fungi were acquired by the authorities for the National Herbarium at Kew. Any one glancing over the pages of the eight volumes of Saccardo's "Sylloge" will find evidence of his activity in Mycology, since there is scarcely a page in which his name does not occur. Since the death of the Rev. M. J. Berkeley he has been the oldest active mycologist in Europe, having been continuously working and writing on the subject for more than thirty years. Address: 146 Junction Road, N.

COOLEY, Thomas McIntyre, LL.D., was born at Attica, New York, Jan. 6, 1824. In 1843 he removed to Michigan, where he was in 1845 admitted to the Bar. In 1857 he was appointed to compile and publish the laws of the State, and in 1858 he was made reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court, a position which he held for several years, during which he published eight volumes of reports, followed by a digest of all the decisions of the State. In 1859 the law department of the University of Michigan was organised, and he was chosen one of the professors, and subsequently became Dean of the Faculty, holding the position until 1885, after which he was for three years Professor of Constitutional History in the same institution. For three years he was Lecturer on Governmental subjects in Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore. In 1864 he was appointed to fill a vacancy on the Bench of the Supreme Court of the State, a position which he held for twenty-one years, being a part of the time Chief Justice. In 1887 he was appointed by the United States Circuit Court at Chicago Receiver of the Wabash Railway Company, and took upon himself the management of that road, but resigned it after a few months' service at the urgent request of President Cleveland to accept the appointment of Commissioner under the Interstate Commerce Law for the Regulation of Railroads. He was chosen by his Associates Chairman of the Commission, and held the office for four years, when his health so completely gave way in consequence of overwork that he was obliged to resign, and since then has held no public office. He has published "The Constitutional Limitations which rest upon the Legislative Power of the States of the American Union," 1868, which has gone through several editions; an edition of Blackstone's "Commentaries," 1870, and of Story's "Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States, with Additional Chapters on the New Amendments," 1873; "Law of Taxation," 1876; "Law of Torts," 1879; "General Principles of Constitutional Law in the United States," 1880; and, for a series of State histories, "Michigan: a History of Governments," 1885. He published "The Elements of Torts," 1895. He furnished nearly all the legal articles in Appleton's "American Encyclopædia," 1873-76, and has been a voluminous writer for magazines and reviews, mostly on legal subjects. His articles which of late have attracted most attention have been one in opposition to the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States, and a number insisting upon the right, the power, and the duty of the Senate of the United States to proceed to put a stop to the obstructive measures of the minority on such questions as the repeal of the Silver Purchase Clause of the Sherman Act, and to vote upon such subjects directly. He has received the degree of LL.D. from both Michigan University and Harvard University.

COOPER, Alfred, F.R.C.S., F.R.C.S.E., was born at Norwich on December 28, 1838, and is the son of William Cooper, Esq., B.A. Oxon., Barrister-at-Law of the old Norfolk Circuit, and late Recorder of Ipswich. He was educated at Merchant Taylors' School, and entered St. Bartholomew's Hospital in 1858. He is a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of England and Scotland, and a member of Council of the Royal College of Surgeons of England. He was appointed Surgeon-in-Ordinary to his Royal Highness the Duke of Saxe-Coburg Gotha (Duke of Edinburgh) in 1897; is Consulting Surgeon to the West London Hospital; Senior Surgeon to St. Mark's Hospital for Fistula, &c.; and Surgeon to the Royal Society of Musicians. He has published "Diseases of Rectum and Anus" (1st edit. 1887, 2nd edit. 1892). He is Chevalier of the Order of St. Stanislaus, 1874; has the Victoria Decoration and the Jubilee Medal. In 1882 he married the Lady Agnes, sister of the Duke of Fife. Addresses: 9 Henrietta Street, Cavendish Square, W.; and Cooper Angus Lodge, Whiting Bay, Isle of Arran.

COOPER, Charles Alfred, F.R.S.E., editor of the Scotsman, was born at Hull, Yorkshire, on Sept. 16, 1829. He is the eldest son of Charles Cooper, architect, and was educated at the Hull Grammar School, and early in life entered the office of the Hull Packet, a weekly newspaper of good standing. There he became a reporter, and took a share in sub-editorial work. In 1861 he removed to London, and entered the gallery of the House of Commons as a reporter for the Morning Star. Of this paper he subsequently became the sub-editor, and held the post until 1868, when he became assistant-editor of the Scotsman, in which capacity he served for several years. In 1876 he became editor of the Scotsman, and in 1881, in recognition of his services to the Liberal party, he was made a member of the Reform Club, without a ballot, on the nomination of the political committee. Earlier he had taken a great interest in the opening of the gallery of the House of Commons to the reporters of provincial newspapers, and he had the gratification of seeing this object gained. He has published "Seeking the Sun," a series of letters from Egypt, 1891; "Letters on South Africa," 1895; "An Editor's Retrospect," 1896. He married in 1852 Susannah, eldest daughter of Thomas Towers, of Hull. She died in 1887. Address: 41 Drumsheugh Gardens, Edinburgh, &c.

COOPER, Sir Daniel, Bart., acting Agent-General for New South Wales in England, was born at Bolton-le-Moors, Lancashire, on July 1, 1821, and was educated at University College, Gower Street. He went out to New South Wales, and was for some years a merchant at Sydney, where he was elected member of the Legislative Council in 1848. Under the new constitution, he was first Speaker in 1856. From 1855-61 he was President of the Bank of New South Wales. He owns large estates in that colony, and has represented it thrice in this country as acting Agent-General, and at all the great International Exhibitions of recent years. He married in 1846 Miss Elizabeth Hill. Address: 6 De Vere Gardens, Kensington, W.

COOPER, Edward Herbert, novelist, was born at Newcastle-under-Lyne, on Oct. 6, 1867, and is the eldest son of the late Samuel Herbert Cooper, of New Park, Prentiss, Staffordshire. He was educated at University College, Oxford, where he gained a third class in Modern History in 1889 (B.A. 1890). In 1896 he was Secretary of the Suffolk Liberal Unionist Association, and Secretary in 1893 of the Ulster Convention League. In 1896 he was appointed Paris correspondent of the New York World. His novels are: "Geoffrey Hamilton," 1893; "Richard Escott," 1893; "The Enemies," 1896; "Mr. Blake of Newmarket," and "The Marchioness against the County," 1897. He resides in Paris. Address: Authors' Club.

COOPER, Thomas Sidney, R.A., was born at Canterbury Sept. 26, 1803. At the age of seventeen he became painter at the Hastings Theatre, and for three years gained a moderate income by scene-painting. Then he became a drawing-master at Canterbury till the year 1827, when he set out from Dover to Calais, and literally "sketched his way" from that French port to the Belgian capital, paying tavern bills by likenesses of hosts and hostesses. At Brussels his talents secured him patrons and employment; and having settled there, he married, and enjoyed the friendship of various Flemish artists. There, too, his pencil was first directed to the study of landscape, and the branch of art, animal-painting, which secured him his present high reputation, with abundant and profitable employment. The revolution of 1830 involved him and his family in difficulties, and forced him to return to England. He first exhibited in the Suffolk Street Gallery in 1833. His picture attracted attention, and he received a commission from Mr. Vernon for a picture now in the Vernon Gallery. About ten years later his Cuyt-like groups of cattle, "Going to Pasture," "Watering at Evening," "Cattle Reposing" in the heat of a summer afternoon, "The King of the Meadows," attracted general notice. Mr. Cooper was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1845, and a Royal Academician in 1867, and still continues to exhibit, painting, it is understood, in bed. He exhibited as many as four typical pictures in the 1898 Royal Academy Exhibition. In 1882 he presented to the city of Canterbury the Gallery of Art which he had founded some ten or twelve years earlier, and in which he had since given gratuitous instructions to students. A condition made by the donor was that only a nominal fee should be charged to the artisan classes for tuition, the original object for which the gallery was built having been the teaching of drawing to poor boys. At the meeting at which Mr. Cooper's gift was announced it was determined to convert the gallery into a school, and to affiliate it to the Science and Art Department at South Kensington. Mr. Cooper has published his reminiscences, under the title of "My Life," 1890. He has found innumerable imitators, and at one time was constantly called upon to decide upon the authenticity of cattle-pictures reputed to be the work of his brush. He has latterly charged a fee to the persons sending such paintings for his inspection. Address: Vernon Holme, Harbledown, Canterbury.

COPELAND, Ralph, Ph.D., F.R.A.S., F.R.S.E., Astronomer-Royal for Scotland, and Professor of Astronomy in the University of Edinburgh since 1889, in the place of Professor Piazzi Smyth, who resigned, was born in 1837 at Woodplumpton, Lancashire. Having determined to devote his life to astronomy, he entered the University of Göttingen in 1865, and became assistant under the late Professor Klinkerfues at the observatory there. In 1869-70 he served on the second German Arctic Expedition, which was the first to winter on the north-east coast of Greenland. He for some time assisted Lord Rosse with his observations; and from 1876 to 1889 was connected with Lord Crawford's observatory at Dunecht. For the purpose of observing the transit of Venus across the sun's disc, Professor Copeland visited Mauritius and Jamaica; and in 1883 he took astronomical observations in Peru and Bolivia at various heights, rising to 14,000 feet. He travelled to Russia in 1887, and Norway in 1896, to observe total eclipses of the sun; failure, owing to bad weather, on both these occasions being recompensed by the successful Indian eclipse of 1898. Address: Royal Observatory, Edinburgh.

COPELSTON, The Right Rev. Reginald Stephen, D.D., Bishop of Colombo, son of the Rev. R. E. Copleston, formerly Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford, was born at Barnes, Surrey, in 1845. From Merchant Taylors' School he proceeded to Merton College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. (second class in Classics) in 1869. He was then elected a Fellow of St. John's College, of which he became senior tutor; and he proceeded M.A. from that College in 1871. When Dr. Jermyn resigned the Bishopric of Colombo, in Ceylon, Mr. Copleston was selected by the Crown to fill the vacant See, and he was consecrated in Westminster Abbey, Dec. 28, 1875. He has published "Æschylus," in Blackwood's "Classics for English Readers"; and was one of the three writers of the "Oxford Spectator." In 1894 he published "Buddhism, Primitive and Present." Dr. Copleston married a daughter of the late Archbishop Trent in 1882. Address: Colombo, Ceylon.

COPPÉE, François Edouard Joachim, a French poet, was born at Paris, Jan. 12, 1842. He was educated at the Lycée St. Louis, and became a clerk in the Ministry of War. He early gained a reputation as a poet among the "Parnassians" of 1866, and published in the same year a volume of poems entitled, "Le Reliquaire," which was followed two years later by "Intimités." In these, among the clever imitations of the past romantic movement, could be seen plentiful proofs of originality. Two of his pieces, "La Bénédiction" and "La Grève des Forgerons" achieved great popularity as recitations. He then turned his attention to the theatre, and wrote "Le Passant," produced at the Odéon in 1869; "L'Aban- donnée" and "Fais ce que dois," 1871, a patriotic piece whose fine verses were recited all through France; "Le Bijou de la Délivrance," 1872; "Le Luthier de Crémone," produced at the Théâtre Français in 1877; "Madame de Maintenon," 1881; "Severo Torelli," 1883; "Les Jacobites," 1885. For several years M. Coppée was librarian of the Senate, and in 1878 was appointed keeper of the records at the Comédie Française. He was made a member of the Académie Française in 1884, when he resigned his Keepership, and officer of the Legion of Honour in 1888. Among his later poems may be mentioned "Les Humbles," 1872, in which he hymns the virtues of the poor; "L'Exilée," 1876; "Les Mois," 1877; "La Marchande de Journaux," 1880; "Contes en vers et poésies diverses," 1881; "L'Enfant de la Balle," 1883; "Arrière-Saison," 1887. He has published several novels and collections of stories, such as "Contes en prose," 1882; "Contes Rapides," 1888; and "Toute une Jeunesse," 1890. He has published his collected works in two sets, "Théâtre," 1875-86 (4 vols.); and "Œuvres Complètes," 1885 (6 vols.). His one-act piece, "Le Pater," 1890, representing a scene of the Commune of 1871, after being unanimously accepted by the Théâtre Français, and acted for three nights, was stopped by the Government. His greatest success, however, has been his drama, "Pour la Couronne," which was produced at the Odéon, Jan. 19, 1895, and was at once greeted by the critics, especially MM. Jules Lemaitre and Henry Fouquier, with a chorus of praise. In delineating the struggle of the Slavonic Bulgarians against the Turks in the fifteenth century, he was sure of a friendly audience in France, where the Russo-French alliance was then all the rage. The play was compared to the "Choephoroi" and "Eumenides" of Æschylus, both representing the struggles of a righteous son against a wicked mother and weak father. It was translated into English by Mr. John Davidson (q.v.), and acted at the Lyceum by Mr. Forbes Robertson (q.v.) as Constantine Brancimir, the son, Mrs. Patrick Campbell (q.v.) as Militza, the slave girl who loves him, and Miss Winifred Emery (q.v.) as Bazilide, the ambitious mother. The translation was especially noteworthy for the little poem, "Butterflies," interpolated by Mr. Davidson with the permission of M. Coppée. In 1896 he produced "Mon franc Parler"; in 1897 "Toute une Jeunesse"; and in 1898 "Une Idylle pendant le Siègè." Paris address: 12 Rue Oudinot.

COQUELIN, Benoit Constant ("Coquelin Aîné"), a French actor, born

at Boulogne-sur-Mer, Jan. 23, 1841, is the son of a baker, and was destined originally to follow that trade, but evincing a great aptitude for the stage, he went to Paris, and was admitted to the Conservatoire on May 29, 1859, joining M. Regnier's class, of which he became the most brilliant pupil. He obtained the second prize for comedy, and made his début at the Théâtre Français on Dec. 7, 1860, in the character of Gros-René in the "Dépit Amoureux." He afterwards played with success in the "Fourberies de Scapin," "Mariage de Figaro," "Don Juan," and other classical pieces; Lupin in "La Mère Confidente;" the Marquis in "Le Joueur;" Annibal in "L'Aventurière," &c. He created the rôle of Anatole in "Une Loge d'Opéra," John in "Trop Curieux," Gagneux in "Jean Baudry," Vincent in "L'Œillet Blanc," Aristide in "Le Lion Amoureux," Gringoire in the play of that name, Beaubourg in "Paul Forestier," Eucrate in "Le Coq de Mycille," &c. M. Coquelin has obtained great success in society by reciting in private and at public meetings, and has thus added to the reputation of new poets, particularly of Eugène Manuel and François Coppée. In 1886 he was put on the list of "sociétaires pensionnaires" of the Théâtre Français, and this prevented him from appearing as an actor in any French theatre. But, after travelling abroad in America and Alsace at the head of a dramatic company of his own formation, he re-entered the Comédie Française in December 1889, and played Mascarille, Diafoirus, and Argente, and other parts, in order to support his son Jean, at that time making his first appearances as an actor. He created the part of Labussière in M. Sardou's "Thermidor," which after three representations was interdicted by the French Government (Jan. 25, 1891). His next creation was Petruccio in a modified version of the "Taming of the Shrew" (November 1892). As his engagement at the Théâtre Français lasts only six months each year, he has recently taken to touring abroad with a company of his own selection, and in the summer of 1892 he brought "Thermidor" and "La Mégère Apprivoisée" to London. He is the author of several works on the comedian's art. In 1898 he brought out at the Porte St. Martin Theatre "Cyrano de Bergerac," the renowned play of M. Edmond Rostand. It was an immediate success, for such a combination of Romanticism, pathos, swagger, and excellent literary French had not been equalled for many years. The part fitted him like a glove, and he repeated the success gained when a young man as Mascarille in "Les Précieuses Ridicules." In July of the same year he brought this play to the Lyceum Theatre in London, where it created the same enthusiasm as in Paris. Paris address: 6 Rue de Presbourg.

COQUELIN, Ernest Alexandre Honoré, better known as "Coquelin Cadet," brother of the preceding, was born at Boulogne-sur-Mer, May 16, 1848. He entered the service of the Northern Railway Company, but being irresistibly drawn towards the theatrical profession, he went to Paris, and, in 1864, entered M. Regnier's class at the Conservatoire, and three years later carried off the first prize for comedy. After successfully making his début at the Odéon in the comic rôles of classic pieces, he entered the Comédie Française in June 1876, and played with his brother. During the siege of Paris he gained the Military Medal for bravery at the battle of Buzenval. Among his best creations are Ulrich in "Le Sphinx" of Octave Feuillet, Isidore in "La Reprise du Testament de César Girodot," Frédéric in "L'Ami Fritz" of MM. Erckmann-Chatrian, and Basile in "Le Barbier de Séville." He is noted as a reciter, and is the author of many "monologues," which he delivers at public and private entertainments. Paris address: 6 Rue du Bel-Respiro.

COQUELIN, Jean, French actor, son of Coquelin Aîné, was born Dec. 1, 1865, and destined for the stage. He did not go to the Conservatoire, but accompanied his father for four years in his foreign trips, where he played jeune premier, being seen several times in London at the Royalty Theatre. In 1890 he became a pensionnaire of the Comédie Française, where he made his début in his father's earliest rôle, that of Gros-René in the "Dépit Amoureux." He also played Scapin in "Les Fourberies," and in the "Malade Imaginaire" he played Diafoirus to his father's Purgon and his uncle's Argan, probably a unique performance for one family. Latterly he played Lubin in "Thermidor," and Ragueneau, the poetic pastry-cook, in "Cyrano de Bergerac," in which he appeared with his father at the Porte St. Martin in Paris, and the Lyceum in London, in July 1898.

CORELLI, Marie, whose parentage is Gaelic and Italian, is the adopted daughter of the late popular poet, Charles Mackay, LL.D. She was born and educated in England, with the exception of four years "finishing" training in a French convent-school. She was long finding a publisher for her first romance, but is now perhaps the wealthiest of lady novelists, the royalties from her first book alone being sufficient to afford her a handsome competence. She has published: "A Romance of Two Worlds," 1886; "Vendetta," 1886; "Thelma," 1887; "Ardath: the Story of a Dead Self," 1889; "The Soul of Lilith," 1892; "Wormwood"; "Barabbas: a Dream of the World's Tragedy," 1893; "The Sorrows of Satan," 1895; "The Mighty Atom," 1896; "The Murder of Delicia," 1896; "Ziska: the Problem of a Wicked Soul," 1897; and "Jane," 1897. Of these, "Barabbas" and "A Romance of Two Worlds" have been translated into all the languages of Europe, including Russian and modern Greek. "Barabbas" is also to be had in Persian and Hindustani, and has an immense vogue throughout India. "The Mighty Atom" has been accorded the unusual distinction of being translated and published in Russia under the auspices of the Holy Synod. The late Mr. Eric Mackay, the poet, was Miss Corelli's stepbrother. Miss Corelli has no London address, having given up her town residence in this present year (1898) on account of her intention to reside abroad for the future.

CORFIELD, William Henry, M.A., M.D. (Oxon.), F.R.C.P., Hon. A.R.I.B.A., was born in December 1843 at Shrewsbury, and was educated at the Cheltenham Grammar School, and obtained a Demyship in Natural Science at Magdalen College, Oxford, in March 1861, at the early age of seventeen. In the subsequent October he matriculated, and in 1863 took a first class in Mathematics at Moderations. In the same year he had the honour of being selected by Professor Daubeny, the eminent Chemist, Botanist, and Vulcanologist, to accompany him in his examination of the volcanic appearances in the Montbrison district of Auvergne. In 1864 he passed in the final Classical Schools, and took a first class in Mathematics for the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Early in the following year Mr. Corfield obtained, in open competition, the Medical Fellowship at Pembroke College, and thus the line of his future career was decided. He next gained first-class honours in the Natural Science Schools, taking Chemistry and Geology as special subjects. Other successes followed rapidly, and the Burdett-Coutts University Scholarship in Geology and the Allied Sciences fell to him in 1866, to which, a year later, was added the Radcliffe Travelling Fellowship in Medicine. This gave him an opportunity of visiting the professional centres of the Continent, including, of course, Paris, where he studied analysis, with special reference to hygienic matters, under Berthélot, at the Collège de France, and took the opportunity then afforded of clinical study under Béhier, Sée, Hardy, and other eminent teachers, besides attending Bouchardat's lectures on Hygiene. He next proceeded to Lyons, where he worked at clinical medicine and surgery, and also made a special study of the remains of the remarkable aqueducts of ancient Lugdunum, and then passed over into Algiers, visiting afterwards some of the medical schools in Italy and Sicily. In 1868 he took his M.B. degree, and was appointed Examiner for Honours in Natural Science at the University of Oxford; and in 1869 he received the further appointment of Professor of Hygiene and Public Health at University College, London. His Introductory Lecture was printed in the British Medical Journal on June 18 and 25, 1870, and was afterwards published in pamphlet form, under the title of a "Résumé of the History of Hygiene." He still directs the Hygienic Laboratory which he started at this College, and in which many pupils, who have subsequently gained important sanitary posts, have been trained. He became a member of the Royal College of Physicians of London in 1869, and, in the same year, was elected a member of the Committee appointed by the British Association for the Advancement of Science, to report on the Treatment and Utilisation of Sewage. The alarming illness of the Prince of Wales at Londesborough Lodge, Scarborough, where he was attacked by typhoid fever at the close of the year 1871, called attention very prominently to the subject of house sanitation, and Professor Corfield made, at Lord Londesborough's request, a careful inspection of the condition of the Lodge, and described the results in a letter which appeared in the Times on Jan. 22, 1872. In 1871 he was elected Medical Officer of Health for Islington, and in 1872 obtained, and still holds, the same post for St. George's, Hanover Square. He took his M.D. degree at Oxford in 1872, and was next year appointed Lecturer on the Law of Health at the Birmingham and Midland Institute, an office which he held for five years. Afterwards he accepted a similar post at the Saltley Training College. In 1873 he delivered a course of lectures on "Water Supply, Sewerage, and Sewage Utilisation" to the Royal Engineers stationed at Chatham; these lectures were at once reprinted in the United States. Dr. Corfield, in 1874, read a paper before the Epidemiological Society "On the Supposed Spontaneous Origin of the Poison of Enteric Fever," in which he vigorously combated the possibility of the de novo origin of the disease. In 1875 Professor Corfield was elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians; and he has published some "Remarks on the Study and Practice of Public Medicine," which were delivered as an Introductory Lecture to the Students of University College in that year. In 1879 he delivered a course of Cantor Lectures before the Society of Arts, taking for his subject, "Dwelling-houses, their Sanitary Construction and Arrangements." Professor Corfield's most recent publications are: the third edition of his work on "The Treatment and Utilisation of Sewage," in the preparation of which he has been assisted by his former pupil, Dr. Louis Parkes; his Anniversary Address to the Sanitary Institute on "The Water Supply of Ancient Roman Cities, with especial reference to Lugdunum (Lyons)," in which he shows that the Romans employed inverted siphons made of lead for the purpose of carrying their aqueducts across deep valleys, and which is illustrated by lithographs from sketches made by himself on the spot; his paper on "Outbreaks of Sore Throat caused by slight escapes of Coal Gas," read before the Society of Medical Officers of Health; and his Harveian Lectures delivered before the Harveian Society of London in 1893, on "Disease and Defective House Sanitation." Professor Corfield is prominently before the profession as Professor of Hygiene and Public Health at University College, London, and for some years one of the Examiners for the Diploma in Public Health at the University of Cambridge, and at the Royal College of Physicians, as a Fellow of the Institute of Chemistry and of the Chemical Society, a Fellow of the Geological Society, a Past President of the Society of Medical Officers of Health, and Vice-President and Past Chairman of the Council of the Sanitary Institute, an Honorary Member of the Société Française d'Hygiène, and of many other important foreign societies. He was President of the Public Health Section of the Congress of the British Medical Association at Bristol in 1894, and of Section I. of the Congress of the Sanitary Institute at Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1896, and was elected a member of Council of the Royal College of Physicians in 1898. He has been, for the last twenty years, Chairman of the Committee of the Sunday Society, and has thus played a leading part in the movement which has resulted in the opening of our National Museums to the public on Sunday afternoons. In 1884 he gave an address to the International Congress of Hygiene, at the Hague, on "La Science Étiologique de la Maladie." He was then asked why the Congress had never been invited to London; he felt that it was a disgrace to English Hygienists that this had not been done, and determined that it should be, and from that time forth he never rested until he presented the invitation of the Sanitary Institute and Parkes Museum to the Permanent Committee, at the Congress at Vienna in 1887, with the result that the next Congress was held in London in 1891, under the presidency of the Prince of Wales, and with Sir Douglas Galton, K.C.B., as Chairman of the Organising Committee, and was the largest Congress of Hygienists ever held. Professor Corfield acted as Foreign Secretary to that Congress, and through his personal acquaintance with many of the leading Hygienists in various countries, was able to obtain the formation of committees for making the Congress known abroad, and for thus insuring the attendance of foreign Hygienists. He is the only Englishman who has received the honour of being elected an Hon. Member of the Royal Society of Public Health of Belgium, of which the other Hon. Members are chiefly ambassadors, ministers, and high State officials. He is an enthusiastic geologist, angler, and collector of Bewick wood engravings. Professor Corfield married in 1876 Emily Madelina, youngest daughter of the late John Pike, F.S.A. Addresses: 17 Savile Row, W.; and Whindown, Bexhill, Sussex.

CORK, Bishop of. See MEADE, THE RIGHT REV. W. E.

CORK and ORRERY, Earl of, The Right Hon. Richard Edmund St. Lawrence Boyle, K.P., a descendant of the Hon. Robert Boyle, the natural philosopher, was born in Dublin in 1829, and succeeded to the title in 1856. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, of which he is B.A. From 1854 to 1856 he represented Frome in the Liberal interest in Parliament. He has been thrice Master of the Buckhounds, in 1866, 1868-74, 1880-85; and twice Master of the Horse, in 1886 and 1894-95. He is Hon. Colonel of the North Somersetshire Yeomanry, and A.D.C. to the Queen. He married Emily, second daughter of the 1st Marquis of Clanricarde, and his heir, Viscount Dungarvan, was born in 1861. Addresses: 40 Charles Street, Mayfair; and Marston Biggott, Frome.

CORNO DI BASSETTO. See SHAW, GEORGE BERNARD.

CORNU, Marie-Alfred, was born March 6, 1841, admitted into the École Polytechnique in 1860, whence he passed to the School of Mines, and became an engineer in 1866. In 1867 he was appointed Professor of Physics at the École Polytechnique, and since then he has succeeded Becquerel as member of the Académie des Sciences. He owed this to his important experiments in determining the velocity of light, perfecting Fizeau's method, which extended over two years. He has also experimented on the mean density of the earth, following Cavendish's work. He received the Rumford Medal of the Royal Society of London in 1878, has been President of the French Association for the Advancement of Science, is Officier de la Légion d'Honneur, and member of the Bureau des Longitudes (1886). Professor Cornu's researches have been chiefly devoted to optical subjects, and he is one of the first living authorities upon light, having greatly improved Fizeau's toothed wheel, and so given to measurements of the velocity of light a precision which was previously impossible. His principal experiments upon this subject are recorded in the "Annals of the Paris Observatory"; many of his other papers are in the Comptes Rendus, and deal with crystalline reflection, the reversal of the lines in the spectrum of metallic vapours, the spectre of the aurora borealis, and the normal solar spectrum. Paris address: 9 Rue de Grenelle.

CORRIGAN, The Most Rev. Michael Augustine, D.D., American (R.C.) prelate, was born at Newark, N.J., Aug. 13, 1839. He was educated at St. Mary's College, Wilmington, Delaware; and at Mount St. Mary's, Emmetsburg, Maryland, graduating at the latter institution in 1859. He was ordained to the priesthood at Rome in 1863, and in the following year received the degree of D.D. After filling for a few years the chair of Dogmatic Theology and Sacred Scripture at Seton Hall College, Orange, N.J., he became its President in 1868. In 1873 he was appointed by Pius IX. to the See of Newark, and in 1880 was made coadjutor to Cardinal McCloskey, Archbishop of New York, under title of Archbishop of Petra; and on the death of the Cardinal in 1885 he became Metropolitan of the diocese of New York.

CORSER, Haden, M.A., J.P., Metropolitan Police Magistrate sitting at Worship Street, was born in 1845, and is the only son of Charles Corser of Wolverhampton. He was educated at Cheltenham College, and Christ Church, Oxford, where he took a third class in the School of Law and History in 1869. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1870, and was appointed Deputy Stipendiary Magistrate at Wolverhampton in 1878. He held this post till 1880. From 1888 to 1889 he was Recorder of Wenlock, and in the latter year was appointed Metropolitan Police Magistrate (North London). He married in 1870 Mary, daughter of W. T. Blacklock, Pendleton, Lancashire. Address: The Hyde, Ingatestone, Essex.

COSSON, Charles Alexander Baron de, F.S.A., F.R.G.S., born at Durham, Aug. 26, 1846, is descended from an ancient French family established in Guienne at the period of the Revolution, when his grandfather emigrated, serving first in the army of the Princes, and then in the Hompesch regiment of the Hussars. When that regiment was incorporated in the British army as the 10th Hussars, he came to England, his father having been guillotined and his estates forfeited. He returned to France in 1855, and died there in 1867, at the age of ninety-eight, his life thus reaching from the reign of Louis XV. almost to the close of that of Napoleon III. Baron de Cosson was educated at home, and travelled much on the Continent with his family. In December 1868 he had written to the Times a long account of the insurrection at Cadiz, which the leading article described as the first exact narrative of that event received in England. In the winter of 1872 he went to Egypt, and thence proceeded to Abyssinia, in company with his brother the late Major de Cosson, who published an account of this journey in "The Cradle of the Blue Nile." He visited Adowa and Axum, and crossed the Lamalmon Pass to Gondar and Lake Tsana. The travellers were well received by the late King John of Abyssinia. In the summer of 1873, his brother, having to return to England, left him, and travelled via Khartoum and the desert, to Suakim. The experience thus gained led to his being appointed to the water transport of Sir Gerald Graham's Field Force in 1885, when he was mentioned in despatches, and gazetted Major. Baron de Cosson remained in Abyssinia some months longer, returning to Massowah, by Debra Tabor, Sokota, and the interior of the country. He is best known, however, for the attention he has given for the last twenty years to the study of ancient armour and weapons. In conjunction with the late William Burges, A.R.A., he organised an exhibition of helmets and mail at the Royal Archaeological Institute in 1880, and undertook the description of the European helmets. In that work he formulated the principles which he considered ought to regulate the scientific study of ancient armour. He especially insisted that each fine piece of armour was a well-considered and skilfully wrought piece of metal work, having its definite purpose, for which it was admirably adapted, and that armour should not be looked at, as was so often the case, simply as people regard the objects at Madame Tussaud's Exhibition. Since then he has contributed various papers to the Archæological Journal, and other antiquarian publications. He has also, at his house at Chertsey, a small but carefully formed collection of arms and armour. He has of late been engaged in conjunction with the Conde de Valencia de Don Juan, at Madrid, in collecting, as far as possible, all notices and marks of ancient armourers and swordmakers. In 1878 he married Cecilia Nefeseeh Bonomi, second daughter of the late Joseph Bonomi, well known for his travels in the East and his works on ancient Egypt and Assyria.

COSTAKI, Anthopoula Pasha, Otto-man Ambassador at the Court of St. James', is, like his two predecessors—Mousouros and Rustem—a Christian. He was born of Greek parentage at Constantinople in 1832, was admitted an Advocate of the Turkish Bar in 1870, and was appointed Public Prosecutor in 1880. When troubles arose in Crete in 1888 he was sent out to be Governor, as the Cretans would have a Christian, and the Powers supported their desire. However, his amnesty was illusory, and though he tried to calm the rebels, he was not backed up at headquarters, and towards the end of the year he was replaced by Chakir Pasha. He was appointed to his present post, Jan. 31, 1896. In 1899 the Sultan conferred upon him the insignia and star of the Osmanieh in brilliants as a token of high satisfaction and a reward for services rendered in diplomacy.

COTES, Mrs. Everard, née Sara Jeanette Duncan, was born at Brantford, Canada, in 1861, and is a daughter of Charles Duncan, merchant. She was educated chiefly at Brantford, and began her literary career as a journalist. She was first of all correspondent to the Washington Post. Afterwards she joined its editorial staff, as well as writing for various Canadian papers. She wrote special articles for the Montreal Star, among which were her letters from Japan and the East. These letters were subsequently embodied in an altered form in "A Social Departure: how Orthodoxy and I Went Round the World by Ourselves," 1890. Her other works are: "An American Girl in London," 1891; "The Simple Adventures of a Memsahib," 1893; "Vernon's Aunt," 1894; "The Story of Gonny Sahib," and "A Daughter of Today," 1894; "His Honour and a Lady," 1896; and "A Voyage of Consolation, a tale," 1898. She married Everard Cotes, editor of one of the chief Calcutta daily papers, in 1890. Address: 19 British Indian Street, Calcutta.

COTTERILL, James Henry, M.A., F.R.S., the youngest son of the late Rev. Joseph Cotterill, was born in Norfolk, Nov.

2, 1836. He was educated at Brighton College, and was then apprenticed to the engineering firm of Fairbairn & Co.; eventually, however, he proceeded to St. John's College, Cambridge. In 1866 he was appointed Lecturer at the old Royal School of Naval Architecture at South Kensington, becoming its Vice-Principal in 1870. Three years later he became Professor of Applied Mechanics at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, and only resigned that position when he retired in 1897. He is the author of "The Steam Engine considered as a Thermodynamic Machine," 1878, and 3rd edit., 1895; "Applied Mechanics," 1884, and 4th edit., 1895. Mr. Cotterill was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1878. Address: 18 Gloucester Place, Greenwich, S.E.

COTTESLOE, Lord, Sir Thomas Francis Fremantle, Bart., M.A., J.P., was born Jan. 30, 1830, and succeeded his father as 2nd Baron in 1890. He was educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1852, obtaining first-class honours in Classics, and he was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1855. He sat in the House of Commons as member for Buckinghamshire from 1876 to 1885. Lord Cottesloe is Vice-Chairman of the Bucks County Council, and Deputy-Chairman of the Bucks Quarter Sessions. He was married in 1859 to Augusta, daughter of the 2nd Earl of Eldon, and has a son and heir, the Hon. Thomas Fremantle, born in 1862. Address: 43 Eaton Square, S.W.; and Swanbourne, Winslow, Bucks.

COTTON, General Sir Arthur Thomas, K.C.S.I., son of the late H. C. Cotton, Esq., and a cousin of the late Lord Combermere, born at Woodcot House, Oxfordshire, in 1803, was educated at Addiscombe. He entered the Madras army in 1819, became Colonel of Engineers in 1854, and served in the first Burmese war from 1824 to 1826. In 1861 he received the honour of knighthood for his activity in developing the irrigation and internal navigation of India. He was nominated a Knight Commander of the Star of India on the re-organisation of that Order in 1866. In the following year he was nominated a Lieut.-General in the army, and placed on the fixed establishment of general officers. He attained the rank of General in 1876, and was placed on the retired list in the following year. In 1841 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Learmonth, of Hobart, Tasmania. Address: Woodcot, Dorking.

COTTON, James Sutherland, M.A., was born at Coonoor, in the Madras

Presidency, on July 17, 1847, and is the third son of J. J. Cotton, H.E.I.C.S. He was educated at Winchester and at Oxford, where he was successively Exhibitioner of Lincoln, Scholar of Trinity, and Fellow of Queen's. He obtained a first class in Classical Moderations, and also in the Final Classical School, and was for a time Secretary and Treasurer of the Union Debating Society. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn (1874), and joined the Western Circuit. He assisted Sir W. W. Hunter in compiling the "Statistical Account of Bengal" (20 vols., 1875-77); the "Statistical Account of Assam" (2 vols., 1879); and the "Imperial Gazetteer of India" (9 vols., 1881; also 2nd edit., 14 vols., 1885-87). He is the author of the "Decennial Statement," exhibiting the Moral and Material Progress of India for the period 1873-74 to 1882-83 (issued as a Blue-book, 1885); of "India," in the volume of the "English Citizen Series," entitled "Colonies and Dependencies" (1883); and of "Mount-stuart Elphinstone," in the series of "Rulers of India" (1892). He also contributed an essay on "The Intentions of the Founders of Fellowships" to "Essays on the Endowment of Research" (1876); and has been a contributor to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," "Chambers's Encyclopædia," and the "Dictionary of National Biography." Since 1887 he has edited "Patterson's Practical Statutes," an annual volume containing the important Acts of Parliament of the year, with introductions and notes. He is best known as the editor of the Academy, having conducted that important review from 1881 until 1896. He married in 1873 Isabella, daughter of John Carter, of Clifton. Address: 107 Abingdon Road, Kensington, W.

COUNTY, Rev. Thomas J., American Prelate (R.C.), was born in Dublin in 1856, but went with his parents to America when very young. He was educated at the College of the Holy Cross by the Jesuits, and at the Seminary at Troy, New York. He subsequently became Rector of the Church of the Sacred Heart at Worcester, Massachusetts, and was for a number of years at the head of the Catholic Summer School at Plattsburg, New York; was editor of a weekly paper called The Catholic School Gazette, and is known as a temperance lecturer. He received the degree of D.D. from the Jesuit College of Georgetown in 1889, and was appointed Rector of the Catholic University at Washington, D.C., in November 1896, to succeed Bishop Jno. J. Keane.

COUCH, Arthur Thomas Quiller, who writes as "Q," is the eldest son of the late Thomas Quiller Couch, of Bodmin, and was born in Cornwall on Nov. 21, 1863. He was educated at Newton Abbot College, Clifton College, and Trinity College, Oxford. He was a Scholar of his College, and obtained a first-class in Moderations, and a second in Lit. Hum. in 1886, when he graduated B.A. At the University he was more than once a candidate for the Newdigate, and, after taking his degree, he was a classical lecturer at his College for about a year. On leaving Oxford, he remained for some years in London, but in 1891 he went back to Cornwall, where he continues to reside. Mr. Quiller Couch has written for the Speaker since its first appearance, and his principal novels are the following: "Dead Man's Rock," 1887; "Troy Town," 1888; "The Splendid Spur," 1889; "Noughts and Crosses," 1891; "The Blue Pavilions," 1891; "I Saw Three Ships," 1892; "The Warwickshire Avon," 1892; "The Delectable Duchy," 1893; "Wandering Heath," 1895; "The Golden Pomp," 1895; "Ia," 1896; "Adventures in Criticism," 1896; "Poems and Ballads," 1896. He has completed Robert Louis Stevenson's unfinished novel, "St. Ives," in a manner which proves him to be a master of imitation. Address: The Haven, Fowey, Cornwall.

COUCH, The Right Hon. Sir Richard, born July 4, 1817, is the only son of Richard Couch, was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1841, and practised for many years on the Norfolk Circuit. He was for some years Recorder of Bedford, but in 1862 was appointed a Puisne Judge of the Bombay High Court, entering upon office in August of that year. In April 1866, on the retirement of the late Sir Matthew Sausse, he was promoted to be the Chief Justice of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay, receiving soon afterwards the honour of knighthood; and in 1870 he succeeded Sir Barnes Peacock as Chief Justice of the High Court of Calcutta. He resigned the latter post in 1875, when his name was added to the roll of the Privy Council. In the same year he was President of the Commission appointed to inquire into the charges against the Gaekwar of Baroda. He was appointed a member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in January 1881. In 1845 he married Anne, daughter of R. T. Beck, Combs, Suffolk. Addresses: 25 Linden Gardens, Kensington, W.; and Athenæum.

COURCEL, Baron de, Alphonse Chodron, French diplomatist, born July

30, 1835, was educated at the Lycée Charlemagne, and studied law at Paris, Bonn, and Berlin. In 1859 he entered the French diplomatic service and was made an attaché at Brussels, and in 1861 passed to St. Petersburg. After work at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs he succeeded in 1881 the Comte de St. Vallier as Ambassador at Berlin, a post he retained until 1886. In 1892 he was elected Senator for his department, Seine et Oise, in which he owned much land at Athis. He is the Chairman of the Orleans Railway, and a Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour. In October 1894 he succeeded M. Decrais as Ambassador at the Court of St. James's, and distinguished himself for careful diplomacy during a very stormy period. He resigned in October 1898, and was succeeded by Monsieur Paul Cambon. Address: 10 Boulevard Montparnasse, Paris, &c.

COURTHOPE, Professor William John, C.B., Hon. D. Litt., was born on July 17, 1842, and is the eldest son of the Rev. William Courthope, Rector of South Malling. He was educated at Harrow and New College, Oxford, where his career was distinguished. He gained a first class in Classical Moderations in 1863, and a first class in Lit. Hum. in 1865, besides obtaining the Newdigate Prize in 1864, and the Chancellor's Prize for an English Essay in 1868. He was appointed a Civil Service Commissioner in 1887, and First Civil Service Commissioner in 1892, and in 1893 was elected Professor of Poetry at his old University without opposition. In this position he has lectured admirably on poetry, his course on "Life in Poetry," including such subjects as "Law in Taste," and "Poetical Decadence," forming in itself a weighty, valuable, and conservative Ars Poetica. Professor Courthope is well known for his standard edition of Pope's Works and for his life of that poet. His other publications are: "Ludibria Lunæ," 1869; "The Paradise of Birds," 1870; "Addison" (Men of Letters Series), 1882; and the two opening volumes of a "History of English Poetry," published respectively in 1895 and 1897. He married Mary, eldest daughter of John Scott, H.M. Inspector-General of Hospitals, Bombay. Addresses: 29 Chester Terrace, Regent's Park, N.W.; and Athenæum.

COURTNEY, The Right Hon. Leonard Henry, M.A., M.P., eldest son of the late Mr. John Sampson Courtney, banker, of Penzance, Cornwall, by Sarah, daughter of Mr. John Mortimer, of St. Mary's, Scilly, was born at Penzance, July 6, 1832. He was educated at the Regent House Academy in that town, under Mr.

Richard Barnes, and afterwards privately under Mr. L. R. Willan, M.D. Mr. Courtney was for some time in the bank of Messrs. Bolitho, Sons & Co., but went to St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1851, and graduated B.A. as Second Wrangler in 1855, being bracketed First Smith's Prizeman. In the following year he was elected a Fellow of his College, and for some years he has been an Honorary Fellow. For some time he was engaged in private tuition at the University. In 1858 he was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn. He was appointed in 1872 to the Chair of Political Economy at University College, London, and held that professorship until a lengthened visit to India in the winter of 1875-76 necessitated his retirement. For two years he was Examiner in Constitutional History in the University of London, 1873-75. In 1874 he contested Liskeard, but polled only 329 votes against 334 recorded for Mr. Horsman, but at the election which was held after that gentleman's death, Mr. Courtney gained the seat, Dec. 22, 1876, polling 388 votes against 281 votes given to his opponent, Lieut.-Colonel Stirling. He held the seat as long as Liskeard remained a parliamentary borough, and when it was merged in the Division of South-East Cornwall he won the enlarged constituency at the General Election of 1885, and has been returned ever since. He was appointed Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department in December 1880. In August 1881, he was appointed Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, in succession to Mr. Grant Duff, who had been nominated Governor of Madras; and in May 1882 he succeeded the late Lord Frederick Cavendish as Financial Secretary to the Treasury, but resigned his appointment on finding that the last Reform Bill did not include the principle of proportional representation, which he and the late Mr. Fawcett had long advocated. In 1885 and again in 1886, having been returned as a Unionist Liberal, he was appointed Chairman of Committees in the House of Commons. He was a member of the Labour Commission (1893-94), of the Indian Currency Commission, the Commission for the Unification of London, and the Commission on Lighthouse Dues. Mr. Courtney was for some years a regular writer for the Times. In 1860 he published a pamphlet on "Direct Taxation"; and to the Journal of the Statistical Society, 1868, he contributed a paper on the "Finances of the United States, 1861-67." He is the present chairman of the Statistical Society. Mr. Courtney has written various papers in the Fortnightly Review, the Nineteenth Century, and the International Review. He was made a Privy Councillor in 1889; and was presented with the hon. freedom of Penzance. He married, March 15, 1883, Catherine, eldest unmarried daughter of Mr. Richard Potter, a lady well known for her exertions in providing decent homes for the poor. Addresses: 15 Cheyne Walk, Chelsea, S.W.; and Athenæum.

COURTNEY, William Leonard, M.A., LL.D. St. Andrews, Fellow of New College, Oxford, was born Jan. 5, 1850, at Poona in India. He is the youngest son of William Courtney, late of the India Civil Service, and of Anne Edwardes Scott, and was educated at University College, Oxford, of which society he was a scholar. First Class first Public Examination, 1870; First Class Greats, 1872; Fellow of Merton College, 1872; became Head Master Somersetshire College, Bath, 1873; was elected Fellow of New College, Oxford, 1876; and for many years was a prominent member of University Society, Treasurer O. U. B. C., and one of the chief supporters of the University Dramatic Club, with whom he often acted; resigned Tutorship to come to London in 1890, when he joined the Editorial Staff of the Daily Telegraph as literary critic. He became editor of Murray's Magazine in 1891; was made editor of the Fortnightly Review in 1894, in succession to Mr. Frank Harris; and in 1898 was elected one of the directors of Messrs. Chapman & Hall. He has published: "The Metaphysics of John Stuart Mill," 1879; "Studies in Philosophy," 1882; "Constructive Ethics," 1886; "Studies New and Old," 1888; "Life of John Stuart Mill," 1889; "Studies at Leisure," 1892; "Kit Marlowe" (produced at St. James's Theatre), a blank-verse drama, 1893. Mr. Courtney married in 1874 Cordelia Blanche, daughter of Commander Place, R.N. Address: 53 Belsize Park, N.W.

COVENTRY, Earl of, The Right Hon. George William Coventry, son of Viscount Deerhurst, the eldest son of the 8th Earl of Coventry, was born on May 9, 1838, at Wilton Crescent, London. He was educated at Eton, and at Christchurch, Oxford, and in 1843 he succeeded his grandfather in the title. He has been the Lord-Lieutenant of Worcestershire since 1891, has been chairman of the Worcester Quarter Sessions for a period of seven years, and has been a member of the Worcester County Council since its first establishment. He was Master of the Buckhounds from 1886 to 1892, and has again occupied that position since 1895. He has been twice Captain of the Hon. Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms, is a Privy Councillor, and a member of the Council of the R.A.S. He is the possessor of many valuable historical pictures and tapestries, which are kept at Croome Court, Worcestershire. He is married to Blanche, daughter of the Earl of Craven, and has a son and heir, Viscount Deerhurst, born in 1865. Addresses: 1 Balfour Place, Park Lane, W.; and Croome Court, Worcester.

COWELL, Professor Edward Byles, Hon. LL.D., D.C.L., Professor of Sanskrit, Cambridge University, born at Ipswich, Jan. 23, 1826, eldest son of Charles Cowell, was educated at the Ipswich Grammar School and at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, where he took his B.A. degree in Classics, December 1854, and M.A. 1857. In 1856 he went to Calcutta as Professor of History in the newly-established Presidency College, and was appointed soon afterwards Principal of the Sanskrit College also. He returned to England in 1864, and in 1867 was elected Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Cambridge. In 1874 he was elected to a Fellowship in Corpus Christi College. Professor Cowell's chief published works are: "The Prākṛit Grammar of Vararuci" (Sanskrit and English), 1854; "Kaushitaki Upanishad" (Sanskrit and English), 1861; "Maitrāyaṇya Upanishad" (Sanskrit and English), 1870; "Kusumāñjali; or Hindoo Proof of the Existence of a Supreme Being" (Sanskrit and English), 1864; "Taittiriya, or Black Yajur Veda" (Sanskrit), Vols. I. II., edited with Dr. Roer, 1860-64; "Elphinstone's History of India," edited with notes, 1866; "Colebrooke's Essays," edited with notes, 1873; "The Aphorisms of Sāṅdilya," translated from the Sanskrit, 1873; "The Nyāya-Māla-Vistara," a Sanskrit work on the "Pūrva-mīmāṃsā," left unfinished by the original editor, Professor Goldstücker, and completed, 1878; "The Sarva-Darsana-Samgraha, or Review of the different Schools of Hindoo Philosophy," translated in conjunction with Professor A. E. Gough, 1882; "The Divyāvadāna," a collection of early Buddhist legends in Sanskrit, edited in conjunction with R. A. Neil, Fellow of Pembroke College, Cambridge, 1886; "The Buddha-Carita," edited in 1893, and translated in 1894; and the historical romance, the "Harsha-carita," translated from the Sanskrit in conjunction with F. W. Thomas, Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, 1897. He married Elizabeth Charlesworth in 1847. Address: 10 Scroope Terrace, Cambridge.

COWEN, Frederic Hymen, composer, born of English parents on Jan. 29, 1852, at Kingston, in Jamaica, exhibited as an infant an extraordinary love of music. He was brought to England at the age of four, and from that time showed so much musical talent, both in composition and in playing, as to render it advisable to place him under the tuition of Sir Julius (then Mr.) Benedict and Sir John (then Mr.) Goss, whose pupil he remained until the winter of 1865. He then studied at the conservatoires of Leipzig and Berlin, and returned to London in 1868. His first essay in composition was a waltz, written at six years old. This was followed by numerous small pieces, including an operetta entitled "Garibaldi." On his return from Berlin he wrote a fantasia sonata, a trio, a quartet, a concerto for piano, and a symphony in C minor, the latter played firstly at the composer's own concert, and then at the Crystal Palace. Mr. Cowen's more important works comprise two cantatas, "The Rose Maiden," 1870; and "The Corsair" (written for the Birmingham Festival), 1876; an opera, "Pauline," 1876; an oratorio, "The Deluge," unpublished; Symphonies No. 2 and No. 3 (Scandinavian), which latter has made his name known throughout Europe; a sacred cantata, "Saint Ursula" (produced at the Norwich Festival, 1881); Symphony No. 4 (the Welsh); cantata, "Sleeping Beauty" (written for the Birmingham Festival), 1885; Symphony No. 5, in F; the oratorio "Ruth" (written for the Worcester Festival), 1887; "A Song of Thanksgiving" (for the opening of the Melbourne Centennial Exhibition), 1888; the cantata, "St. John's Eve" produced at the Crystal Palace, December 1889; an opera, "Thorgim," produced at Drury Lane by the Carl Rosa Company, April 1890; a cantata, "The Water Lily," produced at the Norwich Festival, 1893; the opera "Signa," produced at Milan in November 1893, being the first opera by an Englishman produced in Italy for over half a century; the opera "Harold," produced at Covent Garden Theatre, June 1895; a church cantata, "The Transfiguration" (written for the Gloucester Festival, September 1895); Symphony, No. 6, "The Idyllic," 1897; Scena for tenor, "The Dream of Endymion," 1897. Mr. Cowen's works also comprise several overtures, a sinfonietta, two suites de ballet ("The Language of Flowers," and "In Fairyland"), pieces for the pianoforte, and more than 250 songs and ballads, many of which have attained great popularity. In 1888 Mr. Cowen was engaged by the Victorian Government to direct the series of concerts at the Melbourne Centennial Exhibition, extending over a period of six months, and returned to England in the spring of 1889. He was elected Conductor of the Philharmonic Society in 1888, but resigned in 1892. In 1896 he accepted the positions, rendered vacant by the death of Sir Charles Hallé, of Conductor of the Manchester Concerts, Liverpool Philharmonic Society, Bradford Festival Choral Society, &c., which positions he still occupies. Address: 73 Hamilton Terrace, N.W.

COWEN, Joseph, late M.P. for Newcastle, eldest son of the late Sir Joseph Cowen (who represented Newcastle-on-Tyne from 1865 till his death in December 1873), by Mary, daughter of Mr. Anthony Newton, of Winlaton, co. Durham, was born at Blayden Burn in that county in 1831. He received his education at the University of Edinburgh. Early in life Mr. Cowen contracted close friendship with Mazzini, Garibaldi, Kossuth, Herzen, and other political exiles. He was unceasing in his advocacy of the cause of the oppressed European nationalities. To aid their propaganda he established a private press, at which their revolutionary manifestoes were printed and smuggled into Italy, Hungary, and Poland. He was intimately and actively identified with the different Garibaldian expeditions to establish a free and united Italy, and with Langiewicz's unsuccessful effort for Polish independence. At the death of his father Mr. Cowen was elected for Newcastle, which he represented until 1886. In home politics he is a democrat, and in foreign affairs an imperialist. He disregards conventional party ties, and in Parliament has always acted independently. He would have England to keep her empire, and assert and maintain her position as an active and efficient member of the European Areopagus. He believes this can be best done by a system of Imperial Federation, and he would carry federation the length of granting Home Rule to Ireland, which he advocates as a means of consolidating and strengthening the empire. Mr. Cowen is a member of most of the representative bodies in Tyneside. He was one of the pioneers of co-operation, and has been an ardent advocate of education and social progress, on which subjects he has written several pamphlets. In Parliament Mr. Cowen has promoted bills for the extension of County Courts, for the establishment of Licensing Boards, and for amendments in the electoral law. He is an extensive coal owner, and fire-brick and clay retort manufacturer. He is also proprietor of the Newcastle Daily and Weekly Chronicle, and has contributed largely to these and other periodicals. His addresses to his constituents have been collected and published in three volumes. His life, by Major Jones, and a selection of the speeches he has delivered in the House of Commons and at literary institutions, also have been published. After the dissolution of 1886, Mr. Cowen did not offer himself for re-election. He has since his retirement from Parliament written extensively for his own newspapers and for other political and literary publications. He married in 1854 Jane, daughter of Mr. John Thompson, of Fattfield. Address: Stella Hall, Blaydon-on-Tyne.

COWIE, The Very Rev. Benjamin Morgan, D.D., Dean of Exeter and Precentor of Exeter Cathedral, born June 8, 1816, was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A., as Senior Wrangler, in 1839, and was elected Fellow of his College. In 1844 he was appointed Principal of the College of Civil Engineers at Putney. He was a Select Preacher in his University, and preached the Hulsean Lectures in 1853 and 1854; was elected Professor of Geometry at Gresham College in 1854, and became a Minor Canon of St. Paul's in 1858. He also held the vicarage of St. Laurence Jewry, in the City of London, from 1858 to 1873. In 1859 he was appointed a Government Inspector of Training Schools, and in 1866 Warburtonian Lecturer at Lincoln's Inn. He was nominated one of the Chaplains in Ordinary to Her Majesty, Jan. 14, 1871, and was appointed Dean of Manchester in October 1872. In 1880 he was elected Prolocutor of the Lower House of Convocation of the Province of York, in succession to the late Dean of York, the Hon. A. Duncombe. In 1882 Dr. Cowie was appointed Dean of Exeter. He published in 1846 a "Catalogue of the Library of St. John's College, Cambridge"; and he is the author of some theological works. He married Gertrude, daughter of C. Carnsew, of Flexbury Hall, Cornwall. Address: The Deanery, Exeter.

COWIE, Most Rev. William Garden, D.D., the son of Alexander Cowie, of Auchterless, Aberdeenshire, was born in 1831, and was educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, where he was a scholar, and graduated with first-class honours in Civil Law. Ordained in 1854, he was, four years later, appointed Chaplain to Lord Clyde's army at Lucknow, and from 1863 to 1864 he acted in the same capacity with Sir Neville Chamberlain's column, in its march against the Afghans. He held the rectory of Stafford from 1867 to 1869, and in the latter year was appointed Bishop of Auckland, becoming Primate of New Zealand in 1895. Dr. Cowie is the author of "Notes on the Temples of Cashmere," "A Visit to Norfolk Island." He was married, in 1869, to Eliza, daughter of W. Webbers, of Moulton, Suffolk. Address: Bishopscourt, Auckland, New Zealand.

COWPER, Earl, The Right Hon. Francis Thomas De-Grey Cowper, K.G., D.L., J.P., eldest son of the sixth Earl, was born on June 11, 1834, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took a first class in law and modern history in 1855. He succeeded to the title on his father's death, in 1856. He was Captain of the Gentlemen-at-Arms from April 1871 to December 1873. On May 5, 1880, he was installed Lord Lieutenant of Ireland at Dublin Castle, and he held that post till April 28, 1882, when he and Mr. Forster resigned together, he being succeeded by Earl Spencer. Henceforward he did not take much part in public affairs until Mr. Gladstone promulgated his Home Rule policy, when Lord Cowper declared himself opposed to it. He was Chairman of the celebrated "Opera House" meeting of Unionists, and took other measures against Mr. Gladstone's bill. After the accession of Lord Salisbury, Lord Cowper was appointed Chairman of the Commission for investigating the working of the Irish Land Act of 1881. He was appointed Chairman of the Gresham University Commission in 1892. Lord Cowper has been, since 1861, Lord-Lieutenant of Bedfordshire, and was married, in 1870, to Katrine, daughter of the 4th Marquis of Northampton. Addresses: 4 St. James's Square, S.W.; Panshanger, Herts; and Athenæum, &c.

COX, The Rev. Sir George William, Bart., M.A., eldest son of George Hamilton Cox, H.E.I.C.S., born in Benares on Jan. 10, 1827, was educated at Rugby and at Trinity College, Oxford, of which he was scholar, and where he graduated S.C.L. in 1849, and proceeded B.A. and M.A. in 1859. He entered holy orders in 1850, and was Curate of Salcombe Regis, Devon, in 1850-51, of St. Paul's, Exeter, 1854-57, held an Assistant-Mastership in Cheltenham College in 1860-61, was Vicar of Bekebourne, Kent, 1881, and Rector of Scrayingham, York, 1881-97. With his friend Edward A. Freeman (afterwards the historian of the Norman Conquest and of Sicily) he published in 1850 a volume of "Poems Legendary and Historical." His "Life of St. Boniface" was published in 1853. He is also author of "Tales from Greek Mythology" and "The Great Persian War," 1861; "Tales of the Gods and Heroes," 1862; "Tales of Thebes and Arzoz," 1863; "A Manual of Mythology in the form of Questions and Answers," 1867; "Tales of Ancient Greece," collected edition, 1868; "Latin and Teutonic Christendom," 1870; "The Mythology of Aryan Nations," 2 vols., 10; "Popular Romances of the Middle Ages," 1871; and "Tales of the Teutonic Lands,"

1872, both in conjunction with Mr. Eustace Hinton Jones; "A History of Greece," 2 vols., 1874; "The Crusades," 1874; "The Greeks and the Persians," 1876; "The Athenian Empire," 1876; "A General History of Greece, from the earliest period to the death of Alexander the Great, with a sketch of the subsequent history to the present time," 1876; "School History of Greece," 1877; "History of British Rule in India," 1881; "Introduction to the Science of Comparative Mythology and Folklore," 1881; "Alexander the Great," and other articles in the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica"; "Lives of Greek Statesmen," 2 vols., 1886; "A Concise History of England and the English People," 1887. He has been a contributor to the Edinburgh Review since 1857. In 1861 he became literary adviser to the publishing firm of Messrs. Longman, and this relation continued for twenty-five years. He edited (jointly with Mr. W. T. Brande) the "Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art" (3 vols. 1865-67; new edition, 3 vols. 1875), and contributed to the "Glossary of Terms and Phrases," edited by the Rev. H. Percy Smith, 1883. To Dr. Colenso, Bishop of Natal, during his sojourn in England, 1863-65, he gave all the help in his power, and the intimate associations of these years supplied him with an abundance of materials of which, after the Bishop's death, he was enabled to avail himself in drawing up the story of his great work on the Pentateuch and the Old Testament history generally. In 1888 he published his "Life of Bishop Colenso," avowing that his motive in writing it was to lay before the world for his words and his acts generally a full and complete vindication, and to record the fact that for his method and its conclusions a decisive justification is furnished by the series of judgments which have issued from the highest courts of the Church of England. Claiming for the Bishop of Natal a genuine and hearty loyalty for the Church of England, for which throughout his whole life he worked and fought, and seeing the prevalent disposition to turn the controversy to false issues, he put forth, later in the same year, 1888, under the title of "The Church of England and the Teaching of Bishop Colenso," a series of 154 propositions, embodying all that is of any importance in the several volumes published by the Bishop, the conclusion being that the law of the Church of England, and with it a silence which implies acquiescence on the part of all schools and parties, make it in every way competent for any clergyman to hold and to teach any of these propositions. On the death of his uncle, Sir Edmund Cox, which occurred in Canada in 1877, he succeeded to the baronetcy; and he is the 14th Baronet in succession from Sir Richard Cox, Chancellor of Ireland. In 1896 he was granted a Civil List Pension of £120 per annum. He resigned his living in 1897, owing to ill-health. He married in 1850 Emily Marian, daughter of Lieut.-Colonel William Stirling, H.E.I.C.S. Address: Woodside, Pembury, Tunbridge Wells.

COX, Horace, the second son of William Cox, was born in London on May 31, 1842, and was educated privately. He has during the past thirty-five years been employed in the Field and Queen publishing offices, and he is now the manager of the Field, the Queen, and the Law Times. Address: Windsor House, Bream's Buildings, E.C.; and The Hermitage, Harrow-on-the-Hill.

COX, Irwin Edward Bainbridge, J.P., D.L., eldest son of the late Serjeant E. W. Cox, was born at Taunton on July 9, 1838, and was educated at Crewkerne and Magdalen College, Cambridge, where he took his degree in 1861. He was called to the bar in 1862, and after four years' successful practice, retired in order to enter on a journalistic career, for which he always had a great liking. The papers owned by the late Mr. Serjeant Cox at that time were the Field, Queen, Law Times, Critic, County Courts Chronicle, and others. The death of the late Mr. John Crockford, which deprived Mr. Serjeant Cox of an old and valued servant, afforded Mr. Irwin Cox the journalistic opening he had so long desired. He therefore threw up his practice at the bar, and devoted himself to the conduct of the newspapers. During his management, from 1865 to 1880, the Field passed through one of, if not the most successful transition ever known in journalism, turning as it did from a comparatively small unimportant newspaper to a large and valuable journal, whose opinions carried great weight. The Queen has had almost as remarkable an experience as the Field. The billiard room at Moat Mount, Mill Hill, Mr. Cox's principal seat, has a great history, being really the dining hall of the late Serjeants' Inn. At the dissolution of the Honourable Society of Serjeants in 1877, Mr. Serjeant Cox, who then purchased the whole of the property of the Serjeants, removed the hall at their especial request to Moat Mount, and constituted it, together with its furniture, an heirloom in his family. It is perhaps one of the most unique monuments existing of a formerly very powerful legal Order. Its stained windows are preserved, and it is adorned with the arms of Serjeants from the earliest times. Mr. Cox, who became a magistrate at the early age of 22, is Chairman of several Conservative Associations, and has represented Pinner at the Middlesex County Council since County Councils were established. In 1865, Mr. Cox married Katharine, the fourth daughter of the late Rev. Bartholomew Nicholls, M.A., then vicar of Mill Hill. Address: Moat Mount, Mill Hill, N.W.

COX, Palmer, American author and artist, was born at Granby, Province of Quebec, April 28, 1840, and educated at Granby Academy. He devoted himself to mercantile pursuits, and drifted to California, where an artist who saw his work advised him to place himself under instructors, and to seek a market for his drawings. From 1863 to 1875, he wrote stories for the periodicals of San Francisco, and drew cartoons. Returning east, he settled in New York. He has distinguished himself chiefly by illustrating his own writings with characteristic drawings, as shown in the "Brownie Stories," the first of which was published in St. Nicholas in 1881. Among other works by him are "Squibs of California," 1874; "Hans von Pelter's Trip to Gotham," "How Columbus found America," and "That Stanley," 1878; "Comic Yarns" and "Queer People," 1888; a cantata for children called "The Brownies in Fairyland," and a spectacular play called "Palmer Cox's Brownies."

COXWELL, Henry Tracy, was born, March 2, 1819, at the Parsonage House, Woudham, near Rochester Castle. He is the grandson of the Rev. Charles Coxwell, deputy-lieutenant of Gloucestershire, and son of Commander Joseph Coxwell, R.N., and was educated at the Military School, Chatham. In 1844 the young balloonist, who at that time was an enthusiastic amateur, ascended from White Conduit Gardens in North London. In 1845 he projected and edited the Aërostatic Magazine; after that he made numerous ascents with Mr. Hampton, Mr. Gypson, and Lieutenant Gale. He was a fellow-traveller with Albert Smith when a balloon (Gypson's) burst over London in a storm of lightning and thunder, and it was owing to Mr. Coxwell's promptitude in cutting a line which turned the balloon into a parachute that the lives of the four aerial travellers were saved. This incident was one of the means used by his friends to induce him to undertake the management of a balloon himself, which he did most successfully in the year 1848 at Chelmsford. In the same year he commenced an aeronautic campaign on the Continent: starting at Brussels, with his typical war balloon, he demonstrated a new plan of discharging aerial torpedoes. The torpedoes were dropped from a second car or battery connected by a rope ladder, 40 feet long, below the passenger car. Down this rope ladder Mr. Coxwell descended in order not to risk the gas exploding when the shells were lighted and discharged. They fell over the city and exploded in mid-air. With this balloon a succession of experiments took place at Elberfeld, Berlin, and the principal towns of Germany and Austria. In the year 1851 Mr. Coxwell returned to London, and about the time of the Crimean War he called the attention of the military authorities to his system of signalling, by using semaphore arms attached to the ring and car. Some years later he adopted other codes more in accordance with the telegraphic improvements of the present day. In 1862 Mr. Coxwell, after making numerous ascents in Great Britain, turned his attention to meteorological ballooning. Mr. James Glaisher, F.R.S., having undertaken to make observations for the British Association, Mr. Coxwell was invited to co-operate. On Sept. 5, 1862, Messrs. Glaisher and Coxwell accomplished an exploration to the unprecedented elevation of seven miles, where Mr. Glaisher was in a state of insensibility, while Mr. Coxwell had to mount up into the ring to seize the valve cord between his teeth, as he had lost power in his hands, they being frost-bitten, and he could not effect a descent until he had opened the valve. It was here that Mr. Coxwell observed an aneroid to indicate their maximum elevation, which was confirmed by other meteorological instruments as read and verified by Mr. Glaisher before and after his temporary unconsciousness of thirteen minutes, during which time a vast dip had been made of nearly 19,000 feet. Lofty flights above our highest mountain-tops were continued for some time, but never equalled the first. About this time Mr. Coxwell ascended from Woolwich Arsenal and from Aldershot camp for purely military objects. In the year 1870 Prussia formed in Cologne two detachments of aeronauts, in order to use them during the Franco-German War, and Mr. Coxwell was engaged to instruct the officers and soldiers in this service. Some time before the Egyptian Campaign Mr. Coxwell showed at the Crystal Palace how one large balloon and two smaller ones could, by a variation in their positions while in a captive state, illustrate a system of signalling. He retired in the year 1885, when his last public ascent had been made from York, where he had ascended consecutively for twenty-eight years. He has written two volumes of his "Life and Ballooning Experiences;" these were published in 1887-89.

COZENS-HARDY, Herbert Hardy, Justice of the High Court, was born at Letheringsett Hall, Dereham, Norfolk, on Nov. 22, 1838, and is the second son of the late William Hardy Cozens-Hardy. He was educated at Amersham School and at University College, London, where he obtained a law scholarship and was subsequently elected Fellow and Member of Council. In 1862 he was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, having previously obtained a certificate of honour and a studentship. He became a Q.C. in 1882, and in 1885 was elected a Bencher of his Inn. Up to the time of his appointment as one of the Justices of the High Court of Justice in February 1899, he was leader of the Chancery Bar, being popular and well known as the senior of the specials. He was also Chairman of the General Council of the Bar, being succeeded in this office by Mr. Joseph Walton, Q.C., in March 1899. From 1885 to the time of his elevation to the Bench he represented North Norfolk in the House of Commons in the Liberal and Radical interest. Addresses: 50 Ladbroke Grove, W.; and Letheringsett Hall, Norfolk.

CRACKANTHORPE, Montague Hughes (formerly MONTAGUE COOKSON), Q.C., D.C.L., younger son of Christopher Cookson, of Nowers, Somerset, Esq., and grandson of Dr. Cookson, Canon of Windsor, whose sister married William Wordsworth, the poet, was born in 1832. His son, the late Mr. Hubert Crackanthorpe, was a brilliant writer of short studies and stories, and promised at the time of his death to rival Maupassant or Kipling in that school of writing. In 1850 Mr. Montagu Crackanthorpe went to St. John's College, Oxford, of which he was successively Scholar and Fellow. In Easter term, 1852, he gained the Junior University Mathematical Scholarship (open to all undergraduates), and was in the same term second for the Hertford Latin Scholarship. He took a double first class in Classics and Mathematics in Moderations, and the like double honours in the Final Schools. In 1856 he was elected Eldon Law Scholar, and entered as a student at Lincoln's Inn. Here he was a pupil in the chambers of Mr. Thomas Lewin, whom he afterwards assisted in bringing out a new edition of his treatise on the "Law of Trusts," and he also read with Mr. John Wickens, better known as Vice-Chancellor Sir John Wickens. In 1859 he was awarded the Studentship of the Four Inns of Court. In 1862 he was appointed Lecturer in Equity and Real Property to the Incorporated Law Society, a post which he relinquished in 1866, owing to his increasing practice at the Bar. In 1875 he was made a Q.C., and in 1877 became a Bencher of Lincoln's Inn. For many years he was a recognised leader in the Chancery Division, notably in the Court presided over by Mr. Justice (afterwards Lord Justice) Fry. Of late he has ceased to attach himself to any court, and practises mainly before the House of Lords and Privy Council. In 1888 he succeeded, on the death of his cousin, William Crackanthorpe, Esq., to the Newbiggin Hall estate, situate partly in Westmorland and partly in Cumberland, a property which has continued in the Crackanthorpe family since the reign of Edward III. In the same year he obtained a grant of a royal license to change his name from Cookson to Crackanthorpe, and to bear the arms of Crackanthorpe, quartered with his own arms. From time to time Mr. Crackanthorpe has contributed to many of our leading periodicals, writing usually on social, political, and legal subjects. Among his best known articles are "The Morality of Married Life" in the Fortnightly Review, "The Nation before Party" in the Nineteenth Century, and divers papers on legal reform. He is the author of an essay on the "Immigration of Destitute Aliens," published by Swan Sonnenschein & Co. in their Social Science Series. His letters to the Times on Ireland, written in 1887, after making a tour of political inspection in that country, have been frequently quoted by Unionist speakers in support of the case against Home Rule. He is a Liberal-Unionist, and as a Liberal he has contested two divisions of the Metropolis. He has delivered a large number of political and social addresses in the North of England. In London, Mr. Crackanthorpe was until lately a member of the Council of Legal Education. He is also a member of the Bar Committee, and he is Vice-Chairman of the Council of Law Reporting. In Oxford he is Standing Counsel to the University and an honorary Fellow of St. John's College. In Westmorland he is a Justice of the Peace, and Deputy-Lieutenant, and Chairman of Quarter Sessions. In 1896 he attended the meeting of the American Bar Association at Saratoga, in company with the Lord Chief-Justice and the late Sir Frank Lockwood, and delivered an address on the Historical Method of Studying English Law, which was subsequently published in the Law Quarterly Review. In 1897 he attended the First International Congress of Advocates at Brussels, as the accredited representative of the English Bar, and delivered an address in French on Methods of Legal Education, which was published in the Compte Rendu of the Congress. He is married to the younger daughter of the Rev. Eardley Chauncy Holt, a descendant of Sir John Holt, Chief-Justice of the Court of King's Bench, and also of Sir John Eardley Wilmot, Chief-Justice of the Court of Common Pleas. Addresses: 65 Rutland Gate, S.W.; Newbiggin Hall, Westmorland; and Athenæum.

CRAMER-ROBERTS, The Right Rev. Francis Alexander Bandal, D.D., Assistant to Bishop of Manchester, and Vicar of Blackburn, was born at Armagh, on Dec. 3, 1840, and is the son of Colonel Cramer-Roberts, of the 68th Regiment. He was educated at Rugby, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, was Curate at Frant, near Tunbridge Wells, from 1864 to 1868, and of Hawley, in Hants, from 1868 to 1870, when he was appointed to the Rectory of Llandinaboo, Herefordshire. Here he remained for two years, and then returned to Hawley, Hants, after which he was Vicar of Bindley, Heath, Surrey, for five years (1873-78), Bishop of Nassau, Bahamas, from 1878 to 1886, and Assistant to the Bishop of Winchester from 1886 to 1887. In 1887 he was appointed to the Vicarage of Blackburn.

CRANBORNE, Viscount, James Edward Hubert Gascoyne Cecil, M.A., M.P., eldest son of the present Marquis of Salisbury, was born in London, Oct. 23, 1861, and was educated at Eton and University College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1884. He sat in the House of Commons as Conservative member for the Darwen Division of Lancashire from 1885 to 1892, and he has since 1893 represented Rochester in the same interest. Lord Cranborne is Chairman of the Church Parliamentary Committee, and he was in 1896 elected Chairman of the Hertfordshire Quarter Sessions. He is married to Cicely, daughter of the 5th Earl of Arran, and has a son and heir, Robert, born in 1893. Addresses: 9 Park Place, St. James's, S.W.; and Athenæum.

CRANBROOK, Earl of, The Right Hon. Gathorne Gathorne - Hardy, G.C.S.I., is the third son of the late Mr. John Hardy, of Dunstall Hall, Staffordshire (who for many years represented the town of Bradford in Parliament), and of Isabel, daughter of Mr. Richard Gathorne, of Kirkby Lonsdale. He was born at Bradford, Oct. 1, 1814, and educated at Shrewsbury School, and at Oriel College, Oxford, where he gained a second class in Classics, and took the degree of B.A. in 1836. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1840, and practised as a barrister for several years. Mr. Hardy unsuccessfully contested Bradford in the Conservative interest in 1847, but was returned to the House of Commons in 1856 as member for Leominster, which borough he continued to represent till the celebrated Oxford election in July 1865, when, after an exciting contest, he defeated Mr. Gladstone by a majority of 180, this being the principal Conservative success at the General Election of that year. In 1858 Mr. Hardy was appointed Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department in Lord Derby's second administration; on the formation of Lord Derby's third administration in July 1866 he became President of the Poor-Law Board; and on the resignation of Mr. Walpole in May 1867, he was nominated Secretary of State for the Home Department, which office he held till the resignation of the Conservative ministry in December 1868. On the formation of Mr. Disraeli's administration in February 1874, Mr. Hardy was nominated Secretary of State for War. In May 1858 he was raised to the House of Peers by the title of Viscount Cranbrook, of Hemsted, in the county of Kent; and he assumed, by royal license, the additional surname of Gathorne. In the same year he succeeded the Marquis of Salisbury as Secretary of State for India, and held that office until the Conservatives retired from office in May 1880. In Lord Salisbury's cabinet of 1885, and again in 1886, Lord Cranbrook held the office of Lord President of the Council; and in 1892, on the resignation of the Government, he was created Earl of Cranbrook and Baron Medway of Hemsted in the county of Kent. Lord Cranbrook is a D.L. and J.P., and a Bencher of the Inner Temple. He married in 1838 Jane, daughter of Mr. James Orr, of Holyrood House, co. Down. She died in 1897. His eldest son, the Hon. J. S. Gathorne-Hardy, now Lord Medway, sat in Parliament for the Medway Division of Kent, and his third son, the Hon. A. E. Gathorne-Hardy, for the East Grinstead Division of Sussex. Addresses: Hemsted Park, Cranbrook; 2 Cadogan Square, S.W.; and Athenæum.

CRANE, Stephen, author, was born in 1870, at Newark, New Jersey, and is the son of J. I. Crane, D.D. He was educated at Lafayette College, Syracuse University. He sprang into fame with his series of vivid and sufficiently revolting descriptions of modern warfare, entitled "The Red Badge of Courage." This was published in 1895, and purports to be the sensations of a raw recruit in the war between North and South. The work, so far as that campaign was concerned, is a brilliant imaginative effort. Mr. Stephen Crane was employed as war correspondent to the Westminster Gazette, to which he sent home some vivid letters, and to the New York Journal during the Graeco-Turkish War, 1897. He was correspondent to the latter before Santiago, in Puerto Rico, and Havana, before the Spaniards had gone. Other volumes from his pen are, "Maggie," a realistic tale of the Boweries, "The Black Riders and other Lines," "George's Mother," "The Little Regiment," "The Third Violet, a Romance," "The Open Boat," "The Eternal Patience," "Pictures of War," 1898, &c. Address: Hartwood, Sullivan Co., New York.

CRANE, Walter, painter and decorative designer, second son of Thomas Crane, of Chester, miniature and portrait painter, sometime Secretary and Treasurer of the Liverpool Academy, was born at Liverpool, Aug. 15, 1845; apprenticed, 1859, to W. J. Linton (the eminent wood engraver, poet, and Chartist), for three years, to learn the craft of drawing on wood for engraving. This turned his work largely in the direction of book illustration, which he followed side by side with painting and decorative designing. He was appointed a member of the committee of the General Exhibition, known as the Dudley Gallery, of Water-Colour Drawings in 1879, and resigned that position in 1881. He was Examiner at the National Competition of Drawings, South Kensington, 1879, and has so acted since. He was elected a member of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours in 1882, also of the Institute of Painters in Oil, but resigned membership of both in 1886. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Society of Painters in Water Colours (the old society) in March 1888, and has since exhibited there. He became a member of the Società d'Acquarellisti of Rome in 1883. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy (a small picture, "The Lady of Shalott") in 1862; and he exhibited at the Grosvenor Gallery every year from its foundation in 1877, on which he ceased to appeal to the Academy. His principal pictures are: "The Renaissance of Venus," 1877; "The Fate of Persephone," 1878; "The Sirens," 1879; "Truth and the Traveller," 1880; "Europa," "The Laidley Worm," 1881; "The Roll of Fate" and "Dunstanborough Castle," 1882; "Diana and the Shepherd," 1883; "The Bridge of Life," 1884; "Freedom," 1885; "Pandora," 1885; "The Chariots of the Hours," 1887; "Sunrise," 1888; "Flora," 1889; "Pegasus," 1889. "A Diver," 1885, won a silver medal at the Paris Universal Exhibition, 1889. He has published "Walter Crane's Toy Books," 1869-75; "Picture Books," 1874-75; "The Baby's Opera," 1877, &c.; "The Sirens Three," a poem written and illustrated by himself, 1886, which appeared originally in the English Illustrated Magazine. He was associated with the movement against the Royal Academy, 1886, and in favour of the establishment of a National Exhibition in which all the arts should be represented. Afterwards, in conjunction with other well-known decorative artists, he founded the Arts and Crafts Exhibition Society, 1888, and became its President. The society opened its first exhibition at the New Gallery in the autumn of 1888. In 1884 he became associated with the Socialist movement, and has since worked for it by means of lectures, writings, and designs. In 1889 he gave the Cantor Lectures (course of three) at the Society of Arts, "On the Decoration and Illustration of Books." He was President of the Section of Applied Art at the National Art Congress at Liverpool, 1888; and designed the Seal of the London County Council, 1889. Since 1889 he has illustrated "Flora's Feast" (written by himself); "The Book of Wedding Days," "Echoes of Hellas," "Queen Summer," 1891 (written by himself); "A Wonder Book" (Nathaniel Hawthorne), 1892; "The Old Garden" (Margaret DeLand), 1892; "Illustrations to Shakespeare's Tempest," "The Glittering Plain" (William Morris), issued by the Kelmscott Press; "Renaissance, a Book of Verse," 1891 (by himself); more recently "Spenser's Faerie Queene," published by George Allen, an elaborate edition with many illustrations, which was commenced in 1894 and finished in 1897; and "The Shepherd's Calendar" (Harper Bros.), 1897-98. He has also written "The Claims of Decorative Art," 1892 (Lawrence & Bullen), which has been translated into German and also Dutch; "The Decorative Illustrations of Books" (Bell & Sons), 1892; and "The Bases of Design" (Bell & Sons), 1898; "Cartoons for the Cause" (Twentieth Century Press), 1897. In 1891 an exhibition of Walter Crane's works was held at the Fine Art Society in Bond Street, comprising book designs, decorations, and easel pictures in oil and water colours. This collection was afterwards shown in the United States of America (in 1891-92), whither Mr. Crane accompanied it, and in Germany, opening at Berlin (Kunstgeunbe Museum), and afterwards at the principal cities, Leipzig, Frankfurt, Crefeld, Dresden, Darmstadt, Munich, &c., also at Prague and Brünn, and later at Basle and Brussels, finishing its Continental tour at Copenhagen, Christiania, Stockholm, and Gothenburg. This is probably the first instance of a collection of the works of an English artist being shown over so large a Continental area. One of the results was a monograph on the works of Walter Crane by Herr von Bestepsch, published by Dr. Carl Masner of Der Graphische Kunst of Vienna. Mr. Crane's principal easel pictures since 1889 are a "Masque of the Senses," "Poppies and Corn," "A Masque of Spring Flowers," and "Neptune's Horses." The two latter were exhibited at the New Gallery in 1893; also "The Swan Maidens," 1894; "England's Emblem," 1895; "The Rainbow and the Wave," 1896; "Britannia's Vision," 1897. Just prior to his visit to America he sat to G. F. Watts for his portrait, which was exhibited at the New Gallery in 1893. In September 1893 he was appointed Director of Design at the Manchester Municipal School of Art. He resigned this post in 1896. In August 1898 the Lords of the Committee of Council appointed Mr. Walter Crane to the Principalship of the Royal College of Art at South Kensington, vacant by the retirement of Mr. Sparkes. In 1871 Mr. Walter Crane married Frances, daughter of the late Thomas Andrews, Hempstead, Essex. Address: Holland Street, Kensington, W.

CRANWORTH, Lord, Robert Thornhaugh Gurdon, is the eldest son of Brampton Gurdon, of Letton, Norfolk, and was born in 1829. He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge (M.A., 1852). He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1856. As a Liberal he represented South Norfolk in the House of Commons from 1880-85, and Mid Norfolk in 1885-86 and 1886. As a Liberal Unionist he sat for the same constituency from 1886-92, and from April to July in 1895. He is extremely popular in his county, and is D.L., J.P., Chairman of Quarter Sessions, and Colonel of the 4th Volunteer Battalion of the Norfolk Regiment. He is Chairman of the Norfolk County Council. He was raised to the peerage for his services to the cause of Liberal Unionism at new year 1899, with the title of Baron Cranworth, of Letton and Cranworth in the county of Norfolk. His second wife, whom he married in 1874, is a daughter of the Rev. R. Heathcote. Address: Letton, Norfolk.

CRAWFORD, Mrs. Emily, Paris correspondent of the Daily News, daughter of Andrew and Grace Johnstone, was born in Dublin on May 31, 1841. Her education was a home one until she went to Paris in 1857. Her reading was extensive, and when a young girl she was engaged to write a daily letter to the Morning Star. She married, in 1864, George Morland Crawford, Esq., of Chelsfield Court Lodge, Kent, and member of Lincoln's Inn, who was then Paris correspondent of the Daily News. After her marriage she greatly aided her husband in his work, remained in France during the war of 1870, and was in Paris during the Communal Civil War. She frequently contributed leading and miscellaneous articles to the Daily News, and wrote for many papers, besides English and American magazines and reviews; amongst others, Truth, the Illustrated London News, the Illustrated Journal, the Pall Mall Gazette, the New York Tribune, the Gentleman's Magazine, the Century, and Macmillan's, to which she furnished, in October 1877, a monograph on M. Thiers. She also wrote the biography of that statesman which appeared after his death in the Daily News. Her first review article was asked for by the editor of the Museum of Edinburgh, on the suggestion of the late Matthew Arnold, who, when he made it, was not acquainted with her, but had been struck with some observations which she had made on the weak side of the system of higher education in France, and had entered into a correspondence with her on the subject. Mrs. Crawford has also contributed to the Contemporary and Universal Review, and Subjects of the Day. Mrs. Crawford was proposed for the Cross of the Legion of Honour, but preferred that the decoration offered her should be given to her son, Mr. Robert Crawford. Mrs. Crawford is an Hon. Member of the Cobden Club. Address: 60 Boulevard de Courcelles, Paris.

CRAWFORD, Francis Marion, American writer, the son of Thomas Crawford, the sculptor, was born at Bagni di Lucca, Italy, Aug. 2, 1854. He was educated partly in America (Concord, N.H.), partly in Italy, and partly in England, 1870-74, where he had a private tutor and was a member of Trinity College, Cambridge. From 1874-76 he studied at Karlsruhe, and for a short time at Heidelberg. He passed 1876-78 at the University of Rome, studying Sanskrit. In 1879 he went to India and was editor of a daily paper, the Indian Herald, published at Allahabad. He returned to America in 1881, remaining there till 1883, when he went to Italy, where (with the exception of a visit to Turkey in 1884) he has since principally resided, his home being near Sorrento. Mr. Crawford's writings have been chiefly novels, though he has done some work in critical philosophy and philology. His books include "Mr. Isaacs," 1882; "Dr. Claudius," 1883; "To Leeward," 1883; "A Roman Singer," 1884; "An American Politician," 1884; "Zoroaster," 1885; "A Tale of a Lonely Parish," 1886; "Saracinesca," 1887; "Marzio's Crucifix," 1887; "Paul Patoff," 1887; "With the Immortals," 1888; "Greifenstein," 1889; "Sant' Ilario," 1889; and "A Cigarette Maker's Romance," 1890; "Khaled," "The Witch of Prague," "Don Orsino," "Pietro Ghisleri," "The Children of the King," and "The Novel: What it is," 1893; "Katharine Lauderdale," "Love in Idleness," "The Ralstons," "The Upper Berth," and "By the Waters of Paradise," 1894; "Casa Braccio," "Constantinople," and "Adam Johnstone's Son," 1895; "Bar Harbour," "Takisara," 1896; and "A Rose of Yesterday" and "Corleone," 1897. Mr. Marion Crawford a few years ago was awarded a prize of 1000 francs by the French Academy, as an acknowledgment of the merit of his novels, and especially of two of them, "Zoroaster" and "Marzio's Crucifix," which were written in French as well as in English. He is married to Elizabeth, daughter of General Berdan, U.S. Army. Address: Sant' Agnello di Sorrento, Sorrento.

CRAWFORD, Earl of, James Ludovic Lindsay, K.T., J.P., LL.D., F.R.S., was born at St. Germain-en-Laye, France, on July 28, 1847, and succeeded his father as 26th Earl in 1880. He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, and was a Lieutenant in the Grenadier Guards for some time. He represented Wigan in the House of Commons from 1874 to 1880, was formerly President of the Astronomical Society, and is the author of several works on Astronomy. Lord Crawford is the premier Earl of Scotland, is a Commander of the Legion of Honour, and is a Trustee of the British Museum. He was married, in 1869, to Emily, daughter of Colonel Hon. Edward Wilbraham, and granddaughter of the 1st Baron Skelmersdale. Addresses: 2 Cavendish Square, W.; Balcarres, Colinsburgh, Fifeshire; and Athenæum.

CRAWFORD, Oswald, C.M.G., son of the late John Crawford, sometime Envoy Plenipotentiary to the Court of Siam, and subsequently Governor of Singapore, was educated at Eton and Oxford. Leaving the University he entered the Foreign Office, and was appointed Consul at Oporto in 1867. He is the author of the following novels: "World we Live In," "Sylvia Arden," "Beyond the Seas," and of several works dealing with Portuguese matters. In 1890 he was created C.M.G., and in the same year published "Round the Calendar in Portugal." He is editor of Chapman's Magazine and literary editor of the London Review. He is Chairman and Managing Director of Chapman and Hall, Limited, and Chairman of the Authors' Club. He married Margaret, youngest daughter of the late Richard

Ford. Addresses: Queen Anne's Mansions, S.W.; and Athenæum.

CREAGH, Charles Vandeleur, C.M.G., was born Oct. 4, 1842, and is the second surviving son of Captain James Creagh, R.N., of Cahirbane, Co. Clare, Ireland, and grandson of the O'Moore, of Cloghan Castle, King's Co. He was educated at the Royal Naval School, New Cross, and at Eastman's Naval Academy, Southsea; passed the examination for admission to the India Navy in 1857, and entered the Punjab Police, as Assistant District Superintendent, in 1865. He obtained a second-class certificate in Oriental languages, and in 1867 was supported by the Indian Government in raising a Sikh Police Corps, for which service he had been selected by the Governor of Hong Kong. He has held the following appointments in Hong Kong: 1868, J.P.; Acting Captain Superintendent of Police in 1869-70, and 1877-78; Sheriff, 1874; Aide-de-Camp, 1878; Superintendent of the Fire Brigade, 1878-80. He studied law in the Middle Temple during eight terms, and passed the examinations in Roman and Common Law. He passed with credit the six Acting Police Magistrate and Coroner examinations in Chinese prescribed by Government; and was Arbitrator for Government under the Opium Ordinance in 1879; was appointed Assistant British President and Member of the State Council, Perak, on the application of the President, Sir Hugh Low, in 1882; and Judge of the Presidency Court, Perak. He acted frequently for the President during his absence. In 1888 he was selected for the post of Governor and Commander in Chief and Chief Judicial Officer of the British North Borneo Company's territory, with the approval of the Secretary of State. On Jan. 1, 1890, he was appointed Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Labuan. In 1892 he was made a C.M.G., and was called to the Bar. He retired in 1895.

CREDITON, Bishop of. See TREFUSIS, THE RIGHT REV. ROBERT EDWARD.

CREIGHTON, The Right Rev. Mandell, Bishop of London, D.D. Oxford and Cambridge; Hon. LL.D. Glasgow, Hon. D.C.L. Durham, LL.D. of Harvard University, Litt.D. Dublin, Fellow of the Società Romana di Storia Patria, was born at Carlisle, in 1843, educated at Durham Grammar School, and elected Postmaster at Merton College, Oxford, in 1862. At Oxford he was placed in the first class in Classical Moderations, and in the first class in Litteræ Humaniores, and in the second class in Law and Modern History in 1866. In the same year he was elected Fellow of Merton College, and remained at Oxford as tutor of Merton. He was ordained deacon in 1870, and priest in 1873, and in 1875 accepted the living of Embleton, in Northumberland. He was appointed by Bishop Lightfoot rural dean of Alnwick in 1879, and on the formation of the diocese of Newcastle, in 1882, was made honorary canon of Newcastle and examining chaplain to the Bishop. In 1883 the University of Glasgow conferred on him the honorary degree of LL.D. In 1884 he was elected to the newly founded professorship of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Cambridge. In 1885 he received the honorary degree of D.C.L. from the University of Durham, and was appointed by the Crown Canon Residentiary of Worcester Cathedral. He has frequently acted as public examiner and select preacher in the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. He has also been examining chaplain to the Bishop of Worcester. He is the author of several historical works:—"Primer of Roman History," 1875; "The Age of Elizabeth," 1876; "The Life of Simon de Montfort," 1877; "Primer of English History," 1877; "Cardinal Wolsey," in the series of English Statesmen, 1888; "Carlisle," in Historic Towns, 1889. Other more recent works of his are:—"Persecution and Tolerance," 1894; "The Early Renaissance in England," 1895; "The English National Character," 1896; and "The Story of Some English Shires," 1897. He was founder and first editor of the English Historical Review, the first number of which appeared in January 1886. Professor Creighton represented Emmanuel College at the 250th anniversary celebration of Harvard College, Massachusetts, in November 1886, when he received the degree of LL.D., and was elected a corresponding member of the Historical Society of Massachusetts. In 1889 he was elected Honorary Fellow of Merton College, Oxford. In 1890 he was appointed by the Crown Canon of Windsor, but before entering on that office was appointed Bishop of Peterborough, and was consecrated on April 25, 1891. In the same year he was elected Honorary Fellow of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, and in 1892 received the honorary degree of Litt.D. at the tercentenary of the University of Dublin. In 1893 he was elected Hulsean Lecturer in the University of Cambridge. In 1898 he was elected Professor of Ancient Literature in the Royal Academy of Arts, and in March of that year was appointed a Trustee of the National Portrait Gallery in succession to Lord de L'Isle and Dudley deceased. Dr. Creighton was translated to London in 1897, when he was also appointed a Member of the Privy Council. Addresses: Fulham Palace, S.W.; and Athenæum.

CREMER, William Randal, ex-M.P., was born in 1838, of poor parents, at Fareham, in Hampshire, and lost his father, who was a herald painter, at an early age. As soon as he was old enough he was apprenticed to the carpenter's trade, and in Brighton, as well as in London, where he worked as a joiner, he found time to associate himself in all the Progressive movements of the day, and in 1859 took a leading part in the "nine hours' movement," which resulted in the memorable lock-out in the building trade. In 1860 he advocated and succeeded in getting united the various small local Unions in the Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners. In the same year he took an active part in the demonstration arranged for the reception of Garibaldi on his visit to England, and to him also were mainly due the organising arrangements for the great demonstrations of the Reform League in Hyde Park and the Agricultural Hall. Since then he has been associated in all the movements on behalf of the working-classes, such as the Education League (before the passing of Mr. Forster's Act), the agricultural labourers' agitation, and the Workmen's Peace Association (at the time of the Franco-German War). Mr. Cremer is the author of several addresses to the working-classes upon the folly of war, and has repeatedly visited Paris, arranging demonstrations and addressing meetings. At the General Election of 1885 he was returned as a working-class Radical member for the Haggerston Division of Shoreditch, and was again elected in 1886 and in 1892. In 1895 he was defeated by the small majority of 81. He is Secretary of the International Arbitration League, and editor of the Arbitrator. In 1864 he was first Hon. General Secretary of the "International." In 1890 he was made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour. Mr. Cremer originated, and was the chief organiser, of the Inter-Parliamentary Conferences, which were first held at Paris and London in 1889 and 1890, to promote friendly relations between the nations of Europe. M. Jules Simon presided at the Paris Conference, and Lord Herschell at the Conference in London. These Conferences have since been followed by others held in the Parliamentary Chambers at Rome, Berne, The Hague, Buda-Pesth, and Brussels. Every Parliament in Europe except the Spanish has new groups, numbering from 50 to 100 members, adhering to the movement. In 1887 he secured the adhesion of 234 members of the House of Commons to a Memorial to the President and Congress of the United States in favour of a Treaty of Arbitration with this country, and a similar Memorial in 1891 signed by 354 M.P.'s. Both these Memorials he presented to the President and Congress at Washington, and in 1893 succeeded in carrying, by a unanimous vote, a resolution in the House of Commons in favour of such a treaty. Mr. Cremer is a widower, and has been twice married. Address: 11 Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C.

CREMONA, Professor Luigi, F.R.S., F.R.S.E., LL.D., Professor of Higher Mathematics at the University of Rome, and Senator of the Kingdom of Italy, &c., was born at Pavia on Dec. 7, 1830. In 1848, leaving school and home, he fought for eighteen months for the independence of Italy, taking part in most engagements in Venetia. Subsequently he went to the University of Pavia and continued his studies, having Brioschi as a master. He very soon entered upon his career as a teacher, at first at the Gymnasium of Cremona, and at the Lyceum of Milan; then as Professor of Higher Geometry at the University of Bologna. In 1886 he passed to the Higher Technical Institute of Milan. In 1873 he was called to re-organise the School of Engineers in Rome, of which he has been director for many years. Luigi Cremona has devoted the whole of his scientific life to the study of higher geometry, and to the reform of mathematical instruction in the secondary and higher schools. The introduction of projective geometry and of graphic statics in public instruction in Italy is almost exclusively his work. He is a Senator of the Realm, and Vice-President of the Council of the Italian Parliament. No question on higher teaching is ever discussed in the Chamber without Cremona ably taking up the subject, for he does this with a perfect knowledge of it. He is the author of a large number of memoirs and works dealing chiefly with geometry, of which two have been translated into French, "Les Éléments de Géométrie Projective" in 1873 and "Les Figures Réciproques en Statique Graphique" in 1885. Address: San Pietro in Vincoli, Rome.

CREWE, Earl of, The Right Hon. Robert Osley Ashburton Crewe-Milnes, Baron Houghton of Great Houghton in the county of York, is the son of the poet, the late Monckton Milnes, first Lord Houghton, by Annabella Hungerford, a daughter of the second Baron Crewe. He was born in London on Jan. 12, 1858, and received his education at Harrow and Trinity, Cambridge, his father's old college. He entered political life as unpaid Private Secretary to the late Earl Granville, and continued to hold his post during his chief's reign at the Foreign Office. Entering the House of Lords on the death of his father in 1885, as Lord Houghton, he was warmly welcomed by the Liberal peers, and in 1886, on the creation of Mr. Gladstone's Government, he became a Lord-in-Waiting, and represented the Board of Trade in the Upper House. In 1892, on the return to power of the Liberal party, he was appointed Viceroy of Ireland. The appointment caused general surprise, as Lord Brassey had been confidently promoted to the post by the newspapers. Lord Houghton was one of the youngest Viceroys of modern times. The honours of Dublin Castle were dispensed by his sisters, the wives of the Hon. Arthur Henniker and of Sir Gerald Fitzgerald, K.C.M.G. He was succeeded in 1895 by the Right Hon. Gerald Balfour. He is President of the Literary Fund, and is himself a poet. Like his father he is a bibliophile, and is interested in all literary matters. He played an important part at the unveiling of the American bust of Keats in Hampstead Parish Church in 1895. He married, in 1880, Sybil Marcia, daughter of Sir Frederick Graham, Bart., and a daughter of the 12th Duke of Somerset. This lady died in 1887, leaving him a widower during his tenure of the Irish Viceroyalty. His second marriage took place on April 20, 1899, his bride being Lady Margaret Primrose, youngest daughter of Lord Rosebery. Addresses: Crewe Hall, Crewe; and 23 Hill Street, W., &c.

CRICHTON-BROWNE, Captain Harold W. A. F., was born at Bensham, in the county of Durham, on July 3, 1866, and is the only son of Sir James Crichton-Browne, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S. He was educated at University College School, at a private tutor's, and at Magdalen College, Cambridge. He became Lieutenant in the 3rd Battalion King's Own Scottish Borderers, and F.R.G.S. and Captain in 1893. In 1888 he joined Mr. Joseph Thomson's exploring expedition to the Atlas Mountains, and with that traveller traversed the interior of southern and northern Morocco, crossed the mountains in these districts, not before entered by Europeans, and reached the summit of Tizi Likumpt, 15,000 feet high. On the recall of Mr. Thomson to England to take charge of an Emin Pasha Relief Expedition then contemplated, Mr. Crichton-

Browne remained for three months in sole charge of the expedition. He is the author of "In the Heart of the Atlas," a lecture delivered at the Royal Institution of Great Britain; "Two African Cities"; "Across the Veldt to Buluwayo," &c. He received a commission in the Bechuanaland Border Police in 1890, and served in South Africa for three years. While on an expedition in Matabeleland in 1892 he was taken prisoner by a Matabele impi and carried to Buluwayo, where he was hospitably entertained by Lobengula. Permanent address: Easton Court, W. Tenbury.

CRICHTON-BROWNE, Sir James, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., Knt. B. 1866, born in 1840 at Edinburgh, is the son of Dr. W. A. F. Browne, H.M. Commissioner in Lunacy for Scotland, who was eminent as a physician and introduced many ameliorations in the treatment of the insane. Sir James Crichton-Browne was educated at the Dumfries Academy, Trinity College, Glenalmond, the University of Edinburgh, and the Medical Schools of London and Paris, and is Honorary Member and was formerly Senior President of the Royal Medical Society of Edinburgh. He is Fellow of the Academy of Medicine of New York, and of many learned Societies; has been President of the Medico-Psychological Association and of the Neurological Society of London; is Vice-President and Treasurer of the Royal Institution of Great Britain; J.P. for Dumfries-shire; was formerly Medical Superintendent of the Newcastle-on-Tyne Borough Asylum; Lecturer on Psychological Medicine in the Newcastle College of Medicine; is Medical Superintendent of the West Riding Asylum; Lecturer on Mental Diseases in the Leeds School of Medicine; and is Lord Chancellor's Visitor in Lunacy. He has published a large number of monographs on the Physiology and Pathology of the Nervous System, and on Mental Diseases; a work on "Education and the Nervous System," 1884; and many lectures and addresses and contributions to medical journals. He founded and edited for six years the West Riding Asylum Medical Reports, the first British Journal of Neurology, and has edited translations from the Danish of Kestel on "Overpressure in Schools," 1885. While at the head of the West Riding Asylum, where he had 1500 insane patients under his professional care, Sir James not only raised that institution into the first rank amongst kindred institutions, and made it famous for good management and successful results, but converted it into a great Medical School, in which important researches were carried on, and in which young medical men were trained for asylum practice. He established a laboratory, in which original investigations were conducted, and in which Ferrier's first discoveries in the functions of the brain were made. He also established a museum, and periodically gave lectures, and brought the moral treatment of the inmates and discipline of the staff to a high pitch of perfection. His reports and letters on overpressure in elementary schools led to a number of modifications in the curriculum of such schools, all tending to mitigate the severity of the pressure upon the children, and especially on such children as are dull or delicate. His writings also, by calling attention to the half-starved condition of large numbers of the children in elementary schools, led to the establishment of free breakfasts. At the meeting of the Congress of the Sanitary Institute at Liverpool, October 1894, he lectured to a working-man audience on "The Prevention of Tubercular Disease." Address: 61 Carlisle Place Mansions, Victoria Street, S.W.

CRIPPS, Henry William, M.A., Q.C., was born March 20, 1815, at Cirencester. He is the eldest son of the Rev. Henry Cripps, and was educated at Winchester College and New College, Oxford. He was appointed Recorder of the City of Lichfield in 1853, Queen's Counsel in 1866, and Bencher of the Middle Temple in the same year. He was Chairman of the first County Council of Bucks, and has been Chairman of Quarter-Sessions of Bucks since 1886. Since 1883 he has been Chancellor of the Diocese of Oxford, and is an Acting Governor of Queen Anne's Bounty. He is author of a treatise on the "Laws of the Church and Clergy," 1845. Addresses: 1 Essex Court, Temple; and Beechwood, Marlow.

CRISPI, Francesco, an Italian statesman, born at Ribera, in Sicily, Oct. 4, 1819, studied law at Palermo, and became a member of the Bar at Naples, where he took part in the conspiracies which led to the overthrow of the kingdom of the Two Sicilies in 1848. He was one of the chief promoters of the insurrection of Palermo, became a Deputy and General Secretary of War, and for two years was the heart and soul of the resistance offered by the Sicilian people. After the victory gained by the Swiss regiments, Signor Crispi fled to France. In 1859 and 1860 he organised the new Sicilian revolution, landed at Palermo with Garibaldi and his volunteers, and after fighting as a simple soldier became a Minister, in which capacity he paved the way for the annexation of the Two Sicilies to the kingdom of Italy. In 1861 he was returned by the city of Palermo to the first Italian

Parliament, in which he took a prominent and influential position, becoming in a short time the acknowledged leader of the constitutional opposition. It was the understanding between Signor Crispi and the old Piedmontese "third party" which led to the formation of the new Ratazzi Ministry. He was chosen as a Deputy at the election of November 1876 by several electoral colleges, and "opted" for that of Bari. On the 22nd of that month he was elected President of the Chamber of Deputies by 232 votes against 115. The following year the party of "Moral Order" returned to power in France, and, the interests of Italy seeming menaced by them, Signor Crispi undertook semi-official journeys in search of allies against the Republic. He was cordially received in London and at Berlin (1877). Some weeks later he became Minister of the Interior in the remodelled Depretis Cabinet, but retired in March 1878. During the ten following years in which M. Depretis was intermittently in power, he remained one of the leaders and principal orators of the Left. On May 15, 1880, he delivered a speech which was commented on by the European press, and unfolded therein the policy of his party. The Chamber required, he declared, to be directed by a vigorous hand. "Italia Irredenta," the "unredeemed" Italy of the Adriatic coast, which is still under Austrian sway, was to be encouraged in its desire to become Italian. Italy was to take a more prominent position in the concert of nations, and was to aim at the acquisition of increased influence in the East. After the delivery of this speech he advocated electoral reform and the adoption of Scrutin de liste. In March 1881 he began to attack France in his journal La Riforma, and afterwards advocated a German alliance and an increase of the national armaments and defences, and complete military reorganisation. In November 1883 he declared war against the clerical party as being hostile to modern Italian institutions, and thus completed what he calls the "traditional programme of the Left." After the Italian reverses in Africa in 1887, Signor Crispi asked the Government to vote an extraordinary credit in order to send reinforcements to Massowah. The credit was voted, the Depretis Government again went out of office, and Crispi asked the Chamber to express utter condemnation of the fallen Ministry. This was not done, and in the end Signor Crispi became Minister of Foreign Affairs in a new Depretis cabinet, and after the death of that statesman in July 1887, succeeded him as President of the Council and

Home and Foreign Minister. On October 1 Signor Crispi began paying a series of visits to Prince Bismarck at Friedrichsruhe, the result of which was the entry of Italy into the Triple Alliance. The country was now asked to vote enormous sums for the maintenance of an increased army and navy. Financial crises ensued, and disturbances in Rome and Naples. Crispi became very unpopular, and in September 1889 two attempts were made on his life in the above-named towns. In 1888 the commercial treaty with France was broken and not renewed, and the relations between the Government and the Papacy became increasingly strained, owing to the anti-clerical legislation of the former. Signor Crispi, however, thought it expedient to go to the country, and after a brilliant electoral campaign, in which he made a great speech at Florence, in November 1890, containing a declaration of foreign policy and repudiating the Irredentists as hostile to Austria, he brought his party back into power with a majority in the Chamber of 236. The Premier himself was returned by four electoral colleges. Two months later, however, the Crispi Ministry fell on a question of taxation, the chief Minister having made himself unpopular by his high-handed refusal to consider the necessity of retrenchment in military and naval expenditure. Though out of power, Signor Crispi continued for some time to express his views on political questions at public banquets and meetings throughout the country, as well as in the Chamber, and in December 1891 made a notable attack on his successor, Signor di Rudini, apropos of the Papal question. But he retired from the strife before the attack had been fully rebutted. In 1892 he gave up the leadership of the opposition, but retained his seat. After the ensuing bank scandals, and the resignation on Nov. 24, 1894, of Signor Giolitti, the Premier who succeeded Rudini (q.v.), Signor Crispi was again called on to form a Cabinet. He succeeded in forming a Ministry of all parties on Dec. 10, and afterwards called on politicians in general to aid him in restoring the national credit. On May 14, 1895, Signor Crispi gained a victory in the Chamber on the question of the Budget, but in June his Cabinet resigned on the Finance question. They, however, retained office on Baron Sonnino's ceasing to be Finance Minister. Signor Crispi's government nevertheless supported Sonnino's proposed financial reforms, and pledged themselves to effect an economy of 20,000,000 lire in national expenditure in 1895-96. In October 1894 the Crispi government suppressed the Socialist Corporation of Italian Workers, after having taken severe measures against the revolutionary movement in Sicily (February). A series of questions dealing with Italy's relations with England, Austria, and Brazil gave occasion for much anxiety in 1895, and public feeling was intensified by the disastrous results which attended the Government's forward policy in Africa. In the following year Italy sustained her most serious defeat of modern times at the battle of Adowa, and the Crispi Ministry fell almost immediately. At this juncture Crispi entered upon a phase of his public career which, in the case of a less powerful statesman, would have ended in complete political extinction. The Radical leader, Signor Cavallotti, in November 1894 preferred the gravest charges against his integrity, and subsequently brought them before the Criminal Court, where they finally collapsed, the judicial authorities declaring that the charge of perjury was not substantiated, and that certain other charges referring to a decoration awarded to Dr. Cornelius Herz, whilst appearing to be equally baseless, were beyond the cognisance of the ordinary tribunals. The Chamber after this ignored Cavallotti's reiterated accusations, for no competent person, knowing the great sacrifices which Signor Crispi had made for the cause of Italian unity, attached the smallest value to the charges brought forward. The country adopted the views of the Chamber, and for a few months there was the appearance of a lull in the agitation. But the revelations of the Banco Romano scandals raised in a week the whirlwind of national passion. The Directorate of the Bank of Naples, one of the Italian State Banks, had opened in the autumn of 1893 a branch establishment at Bologna, under the management of a trusted employee, by name Luigi Favilla. In May 1896, suspicion having been aroused as to Favilla, a new manager was appointed at the instance of Baron Sonnino, Treasury Minister, and it was afterwards discovered that Favilla had appropriated £40,000 of the bank's funds, had lost £65,000, and had permitted overdrafts to be made to the extent of £80,000. He was arrested in November 1896, as were also several of his accomplices, and in the course of Favilla's examination Signor Crispi was directed under a warrant to appear before the Court and deliver to the examining magistrate an account of his financial relations with Favilla. On the next day, March 21, Crispi was re-elected a Deputy of the Chamber, thus regaining an immunity from arrest and prosecution. Nevertheless, Signor Crispi presented himself before the magistrate, and submitted documentary proof of the various sums he had previously obtained from Favilla. However, the examining magistrate, yielding, it is believed, to pressure from the Public Prosecutor and from Signor Giacomo Costa, late Minister of Justice in the Rudini Cabinet, persisted in his suggestions of Crispi's illegal complicity with Favilla, and in his report recommended that he be prosecuted for conniving with Favilla in his fraudulent transactions. Crispi, who, it is said, had good grounds for fearing that a fair trial would be denied him, retorted that as the proceedings in question had taken place in the time he had been Italian Premier and Minister of the Interior, the ordinary courts were not competent to deal with the charges, seeing that by Article 47 of the Italian Constitution Ministers are answerable for acts committed during their term of office only to the Senate itself sitting as a High Court of Justice. The important question of constitutional law which this objection raised was carried to the Supreme Court (the Court of Cassation), who held that the Chamber of Deputies alone was competent to decide whether, in the case of crimes enacted by a Minister, that Minister should be impeached before the Senate. As a result of this judgment, the Chamber appointed in December 1897 a special committee of five members to make an exhaustive inquiry and to report to the Chamber without delay. The examination of all the documents and persons connected with the Commission, including Signor Crispi and Favilla, was completed in three months, and the committee's report was presented to the Chamber in March 1898. By a majority of 207 to 7 the Chamber resolved, after receiving the report, to pass to the order of the day. Thus did the Italian Parliament practically endorse the findings of the Commission, and these affirmed that whilst Crispi was not guilty of any criminal offence known to the law, certain irregular practices, both in the way in which he obtained funds for political purposes and in the repayment of loans made to him personally out of State moneys, were deserving of political censure. A motion instituting an impeachment of Crispi was defeated on a show of hands, and the Chamber proceeded to the next business. Although now advanced in years, Signor Crispi continues to follow the varying fortunes of his native land with the keen interest of a true patriot. In the autumn of 1898 Crispi wrote an article on the Anarchist Conference of European Powers for an English newspaper. He is sometimes called the Grand Old Man of Italy.

CRITCHETT, George Anderson,
F.R.C.S., F.R.C.S.E., Ophthalmic Surgeon, was born in London on Dec. 18, 1845, and is the eldest son of the late George Critchett, F.R.C.S. He was educated at Harrow, where he gained the prize for English Literature, and at Caius College, Cambridge. He graduated B.A. in 1867, subsequently studied for some time in Germany and France, and graduated M.A. in 1873. He became a Member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England in 1872, and a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh in 1880. He was appointed Ophthalmic Surgeon to the Royal Free Hospital in 1879, but resigned that office in 1881, when he was appointed Ophthalmic Surgeon to St. Mary's Hospital, and Lecturer on Ophthalmology at the Medical School. He was President of the Ophthalmic Section of the British Medical Association at the meeting held in Leeds in 1889, and delivered the opening address for discussion, the subject being "The Treatment of Immature Cataract." He is Honorary Ophthalmic Surgeon to the Royal Academy of Music, the Actors' Association, and the Infant Orphan Asylum at Wanstead. He was Vice-President of the Ophthalmological Society of the United Kingdom from 1894 till 1897, and Honorary President of the International Ophthalmic Congress held at Edinburgh in 1894. He delivered the Introductory Lectures at St. Mary's Hospital at the opening of the winter session in 1887; and has published in the leading medical journals numerous papers and lectures on Diseases of the Eye, the best known of these being "Eclecticism in Operations for Cataract," 1883; "Nature's Speculum in Cataract Extraction," 1886; and "Conical Cornea: its Surgical Evolution," 1895. Address: 21 Harley Street, W.

CROCKETT, Samuel Rutherford, Scottish novelist, was born Sept. 24, 1860. He is the son of a Galloway farmer, and was brought up at the farm of Duchrae, in the parish of Balmaghie, in Galloway. He was educated at Edinburgh, from which University he graduated in 1879. Thereafter he travelled extensively for six years, returning to Scotland to take up the duties of minister of Penicuik in 1886. He resigned his charge and left the ministry some years later, since which date he has devoted himself entirely to literature. He has written "The Stickit Minister," 1893; "The Raiders"; "The Lilac Sunbonnet"; "Mad Sir Uchtyred"; "The Play Actress," 1894; "Bog, Myrtle, and Peat"; "The Men of the Moss Hags"; "Sweetheart Travellers," 1895; "Clegg Kelly"; "The Grey Man," 1896; "Lad's Love"; "Lochinvar"; "The Surprising Adventures of Sir Toady Lion." The two books by Mr. Crockett which appeared in 1898 were "The Standard-Bearer" and

"The Red Axe." The latter was first printed serially in the Graphic, Harper's, and the Melbourne Argus. Mr. S. R. Crockett's books have been translated into most European languages, a complete edition having appeared in Swedish, and a translation being at present in course of publication in Arabic. Mr. Crockett's address is c/o Messrs. A. P. Watt & Son, Hastings House, Norfolk Street, W.C.

CROFTON, Morgan W., D.Sc., F.R.S., was born at Dublin, and was educated at Trinity College, Dublin. He was from 1870 to 1884 Professor of Mathematics and Mechanics at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and he is the author of various memoirs, in the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society, on the Theory of Probability, which were published from 1868 to 1870. Dr. Crofton also wrote the article "Probability" in the "Encyclopædia Britannica." Address: Ambrose Place, Worthing.

CROFTS, Ernest, R.A., military painter, was born at Leeds, Sept. 15, 1847, being the son of Mr. John Crofts, J.P., of Adel, near that town. He was educated at Rugby School, and after remaining there several years went to Berlin. Thence he removed to London, where he studied for some years as a pupil under Mr. A. B. Clay. Afterwards he went to Düsseldorf, where he became a pupil of Herr Emil Hünten, the well-known military painter to the late Emperor William of Germany. Mr. Crofts subsequently returned to London, and was elected an associate of the Royal Academy, June 19, 1878; R.A., 1896. Among his pictures from time to time exhibited, chiefly at the Royal Academy, are the following: "The Retreat: an Episode in the German-French War," 1874, now in the Public Gallery, Königsberg, Prussia; "One Touch of Nature makes the Whole World Kin," which obtained the Crystal Palace Silver Medal, 1874; "Ligny," 1875, exhibited at the Academy, and afterwards at the International Exhibition, Philadelphia, 1876; "On the Morning of the Battle of Waterloo"—Napoleon seated outside a cottage consulting a map—1876 (this was exhibited at the Paris International Exhibition, 1878); "Oliver Cromwell at Marston Moor," 1877; "Ironsides Returning from Sacking a Cavalier's House," 1877; "Wellington on his March from Quatre Bras to Waterloo," 1878; "On the evening of the Battle of Waterloo," 1879, bought by the Walker Art Gallery, Liverpool; "Marlborough after the Battle of Ramillies," 1880, exhibited at the Paris Exhibition, 1889, where it obtained a medal; "George II. at the Battle of Dettingen," 1881; "A Pause in the Attack: Hougoumont, Waterloo"; "At the Farm of Mont St. Jean, Waterloo," 1882; "At the Sign of the Blue Boar, Holborn"; "Charles I. on his Way to the Scaffold," 1883; "Wallenstein," 1884; "William III. at London," 1885; "Farewell," 1886; "Napoleon leaving Moscow," 1887; "Marston Moor," 1888; "The Knight's Farewell," 1889; "Whitehall, Jan. 30th, 1649," 1890; "Prince Rupert," 1893; "Roundheads Victorious," 1894; "Napoleon's Last Grand Attack: Waterloo," 1895; "The Capture of a French Battery by the 52nd Regiment at Waterloo," 1896; "The Attack on the Gate-House of the Château of Hougoumont, Waterloo," 1897; "To the Rescue: an Episode of the Civil War" (diploma work); and "Charles II. at Whiteladies," 1898. Address: 45 Grove End Road, N.W.

CROKE, The Most Rev. Thomas W., D.D., Roman Catholic Archbishop of Cashel, was born near the town of Mallow, co. Cork, May 19, 1824, and was educated partly at home, but principally at the Chorleville Endowed School, which he left at the age of fourteen. He then went to Paris and entered the Irish College, read there the usual course of philosophy and theology, and left in the year 1844. After spending a year in the College of Menin in Belgium, where he taught English, mathematics, and rhetoric, he went in November 1845 to the Irish College in Rome, where he remained nearly three years, attending lectures in the celebrated Roman University, and reading theology under the Jesuit Fathers Perrone and Passaglia. In 1846 he won the gold and silver medals, and in the following year took his degree as Doctor of Divinity, and was ordained priest, afterwards returning to Ireland. In 1848 he taught rhetoric in Carlow College, and in 1849 theology in the Irish College at Paris. For the next nine years he was engaged in missionary work in the Diocese of Cloyne, co. Cork, and in 1858 was appointed President of St. Colman's College, Fermoy. In 1865 he was appointed parish priest of Doneraile and Chancellor of the Diocese of Cloyne. Five years later he accepted the Bishopric of Auckland, New Zealand, where he remained until 1874. In 1875 he was promoted to the Archiepiscopal See of Cashel. Of late years Dr. Croke's name has been conspicuous by its connection with the Land League and Irish Nationalist movements. Address: Cashel.

CROKER, Mrs. Beatrice M., the only daughter of the late Rev. W. Sheppard, Rector of Kilgefin, co. Roscommon, was educated at Rockferry, Cheshire, and is married to Lieut.-Colonel J. Croker. She has written a large number of novels, amongst which there may be mentioned: "Proper Pride," 1882; "Pretty Miss Neville," 1883; "Some One Else," 1884; "Diana Barrington," 1888; "Two Masters," 1890; "A Family Likeness," 1892; "A Third Person," 1893; "To Let," 1893; "Mr. Jervis," 1894; "Village Tales, and Jungle Tragedies," 1894; "Married or Single," 1895; "Beyond the Pale," 1897; "Miss Balmaine's Past," 1898. Many of Mrs. Croker's books have been translated into French and German, and a few into Norwegian. Address: 3 Radnor Cliff, Sandgate, Kent.

CROMER, Viscount, The Right Hon. Sir Evelyn Baring, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., K.C.S.I., "Maker of Modern Egypt," was born at Cromer Hall, Norfolk, on Feb. 26, 1841. He is the son of the late Henry Baring, M.P., by a daughter of the late Vice-Admiral Windham. After some private tuition at home, young Baring was sent to the Ordnance School, Carshalton, and subsequently joined the Woolwich Academy, to qualify for a commission in the army. He became a Lieutenant of the Royal Artillery in 1858, and was promoted Captain in 1868, in which year he entered the Staff College. Some two years later he published a volume of military essays which attracted a good deal of attention. This was followed by a translation of a German work on military organisation. In the early sixties, Mr. Baring was stationed at Corfu, and served as A.D.C. to the High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands, Sir Henry Storks. In 1865 he accompanied that gentleman to Jamaica when he went to preside over the Commission which was sent to inquire into the circumstances of the outbreak that had been suppressed by Governor Eyre. From 1872 to 1876 he was private secretary to his cousin, Lord Northbrook, who was then Viceroy of India. About this time he retired from the army with the rank of Major. In 1879, soon after the purchase by England of the Suez Canal shares, he was made a Commissioner of the Egyptian Debt, and was also appointed one of the Controllers-General representing England and France, when the Khedive Ismail was deposed by the Sultan's firman and Tewfik Pasha became ruler of Egypt. In co-operation with his French colleague, M. de Blignières, Major Baring successfully carried on the Control until he accepted, towards the close of 1880, the office of Financial Member of the Council of India left vacant by the resignation of Sir John Strachey. His new appointment was one of much dignity, and afforded great opportunities of public service. During his term of office he framed and carried three successful Budgets. In 1883 he returned to England and was created a K.C.S.I. for his services. Shortly after, he succeeded Sir Edward Malet at Cairo as Consul-General and Minister Plenipotentiary, and thus became virtually Viceroy of Egypt. Sir Evelyn Baring began his work on September 11, just two days after Hicks Pasha started on his ill-fated journey from Khartoum. All the anxious events in the Soudan in connection with the fall of Khartoum and the death of Gordon, with whom he was in constant correspondence, added very materially to the difficulties which Lord Cromer had to meet. At that time Egypt was practically bankrupt, but Lord Cromer's masterly finance has entirely transformed the situation, and the country is now in a prosperous condition. The old corrupt administration has been replaced by local governors who are under strict surveillance; land and other taxes have been reduced; irrigation is scientifically and honestly distributed; the prison system has been reformed, and the army, instead of being hated, is now popular. There has been a vast extension of the railway, postal, and telegraph services, and a corresponding augmentation of the receipts. Trade has steadily increased and public credit been considerably raised, and slavery almost abolished. It is therefore difficult to over-estimate what the work of England in Egypt owes to the sagacity, fortitude, and patience of Lord Cromer, who is one of the best living examples of the iron hand within the velvet glove. In the early part of 1898 he issued a report containing the history of the British administration in Egypt. The publication is, in a modest and indirect way, a testimony to his own services. The most important point in the Report is the question of the Mixed Tribunals established by the Powers in 1876. Lord Cromer is of opinion that it would be undesirable for Egypt to withdraw from them, and that to abolish the Mixed Tribunals altogether would cause a serious dislocation of Egyptian affairs. In concluding his report Lord Cromer says: "For the present what Egypt most requires, and for many years to come will require, is an honest, just, and orderly administration, and the establishment of the supremacy of the Law in the widest sense of the term. It is conceivable that at some future time the Egyptian question may pass from the administrative into the political stage. For the present, however, that moment would appear distant." Lord Cromer has been at the back of the successive expeditions which, under the command of the Sirdar of the Egyptian army, Sir H., now Lord, Kitchener, have won back Dongola, Berber, and Khartoum from the Khalifa. Before the battle at Atbara he issued an edict against war correspondents accompanying the forces, but had to withdraw it in consequence of the storm it raised in England. He was created a peer in 1892, taking his title from his birthplace. In the same year Oxford conferred upon him the degree of D.C.L. Lord Cromer has also the order of the Medjidie of the first class. He married, in 1876, Ethel, a daughter of Sir Rowland Errington, and has issue. Lady Cromer died at Cairo on Oct. 16, 1898. Her loss will be much felt by all classes who came under the influence of her charming personality. Lord Cromer was created a Viscount at New Year 1899.

CROMMELIN, May de la Cherois (May Crommelin), daughter of the late S. de la Cherois Crommelin, of Carrowdore Castle, co. Down, was born in Ireland, and was educated privately. She is a popular novelist, who has achieved some success, and amongst her publications there may be mentioned: "Queenie," "A Jewel of a Girl," "My Love, she's but a Lassie," "Black Abbey," "Orange Lily," "In the West Country," "Brown Eyes," "Goblin Gold," "Mr. and Mrs. Herries," "For Sake of the Family," "Love Knots," "Dead Men's Dollars," "Dust before the Wind," "Half-round the World for a Husband." Club: Albemarle.

CRONWRIGHT-SCHREINER, Mrs. See SCHREINER, OLIVE.

CROOKES, Professor Sir William, F.R.S., was born in London in 1832. In 1848 he entered the Royal College of Chemistry as a pupil of the distinguished chemist Dr. Hofman, and at the age of seventeen he gained the Ashburton Scholarship. After two years' study he became, first junior, then senior assistant to Dr. Hofman until 1854, when he was appointed to superintend the meteorological department of the Radcliffe Observatory at Oxford. In 1855 he became Professor of Chemistry at the Training College, Chester. In 1859 he founded the Chemical News, and is still its proprietor and editor; and in 1864 he became editor of the Quarterly Journal of Science. Mr. Crookes' earliest original researches were begun whilst at the Royal College of Chemistry, and his first paper, "On the Seleno-Cyanides," was published in the Quarterly Journal of the Chemical Society in 1851. Since that date he has been much engaged in original research on questions connected with chemistry and physics. In 1861 Mr. Crookes discovered by means of spectrum observations and chemical reactions, the metal thallium, and he also determined its position among elementary bodies, and produced a series of analytical notes on the new metal. In 1863 Mr. Crookes was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society; in 1865 he discovered the sodium amalgamation process for separating gold and silver from their ores. In 1866 he was appointed by the Government to report upon the application of disinfectants in arresting the spread of the cattle plague, which in that year excited much alarm in England. In 1871 he was a member of the English expedition to Oran to report upon the total phase of the solar eclipse which occurred in December of that year. In June 1872 he laid before the Royal Society laborious researches on the atomic weight of thallium, researches that extended over a period of eight years. In 1872 he began his experiments on "Repulsion resulting from Radiation." His first paper on the subject was read before the Royal Society Dec. 11, 1873, and between that time and 1880 Mr. Crookes sent to the Society other communications on collateral subjects, which are all published in the Philosophical Transactions. One important result of these investigations is the Radiometer. In 1875 Mr. Crookes received from the Royal Society the award of a Royal Medal for chemical and physical researches. In 1876 he was elected a Vice-President of the Chemical Society, and the next year a Member of the Council of the Royal Society. In 1877 he described the Otheoscope—a greatly modified Radiometer, susceptible of an almost endless variety of forms. In 1878 he gave before the Royal Society a "Bakerian Lecture," containing another long series of experiments and observations on "Repulsion resulting from Radiation." In 1879 the Royal Society published in its Philosophical Transactions records of Mr. Crookes' experiments on "Molecular Physics in High Vacua." In the same year appeared a further paper on "Repulsion resulting from Radiation"; and he was again appointed Bakerian Lecturer to the Royal Society, his subject being the "Illumination of Lines of Molecular Pressure, and the Trajectory of Molecules." In 1880 the French Académie des Sciences bestowed on Mr. Crookes an extraordinary prize of 3000 francs and a Gold Medal, in recognition of his discoveries in Molecular Physics and Radiant Matter. In 1881 Mr. Crookes acted as a Juror at the International Exhibition of Electricity in Paris. In this official position he was not entitled to a medal, but in the official report his fellow jurors, after discussing the merits of four systems of incandescent lamps, declared, "None of them would have succeeded had it not been for these extreme vacua which Mr. Crookes has taught us to obtain." Mr. Crookes is the author of "Select Methods in Chemical Analysis"

(2nd edit., revised and extended, 1886); of the "Manufacture of Beetroot-Sugar in England"; of a "Handbook of Dyeing and Calico-Printing"; and of a manual of "Dyeing and Tissue Printing," 1882,—one of the Technological Handbooks prepared for the examinations of the City and Guilds of London Institute. He is also joint author of the English adaptation of Kerl's "Treatise on Metallurgy." He has edited the three last editions of Mitchell's "Manual of Practical Assaying," and has translated into English and edited Reimann's "Aniline and its Derivatives," Wagner's "Chemical Technology," Auerbach's "Anthracen and its Derivatives" (2nd edit. 1890), and Ville's "Artificial Manures" (2nd edit. 1882). Mr. Crookes is an authority on the subject of water supply and sanitary questions, especially the disposal of town-sewage, and his views have been laid before the public in two pamphlets, "A Solution of the Sewage Question" and "The Profitable Disposal of Sewage." Since the year 1881 he has, in conjunction at the present time with Professor Dewar, carried out daily analyses of the waters supplied to the Metropolis, and has published monthly reports on their quality and composition. Since 1883 Mr. Crookes has been almost exclusively engaged with researches on the nature and constitution of the Rare Earths as interpreted by the "Radiant Matter" test, a new method of spectroscopic examination, the outcome of his earlier discoveries on "Radiant Matter," which seems likely to throw a side-light on the origin and constitution of the elements. On this subject he has communicated many papers to the Royal and other societies, some of the most important being the following: "Radiant Matter Spectroscopy"; the "Detection and Wide Distribution of Yttrium," the Bakerian Lecture for 1883; "On Radiant Matter Spectroscopy, Part II., Samarium"; "Notes on the Spectra of Erbium, and the Earth Yt"; "On some New Elements in Gadolinite and Sarmarskite, detected Spectroscopically"; "On the Crimson Line of Phosphorescent Alumina." In 1882 Mr. Crookes was elected a member of the Athenæum Club, under Rule 2. In 1886 Mr. Crookes was elected President of the Chemical Section of the British Association, and at their Birmingham meeting that year he delivered an address in which he propounded some novel speculations on the probable origin of the Chemical Elements, showing that the balance of evidence was in favour of the view that our so-called elements have been formed by a process of evolution from one primordial matter. In 1887 he delivered a Friday evening discourse before the members of the Royal Institution on the "Genesis of the Elements." In the same year he was elected President of the Chemical Society; he held office for the usual period of two years, and at the anniversary meetings he delivered two addresses, one on "Elements and Meta-Elements," and the other on "The Spectroscopic History of the so-called Rare Earths." In 1888 Mr. Crookes was awarded the Davy Medal of the Royal Society for his Radiant Matter researches. In 1897 he received the honour of knighthood "in recognition of the eminent services he had rendered to the advance of scientific knowledge during Her Majesty's reign." In the same year he was selected for the office of President of the British Association at their meeting at Bristol. Addresses: 7 Kensington Park Gardens, W.; and Athenæum.

CROSS, Viscount, The Right Hon. Richard Aasheton Cross, G.C.B., G.C.S.I., D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., D.L., J.P., Lord Privy Seal, was born at Red Scar, near Preston, May 30, 1823, being the third son of the late William Cross, Esq., by Ellen, daughter of the late Edward Chaffers, Esq. He was educated at Rugby School under Dr. Arnold, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of B.A. in 1846. In 1849 he was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, and for several years he went the Northern Circuit. He was elected M.P. for Preston in the Conservative interest in March 1857, and continued to represent that borough till March 1862. At the general election of December 1868, he was elected Conservative Member for South-West Lancashire. At the general election of 1874, Mr. Cross was returned without opposition. On the formation of Mr. Disraeli's administration, Mr. Cross was appointed Home Secretary, Feb. 21, 1874, on which day he was sworn of the Privy Council. He was elected a Bencher of the Inner Temple in 1876, received the Hon. degree of D.C.L. from the University of Oxford in 1877, and that of LL.D. from the University of Cambridge, Oct. 24, 1878, and LL.D. St. Andrews. He resigned the seals of the Home Department when the Conservatives went out of office in April 1880. At that period he was created a G.C.B., and was again returned for South-West Lancashire. He was appointed Home Secretary in Lord Salisbury's short administration of 1885, and at the general election of the same year was returned for the Newton Division of South-West Lancashire. After the general election of 1886, at which he was again returned for Newton, he was made a Viscount, and became Secretary of State for India in Lord Salisbury's administration. Lord

Cross was a Member of the Council on Education, and an Ecclesiastical Commissioner for England; and is a Magistrate for Cheshire and Lancashire, a Deputy-Lieutenant for the latter county, and was formerly Chairman of the Lancashire Quarter Sessions. He became Treasurer of the Inner Temple in 1895, in which year he was appointed Lord Privy Seal. He is the compiler of two legal works: "The Acts relating to the Settlement and Removal of the Poor, with notices of cases, indices, and forms," 1853; and "The General and Quarter Sessions of the Peace: their jurisdiction and practice in other than criminal matters" (written in conjunction with Mr. H. Leeming, 1858, 2nd edit., 1867. In 1852 he married Georgiana, daughter of the late Thomas Lyon, Esq., of Appleton Hall, Wallington. Addresses: 12 Warwick Square, S.W.; Eccle Riggs, Broughton-in-Furness; and Athenæum.

CROSTHWAITE, Sir Charles Haukes Todd, K.C.S.I., is the second son of the Rev. John Clarke Crosthwaite, and was born in Ireland on Dec. 5, 1835. He was educated at Merchant Taylors' School and St. John's College, Oxford. Entering the Bengal Civil Service in 1857, he eventually reached the position of Chief Commissioner of British Burmah in 1883. Two years later he was appointed Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, in 1887 Chief Commissioner of Burmah, and in 1892 Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces and Oudh. He retired in 1895, and was in the same year appointed a Member of the Council of India. He is the author of "Notes on the North-Western Provinces of India," 1870. He was created a K.C.S.I. in 1888. Address: Coombefield, Malden, Surrey.

CROSTHWAITE, Sir Robert Joseph, K.C.S.I., Agent to Governor-General for Rajputana and Chief Commissioner of Ajmere, born Jan. 17, 1841, third son of Rev. J. Crosthwaite, Rector of St. Mary-at-Hill, was educated at Merchant Taylors' School and Brasenose College, Oxford, where he became Pusey and Ellerton Scholar in 1860. In 1863 he entered the Indian Civil Service, and in 1868 he was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple. He became Judicial Commissioner of Burmah and Agent to the Governor-General for Central India. He married, firstly, the daughter of W. W. T. Baldwin in 1868, and in 1877 the daughter of S. H. James of St. Just, Cornwall. Address: The Residency, Mount Abu, Rajputana, India.

CROUDACE, Camilla Mary, Lady-Resident of Queen's College, was born

Jan. 9, 1844, at Marsh House, Homerton, and is the youngest child of Thomas Croudace and his wife Camilla, whose father, Charles Vignoles, had won distinction in great engineering works in various parts of Europe. Amongst these was the suspension bridge at Kieff, and thither Mrs. Croudace went in 1848 to superintend her father's establishment, taking with her the little Camilla and one other of the children. Very soon after their arrival in Russia, about the month of May, newspapers arrived, much mutilated and purged of revolutionary taint, but containing a paragraph destined to bear much fruit in the little girl's after career: it told of the foundation of Queen's College, Harley Street. Mrs. Croudace's interest was aroused, and she determined to enter her daughter as a pupil in that the first college for the higher education of women, started by F. D. Maurice. An opportunity, however, did not offer itself until eight years later, and in 1856 the present Lady-Resident of Queen's College made her début as a "new girl." Among the ranks of the Professors at that time were such names of eminence as Dr. Plumptre, Dean of the College; Frederick Denison Maurice, the founder; C. G. Nicolay, the Librarian of King's College; R. C. Trench, later Archbishop of Dublin; Dr. John Hullah; Sir William Sterndale Bennett; the Rev. T. A. Cook, and many others. At the age of fourteen Camilla Croudace won the Professor's Scholarship, and on leaving the College in 1861 obtained a first-class certificate in general proficiency, which entitled her to be received as an "Associate" when that honour was instituted ten years later. From 1861 to 1869 Miss Croudace was engaged in teaching, for which she had a passion, but did not enter school work. From 1869 to 1872 she travelled with her mother in Italy, spending long months in different cities studying art and archaeology. On their return to England in 1872 mother and daughter settled at North End, Hampstead, and remained there nine years, spending fifteen months in Italy during that period; and in 1880 Miss Croudace, who longed to return to teaching, became an assistant mistress in the Kensington High School, wishing to see what modern methods were, and if there were any improvements on the education she had received at Queen's College. She found, however, that though the work was interesting to the teacher, it could be by no means so inspiring to the pupil as the College system. Fortunately, in the following year, 1881, she was able to resume her connection with Queen's College, where she was appointed Lady-Resident by the very Professors who had educated her twenty years before. It has been her duty to mourn one by one the death of these venerable teachers, while a new generation has arisen. At her appointment the Rev. J. Ll. Davis was Principal, and he was succeeded by the Rev. Canon Elwyn from 1886 to 1894, who shortly before his death was followed in office by the Rev. Dr. C. J. Robinson, whose death took place in November 1898. Great exertions were made by Miss Croudace in the spring of 1898 to celebrate the College Jubilee worthily. The buildings had been enlarged and beautified, and the first week in May was given up to entertaining the crowds of old pupils, who came from far and near to commemorate the event, while the crowning honour of the celebration was a visit from her Majesty the Queen on May 9th. An address was offered by the Council and Committee, and a basket of roses was presented by the Lady-Resident's niece, Kathleen Camilla Croudace. It is the Lady-Resident's aim to keep up among past and present students the feeling of devotion to the College and veneration for its founders which she has herself experienced, and she has indeed been the means of handing on the torch kindled in the enthusiasm of fifty years ago. Address: Queen's College, Harley Street, W.

CROWE, Eyre, A.R.A., an historical and a genre painter, son of Eyre Evans-Crowe, historian, born in London in October 1824, studied painting in the atelier of Paul Delaroche at Paris. He went with that distinguished artist and his other pupils to Rome in 1844. Acting as amanuensis to Mr. W. M. Thackeray, he visited the United States in 1852-53, writing in 1893 on that subject, "With Thackeray in America," and in the year 1897, "Haunts and Homes of W. M. Thackeray," in Scribner. He is an occasional inspector of the Science and Art Department. Mr. Eyre Crowe was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in April 1876. Amongst his paintings may be mentioned: "Goldsmith's Mourners," 1863; "Friends," 1871; "Blue Coat Subjects," 1872; "French Savants in Egypt," 1875; "The Rehearsal," 1876; "Sanctuary," "Prayer," and "Bridal Procession at St. Maclou, Rouen," 1877; "School Treat," 1878; "Blue Coat Boys returning from their Holiday," "Marat: 13 July 1793," "The Blind Beggar," and "The Queen of the May" in 1879; "Queen Eleanor's Tomb" and "Forfeits" in 1880; "Sandwiches" and "Sir Roger de Coverley and the Spectator at Westminster Abbey," 1881; "How Happy could I be with Either!" and "The Defence of London in 1643," exhibited in 1882; "Old Porch, Evesham," in 1884; "School at the Aître, St. Maclou, Rouen," "A Rifle Match at Dunnottar, N.B.," 1890; "Peg of Limavaddy," 1893; and "The Brigs of Ayr," 1894; "Baptism in the Cathedral of Newcastle-on-Tyne," Thomas Carlyle, &c., 1895; "Drawing Lots for the Guelph Succession," 1896; "Trial for Bigamy," "The Gipsy's Rest," &c., 1897; "James II. at the Battle of La Hogue, May 1692," 1898. Address: 27 Charlotte Street, Portland Place, W.

CROWE, Mrs. George, née Kate Josephine Bateman, was born in Baltimore, Maryland, in October 1842. Both her parents were actors, and she and her sister, two years younger than herself, appeared in public as the "Bateman Children" as early as 1851, at the St. James's Theatre. She afterwards prepared herself assiduously for the stage, and in 1859 played successfully in the leading American theatres, her principal characters being those of Evangeline, founded on Longfellow's poem; Geraldine, in a play written for her by her mother; Julia, in the "Hunchback"; Pauline, in the "Lady of Lyons"; and Juliet and Lady Macbeth. She arrived in England in the autumn of 1863, and appeared 210 times in the character of the Jewish maiden Leah, in an adaptation of the German play "Deborah," at the Adelphi Theatre. After a provincial tour, she reappeared at the Adelphi, playing Julia in the "Hunchback" and other characters. She took a farewell of the English public at Her Majesty's Theatre, in the character of Juliet, in "Romeo and Juliet," Dec. 22, 1865, and was married to Mr. George Crowe in October 1866. Mrs. Crowe returned to the stage in 1868, retaining her stage name of Kate Bateman. In 1868 she played the part of Mary Warner, in the play of that name written for her by the late Tom Taylor, at the Haymarket Theatre. In 1872, and subsequently, she appeared with great success in London as Medea, in the play of that name. In 1875, on a revival of "Macbeth" at the Lyceum (Mr. Irving as Macbeth), she played the part of Lady Macbeth. She also sustained the title-rôle in Tennyson's "Queen Mary," which was produced at the same house in April 1876.

CROZIER, The Right Rev. John Baptist, D.D., Bishop of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin, eldest son of the Rev. Baptist Barton Crozier, B.A., of Rockview, Ballyhaise, co. Cavan, was born April 8, 1853. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin; where he took honours and prizes in Classics, Hebrew, and Irish, was Junior Moderator in Logic and Ethics, gained a first-class Divinity Testimonium, was President of the University Philosophical Society, Auditor of the College Theological Society, and graduated B.A. in 1872, M.A. in 1876, B.D. and D.D. in 1888. He was Curate of Belfast from 1877 to 1880, and in the latter year was appointed to the Vicarage of Holywood, co. Down, which preferment he held until 1897. After acting as domestic and examining chaplain to Dr. Knox from 1885 to 1893, during which time that Prelate was successively Bishop of Down and Archbishop of Armagh, he became chaplain to the Bishop of Down in 1892, and chaplain to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland in 1891, both of which offices he held until 1897. He was Hon. Sec. of the Diocesan Synod of Down and Connor from 1892, and Hon. Sec. of the General Synod of the Church of Ireland from 1896; and Canon of Downpatrick Cathedral from 1889, and Canon of St. Patrick's National Cathedral from 1896. Dr. Crozier was, in 1897, elected Bishop of Ossory by the House of Bishops, and was consecrated on November 30 of that year. He was married in 1877 to Alice Isabella, daughter of the Rev. John Hackett, M.A. The Bishop's family have been settled in the co. Fermanagh for the past 300 years, having migrated from Liddesdale and the Debateable Land in the sixteenth century. One of his ancestors was High Sheriff for co. Fermanagh in 1766, and the present head of the family, who lives at Gortra House, co. Fermanagh, was High Sheriff in 1897. Address: The Palace, Kilkenny.

CUDLIP, Mrs. Pender, née Annie Thomas, was born at Aldborough, in Suffolk, where her father, Lieutenant George Thomas, was in charge of the Coast-guard station. She is a voluminous writer. Her first novel, "The Cross of Honour," appeared in 1863, and has been followed by "Sir Victor's Choice," "Denis Donne," 1864; "Theo Leigh," and "Barry O'Byrne," 1865; "Played Out," and "High Stakes," 1866; "Called to Account," 1867; "A Noble Aim," 1868; "Only Himself," "Mrs. Cardigan," "On Guard," "The Dower House," and "False Colours," 1869; "The Dream and the Waking," 1870; "A Passion in Tatters," 1872; "He Cometh Not, she said," 1873; "No Alternative," 1874; "A Narrow Escape," 1875; "Blotted Out," 1876; "A Laggard in Love," 1877; "A London Season," and "Stray Sheep," 1879; "Fashion's Gay Mart," and "Society's Verdict," 1880; "Eyre of Blendon," 1881; "Allerton Towers," and many other novels, stories, and sketches, of which one of the most recent is "Four Women in the Case," 1896. Miss Annie Thomas was married in 1867 to the Rev. Pender Hodge Cudlip. Address: Sparkwell Vicarage, Plympton, Devon.

CUFFE, The Hon. Hamilton John Agmondesham. See DESART, EARL OF.

CULME-SEYMOUR, Admiral Sir Michael, Bart., G.C.B., is the son of the Rev. John Culme-Seymour, and grandson of a distinguished admiral, and was born at Berkhamstead on March 13, 1836. He was educated at Harrow, entering the Navy in February 1850. Sir Michael served in H.M.S. Hastings during the Burmese War, and was awarded the medal with Pegu clasp. He next saw active service in the Baltic, from which sea he brought home a prize. He was present at the bombardment of Sebastopol, and served in the Naval Brigade throughout the winter of 1854, taking part in the capture of Kertch, Kinburn, and Yenikalé. At the finish of the war he received the Crimean medal, with Inkerman and Sebastopol clasps, the Turkish medal, and the Medjidieh of the Fifth Class. In the China War he served as a Lieutenant in H.M.S. Calcutta, but had independent command of a boat at Fatshan Creek and in the operations in the Canton River, and was also present at the capture of the Peiho Forts. For these services he was awarded the China medal with three clasps. Sir Michael was promoted Commander in 1859, and Captain in 1865, and from 1874 to 1876 he acted as private secretary to the First Lord of the Admiralty. In 1879 he was appointed aide-de-camp to the Queen, and held the office until promoted to the rank of Rear-Admiral in 1882. He was successively Commander-in-Chief in the Pacific, the Channel, and the Mediterranean, where he held command for four years, completing his own regulation term of three years and the unexpired time of Sir George Tryon, who was drowned in H.M.S. Victoria. In 1894 he received from the Sultan of Turkey the Order of the Medjidieh of the First Class, and also, as a gift, a cigar-case studded with brilliants. On his return to England he was appointed to the Portsmouth Command, and promoted G.C.B. Sir Michael married in 1866 Mary, a daughter of the Hon. Richard Watson, of Rockingham Castle, and succeeded to the baronetcy in 1880. Address: Admiralty House, Portsmouth.

CUMMINGS, William Hayman, F.S.A., Hon. R.A.M., eldest son of Edward Manley Cummings, was born at Sidbury, Devon, on Aug. 22, 1831. He is Principal of the Guildhall School of Music, President of the Incorporated Staff Sight-Singing College, Hon. Treasurer of the Royal Society of Musicians, Hon. Treasurer of the Philharmonic Society, Vice-President of the Musical Association, Member of the Council of the National Society of Professional Musicians, and F.S.A. When Mr. Cummings was five his father moved to London, and the boy entered the choir of St. Paul's Cathedral at six-and-a-half years of age. Goss was organist, and the sight-seeing test, which he successfully read off, was from an anthem by Jeremiah Clarke. Afterwards the boy was moved to the Temple Church, where he remained till his voice broke, studying the organ meanwhile under Mr. Hopkins, so that he was able when still in his teens to take an appointment as organist at Waltham Abbey. From there he returned to London, and the gradual development of a fine tenor voice fixed his musical path. He studied under Hobbs, a tenor singer and composer well known in his day, and according to the custom of the times was articulated to him for three years, during which he had to deputise for him, both in teaching and singing. Soon he was appointed as tenor singer in the choirs of the Temple, Westminster Abbey, and the Chapels Royal. It was, however, impossible that he should rest satisfied with laurels of this kind. The routine was too quiet, and the public soon found out the purity and ease of his voice, the refinement of his phrasing, and the delicacy of his pronunciation. Mr. Cummings stepped into the front rank of our native singers, and for a long period was in constant demand at oratorios and concerts. As a boy Mr. Cummings sang in the first performance in London of "Elijah." The alto part was too high for the men, and women altos at that time were few. So some of the Temple boys, who were good readers, were put on to the chorus alto part. When the performance was over, Mendelssohn in passing the boy patted him on the head and said, "What is your name?" took the programme from the little hand, and wrote his own name upon it in pencil as a memento. This power of singing at sight often stood Mr. Cummings in good stead. Once at the Birmingham Festival Mario was unexpectedly absent, and, at half-an-hour's notice, Mr. Cummings sang the tenor part in Sullivan's cantata, "Kenilworth," which Mario should have taken. Twice he fulfilled engagements in America, where he was enthusiastically received. Sir Sterndale Bennett composed for him the air "His salvation is nigh them that fear Him," in "The Woman of Samaria"; and Mr. Cummings possesses the autograph, which shows how readily the composer consented to some "cuts" which the singer suggested. Mr. Cummings has also done much useful work as a lecturer on musical subjects, and is rich in a knowledge of antiquarian music. He has composed a good deal of music, a large number of songs, a cantata ("The Fairy Ring"), and some glees. His first glee prize was won as long ago as 1847. Mr. Cummings' primer, "The Rudiments of Music," in Novello's series, is well known. The eighty-first thousand has recently been issued; also a Spanish edition, for Spain and South America. Mr. Cummings has also published a "Biographical Dictionary of Musicians," and a biography of Purcell; and has contributed articles to Sir George Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians," and to the "Dictionary of National Biography." As a teacher of singing Mr. Cummings has had great experience, for from 1879 to 1896 he was one of the professors of singing at the Royal Academy of Music, of which he is now an Hon. Member, and he still serves on the Committee of Management. In 1882 he became Chorus Master of the now defunct Sacred Harmonic Society, and subsequently Conductor, in succession to Hallé. Among his other important appointments may be mentioned the Precentorship of St. Anne's, Soho, which he held from 1886 to 1888. In June 1896 Mr. Cummings was elected Principal of the Guildhall School of Music, in succession to the late Sir Joseph Barnby, and since his accession to office he has planned many new schemes, which greatly increase the value of the school curriculum. Address: Sydcote, West Dulwich, S.E.

CUNNINGHAM, Professor Daniel John, M.D. (Gold Medal) Edinburgh, M.D. (Hon.) Dublin, D.Sc. (Hon.) Dublin, LL.D. (Hon.) St. Andrews, D.C.L. (Hon.) Oxon., F.R.S., was born at Crieff, Perthshire, in 1850. He is the son of the late Rev. Principal Cunningham, D.D., of St. Mary's College, St. Andrews, and Susan Porteous Murray, of Crieff. He was educated at Morison's Academy, Crieff, and at the University of Edinburgh. He has been Professor of Anatomy in the University of Dublin since 1883; he is Vice-President of the Royal Dublin Society, and Hon. Secretary of the Royal Zoological Society of Ireland. He is the author of the "Dissector's Guide," Parts I. to III.; "Report on Marsupialia" in Challenger Reports, and of numerous memoirs on morphological subjects. Address: Trinity College, Dublin.

CUNNINGHAM, William, D.Sc. and Hon. LL.D. (Edin.), D.D., Hon. Fellow Caius College (Cambridge), is the son of James Cunningham, W.S., and was born in Edinburgh, Dec. 29, 1849. He was educated at the Edinburgh Academy and Edinburgh University, entered Caius College, Cambridge, in 1869, and migrated to Trinity College on his election to a scholarship in 1873. His literary activity commenced immediately after his degree (bracketed Senior in the Moral Sciences Tripos), and he published several academic exercises: "Influence of Descartes on Metaphysical Speculation in England" (D.Sc. Degree Thesis), "Epistle of St. Barnabas" (Hulsean Prize, 1873), "Churches of Asia" (Kaye Prize, 1879), "Christian Civilisation" (Maitland, 1879), "Christian Opinion on Usury" (B.D. Thesis, 1884). He began to lecture on Economics in 1874 as one of the pioneers of the University Extension movement in Leeds, Bradford, Liverpool, Bolton, Wigan, and other towns. Since his return to Cambridge in 1878 he has been lecturing on English Economic History, and has carried on the work to which Professor Thorold Rogers devoted himself, though on rather different lines, as he has set himself to interpret the economic facts of each period in the light of the ideas current at that time. He has made important researches both in the economic interpretation of history and in the history of economic doctrine. The results of his work are mostly embodied in his "Growth of English Industry and Commerce" (Vol. I. in the Middle Ages, 2nd edit. 1896; Vol. II. in Modern Times, 2nd edit. 1892); but he has also been successful in inducing his pupils to undertake special researches; the late Miss E. Lamond's "Walter of Henley" (1890) and "Discourse of the Common Weal" (1893) would not have appeared but for the encouragement he gave, and several of his pupils have contributed to his "Alien Immigrants to England," 1897. He has acted as examiner in Philosophy both in Edinburgh and Cambridge, was deputy for the Professor of Moral Philosophy in Cambridge in 1881, and University Lecturer in History in 1884, a post which he resigned on being elected to a Trinity Fellowship in 1891. He was also President of Section F, British Association, at Cardiff, and Professor of Economics at King's College, London, 1891-97. During his tenure of that office he engaged in a vigorous crusade in favour of a more realistic treatment of Economic Science, and inveighed especially against attempts to formulate "economic laws" as unnecessary, inconvenient, and misleading (articles in Economic Journal, ii., and Economic Review, ii. and iv.). He has also exemplified the realistic mode of treatment in "Modern Civilisation," 1896; "Outlines of English Industrial History," with Miss M'Arthur (2nd edit. 1898); and "Essay on Western Civilisation in Ancient Times," 1898; as well as in his "Politics and Economics," 1885; and "Use and Abuse of Money," 1891. Since his ordination in 1873 he has been regularly engaged in clerical as well as academic work; he has been Vicar of Great St. Mary's, Cambridge, since 1887; Proctor for the Diocese of Ely since 1892; he is Rural Dean of Cambridge, and Hon. Canon of Ely. He has published his Hulsean Lectures on St. Austin, 1886, as well as various sermons and addresses on questions of the day—"Path towards Knowledge," 1891; "True Womanhood," 1896. He was married in 1876 to Adile Rebecca, daughter of Andrew A. Dunlop, Esq. Address: Trinity College, Cambridge.

CURNOW, Professor John, M.D., was born on Jan. 26, 1846, at Towednack, near Penzance, Cornwall. He is the son of Andrew and Esther Curnow, née Grylls, and was educated at Penzance and privately. He entered King's College, London, as a medical student on Oct. 1, 1864, and gained the second Warneford Entrance Scholarship. In 1865 he obtained a Junior Medical Scholarship, and matriculated with honours at the University of London. In 1868, having passed as M.R.C.S. and L.S.A., he was appointed Assistant House Physician to King's College Hospital, and in 1869 House Physician. In 1868 he passed the Intermediate M.B. Examination at the University of London, taking the Exhibitions and Gold Medals in Anatomy and in Chemistry and Materia Medica, and in 1870 he took his degree of M.B., being University Scholar and gold medallist in Medicine and in Obstetric Medicine. In 1871 he obtained the full degree of M.D. London, being placed first and awarded the Gold Medal. He became a Member of the Royal College of Physicians of London in 1873, and a Fellow in 1878, and was appointed to give the Gulstonian Lectures to the College in the next year, taking as his subject "The Lymphatic System and its Diseases." In 1869 he was elected an Associate, and in 1872 a Fellow of King's College, London. After studying at Dublin and abroad, he was asked in 1870 to undertake the duties of Demonstrator of Anatomy under the late Professor Partridge, and in 1873 succeeded his old teacher in the chair, and resigned it in 1897, thus teaching anatomy actively for twenty-seven years. During this period he wrote many papers and showed many specimens of abnormal anatomy, especially as affecting nerves and muscles. For thirteen years (1883-96) he also undertook the duties of Dean of the Medical Faculty of King's College. On entering on the duties of the office he was presented with an illuminated address of congratulation by the students, and on his retirement a complete breakfast service of plate was given to him by past and present pupils as a token of their appreciation of his services. In 1874 he was appointed Assistant Physician to King's College Hospital, in 1882 Physician with care of out-patients, and in 1890 full Physician. In 1896 he succeeded the late Sir George Johnson as Professor of Clinical Medicine. In 1880 he was appointed Physician to the Seamen's Hospital (late Dreadnought), and is now the Senior Visiting Physician. He has been Examiner in Anatomy at the University of London (twice), of Durham, and the Victoria University. He has also contributed several papers and articles on medical subjects to the medical journals, and has taken much interest in the different phases of modern medical education. He is now writing historical sketches of King's College and King's College Hospital in the King's College Hospital reports. Addresses: 9 Wimpole Street, Cavendish Square, London; and Penzance, Cornwall.

CURRIE, Sir Donald, G.C.M.G., D.L., J.P., M.P., is the son of the late Mr. James Currie, and was born in 1825. He is at the head of the firm of Donald Currie and Co., owners of the Castle Line of steamships between London and South Africa. Sir Donald takes an active interest in all questions connected with South Africa, and he has rendered great services to the country and to the Government. For his services in the settlement of the Diamond Fields dispute and the Orange Free State boundary he was made a C.M.G. in 1877, in 1881 a K.C.M.G. for further assistance during the Zulu War, and especially in connection with the relief of Ekowe, and a G.C.M.G. in 1897. He entered Parliament in 1880 as Liberal Member for Perthshire, and in 1885, and again in 1886, 1892, and 1895, was returned for the new division of West Perthshire. At the last three general elections he stood as a Liberal Unionist. Sir Donald Currie, it will be remembered, has on several occasions taken the late Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone long trips in his ocean steamers when he was in need of a voyage to restore him to health. He married Margaret, daughter of J. Miller, in 1851. Addresses: 4 Hyde Park Place, London, W.; and Garth, Aberfeldy, Perthshire.

CURRIE, Sir Edmund Hay, second son of Leonard Currie of Bromley and Tunbridge Wells, and Caroline Christina, daughter of General Sir James Hay, was born in 1834, and educated at Harrow. He is the grandson of the late Sir James Hay, K.C.B., and has for many years been associated with various philanthropic movements for promoting the education and improving the social condition of the poor in the east end of London. He took an active part in promoting the success of the People's Palace, and was chairman of the trustees of that institution. Sir Edmund was formerly a Member and Vice-Chairman of the School Board for London and Chairman of the Metropolitan Asylums Board and of the London Hospital. He is Chairman of the People's Palace. He was knighted in 1876. He married in 1877 Harriet Anne, daughter of the late Rev. Edward Golding, Vicar of Brimpton and Maiden-Erleigh, Berkshire. Address: Seafield Park, Crofton, Hants.

CURRIE, Lady (Violet Fane) (née Mary Montgomerie Lamb), is the eldest daughter of the late Charles J. S. Montgomerie Lamb, only son of Sir Charles Montolieu Lamb, Bart., and Mary Montgomerie, daughter and heiress of the 11th Earl of Eglinton. As "Violet Fane" she has won a high reputation as a poetess, and has published "From Dawn to Noon," 1872; "Denzil Place," 1875; "The Queen of the Fairies," 1877; "The Edwin and Angelina Papers," 1878; "Collected Verses," 1880; "Sophy; or The Adventures of a Savage," 1881; "Through Love and War," 1886; "Autumn Songs" and "The Story of Helen Davenant," 1889; "Mémoires of Marguerite de Valois," 1892; "Under Cross and Crescent," 1896. She was married (1) in 1864 to Henry Sydenham Singleton, who died in 1893, and (2) in 1894 to Sir Philip Wodehouse Currie, then Ambassador at Constantinople, with whom she shared the honours of the leave-taking accorded him on quitting Turkey recently. Address: British Embassy, Rome.

CURRIE, Lord, The Right Hon. Sir Philip Henry Wodehouse, G.C.B., fourth son of the late Raikes Currie, Esq., M.P., and the Hon. Laura Sophia Wodehouse, was born in 1834, and educated at Eton. He entered the Foreign Office in 1854, and became senior clerk in 1874. In 1876 he accompanied the Marquis of Salisbury as Secretary on his Special Embassy to Constantinople, and in 1878 was appointed (jointly with Mr. Montagu Corry, now Lord Rowton) secretary to the Special Embassy during the Congress at Berlin, and was made a C.B. He was in charge of the correspondence respecting the affairs of Cyprus from August 1878 to April 1880, and in 1882 was appointed Assistant Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs. He was Joint Protocolist to the Conference in London on Egyptian Finance from June 28 to Aug. 2, 1884, and was made a K.C.B. Dec. 1, 1885. He was appointed Permanent Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs April 2, 1889.

In the same year he was one of the British Delegates to examine the question of boundary between the Netherlands possessions in Borneo and those under British protection. He was made a G.C.B. in 1892. In 1894 he was appointed Ambassador at Constantinople in succession to the Right Hon. Sir Clare Ford, and has been the object of many flattering attentions from the Sultan. His position in Constantinople during the Armenian troubles was one of the most difficult in which a British ambassador can be placed. Appointed to be Her Majesty's Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary in Italy, Sir Philip Currie, together with Lady Currie, left Constantinople at the end of May 1898, the occasion marking their great popularity in Constantinople. Many British residents and the heads of all the ambassadorial staffs were present at the farewell, and the Sultan, the Grand Vizier, and Tewfik Pasha sent their representatives. Sir Philip Currie arrived in Rome, in order to take up his new duties, in June. He was raised to the peerage at New Year 1899. He married Lady Currie (q.v.) in 1894. English address: Hawley, Blackwater, Hants.

CURZON, Lord, The Right Hon. George Nathaniel, Viceroy of India, eldest son of the Rev. Alfred, 4th Lord Scarsdale, by Blanche, second daughter of the late Mr. Joseph Pocklington-Senhouse of Netherhall, Cumberland, was born at Kedleston Hall, the family seat in Derbyshire, on Jan. 11, 1859. In 1872 he went to Eton and began his successful career by carrying off innumerable prizes. Some eight years later he entered Balliol College, Oxford, where he again took a large share of honours. In 1883 he won the Lothian Prize for an essay on "Justinian," and soon after was elected to a Fellowship at All Souls. He was awarded in 1884 the Arnold Historical Prize for an essay on "Sir Thomas More," and he graduated B.A. in the same year and M.A. in 1886. Mr. Curzon soon showed great power of debate, and was the most conspicuous orator of modern times in the Oxford Union, of which he afterwards became President. In 1885, when he acted as assistant private secretary to the Marquis of Salisbury, Mr. Curzon unsuccessfully contested South Derbyshire in the Conservative interest; but in the following year he succeeded in capturing the Southport division of Lancashire from the Gladstonian Liberals by a majority of nearly 500 votes. His popularity in the constituency has steadily increased since 1886, and his majorities have grown at every succeeding election. Before leaving college Mr. Curzon, who is a born traveller, decided to study Asiatic countries at first hand. His determination was the result of a voyage round the world which he made after leaving Eton. In 1888 he undertook a journey along the newly-constructed Transcaspian Railway and other parts of Central Asia within the dominions of the Czar, and during the course of the next year he published his work on "Russia in Central Asia." In 1889 he explored Persia, and acted as correspondent for the Times, to which paper he contributed a number of articles on the subject of Persia. He became acquainted with the Shah, and spent six months in his country. He embodied his experiences in a large work of two volumes, entitled "Persia and the Persian Question." Mr. Curzon believes that the British Empire is the greatest instrument for good the world has ever seen, and holds that its work in the Far East is not yet accomplished. His book on the Far East, therefore, which was the outcome of his journeys in China, Japan, and Corea during 1887-88 and 1892-93 was read with the greatest interest, and, coming as it did at a critical time, it was found to be of the highest value. Mr. Curzon's last journey was to the Pamirs, and he "believes he knows better than any one can tell him what Russia intends in those high regions." The chief outcome of that trip was that Mr. Curzon became a staunch supporter of the "Forward Policy" on the north-west frontier of India, and he has recently ratified his allegiance to the forward doctrine. While in Afghanistan he became intimate with the Ameer, and a friendly correspondence has been kept up between them ever since. His appointment, therefore, to the Viceroyalty of India is exceedingly opportune, and gave great satisfaction to the Ameer. The value of his contributions to geographical knowledge was recognised in 1895 by the Royal Geographical Society, which awarded to him its gold medal. Mr. Curzon's Parliamentary career has been remarkably successful. He early caught the ear of the House, and towards the close of the last Conservative Government he became Under-Secretary for India. When Lord Salisbury formed his present administration Mr. Curzon was made Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, and it has been his good fortune to fill that post, and to represent British Foreign Policy in the House of Commons at a time when foreign affairs have held the first place in public interest. His reputation for being able to combine hard work with extreme readiness of speech, and sometimes even with eloquence, has grown steadily, though in his more recent speeches and replies on the Chinese question he has laid himself open to very serious criticism. In August 1898

it was announced that the Queen had been pleased to approve of the appointment of Mr. Curzon to be Viceroy and Governor-General of India in succession to the Earl of Elgin. It was felt that the appointment was something of an experiment, but it was generally conceded at home and in India that Mr. Curzon was eminently fitted for the post. Some surprise was expressed that he should give up a brilliant parliamentary career to go to India; but Asia has always possessed a great fascination for him; and to obtain at the age of thirty-nine years what is truly called the most splendid position under the Crown, falls to the lot of very few. For the British Empire in the Far East Mr. Curzon has the greatest hope. He says, "This splendid future is no idle dream of fancy, but is capable of realisation at no indefinite period. Moral failure alone can shatter the prospect that awaits this country in the impending task of regeneration." On Sept. 24, 1898, it was announced that the Queen had been pleased to confer the dignity of a peerage upon the Right Hon. George N. Curzon, Viceroy designate of India, by the name, style, and title of Baron Curzon of Kedleston, in the Peerage of Ireland. By this creation Lord Curzon is not deprived of his eligibility to the House of Commons in case he ceases to be Viceroy and returns to England before becoming Lord Scarsdale. Lord Curzon, who is a J.P. and D.L. for Derbyshire, married in 1895 Mary, the daughter of Mr. L. T. Leiter of Washington, U.S.A. Lady Curzon is said to have brought her husband great wealth. A daughter was born to them in 1896. In February 1899 Lady Curzon received the decoration of the Imperial Order of the Crown of India. English addresses: The Priory, Reigate; 4 Carlton Gardens, S.W.; and Athenæum.

CUST, Henry John Cockayne, is the son of Major H. F. Cockayne Cust, of Cockayne Hatley, and was born on Oct. 10, 1861. He was educated at Eton, and Trinity College, Cambridge, and sat in the House of Commons as Member for Stamford from 1890 to 1895. Mr. Cust was until lately the editor of the Pall Mall Gazette. He was married in 1893 to Emmeline, only daughter of Sir William Welby-Gregory, Bart., and he is the heir to the earldom of Brownlow. Address: Cockayne Hatley, Sandy, Bedfordshire.

CUST, Robert Needham, LL.D. Edinburgh, J.P., son of the Hon. and Rev. Henry Cockayne Cust and Lady Anna Maria Needham, daughter of the Earl of Kilmorey, was born Feb. 24, 1821, at Cockayne Hatley, Bedfordshire, and educated at Eton. He entered her Majesty's Indian Civil Service and took honours in four Oriental languages in the College of Fort William, Calcutta. He held the highest judicial and revenue posts in Northern India, and served many years with Lord Lawrence in the Punjab, being present at the battles of Múdkí, Ferozeshah, and Sobraon, and at the taking of Lahore, 1845-46. He took part in the Punjab War, 1848-49, and in the pacification of the country after the Mutinies in 1858. He was a member of the Legislative Council of the Viceroy, 1864-65, and is Barrister-at-Law, J.P. for the counties of London and Middlesex, Honorary Secretary of the Royal Asiatic Society, and has been Member of the Council of the Royal Geographical Society. He is also Honorary Lay Secretary of the Board of Missions of the Church of England. He has published "Modern Languages of East Indies," 1878; "Modern Languages of Africa," 1882; "Modern Languages of Oceania," 1887; "Modern Languages of the Caucasian Group," 1887; "Linguistic and Oriental Essays" (Series I.-V.), 1880-1898; "Sketches of Anglo-Indian Life"; "The Shrines of Lourdes, Zaragossa, and Loretto," 1892; "Essays on Bible Diffusion," 1892; "Notes on Missionary Subjects"; "Poems of Many Years and Places" (Series I. 1887, Series II. 1897); "Bible Translation," 1890; "Africa Rediviva, or Missionary Occupation of Africa," 1891; "Methods of Evangelisation of the Word," 1894; "Common Features which appear in all the Religions of the World," 1895; "Clouds on the Horizon, or the Various Forms of Religious Errors," 1890; "Gospel-Messsage," 1896; "Five Essays on Religious Conceptions," 1898; and is a constant contributor to oriental, literary, and religious publications, and an earnest supporter of all Protestant Missionary Societies. He was called upon to read a paper on "The Progress of African Philology," at the Chicago Congress, 1893, which has been published. Dr. Cust is a Member of Committees of the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, and the Church Missionary Society, a Member of the German and French Oriental Societies, Hon. Secretary of the Royal Asiatic Society, and Honorary Member of the Geographical Society of Holland and the American Board of Foreign Missions, Boston, United States. He married (1), in 1855, Maria, daughter of the Hon. and Rev. Louis Hobart, Dean of Windsor, brother of the Earl of Buckinghamshire, and (2), in 1868, Elizabeth, daughter of J. Mathews. Address: 63 Elm Park Gardens, S.W.

DAGONET. See SIMS, GEORGE ROBERT.

DAHN, Professor Geheimrath Julius Sophus Felix, German historian, a writer on German law, a novelist, and poet, son of the celebrated actors Friedrich and Constance Dahn of Munich, was born at Hamburg, Feb. 9, 1834, and educated at the Gymnasium and University of Munich. In 1862 he was appointed Professor of Jurisprudence at Würzburg, and in 1872 proceeded to Königsberg, where he still resides. He distinguished himself as a volunteer in the war of 1870-71. Amongst his historical works the chief are: "The Germanic Kings" (Die Könige der Germanen), 6 vols., 1861-72; "Procopius of Caesarea," 1865; "West Gothic Studies," 1874; "Lombard Studies," 1876; "Reasons in Law," 1879; "The Early History of the Germanic and Romance Peoples, I.-IV., 1881-90; "German History," I. 1883, II. 1889. As a poet, Professor Dahn has written a number of ballads which take high rank: "Twelve Ballads," 1875; "Ballads and Songs," 1878, and others. As a novelist he ranks still higher. "Ein Kampf um Rom," which appeared in 1876, made a great impression throughout Germany; it was followed in 1878 by "Kämpfende Herzen," and "Odihns Trost," which reached a 6th edit. in 1883. He has written also: "Kleine Romane aus der Völkerwanderung," I.-VII., 6 editions; "Bis zum Tode getreu," 6th edit., 1887; "Weltuntergang," 6th edit., 1889, and several novels on subjects from Northern and Scandinavian history. In 1888 he accepted a vocation to the University of Breslau. In 1890-93 he published his "Erinnerungen."

DALBY, Sir William Bartlett, M.B., F.R.C.S., is the son of the late Charles Allsopp Dalby, and was born at Ashby-de-la-Zouche, Dec. 10, 1840. He was educated at Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1863, subsequently taking the degree of M.B. in 1866. He studied medicine at St. George's Hospital, and became a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of England in 1867. He was for several years Aural Surgeon, and Lecturer on Aural Surgery, at St. George's Hospital, and is now Consulting Aural Surgeon to that institution. He was President of the Medical Society from 1894 to 1895; and is the author of "Lectures on Diseases and Injuries of the Ear;" "The Education of Deaf and Dumb by means of Lip-reading and Articulation," 1872; "Educational treatment of Incurably Deaf Children;" the article "Diseases and Injuries of the Ear," in Holmes's "System of Surgery"; the article "Diseases of the Ear," in Quain's "Dictionary of Medicine"; and of numerous articles in connection with Aural Surgery, which have appeared in the various medical journals and periodicals. He was knighted in 1886; and was married in 1873 to Hyacinthe, daughter of the late Major Edward Wellesley, of the 73rd Regiment. Addresses: 18 Savile Row, W.; and the Athenæum.

DALLINGER, the Rev. William Henry, LL.D., D.Sc., D.C.L., F.R.S., F.L.S., son of Joseph S. Dallinger, artist, etcher, and line engraver, was born at Devonport on July 5, 1841, and educated privately. He entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1861, and was appointed successively to Faversham, Cardiff, Bristol, and Liverpool, remaining in the last place twelve years. From there he was appointed Principal of Wesley College, Sheffield, which he resigned, in 1888, in order to devote himself wholly to the pursuit of minute biological research. For that purpose he has constructed a microscopical laboratory near London, where the work he is engaged in is still progressing. Fond of nature and science, from early school-days he made himself master of the use of the best and most powerful microscopical lenses, and being duly interested in the discussion then rife amongst biologists as to the origin of life, he, without leaning either to biogenesis or abiogenesis, gave himself to the working out, by microscopical research, of the life-histories of the minute forms of life the mode of whose origin was in dispute. The best lenses and appliances obtainable were employed; but under the influence of this work the defects and deficiencies of lenses of enormous power were disclosed, and all the years since have been employed by opticians and mathematicians in bringing them nearer perfection. The result has been that the life-histories of these minutest organisms have been worked out successfully by Dr. Dallinger; and it has been shown that, so far from their having origin in not-living matter, they actually arise in spores or germs, fertilised by a genetic process like all the higher and more complex forms above them. Dr. Dallinger's latest work (1885-96) has been, by the aid of still more nearly perfect lenses, to demonstrate that the cell-nucleus in these minute organisms (and probably in all simple cells) undergoes profound changes prior to the several changes of the body, and he is endeavouring by a study of the changes undergone by the nuclei of the majority of the unicellular animals to approximate an interpretation of what is involved in cellular multiplication. Dr. Dallinger's earliest work was rewarded by an unsought grant of £100 from the Royal Society for further research. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1888; gave a series of discourses on his researches at the Royal Institution, London, and was appointed Rede Lecturer to the University of Cambridge. He also discoursed on his researches before the University of Oxford. He was appointed President of the Royal Microscopical Society in 1883; and, at the request of the committee of the British Association, went to Montreal to give the principal results of his work to the British Association assembled there in 1884, receiving on that occasion the honorary degree of LL.D. from the Victoria University; and in 1892, at the celebration of the ter-centenary of Trinity College, Dublin, he received, honoris causa, the Doctor of Science degree of that University. The University of Durham in like manner conferred on him the degree of D.C.L. in 1896. The work done is recorded in the Proceedings of the Royal and the Royal Microscopical Societies, and has been, in connection with other more general biological work, communicated to several of the leading journals. He has also been for many years, and still is, a lecturer on the Gilchrist educational staff. As a minister he has ever sought to inculcate the wisdom of a fearless acceptance of scientific truth, and has endeavoured to show that this may comport with a firm hold on the fundamental truths of Christianity. He married Emma J., daughter of David Goldsmith, of Bury St. Edmunds. Permanent address: Ingleside, Newstead Road, Lee, Kent.

DALRYMPLE, Sir Charles, M.A., M.P., J.P., is the second son of Sir Charles Dalrymple-Fergusson, Bart., and was born at Kilkeran, Ayrshire, on Oct. 15, 1839. He was educated at Harrow, and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated M.A. in 1865. Called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in the same year, he was in 1868 elected to represent Bute in the House of Commons, and he continued to hold that seat until 1885. In the latter year he opposed Mr. Gladstone in his candidature for Midlothian, and in 1886 he was elected Conservative member for Ipswich, a seat which he has since continuously held. He was a Junior Lord of the Treasury from 1885 to 1886, and has served on several important Commissions, viz.: The Cathedral Establishments Commission, 1879-1885; the Reformatories and Industrial Schools Commission, 1882-1883; the Vaccination Commission, 1890-1896; the Scottish Universities Commission, 1889-1896. Sir Charles Dalrymple acted as Grand Master Mason of Scotland from 1893 to 1896, is a Director of the Bank of Scotland, and was created a Baronet in 1887. He is a Justice of the Peace for Haddingtonshire, Midlothian, and Ayrshire; and he was married to Alice Mary, second daughter of Sir Edward Hunter-Blair, Bart. (she died in 1884). Addresses: Newhailes, Musselburgh, N.B.; 20 Onslow Gardens, S.W.; and the Athenæum.

DALTON, Rev. Herbert Andrew, M.A., is the son of the late Rev. Charles Browne Dalton, Vicar of Highgate and Prebendary of St. Paul's, and of Mary Frances, daughter of Dr. Blomfield, Bishop of London, and was born in London on May 18, 1852. He was educated at Highgate School, and Corpus Christi College, Oxford, being elected Scholar of his College in 1871, and gaining a first-class both in Classical Moderations and in the Final School of Litt. Hum. in 1875. He was a Senior Student of Christ Church from 1875 to 1878, and in 1877 was appointed Head-Master of St. Edward's School, Oxford. In 1884 he became an Assistant-Master at Winchester College, and was in 1890 appointed Head-Master of Felsted School. Mr. Dalton has edited "Select Epodes, and the Ars Poetica of Horace," 1884; and is the author of "Helps to Self-Examination for Boys in Public Schools," 1892. He was married in 1879 to Mabel, daughter of Captain Charles Simeon. Address: Schoolhouse, Felsted, Essex.

DALY, Frederic. See AUSTIN, LOUIS F.

DANA, Marvin, M.A., LL.B., Ph.D., F.R.G.S., &c., editor of Judy, was born in Cornwall, Vermont, U.S.A., March 2, 1867, and is the son of Edward Summers Dana and Mary Howe Squier Dana, his wife, of "The Poplars," Newhaven, Vermont, being also lineal descendant of the Count de Dunois, 1400. His earlier education was gained at Middlebury College, Vermont (B.A., 1886; M.A., 1889). He also studied at the Sauveur College of Languages, and received the diploma of that institution. He attended lectures in the law department of Union University, Albany, New York, and gained the degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1886. He then travelled for a time, after which, in 1890, he entered the General Seminary, New York, where, after three years of study, he was honoured with the Litterati's degree. At the same time, he matriculated in the post graduate department of the University of New York, where he won distinction for his work in philosophy. Already his writings were beginning to attract attention. Indeed, as early as 1889, when he was only twenty-two years of age, a volume of his verses was published, under the title, "Mater Christi, and Other Poems," and was successful. His interest in economical subjects caused him to be elected Councillor of the American Institute of Civics in 1892. Two years later he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society. He had been unanimously chosen class-poet by his fellow-students, both in the University and in the Seminary. He was now, in 1894, elected by the Alumni of Middlebury College to deliver the annual Alumni Poem. In this year he married Gertrude, daughter of the late J. Mortimer Hill, of "The Arbors," Pasadena, California, U.S.A. Mr. Dana's literary labours have been remarkably varied. In addition to the many poems he has contributed to the leading periodicals, English and American, he has written a large number of short stories, while his first novel is about to be published simultaneously in London and New York. Moreover, he is the author of many essays on scientific, philosophical, and historical subjects. Among these "The Sepulture of the Living," which appeared in the Arena Magazine (Boston), for May 1897, perhaps attracted most attention at home and abroad. A "History of the Mormons," and "Wars of the Century," are among his other works. In 1897, he wrote a review of the last decade in the world's history, to form the final volume in a new edition of Dr. Ridpath's "History of Events." At present he is accumulating material for another historical volume, and he has nearly completed his notes for a general history of the literature of the world. In October, 1897, Mr. Dana came to London, where he became editor of Judy. Despite the demands made upon him by his editorial duties, he finds time to do other work in the world of letters. A recent example of this is to be found in the six sonnets contributed by him to the Pall Mall Magazine for January 1899. Mr. Dana is a skilled musician, his favourite instrument being the violin, and a good linguist, knowing at least a dozen languages. Mr. Dana, when in town, takes his chief exercise in fencing, of which he is very fond, and in which he is an adept. In the country he is an enthusiastic lover of all sports, and is particularly devoted to hunting and mountain-climbing. Mr. Dana is a member of the Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, and he is a charter member of the Order of Founders and Patriots. His address is 1 Army and Navy Mansions, Victoria Street, S.W.

DANCKWERTS, William Otho Adolph Julius, is the son of Adolph Victor Danckwerts, of Somerset East, Cape of Good Hope, and was born in 1853. He was educated at Peterhouse College, Cambridge, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in July 1878. He is a Special Pleader on the South-Eastern Circuit; and is Counsel to H.M. Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings, and also junior Standing Counsel to the Commissioners of the Inland Revenue. Address: 7 New Court, Carey Street, W.C.

D'ANNUNZIO, Gabriele, Italian novelist, was born in 1864 on board the ship Irene in the Adriatic Sea. He was educated in the College at Prato, and in 1880, having been impressed by reading Carducci's "Odi Barbare," he wrote his first book of poems, entitled "Primo Vere." He then proceeded to the University at Rome, and published in 1882 a volume of prose, "Terra Vergine," and a volume of verse, "Canto Novo," and another, "Intermezzo di Rime," in the next year. Finding that the attractions of the capital interfered with his work, he retired to his native province of Chieti; and thence in 1884 he published a volume of short stories, "Il Libro delle Vergini," and another in 1886, "San Pantaleone," both of which are filled with pictures of brutality and violence. He also issued the following volumes of poetry: "Isotheo," "Chimera," "Elegie Romane" and "Poema Paradisiaco," but he holds that prose is the best medium to express the complexities of the modern soul. He is best known in England by his "Trionfo della Morte," a novel of great power, but distinctly decadent tendency; it was published in January 1896, and has been translated into many European languages, notably into English in 1898. In 1897 he wrote "The Dream of a Spring Morning" for Signora Duse, a play that was forbidden by the Lord Chamberlain when Madame Bernhardt proposed to play it in London in June 1898. He proposes to write three more of the same series. The second was written in 1898, "The Dream of a Summer Afternoon." He is now said to be writing a drama on the subject of St. Francis, to be called "Fratre Sole," and a novel "The Fire." He is proposing to build a theatre at Florence in which Signora Duse can act his plays. He has recently been elected a Deputy for his native village to the Italian Parliament. Address: Villa Cappuccina, Florence.

DARLING, Charles John, Justice of the High Court, is the eldest son of the late Charles Darling, of Langham Hall, Essex, and was born in 1849. Educated by private tutors, he was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1874, went the Oxford Circuit, was made Q.C. in 1885, and was elected a bencher of his Inn, 1892. He was appointed a Commissioner of Assize for the Oxford Circuit in 1896. In 1885 and 1886 he stood for South Hackney, but was on both occasions beaten by the present Lord Chief-Justice. In February 1888 he was returned for Deptford at a bye-election, and sat as a Conservative till his elevation to the Bench in October 1897. Many years ago he gained a reputation as a satirist by his skit on things legal, entitled "Scintillæ Juris." "Meditations in the Tea-Room" is also from his pen. He married, in 1885, Mary Caroline, daughter of Major-General Wilberforce Greathed, C.B., R.E.

DARLING, Lord. See STORMONTH-DARLING, LORD.

DARMESTETER, Madame, née Agnes Mary F. Robinson, the eldest daughter of Mr. G. F. Robinson, F.S.A., was born at Leamington, Feb. 27, 1856. She is the widow of the late celebrated French Orientalist, James Darmesteter. For seven years she studied at University College, giving especial attention to Greek literature. She has published a volume of verses, "A Handful of Honeysuckles," 1878; "The Crowned Hippolytus," a translation of Euripides, 1880; "Arden," a novel, and "Emily Brontë" and "Marguerite, Queen of Navarre," in the Eminent Women Series, 1883; "The New Arcadia, and other poems," 1884, and "An Italian Garden," 1886. Her younger sister, Frances Mabel Robinson, has won praise as a writer. Madame Darmesteter has of late been busily engaged in working up documentary material for her history of the Italian campaigns of the French King Charles V., which, until recently, have been strangely neglected by historians. In 1891 appeared "Lyrics selected from the Works of A. M. F. Robinson," &c. In 1893 Madame Darmesteter published "Retrospect and other Poems," and, in 1897, a "Life of Renan," and "A Mediæval Garland."

DARTMOUTH, Earl of, The Right Hon. William Heneage Legge, J.P., was born on May 6, 1851, and succeeded his father as 6th Earl in 1891. He was educated at Eton, and Christ Church, Oxford. In 1878 he was elected Conservative member for West Kent, and he retained the seat until 1885, when he became member for Lewisham, in the same interest; this latter constituency he continued to represent until 1891, when he succeeded to the Peerage. He was for some years a Conservative whip in the House of Commons, and he acted as Vice-Chamberlain of the Household for part of 1885, and again from 1886 to 1891. Lord Dartmouth was appointed Lord Lieutenant of Staffordshire in 1891, and he became Provincial Grand-Master of Freemasons for Staffordshire in 1893. He was married, in 1879, to Mary, daughter of the 2nd Earl of Leicester. Address: Patshull House, Wolverhampton.

DARWIN, Francis, M.A., M.B., F.R.S., son of the late Charles Darwin, was born at Down, in Kent, Aug. 16, 1848, and was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and afterwards at St. George's Hospital, London. At College, he took the Degrees of M.A. 1874, M.B. 1874, and was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, 1882. He was appointed University Lecturer in Botany, 1884; Reader in Botany, 1888; and became Fellow of Christ's College, 1888. He acted as his father's assistant from 1874 to 1882; and is the joint author of "The Power of Movement in Plants," 1880, and author of various papers on Physiological Botany, and is editor of "Life and Letters of Charles Darwin," 1887. In 1892 he published "Charles Darwin"; in 1894, jointly with the late E. H. Acton, "Practical Physiology of Plants," 1894; and, in 1895, "Elements of Botany." Addresses: Wychfield, Cambridge, and Athenæum.

DARWIN, George Howard, M.A., F.R.S., D.Sc., is the second son of the late Charles R. Darwin. He was born at Down, Kent, on July 9, 1845, and is married to a daughter of Mr. Charles Du Puy, of Philadelphia. In October 1864 he entered Trinity College, Cambridge. He graduated in 1868 as Senior Wrangler, and was awarded the Second Smith's Prize. He was elected to a Fellowship at Trinity College in October 1868, and afterwards studied for the Bar, and was called at Lincoln's Inn, April 30, 1872; but he never pursued the profession of the law, and in 1873 he returned to Cambridge. In 1879 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and in 1885 "a royal medal" was awarded to him by the Royal Society in recognition of his scientific work. He also received a medal from the Royal Astronomical Society. In 1875 he presented two papers to the Statistical Society on consanguineous marriages, and in 1876 he contributed to the Transactions of the Royal Society a paper "On the Influence of Geological Changes on the Earth's Axis of Rotation." This was followed by a series of papers on the part played by the tides in the history of planets and satellites. He has also been engaged in experimental investigations on the pressure of loose sand (Inst. C.E.), and jointly with his brother, Mr. Horace Darwin, on small changes of level in the earth's surface, and minute earthquakes (Brit. Assoc. Reports). In 1882 he assisted Sir William Thomson (Lord Kelvin) in the preparation of the second part of the new edition of "Thomson and Tait's Natural Philosophy." He was for several years occupied with the theory and prediction of the tides, especially with reference to the operations of the tidal department of the survey of India. An account of his work in this branch will be found in Reports to the British Association for 1883-85. Besides a number of papers on various astronomical subjects, he has written on ripple marks in sand. On Jan. 16, 1883, he was elected to the Plumian Professorship of Astronomy and Experimental Philosophy at Cambridge, vacant by the death of the Rev. James Challis, M.A., F.R.S. In 1885 he was appointed a Member of the Council of the Meteorological Office. He is an honorary graduate of the Universities of Glasgow, Dublin, and Padua, and a Member of several British and Foreign Academies of Science. Address: Newnham Grange, Cambridge.

DARYL, Sidney. See STRAIGHT, SIR DOUGLAS.

DAVENPORT, Sir Samuel, K.C.M.G., LL.D., fourth son of the late George Davenport, Esq., of Oxford, and of Great Wigston, Leicestershire, was born in 1818, and settled in South Australia in 1842. He became an enterprising cattle and sheep farmer, and also occupied himself with the cultivation of the olive and the manufacture of olive oil, and with vineyards and wine. He was Crown Nominee of Legislative Council in 1846-47, and Member from 1857 to 1866. He has taken a prominent part in the organisation of the various exhibitions that have been held in different parts of the world, being Executive Commissioner in London, 1851, Philadelphia, 1876, Sydney, 1879, Melbourne, 1880, and London, 1886. He was also for many years President of the Royal Agricultural and Horticultural Society and of the Chamber of Manufactures of South Australia. In 1885 he was appointed President of the South Australian branch of the Geographical Society of Australasia. He was knighted in 1884, and in June 1886 he was created a K.C.M.G., and in July 1886 received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the University of Cambridge. He married in 1842 Margaret, daughter-of W. L. Cleland. Address: Beaumont, near Adelaide.

DAVEY, Lord, The Right Hon. Sir Horace, is the son of Mr. Peter Davey, of Torquay, and formerly of Horton, Buckinghamshire, by marriage with Caroline Emma, daughter of the late Rev. William Pace, rector of Rampisham and Wraxall, Dorsetshire. He was born in the year 1833, and was educated at Rugby, from which school he was elected to a Scholarship at University College, Oxford. He obtained a first class in Moderations, and also on taking his degree, and was subsequently chosen a Fellow of his college. He was also Senior Mathematical Scholar and Eldon Law Scholar. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in January 1861, and soon rose to eminence as an equity lawyer. He obtained a silk gown in 1875. He sat for Christchurch, Hants, from 1880 down to 1885, when he was defeated. He was Solicitor-General for a few months in 1886 under Mr. Gladstone's administration, and was elected member for Stockton-on-Tees, Dec. 21, 1888. But in 1892 he was not re-elected. In the trial of the Bishop of Lincoln he was counsel for the prosecution, and in the Berkeley Peerage Case (1891) he was leading counsel. In October 1898 he was appointed a Commissioner to make Statutes and Regulations for the new or revised University of London. In September 1893 he was appointed a Lord Justice of Appeal in the place of Lord Justice Bowen, and in the following year was appointed a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary, and was created a peer for life with the title of Lord Davey of Fernhurst. He is married to Louisa, daughter of the late Mr. John Donkin. Lord Davey is an Hon. D.C.L. of Oxford, and F.R.S. Addresses: Verdley Place, Fernhurst, Sussex; 86 Brook Street, W.; and Athenæum.

DAVEY, Richard Patrick Boyle, youngest and only surviving son of the late Robert Davey, Esq., of Mileham, Norfolk, and of Eliza Boyle, was born July 12, 1848. Mr. Davey was educated in Italy, and in 1870 left Europe for America, where he soon distinguished himself as a journalist, and edited the musical and dramatic section of the New York Spirit of the Times with marked success. In the year 1878 he visited the West Indies and wrote a series of amusing letters from Havannah and Nassau (Bahamas), which attracted much attention. In 1880 Mr. Davey returned to England and joined the staff of the Morning Post, and successfully represented this journal at the series of exhibitions at South Kensington, his articles on our colonies contributed to that paper in 1866 being much praised. In 1848 he joined the staff of the Saturday Review, and contributed a series of musical and dramatic articles of much value and interest, and also a remarkable series of papers, "Side-lights of the French Revolution." In 1893-94 he visited Constantinople, the result of his stay in that capital being embodied in a work in two volumes published in 1897 by Messrs. Chapman & Hall, and entitled "The Sultan and his Subjects," for which he received universal praise; it has been pronounced the best book ever written on Turkey. Mr. Davey has produced with success the following plays: "Paul and Virginia," 1886; "Lesbia" (Lyceum Theatre), 1888; a version of Hugo's "Marion de L'Orme," 1889; "St. Ronan's Well," in collaboration with Mr. W. H. Pollock, 1892; and "L'Héritage d'Hélène" (Paris, 1889), translated into English as "Inheritance." This play has been performed 1500 times in America. Mr. Davey is well known as a linguist and as a brilliant conversationalist. He published in 1881 an historical romance, "A Royal Amour," and in 1897 an historical romance, "Wetherleigh," and a series of volumes on historical women (Roxburghe Press): Victoria R. and I., Mary I., Jane Grey, and Arabella Stuart. He has also written "A Wild Hunt," a comedy in four acts, in collaboration with W. H. Pollock, accepted by W. Augustus Daly. Address: 12 Buckingham Street, Strand, W.C.

DAVEY, Very Rev. William Harrison, M.A., eldest son of William Davey, was born July 28, 1825, at Thorpe, near Norwich, and was educated at Charterhouse, whence he proceeded as a scholar to Lincoln College, Oxford. At the University he gained second-class Honours in the final schools of both Lit. Hum. and Mathematics in 1847, proceeded to his M.A. degree in due course, and in 1851 was Denyer Theological Prizeman, taking as the subject of his essay "The Divinity of the Holy Ghost." After spending a year at Marlborough as Assistant Master, he was ordained in 1850 by the Bishop of Rochester to the Curacy of Halstead, Essex. He became Vice-Principal of Chichester Theological College in 1852, and was appointed to a similar post at Cuddesdon Theological College in 1859. From the latter year to 1872 he was Vicar of Aston Rowant, Oxfordshire, and from 1872 to 1876 held the Vice-Principalship of St. David's College, Lampeter. Mr. Davey was appointed in 1876 a Prebendary of St. David's Cathedral, and in 1895 Chancellor and Canon Residentiary of St. David's. Finally, in 1897, he became Dean of Llandaff. He is the author of "Articuli Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ," a comparative view of the various editions of the Articles in the sixteenth century, 1861; the Books of Deuteronomy and Joshua, in the Commentary on the Old Testament, S.P.C.K., 1876; and various articles in Theological Reviews. Address: The Deanery, Llan-daff.

DAVIDS, Professor Thomas William Rhys, Ph.D., LL.D., Secretary and Librarian since 1887 of the Royal Asiatic Society, was born at Colchester, May 12, 1843, and educated at the Brighton School and in the University of Breslau. He was appointed a writer in the Ceylon Civil Service in February 1866, and filled various judicial appointments in that island, where he also acted as Archæological Commissioner to the Government of Ceylon. He was called to the Bar by the Middle Temple in May 1877, was appointed Professor of Pāli and Buddhist Literature at University College, London, in 1882; and was married in September 1893 to Caroline Augusta, daughter of the Rev. John Foley, B.D., Vicar of Wadhurst, Sussex. She was a distinguished student of University College, London, of which, in 1896, she was elected a Fellow. She has edited two volumes of the late Professor Croom Robertson's lectures. Professor Rhys Davids is the author of: "Buddhism: a Sketch of the Life and Teachings of Gautama, the Buddha," 1877 (16th edit., 1894); of "Buddhist Suttas," Oxford University Press, 1881; of "Vinaya Texts," Oxford University Press, 1882-85; of "Buddhist Birth Stories, being Tales of the Anterior Birth of Gautama Buddha," and of "The Questions of King Milinda," Oxford University Press, 1890 and 1894; and has edited in the original Pāli various books of the Buddhist Scriptures for the Pāli Text Society (1882-1890). He has also published "American Lectures on Buddhism," New York and London, 1894; and a "Manual of Indian Mysticism," 1896. He was the Hibbert Lecturer for the year 1881; is an Honorary Ph.D. of the University of Breslau, an Honorary LL.D. of the University of Edinburgh, Professor of Pāli and Buddhist Literature at University College, London; Chairman of the Pāli Text Society. Address: 22 Albemarle Street, W.

DAVIDSON, Professor George, A.M., Ph.D., Sc.D., was born at Notting-ham, May 9, 1825, but removed with his parents to Philadelphia in 1832. He received the rudiments of his education from his mother, then attended the public schools at Philadelphia, and graduated from the Central High School at twenty years of age. He was appointed to the United States Coast Survey in 1845, and from that year to 1850 he served on field duty from Maine to Texas. From 1850 to 1860 he was engaged on the Pacific Coast, and in 1861 he made surveys for the defence of the Delaware River. In 1862 he commanded the armed steamer Vixen in Florida. When General Lee's army invaded Pennsylvania (1863) he was appointed assistant engineer of fortifications for the defence of Philadelphia. Under direction of Professor Peirce he undertook in May 1867 a geographical reconnaissance of the coasts of Alaska, for the purchase of which the government was then negotiating with Russia. In 1869 he took charge of the astronomical expedition to Alaska to observe the total solar eclipse of August 1869, and was the first American who went up the Chilkat River. In 1874, in charge of the American Transit of Venus Expedition to Japan, he observed the phenomena and took about sixty photographs at Nagasaki; and determined the telegraphic difference of longitude between that place and Vladivostok and Tokyo. In 1874 he computed a field catalogue of 983 transit stars, and in 1883 he finished the computation of a second and enlarged edition of 1278 time and circumpolar stars. In 1874 he had finished the computation of a table of 57,500 transit star factors to three places of decimals; and has in part computed another equally extensive. As one of the United States Commissioners of Irrigation he visited China, India, Egypt, Italy, and other countries of Europe, to examine and report upon the systems of irrigation, and their application to the needs of the United States, particularly to the Pacific Coast (1875). He has written four editions of the "Coast Pilot of California, Oregon, and Washington," 1858, '62, '69, '88. He also wrote (1869) the "Coast Pilot of Alaska," Part I. In 1888 he finished a monograph on the landfalls of Ulloa, Cabrillo, Ferrello, Drake, and Vizcaino on the Pacific Coast between 1539 and 1603, and has located every one of the localities mentioned by these explorers. In 1880 he carried his equatorial telescope to the summit of Santa Lucia, 6000 feet above and overlooking the ocean, and observed the total solar eclipse of January 11. In 1882 he had charge of the United States Transit of Venus party in New Mexico, and at an elevation of 5500 feet he observed the four contacts of the planet and sun, and took 216 photographs of the planet in transitu, every plate of which was accepted and measured. In these transits of Venus, in those of Mercury, and in occultations of stars by the moon, and in solar eclipses, he has demonstrated that the phenomena of the "black drop,"

"ligament," "Baily's beads," &c., are due solely to the unsteadiness of our atmosphere at the time and place of observation. In 1893 he was placed in charge of the location and measurement of the diagonal part of the boundary line between the states of California and Nevada. He has devised new forms of instruments, notably the new meridian instrument for latitude and time named after him, break circuit chronometer, new vertical clamp for transit instruments, &c., and the spirit-level horizon to sextant, and has shown the obscure mechanical defects of micrometers, &c. In 1874 he was elected a Member of the National Academy of Sciences. From the inception of the Geographical Society of the Pacific in 1881 he has yearly been elected President, and has published papers upon the ascent of Makushin Volcano, the eruptions of Bogoslov, and other volcanoes of the Aleutian Islands. Professor Davidson has held the position of honorary Professor of Geodesy and Astronomy in the University of California since 1873, and was a regent of the same institution from 1877 to 1884. Since 1873 he has had charge of the main triangulation of the Pacific Coast. During his forty-eight years of active field service on the Survey, his itinerary shows over 385,500 miles travelled, and always with instruments, note-book, and sketch-block in hand. In answer to recent inquiries from the Geographical Society of France, he has shown that he has written over 2500 octavo pages of geographical matter, illustrated by 530 views, maps, &c.

DAVIDSON, John, poet, was born on April 11, 1857, at Barrhead, Renfrewshire, where his father was Evangelical Union Minister. He went to school at Greenock, whither his father removed in 1862, and in his thirteenth year entered the chemical department of a sugar refinery. On the Food Act becoming law about a year after, he went to the Public Analyst's Office. In his fifteenth year he returned to school as a pupil-teacher, and, on finishing his apprenticeship, spent one session at Edinburgh University. He subsequently taught in various Scotch towns. He came to London in 1890, and has since busied himself as an author, chiefly of poetry. Mr. John Davidson has published: "The North Wall," 1885; "Bruce: a Drama," 1886; "Smith: a Tragic Farce," 1888; "An Unhistorical Pastoral," "A Romantic Farce," and "Scaramouch in Naxos" (his best known volume of verse), 1889; "Perfervid," 1890; "The Great Men" and "In a Music-Hall," 1891; "Fleet Street Eclogues," 1893 (second series, 1895); "A Random Itinerary," "Baptist Lake," "The Wonderful Mission of Earl Lavender," and "Plays: Collected Edition," 1894; "New Ballads," 1896. Address: Rayleigh House, Shoreham, Sussex.

DAVIDSON, The Right Rev. Randall Thomas, D.D., Bishop of Winchester, son of Henry Davidson, Muirhouse, Edinburgh, and Henrietta, daughter of John Swinton, Kimmerghame, was born in 1848, and educated at Harrow and at Trinity College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1871, and M.A. in 1875. Owing to a serious gunshot accident in 1866 he was for several years incapacitated from active work, and during his Oxford career he spent much time out of England. Ordained in 1874 to the curacy of Dartford, in Kent, he was appointed in 1877 Chaplain and Private Secretary to Dr. Tait, Archbishop of Canterbury. This position he held until the Archbishop's death in December 1882. On him devolved, in large measure, the arrangements connected with the great Lambeth Conference of 100 Bishops in 1878. During those years, he contributed articles on various historical and ecclesiastical subjects to the Contemporary Review, Macmillan's Magazine, and other periodicals. Bishop Lightfoot of Durham appointed him Examining Chaplain in 1880, and in 1882 he became Sub-almoner and honorary Chaplain to the Queen, and one of the six preachers of Canterbury Cathedral. Archbishop Benson, on succeeding to the Primacy, retained Mr. Davidson's services as Resident Chaplain and Private Secretary, and after holding that office for six months, he was, in June 1883, appointed by the Queen to the deanery of Windsor, and became also Resident Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen, and Registrar of the Order of the Garter. In the same year he received from the University of St. Andrews the honorary degree of D.D. In 1884 he became a trustee of the British Museum, in the management of which he takes an active part. In 1887 he was elected by the Masters of Eton College as their representative on the governing body of the School. This post he held until 1896. He is also a member of the governing bodies of Charterhouse School, Wellington College, and the Royal Holloway College for Women. In 1888 Dr. Davidson acted as Hon. Secretary to the third Lambeth Conference, attended by 145 Bishops from all parts of the world, and a few months after the conclusion of its sessions he published, through the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, a volume containing a History of these Conferences from their commencement, together with all the official and other documents connected with them. In 1891 he published, in conjunction with Canon Benham, the biography of his father-in-law, Archbishop Tait, whose daughter, Miss Edith Tait, he had married in 1878. In April 1891, Dr. Davidson was consecrated Bishop of Rochester, and in the same year he became, in succession to Bishop Philpott, Clerk of the Closet to the Queen. This office he still holds. On the death of Bishop Thorold, in July 1895, Bishop Davidson was nominated to the See of Winchester. At the request of Archbishop Benson (who, however, died before the Conference assembled) he undertook the duties of chief Episcopal Secretary to the fourth Lambeth Conference of Bishops, which met in July 1897. He edited the official Reports of its proceedings. Addresses: Farnham Castle, Surrey; Lollards' Tower, Lambeth, S.E.; and Athenæum.

DAVIES, Cushman Kellogg, American statesman, was born at Henderson, Jefferson Co., New York, June 16, 1838. He graduated from University of Michigan in 1857, and chose law as his profession. He was First Lieutenant in 28th Wisconsin Infantry in 1862-1864; was a Member of the Minnesota Legislature, 1868-1873; was Governor of Minnesota, 1874-1875; was elected to the United States Senate and took his seat, Mar. 4, 1887; was re-elected in 1893, and in August 1898 was appointed on the Commission to arrange terms of peace with Spain.

DAVIES, The Right Hon. Alderman and Colonel Sir Horatio D., K.C.M.G., M.P., late Lord Mayor of London, was born in 1842, and educated at Dulwich College. He was destined to be an engraver, and was apprenticed to the trade, but preferred commerce, and has had a prosperous career at the head of more than one enterprise of his own initiation. In 1885 he was Common Councilman for the Ward of Cheap; in 1888 Sheriff; in 1889 was elected Alderman of Bishopsgate Ward. Returned to Parliament as Conservative member for Rochester in 1892, he was unseated on petition, and in 1895 was returned for Chatham. He was elected Lord Mayor of London in 1897, and towards the close of his mayoralty, in October 1898, was presented by about 500 of his Chatham constituents with a silver scroll inscribed with a congratulatory address. He is a Lieut.-Colonel, retired, of the 3rd Middlesex Artillery, and is Chairman of the Visiting Justices of Holloway Prison and of the City of London Asylum at Dartford. He married, in 1867, Lizzie, daughter of J. C. Gordon. During the Mayoralty (August and September 1898) this lady was very seriously ill. He was created K.C.M.G. in November, 1898. Address: Watlingbury Place, Kent.

DAVIES, The Rev. John Llewelyn, M.A., D.D., Chaplain to the Queen, born at Chichester, Feb. 26, 1826, his father being the Rev. J. Davies, D.D., afterwards Rector of Gateshead, and Hon. Canon of Durham. He was educated at Repton School and Trinity College, Cambridge, and was elected a Fellow of that Society in 1850. He was appointed Incumbent of St. Mark's, Whitechapel, in 1852, and Rector of Christ Church, St. Marylebone, in 1856. He was appointed, in February 1881, a Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen; and in October 1882, Rural Dean of the deanery of St. Marylebone. In 1889 he became Vicar of Kirkby-Lonsdale, and in 1890 Hulsean Lecturer at Cambridge. He has received the honorary degree of D.D. from the University of Durham, and has been Select Preacher at Oxford. Mr. Davies has translated (jointly with D. J. Vaughan) "Plato's Republic;" and has published several volumes of sermons; an edition of Ephesians, Colossians, and Philemon; contributions to "Peaks, Passes, and Glaciers," and to periodical literature, also "Theology and Morality, Belief and Practice," 1873; "The Christian Calling," 1875; and "Social Questions," 1885. One of his most recent works is "Order and Growth as involved in the Spiritual Constitution of Human Society," 1891. He was a contributor to Dr. William Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible," and "Dictionary of Christian Biography." For some years he was a member of the London School Board for the Marylebone Division, and Principal of Queen's College in Harley Street. He is a theologian of the school of the Rev. F. D. Maurice, and read at the Nottingham Church Congress of 1897 a paper on "The Influence of the Broad Church Movement on the Thought and Life of the Church." He married the eldest daughter of Mr. Justice Crompton, and became a widower in 1895. He has six sons, three of whom have been elected Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge, and one daughter, who is the General Secretary of the Women's Co-operative Guild; and Miss Emily Davies, the founder of Girton College, is his sister. He was one of the original members of the Alpine Club, and made first ascents of the Dom in 1858, and the Tascorn in 1862. Address: Vicarage, Kirkby-Lonsdale.

DAVIES, Sir Louis Henry, K.C.M.G., the son of the Hon. Benjamin Davies, was born in Prince Edward Island, Canada, in 1845, and was educated at the Prince of

"ligament," "Baily's beads," &c., are due solely to the unsteadiness of our atmosphere at the time and place of observation. In 1893 he was placed in charge of the location and measurement of the diagonal part of the boundary line between the states of California and Nevada. He has devised new forms of instruments, notably the new meridian instrument for latitude and time named after him, break circuit chronometer, new vertical clamp for transit instruments, &c., and the spirit-level horizon to sextant, and has shown the obscure mechanical defects of micrometers, &c. In 1874 he was elected a Member of the National Academy of Sciences. From the inception of the Geographical Society of the Pacific in 1881 he has yearly been elected President, and has published papers upon the ascent of Makushin Volcano, the eruptions of Bogoslov, and other volcanoes of the Aleutian Islands. Professor Davidson has held the position of honorary Professor of Geodesy and Astronomy in the University of California since 1873, and was a regent of the same institution from 1877 to 1884. Since 1873 he has had charge of the main triangulation of the Pacific Coast. During his forty-eight years of active field service on the Survey, his itinerary shows over 385,500 miles travelled, and always with instruments, note-book, and sketch-block in hand. In answer to recent inquiries from the Geographical Society of France, he has shown that he has written over 2500 octavo pages of geographical matter, illustrated by 530 views, maps, &c.

DAVIDSON, John, poet, was born on April 11, 1857, at Barrhead, Renfrewshire, where his father was Evangelical Union Minister. He went to school at Greenock, whither his father removed in 1862, and in his thirteenth year entered the chemical department of a sugar refinery. On the Food Act becoming law about a year after, he went to the Public Analyst's Office. In his fifteenth year he returned to school as a pupil-teacher, and, on finishing his apprenticeship, spent one session at Edinburgh University. He subsequently taught in various Scotch towns. He came to London in 1890, and has since busied himself as an author, chiefly of poetry. Mr. John Davidson has published: "The North Wall," 1885; "Bruce: a Drama," 1886; "Smith: a Tragic Farce," 1888; "An Unhistorical Pastoral," "A Romantic Farce," and "Scaramouch in Naxos" (his best known volume of verse), 1889; "Perfervid," 1890; "The Great Men" and "In a Music-Hall," 1891; "Fleet Street Eclogues," 1893 (second series, 1895); "A Random Itinerary," "Baptist Lake," "The Wonderful Mission of Earl Lavender," and "Plays: Collected Edition," 1894; "New Ballads," 1896. Address: Rayleigh House, Shoreham, Sussex.

DAVIDSON, The Right Rev. Randall Thomas, D.D., Bishop of Winchester, son of Henry Davidson, Muirhouse, Edinburgh, and Henrietta, daughter of John Swinton, Kimmerghame, was born in 1848, and educated at Harrow and at Trinity College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1871, and M.A. in 1875. Owing to a serious gunshot accident in 1866 he was for several years incapacitated from active work, and during his Oxford career he spent much time out of England. Ordained in 1874 to the curacy of Dartford, in Kent, he was appointed in 1877 Chaplain and Private Secretary to Dr. Tait, Archbishop of Canterbury. This position he held until the Archbishop's death in December 1882. On him devolved, in large measure, the arrangements connected with the great Lambeth Conference of 100 Bishops in 1878. During those years, he contributed articles on various historical and ecclesiastical subjects to the Contemporary Review, Macmillan's Magazine, and other periodicals. Bishop Lightfoot of Durham appointed him Examining Chaplain in 1880, and in 1882 he became Sub-almoner and honorary Chaplain to the Queen, and one of the six preachers of Canterbury Cathedral. To the medical journals, especially to the "Guy's Hospital Reports," he has been a frequent contributor of articles and reports. Address: 36 Harley Street, W.

DAVIS, Henry William Banks, R.A., J.P., eldest son of the late H. J. Davis, of the Middle Temple, was born at Finchley, Aug. 26, 1833, and educated at home and at Oxford. When a student at the Royal Academy, in 1854, he obtained two silver medals—one for perspective, the other for a model in the Life School. He matriculated at Oxford in 1856, but after residing a few terms at the university, he resumed his art pursuits, and was elected an associate of the Royal Academy in January 1873. In 1861 Mr. Davis painted "Rough Pasturage," exhibited at the Royal Academy; in 1865, "The Strayed Herd"; in 1866, "Spring Ploughing" (engraved); in 1870, "Dewy Eve"; in 1871, "Moonrise," and "The Prætorium at Neufchâtel"; in 1872, "A Panic" (engraved), and "Trotting Bull," in bronze, which obtained a medal for sculpture at the Vienna Exhibition; in 1873, "A Summer Afternoon"; in 1874, "A French Lane," "The End of the Day," and "In Picardy"; in 1876, "Early Summer," "A Spring Morning," "The Rustling Leaves," and "Mares and Foals: Picardy"; in 1877, "After Sundown," "Reconnoitring," "Contentment," and "The Approach of Night"; in 1878, "Mid-day Shelter," "Afternoon on the Cliffs," "Evening Light," and "The Lowing Herd winds slowly o'er the lea"; in 1879, "Cutting Forage on the French Coast," "A Midsummer Night," "Wanderers," "Picardy Sheep," and "Cloud and Sunshine"; in 1880, "Family Affection," and "Returning to the Fold," which was purchased by the President and Council of the Royal Academy under the terms of the Chantrey bequest; in 1881, "Mother and Son," "Noon," and "The Evening Star"; in 1882, "In Ross-shire," "Sea and Land Waves," "Broken Weather in the Highlands," and "Showers in June"; in 1883, "Gathering the Flock," "Ben Eay," "At Kinlochewe"; in 1886, "A Flood on the Wye," and "Fording"; in 1887, "Now came still evening on," and "Summer"; in 1890, "A Placid Morning on the Wye," "The Picardy Dunes," and "A Ford on the Wye." All the above-mentioned pictures, as well as similar Highland scenes painted during recent years, were exhibited at the Royal Academy. Mr Davis was elected a full member of the Academy, June 18, 1877. In 1889 Mr Davis was one of the British jurors in the Fine Arts Department of the Paris International Exhibition. In 1892 he exhibited at the Champ de Mars Salon, and was elected associate (Associé) of the Société Nationale des Beaux Arts in Paris, and the following year was elected full member (Sociétaire). In 1898 he was appointed one of the British judges in Fine Arts at the Chicago Columbian Exposition, and was President of the International Committee of Judges in Fine Arts there. He was also elected Chairman of the Judges in the section of painting. In June of the same year he was appointed Justice of the Peace for Radnorshire. In 1894 he exhibited at the Vienna International Exhibition of Art, and was awarded a large gold medal; also at the International Exhibition held the same year at Antwerp, where he was awarded a first-class medal diploma. In 1896 he was appointed British Delegate and Juror to the International Exhibition, in commemoration of the centenary of the Berlin Royal Academy of Arts, in Berlin. He exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1896, "An Orchard in Wales"; in 1897, "Flow'ry May," and "The Banks of the Upper Wye." Address: Glaslyn, Rhayader, Radnor.

DAVIS, General Sir John, K.C.B., was born in April 1832, and entered the army as an Ensign of the 35th Foot (Royal Sussex Regiment) in February 1852. He obtained his company in September 1859, and was promoted to Major in August 1866. He served with his regiment in the Shahabad District during the Indian Mutiny. He obtained the brevet of Colonel in February of 1873, and in that rank served on the Staff at Shorncliffe for two years. He was promoted Major-General in August 1883, and commanded the 2nd Infantry Brigade in the Egyptian Expedition of 1884, and was present at the engagements at El Teb and Tamai, being several times mentioned in despatches. He received a C.B., the medal, and Khedive's star for his services, and was also employed in the Suakin Expedition of the following year. From April 1886 until the end of 1887 he commanded the troops at Malta, when he was transferred to the Dublin District. He was promoted Lieutenant-General in April 1891, being soon after chosen to succeed the Duke of Connaught as Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth. General Sir John Davis obtained his present military rank in May 1896, and was made a K.C.B. on the occasion of the Queen's Birthday in 1898. Address: Headquarters of Southern District, Portsmouth.

DAVIS, Lucien, artist, was born at Liverpool, 1860, being the fourth son of William Davis, artist, and was educated at St. Francis Xavier's College, Liverpool. He was elected a Member of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water-colours in 1893; gained a studentship at the Royal Academy of Arts in 1877; and twice won the Armitage Prize for Figure Composition. His first important black and white drawing was published in the Graphic in 1881, and he joined the staff of the Illustrated London News in 1885, since which time he has carried out important drawings, taken from life, of the most celebrated social events of the day, including the Queen's Drawing-room, the Queen's Garden Parties, events at the Houses of Parliament, &c. Since 1879 his work has been reproduced in most of the leading magazines of the day, and the Badminton volumes on Billiards, Cricket, and Tennis were illustrated by him. Amongst his portraits have been those of Mrs. Cornwallis West and her daughter and the Princess of Pless. The Queen, moreover, honoured him in 1894 by purchasing one of his drawings at the Royal Institute. Address: 49 South Hill Park, Hampstead, N.

DAVISON, Mrs., née Arabella Goddard, pianist, daughter of Mr. T. Goddard, of Welbeck Street, born at St. Servan, near St. Malo, in Brittany, in January 1836, almost from infancy showed an extraordinary taste for music. On her first appearance in public, at a concert given in her native village of St. Servan, when she played a fantasia on themes from Mozart's "Don Juan," she was little more than four years of age. At this time the promise of future celebrity in the child was so great that her parents removed with her to Paris, where she received lessons from Kalkbrenner. Returning to London soon after the revolution of February 1848, Mr. and Mrs. Goddard confided the cultivation of their daughter's musical talents to Mrs. Anderson, her Majesty's pianiste. She was only eight years of age when she was called upon to perform at Buckingham Palace before her Majesty and the late Prince Albert, who highly complimented her on her playing. The completion of her musical education was entrusted to Thalberg. She first appeared in public, at a matinée at her father's residence, Mar. 30, 1850; and in October made her début at the Grand National Concerts, when she played the "Ellsire" fantasia, and the "Tarantella" of Thalberg, with marked success. From that time she appeared frequently in public and established her fame by her performance of various fantasias by Thalberg, Prudent, &c. The first performances of Miss Goddard at the concerts given at Her Majesty's Theatre were confined principally to works of the modern romantic school. She has since become equally distinguished as a pianiste in more classical compositions. Miss Goddard afterwards became the pupil of Mr. G. A. Macfarren, under whom she studied harmony; and left England for a tour on the Continent in 1854, visiting nearly all the principal cities of France, Germany, and Italy; giving concerts, and meeting with great success. She returned to England in May 1856, and in 1860 was married to Mr. Davison, a musical critic, though in public and private concerts she has retained her maiden name. Miss Goddard took her farewell of the British public at St. James's Hall, Feb. 11, 1873, and soon afterwards went on a professional tour through Australia, the Sandwich Islands, and the United States. She returned to England in April 1876.

DAVITT, Michael, M.P., Irish Nationalist, was born on March 25, 1846, in the village of Straide, co. Mayo. His parents were of the poorer class of western Irish peasantry, with some American antecedents, his mother having been born in the States, and when Michael was five years old his father was evicted from the small holding on which the family subsisted. This early experience of landlord power has doubtless largely tended to influence his action in the fierce crusade which he has waged of recent years against Irish landlordism. The family then emigrated to Lancashire, where he was employed in a cotton factory, and at the age of eleven lost his right arm through a machinery accident. He was then sent to the Wesleyan School at Haslingden, and at fifteen obtained work in a printing-office, where he remained for seven years. In 1866 he joined the Irish Revolutionary movement initiated by James Stephens, and in 1870 was arrested in London, tried on an indictment of "treason-felony," and sentenced to fifteen years' penal servitude. After undergoing seven years and a half of imprisonment, chiefly in Dartmoor Convict Prison, Mr. Davitt was released on ticket-of-leave. In conjunction with other amnestied Fenian prisoners he was tendered a public reception by the people of Dublin, and after making a tour of the West of Ireland and paying a hurried visit to America, he started the Land Agitation in his native county of Mayo early in 1879. In October of that year he, in conjunction with Mr. Parnell and others, founded the Land League organisation, and became its guiding spirit. He was arrested and prosecuted in November of that year for a seditious speech, but after a week's imprisonment and an abortive trial the prosecution was abandoned. During the partial famine of 1879-80, he had the chief direction of the Land League relief funds. In May 1880 he proceeded to America to superintend the organisation of the American branch of the Land League, and made an organising tour of the Northern States from New York to San Francisco and back. Recalled to Ireland by the State prosecution of the executive of the Land League, he was again arrested on Feb. 3, 1881, by order of the Government, and consigned to Portland Convict Prison on a revocation of his original ticket-of-leave. After an incarceration of fifteen months, during which, on his own admission, he was exempt from ordinary convict labour, he was again released on ticket-of-leave. Mr. Parnell and other Irish members going down to Portland to receive him on his discharge. On the very day of this release, May 6, 1882, Lord Frederick Cavendish and Mr. Burke were assassinated in the Phoenix Park. In conjunction with Messrs. Parnell and Dillon, he issued a manifesto to the Irish race condemnatory of the murder. After again visiting America and submitting to a meeting of Irish American representatives in New York a plan for the amalgamation of existing national organisations in the United States, he returned to Ireland, and succeeded in persuading Mr. Parnell to summon a National Convention in Dublin to effect the revival of the Land League movement. The National League organisation was the outcome of this convention—with the restoration of Irish legislative independence as the first plank in its platform. In February 1883 Mr. Davitt was again prosecuted for a violent speech against rent and landlordism, and, refusing to enter into bail to keep the peace, he underwent four months' imprisonment in Richmond Bridewell, Dublin. Since then he has been an incessant propagandist of Land League principles and Nationalist aspirations in Ireland and Great Britain. While imprisoned in Portland in 1882 he was elected M.P. for Meath, but was disqualified by a vote of the House of Commons. When legally eligible on the expiration of his ticket-of-leave in 1885, he was solicited to become a candidate by several Irish constituencies, but refused to enter the Imperial Parliament from an objection to take the oath of allegiance. He at the same time refused to accept a national testimonial for his services to the Irish people. In December 1884 Mr. Davitt published "Leaves from a Prison Diary," a work which was written during his imprisonment in Portland, and which has had a very large circulation. In 1891 appeared his "Defence of the Land League." Occupied with literary work as a means of livelihood, Mr. Davitt is a constant contributor to American and Colonial newspapers, and an occasional writer in Irish and English journals and reviews. In 1898 he wrote several letters to the Times, in which he contended that the conquering Anglo-Saxon race is in America largely Celtic in origin, and, therefore, anti-Saxon in feeling. In the same year he wrote a series of articles in the Daily Chronicle entitled "Prisons Revisited." He has a decided leaning towards Socialistic doctrines in his writings and speeches, and is far from being in union with the other Irish leaders; his theories of land being more in accordance with those of the late Henry George than with those of the late Mr. Parnell. He is a member of the Dublin Corporation, and is a delegate from that body to the Port and Docks Board of the city. He is a director of the Dublin North City Milling Co., and a member of the Executive Council of the Irish National League. He has undergone altogether over nine years' imprisonment for his connection with Irish political movements. He was one of those who were implicated in the charges made in the articles on "Parnellism and Crime," and conducted his own case with an ability which called forth commendations even from the presiding Judge (1889). In 1890 he started the short-lived Labour World, and in 1891 stood for Parliament at Waterford, but was not returned. In July 1892 he was elected member for North Meath, but was unseated for alleged "clerical intimidation." He was subsequently returned unopposed for North-East Cork, but had again to retire from Parliament in May 1893, in consequence of proceedings in bankruptcy connected with the costs of the North Meath petition. In 1895 he was returned unopposed for East Kerry and South Mayo. He was in Australia at the time. He has travelled in most parts of the world. Address: House of Commons Library.

DAWKINS, Professor William Boyd, M.A., F.R.S., F.G.S., F.S.A., Assoc. Inst. C.E., geologist and palæontologist, only son of the late Rev. Richard Dawkins, was born Dec. 26, 1838, at Buttington Vicarage, Welshpool, Montgomeryshire. He received his education at Rossall School and at the University of Oxford, where he became a scholar of Jesus College, and first Burdett-Coutts geological scholar. He was appointed assistant-geologist in her Majesty's Geological Survey of Great Britain in 1862; geologist in 1867; Curator of the Manchester Museum, 1869; Lecturer on Geology in Owens College, Manchester, in 1870; Professor in 1874; and President of the Manchester Geological Society in 1874. Professor Dawkins is the author of numerous essays in the Proceedings of the Geological, Anthropological, and Royal Societies, relating principally to fossil mammalia; "British Pleistocene Mammalia" in the Proceedings of the Palaeontological Society, 1866-78, and "Cave-Hunting: Researches on the Evidences of Caves respecting the Early Inhabitants of Europe," 1874. In 1875 he went round the world, by way of Australia and New Zealand. In 1880 he published a work on "Early Man in Britain, and his place in the Tertiary Period"; and gave a series of lectures before the Lowell Institute, Boston, Massachusetts. He was appointed, in 1882, a Member of the Scientific Committee of the Channel Tunnel, and entrusted with the geological survey of the English and French coasts for that enterprise. He presided over the Anthropological section of the British Association at Southampton, in August 1882; and in the same year he was elected an Honorary Fellow of Jesus College, Oxford. In 1883-4 he was engaged in laying down the line for a tunnel under the Humber, and in 1885 made a preliminary survey of the antiquities of the Isle of Man, in the same year being elected Examiner in the University of London. In 1886 he began the search for coal at Dover, which has recently resulted in the discovery of a coal-field in South-Eastern England. He was appointed President of the Geological Section of the British Association in 1888; and, in 1889, Lyell Medallist, and Examiner in the University of Oxford. In 1895 and 1897 he was President of the Antiquarian Section of the Royal Archaeological Institute at Scarborough and Dorchester respectively, and was elected to give the James Forrest Lecture at the Institute of Civil Engineers in 1898. During the last twenty years he has advised on various engineering works—the water-supply of the Metropolis, of Croydon, Cardiff, Bristol, Southport, Sheffield, Tynemouth, Folkestone, Eastbourne, Newhaven, Seaford, Bacup, Manchester, and Liverpool, the salt of Northwich, the Manchester Ship Canal, and the kerosene shales of New South Wales. He married Frances Evans in 1866. Addresses: Woodhurst, Fallowfield, Manchester, and Athensæum.

DAWSON, George Mercer, C.M.G., LL.D., F.R.S., son of Sir J. William Dawson, was born at Pictou, Nova Scotia, on Aug. 1, 1849. He was educated at M'Gill University, Montreal, and at Royal School of Mines, London, Murchison and Edward Forbes Medallist at Royal School of Mines. He was appointed Geologist and Naturalist to H.M. North American Boundary Commission in 1873, and in 1875 he published a detailed report on the country traversed from the Lake of the Woods to the Rocky Mountains, entitled "Geology and Resources of the 49th Parallel." He was appointed to the Geological Survey of Canada in 1875, and has since been principally engaged in the survey and exploration of the North-West Territory and British Columbia, and was placed in charge of the Yukon Expedition, undertaken by the Canadian Government in 1887. He was appointed (with Sir George Baden-Powell) one of H.M.'s Behring Sea Commissioners in 1891, and spent the summer of that year in investigating the facts connected with the fur-seal fishery on the Northern Coasts of America and Asia. Meetings of the International Commission were subsequently held at Washington, and a Report of the Commissioners was published as a parliamentary paper in 1892. In 1893 he was on the staff of the Behring Sea Arbitration, convened at Paris. In 1890 he received the honorary degree of LL.D. from Queen's University, Kingston, and in 1891 from M'Gill University, Montreal. He was awarded the Bigsby Medal of the Geological Society of London in 1891, for his researches into the Geological Structure of Canada. He was made a Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George in 1892, and was elected President of the Royal Society of Canada, 1893. His geological work includes the first detailed account of the surface geology and glacial phenomena of the northern part of the continent of America west of the great Lakes, as well as the investigation of the great coal and lignite deposits of the North-West Territory and of large portions of British Columbia and the Queen Charlotte Islands. The results of these investigations are published in the Annual Reports of the Geological Survey of Canada, from 1875 to the present time. In January 1895, he was appointed Director of the Survey. He is the author of numerous original scientific papers, principally geological, but including geographical, ethnological, and other observations made in the course of his explorations, published in the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, Transactions of the Royal Society of Canada, Canadian Naturalist, Canadian Record of Science, and elsewhere. Address: Geological Survey, Ottawa, Canada.

DAWSON, Sir J. William, C.M.G., LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.S., F.G.S., geologist and naturalist, was born at Pictou, Nova Scotia, on Oct. 30, 1820. He studied in the University of Edinburgh, and returning home devoted himself to the study of the natural history and geology of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The results of these investigations are embodied in his "Acadian Geology," 3rd edit., 1878. In 1842, and again in 1852, he accompanied Sir Charles Lyell in his explorations in Nova Scotia, aiding him materially in his investigations. Since 1843, he has contributed largely to the Proceedings of the London Geological Society, and to scientific periodicals. He has also published numerous monographs on special subjects connected with geology, more especially on the Land Animals and Plants of the Palæozoic Period and on the Pleiocene Deposits of Canada. His two volumes on the "Devonian and Carboniferous Flora of Eastern North America," published by the Geological Survey of Canada, are among the most important contributions yet made to the palæozoic botany of North America; and he first described the Eozoön Canadense, of the Laurentian limestones, the oldest known form of animal life. In 1850 he was appointed Superintendent of Education for Nova Scotia, and in 1855 became Principal of the M'Gill University at Montreal. He is a member of many learned societies in Europe and America. Among his works not already mentioned are: "Archæia, or Studies on the Cosmogony and Natural History of the Hebrew Scriptures," 1858; "The Story of the Earth and Man," 1872, in which he gives a popular summary of geological history; "The Dawn of Life," 1875, an account of the oldest known fossil remains, and of their relations to geological time and the development of the animal kingdom; "The Origin of the World," 1877; "Fossil Men and their Modern Representatives," 1878; and "The Chain of Life in Geological Time," 1880, a sketch of the origin and succession of animals and plants. He has also contributed largely to the Canadian Naturalist and Canadian Record of Science, and to many educational, scientific, and religious publications in Great Britain, the United States, and Canada. In 1882 he received the Lyell medal of the Geological Society of London for eminent geological discoveries, was created a Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George; was selected by the Governor-General, the Marquis of Lorne, to take the (first) Presidency of the Royal Society of Canada, and was President of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. In the following year he attended the meeting of the British Association at Southport, and travelled in Egypt and Syria, on the geography and geology of which he has published several papers and a little popular work, "Egypt and Syria, their Geology and Physical Geography in relation to Bible History." He received the degree of LL.D. from the University of Edinburgh, and was knighted by her Majesty in 1884, and in 1885 was elected President of the British Association for the Advancement of Science for the meeting at Birmingham in 1886; and at that meeting he delivered a remarkable address, taking for his subject the geological history of the Atlantic Ocean. He has been elected an honorary Fellow of the Geological Society of Edinburgh, and honorary member of the Philosophical societies of Liverpool, Glasgow, Manchester, and Leeds. He was elected President of the American Geological Society in 1893. He retired from the office of Principal of M'Gill University, July 31, 1893, and was at once appointed Emeritus Principal and Professor and Hon. Curator of the Peter Redpath Museum. Sir W. Dawson's more recent works are: "Modern Science in Bible Lands," London, 1888; "The Geological History of Plants," International Scientific Series, 1888; "Modern Ideas of Evolution," London, 1890; "Salient Points in the Science of the Earth," 1893; "The Canadian Ice Age," 1893; "The Meeting-Place of Geology and History," 1894; "The Historical Deluge in its Relations to Scientific Discovery and to Present Questions," 1895; "Eden Lost and Won," 1896; "Relics of Primeval Life," 1897. Address: 293 University Street, Montreal.

DAY, Sir John Charles, son of Captain John Day, of the 49th Regiment, by Emily, daughter of Jan Caspar Hartsinck, was born at the Hague, June 20, 1826. He was educated at Fribourg, and at the Benedictine College of St. Gregory, at Downside, near Bath, and graduated B.A. at the University of London. He entered the Middle Temple in 1845; was called to the Bar in January 1849; joined the Home (now the South-Eastern) circuit; was made a Queen's Counsel in 1872; and elected a Benchler of his inn in 1873. For many years he enjoyed a very extensive practice both in London and on circuit. In June 1882, he was appointed a Judge in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, in succession to Mr. Justice Bowen, who had been elevated to the Court of Appeal; and he received the usual honour of knighthood. Mr. Justice Day is the editor of the "Common Law Procedure Acts," and joint editor of Roscoe's "Evidence at Nisi Prius." In 1886 he was made President of the special Commission sent to inquire into the origin and circumstances of the Belfast riots. In 1889 he was one of the Judges on the Royal Commission in the Parnell Inquiry. He married, in 1846, Henrietta, daughter of J. H. Brown. She died in 1893. Addresses: 25 Collingham Gardens, S.W.; and Athenæum.

DAY, The Right Rev. Maurice Fitzgerald, D.D., Protestant Bishop of Cashel, is the youngest son of the late Rev. John Day, rector of Kiltallagh, co. Kerry, by Arabella, daughter of Sir

William Godfrey, Bart., of Bushfield, in the same county. He was born at Kiltallagh in 1816, and received his academical education at Trinity College, Dublin, (B.A. 1838; M.A. 1858). For several years he was Vicar of St. Matthias, Dublin; was appointed Dean of Limerick, and Vicar of St. Mary's, Limerick, in 1868; and was chosen to succeed the late Dr. Daly in the united Sees of Cashel, Emly, Waterford, and Lismore, in March 1872, the consecration ceremony being performed in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, on April 13. He married Jane, daughter of J. Gabbett, of Dublin, in 1852. Residence: The Palace, Waterford.

DAY, William R., American jurist, was born at Ravenna, Ohio, April 17, 1849, and comes of a race of lawyers, his father having been a Chief-Justice of the State of Ohio, and both paternal and maternal grandfathers having been Justices of the Supreme Court of Ohio. He graduated from the University of Michigan in 1870, studied law in the law department of the same university, and was admitted to the Bar in 1872. In October of that year he settled in Canton, Ohio, and in 1886 he was elected Judge of the Common Pleas Court by both political parties. In 1889 he was appointed Judge of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, but failing health compelled him to resign before taking the office. He became Assistant-Secretary of State in March 1897, and was made head of that department, April 26, 1898, but later in that year he resigned to become one of the Commissioners to settle terms of peace between Spain and the United States.

DEACON, George Frederick, M. Inst. C.E., eldest son of the late Mr. Frederick Deacon, solicitor, was born at Bridgewater, in the county of Somerset, on July 26, 1843, and was educated at Heversham and Glasgow University. Having given proof of a strong taste for physical science, he was apprenticed in 1859 to Messrs. Robert Napier & Sons, the eminent mechanical engineers of the Clyde. Glasgow University had then taken the lead in the establishment of a curriculum of engineering science, and in 1863 Mr. Deacon changed from the workshop to the University, where Macquorn Rankine held the Chair of Civil Engineering and Mechanics, and William Thomson (now Lord Kelvin) that of Natural Philosophy. In the first term Mr. Deacon took several prizes, and his work in the physical laboratories, especially in connection with submarine telegraphy, was such that Sir

William Thomson, then scientific referee to the Atlantic Telegraph Company, recommended him at the age of twenty-one to fill a remunerative office in that company. This change prevented the completion of his University course; but the late Professor Rankine has recorded the fact that he highly distinguished himself. Mr. Deacon now inspected the manufacture, in the contractors' works at Greenwich, of the first successful Atlantic cable, and in the expedition of 1865 accompanied the Great Eastern to lay it. The temporary loss of this cable, its remarkable recovery, repeated loss, its abandonment until the following summer, the subsequent lifting of the broken end, and its completion and success, are now matters of history. In the autumn of 1865 Mr. Deacon's services were again sought for Atlantic work; but a business engagement previously made prevented his further connection with the company, and he commenced practice in Liverpool as a consulting Civil and Mechanical Engineer. In 1869-70 he was Lecturer on Civil Engineering and Mechanics at Queen's College, Liverpool. In 1871 Mr. James Newlands, the Borough Engineer, and Mr. Thomas Duncan, the Waterworks Engineer of Liverpool, having died, their offices were amalgamated, and out of a large number of candidates, Mr. Deacon, at the age of twenty-eight, was unanimously appointed to the joint office. Under him the reconstruction of the sewers, of the pavements, and of the tramways of Liverpool was rapidly undertaken. The supply of water, though good in quality, had become insufficient in quantity, and from the year 1865 only an intermittent supply could be afforded. Mr. Deacon's invention, now widely known as the differentiating waste-water meter, and applied to about thirteen millions of persons, showed conclusively that the whole difficulty arose from leakage. By its aid the waste was automatically recorded, its localities separately detected, and, without any additional water, the Liverpool people were, before the end of 1875, in possession of a constant supply under higher pressure than before. Between 1873, when this work was begun, and 1890, the population supplied had increased by 218,000 persons, and the value of the water saved from leakage and supplied to this additional population is estimated at considerably over £50,000 per annum. During Mr. Deacon's tenure of the office of Borough Engineer, which he resigned in 1881, the relative zymotic death-rate of Liverpool decreased about 34 per cent., a result which is still substantially maintained. The rapid growth of population having made it necessary to seek for an additional supply of water, Mr. Deacon investigated, at the instance of the Liverpool Corporation, the lake district of Cumberland and Westmorland, North Lancashire, and Wales. Mr. Deacon, in the beginning of 1877, projected his great scheme of water supply, involving the restoration of an ancient lake—now known as Lake Vyrnwy—in Montgomeryshire, and the construction of an aqueduct 76 miles in length therefrom to Liverpool. The project received the support of the late Mr. Bateman and the late Mr. Hawksley, at that time the leading authorities on hydraulic engineering. A Bill was obtained in 1880, and, until 1885, Mr. Hawksley and Mr. Deacon acted in conjunction as the engineers. Thenceforth Mr. Deacon was engineer-in-chief, and he completed the work in 1891. This undertaking was the first in the country by which water was obtained from a great distance. Manchester now draws water from Thirlmere; Birmingham is constructing works of supply from central Wales; while Sir Alexander Binnie has surveyed and recommended large mountain areas of Wales as sources of supply to London, a scheme which is supported by a joint report of Sir Benjamin Baker and Mr. Deacon recently made at the instance of the London County Council. Mr. Deacon was also consulted about the aqueduct now in progress for the supply of the Coolgardie Gold-fields in Western Australia. This eclipses all others in length, for the water is to be pumped from a source 328 miles distant. Mr. Deacon has received, among others, the Telford, the Watt, and the George Stephenson medals of the Institution of Civil Engineers. He is the author of many scientific and engineering papers, is a member of the Institution of Civil Engineers, of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, of the Iron and Steel Institute, of the Royal Meteorological and of other scientific societies, and Past President of the Association of Municipal and Sanitary Engineers, of the Engineering Section of the Sanitary Institute Congress, Liverpool, 1894, and of the Mechanical Science Section of the British Association, Toronto, 1897. Addresses: 19 Warwick Square, S.W.; and Victoria Mansions, Victoria Street, S.W.

DEAKIN, Alfred, was born in Melbourne on Aug. 3, 1856, and is the son of William Deakin, a well-known coach proprietor in the early days of the colony, and of Sarah Deakin, daughter of a Monmouthshire farmer. He was educated at the Church of England Grammar School, Melbourne, and at Melbourne University; became a barrister-at-law in 1877; journalist also till 1883; was elected for West Bourke in Feb. 1879, but owing to an informality at one polling place, which occasioned much ill-feeling, resigned and was defeated by 15 votes on a heavy poll in August 1879; and was again defeated early in 1880; but returned at the head of the poll six months later and continued to represent that constituency until it was divided in 1889, when he was returned for Essendon and Flemington, a portion of the same district. He joined the Service-Berry Ministry in March 1883, as Minister of Public Works and Water Supply. In 1884 he exchanged the latter office for that of Solicitor-General. In 1886 he was elected leader of the Liberal party, and joined Mr. Duncan Gillies in forming a Government, in which he held office as Chief Secretary, Minister of Water Supply and Minister of Health. The former two offices he resigned in November 1890. In 1885 he was appointed President of a Royal Commission on Water Supply, and in that capacity visited the United States, presenting upon his return an elaborate report upon irrigation as practised in the States, upon which Victorian legislation, introduced by himself, has since been largely founded. In 1887 he was the senior representative of the Colony at the Imperial Conference in London, when he was offered and declined the title of K.C.M.G. On the way thither he visited Egypt and Italy, and published a second report upon irrigation as practised in those countries. He was the second Victorian delegate to the Australian Conference at Sydney on the Chinese question in 1888. In 1889 he was appointed a member of the Federal Council of Australasia, and took an active part in its session at Hobart in the same year. In 1890 he was one of the two representatives of Victoria at the Federation Conference held in Melbourne; and, later in the same year, was appointed one of the seven representatives of the Colony at the Convention in the early part of 1891, which was entrusted with the task of framing a constitution for a Federal Australasian State for submission to the several Colonies. He was Chairman to the Committee of Public Accounts in 1896, and Member of the National Australian Federal Convention in 1897. He has published works on Irrigation in Australia and other countries, and, in 1894, "Temple and Tomb." He is married to Pattie, daughter of Hugh Junor Broune, J.P., of Ventnor, Melbourne. Address: Llanarth, South Uarra, Melbourne.

DE AMICIS, Edmondo, a popular Italian writer, was born at Oneglia, Oct. 21, 1846, of a Genoese family. He began his studies at Cuneo, and after a preliminary training in the Instituto Candallero at Turin, he entered the military school of Modena, which he quitted in 1865 as sub-lieutenant in the 3rd Regiment of the line. In 1866 he took part in the battle of Custoza. The following year he was established at Florence as Director of the Italia Militare. After the seizure of Rome by the troops of King Victor Emmanuel, it appeared to him that his career as a volunteer in the army of Italian independence had naturally come to an end. He took up his abode at Turin, and devoted his energies exclusively to literature, in which he had already made a mark by his sketches of military life—"La Vita militare: bozzetti" (sketches), (Milan, 1868). After composing his "Ricordo del 1870-71," he wrote a volume of "Novelle," comprising "Gli Amici di Collegio," "Camilla Furio," "Un Gran Giorno," "Alberto," "Fortezza," and "La Casa paterna" (Florence, 1872; 2nd edit. Milan, 1879). A series of tours through Spain, Holland, and Morocco, with visits to London, Paris, and Constantinople, afforded him the material for several works which, written in a lively and attractive style, increased the author's fame, had a wide circulation, and were translated into several European languages. Their titles are: "La Spagna" (Florence, 1873); "Recordi di Londra," 1874; "Olanda" (Florence, 1874); "Constantinopoli" (6th edit., 2 vols., Milan, 1877-8); "Morocco" (Milan, 1879); "Ricordi di Parigi" (3rd edit., Milan, 1879). Of these the following have appeared in London in English versions by Caroline Tilton: "Constantinople," 1878; "Morocco, its People and Places," 1879; and "Holland," 1880. Signor De Amicis has also published "Ritratti letterari" (Milan, 1881); "Poesie" (2nd edit., Milan, 1881); "La Porta d' Italia," 1884; "Sull' Oceano," 1889, and "Scènes de la Vie militaire."

DEANE, Henry Bargrave, is the only surviving son of Sir James Parker Deane, Q.C., and was born on April 28, 1846. He was educated at Winchester, and Balliol College, Oxford, where he obtained the International Law Essay Prize in 1870. In the same year he was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, and he now practises on the South-Eastern circuit. Mr. Deane was, in 1885, appointed Recorder of Margate, and he acts as Official to the Archdeaconry of Middlesex. He was the Secretary of the Royal Commission on Wellington College in 1879-1880; and he is the author of "A Treatise on the Law of Blockade." Address: 2 King's Bench Walk, Temple, E.C.

DEANE, Rt. Hon. Sir James Parker, D.C.L., the son of the late Henry Deane, of Hurst Grove, Berks, was born in 1812, and was educated at Winchester, and St. John's College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1834, becoming eventually a Fellow of his College. Called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1841, he became a Q.C. in 1858, and has for some years held the position of Vicar-General of the Province and Diocese of Canterbury, and Chancellor of the Diocese of Salisbury. He received the honour of Knighthood in 1885, and he is a member of the Privy Council. Address: 16 Westbourne Terrace, W.

DEARMER, The Rev. Percy, M.A. Oxon., was born in London in 1867; his father was Thomas Dearmer, an artist. He was educated at Westminster School and at Christ Church, Oxford. He was ordained Deacon in 1891, and Priest in 1892, his first curacy being at St. Anne's, South Lambeth. In 1897 he became senior curate of St. Mark's, Marylebone Road. Since 1890 he has been Secretary of the London Branch of the Christian Social Union. He has done much journalistic work (Daily Chronicle, Clarion, &c.), and is part editor of the Commonwealth, a paper devoted to the interests of the Christian Social Union. He has been for three years on the Executive of the Fabian Society, and is on the Committee of the Clergy and Artists' Association. Besides contributing to "Some Aspects of Disestablishment" (1894); "The New Party" (1894); "The Church of the People" (1894); he has edited "Lombard Street in Lent" (1894); contributed to and edited "A Lent in London" (1895); and "Lombard Street Sermons" (1897). He has also written "The Cathedral Church of Oxford" (1897); "Religious Pamphlets" (1897); and "The Cathedral Church of Wells" (1898). Address: 9 Devonport Street, Hyde Park, W.

DEARMER, Mrs. Percy (Mabel Dearmer), the daughter of Surgeon-Major William White, of Penrhos, Carnarvon, was born in 1872. She studied art first at Richmond, Surrey, and in 1890 at the Herkomer School, Bushey, for about one year; but in 1891 she married the Rev. Percy Dearmer and gave up her work. In 1893 she gave a dramatic representation of Brand by Henrik Ibsen, Act IV., at Princes Hall, Piccadilly. This performance excited some attention, and in order to advertise it she designed a poster. This poster (since named "The Reading Lady") was at once bought up, and has been exhibited in Paris, Chicago, and London (Earl's Court Exhibition), and is reproduced in many works on the poster in German, French, and English. She then turned her attention exclusively to work for reproduction both in colour and in black and white, and she has designed a number of book plates, the two best known of which are those of Mrs. Fawcett and Richard Le Gallienne. During 1894-95 she had work reproduced in a good many magazines, including the Studio, the Savoy, and the Yellow Book. For Christmas 1896 she designed a frontispiece for the Parade in two colours, and illustrated "Wymps," by Evelyn Sharp, these pictures being in four colours. For Christmas 1897 she illustrated another work on the same lines, "All the Way to Fairyland." These pictures, which are in a style never before attempted, are like miniature posters, bright and flat in colour. Mrs. Dearmer is now exclusively engaged in illustrating children's books in this particular style. Address: 9 Devonport Street, Hyde Park, W.

DEBUS, Heinrich, F.R.S., Ph.D., chemist, was born at Hessen, Germany, July 13, 1824, and was educated at the University of Marburg. He occupied the post of Lecturer in Chemistry at Queenwood College, Clifton, Guy's Hospital, and Royal Naval College, Greenwich, from 1851 to 1888. He also examined for the University of London between 1864 and 1882. In 1888 he retired to Cassel, where he occupies himself with his favourite subject. Address: Cassel, Hessen.

DE CASSAGNAC, Paul Granier, son of Adolphe Granier de Cassagnac, born about 1840, became at an early age a contributor to the minor Parisian journals, and soon acquired notoriety by the fierceness of his personal attacks on his contemporaries, and the numerous duels to which they gave rise. In 1866, under the auspices of his father, he joined the staff of Le Pays, of which soon afterwards he became the principal editor. Since then he has been perpetually embroiled in quarrels with his brother journalists and anti-Bonapartist politicians. It would be difficult to enumerate all the "affairs of honour" in which he has been engaged, but his duel with the late M. Gustave Flourens, in 1869, may be mentioned as being one of the most desperate fought in modern times. M. Paul de Cassagnac was decorated with the Legion of Honour on the Emperor's fête-day in 1868, and in July 1869 was elected a member of the Conseil Général for the Department of Gers. On the declaration of war against Prussia in August 1870, M. Paul de Cassagnac, who was still suffering from a recent wound in the chest, and who had just been appointed a Major of the Garde Mobile of the Department of Gers, preferred to enrol himself as a volunteer in the first regiment of Zouaves. Taken prisoner at Sedan, he was imprisoned eight months at Kösel in Silesia. On recovering his liberty he went to Venice for the benefit of his health; and afterwards established in the Department of Gers, L'Appel au Peuple, a political journal which met with considerable success. Returning to Paris in January 1872, he resumed the editorship of Le Pays. In July of that year he was condemned to a week's imprisonment, and to pay a fine of 100 francs in consequence of his duel with M. Lockroy. On July 7, 1873, he fought a duel on the Luxembourg frontier with M. Ranc, a Paris journalist, both combatants being wounded, and M. Ranc disabled. He was tried in Paris, July 2, 1874, for the publication in Le Pays of articles calculated to disturb the public peace, and to stir up hatred and contempt between citizens. M. Paul de Cassagnac undertook his own defence and obtained a verdict of "Not Guilty," a result which was regarded by the Bonapartists as a signal triumph. In 1874 he published in his journal a series of violent articles in reference to the capitulation of Sedan, the whole responsibility of which was thrown on to General Wimpffen's shoulders. The General accordingly instituted a prosecution for libel in the Assize Court of the Seine, but M. Paul de Cassagnac was acquitted by the jury (February 1875). On Nov. 24, 1875, he delivered, at a meeting at Belleville, a speech in which he contended that the restoration of the Empire was the essential condition of the welfare of the people. The Pays and other newspapers were prosecuted for printing a report of this discourse, but they were all acquitted. M. Paul de Cassagnac was returned to the National Assembly by the arrondissement of Condom in the Department of Gers, at the general elections of February 1876 and October 1877. The latter election was annulled by the Chamber, Nov. 11, 1878, but in the following February M. de Cassagnac was elected, and he has been at subsequent general elections. Of late years his fiery zeal has somewhat abated, chiefly on account of the unfortunate dissensions in the Bonaparte family, but during the Boulangist agitation he sided strongly with the party of the late General, and in the September elections of 1889 his followers were directed to support Revisionist candidates wherever Conservatives failed to present themselves. In 1884 he ceased editing the Pays, and founded the Autorité, in the columns of which he constantly attacks the present Republican order. Address: 161 Boulevard Malesherbes, Paris.

DECRAIS, Pierre Louis Albert, French diplomatist, born Sept. 18, 1838, was educated for the bar. On the fall of the Empire he was appointed by M. Thiers Prefect of the department of the Indre-et-Loire, and in 1876 he was transferred to the Gironde. In 1879 he was appointed Minister of France to Belgium; being recalled in 1882, he was placed at the head of the political department of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. In November of the same year he went as Ambassador to Rome, whence he was promoted in 1886 to Vienna as successor to M. Foucher de Careilles. He succeeded M. Waddington in London in 1893, but stayed only till September 1894, being succeeded by the Baron de Courcel. He is a Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour. Address: 62 Avenue du Bois de Boulogne, Paris.

DEFREGGER, Franz, an Austrian painter, born at Stronach, in the Tyrol, April 30, 1835, showed from his infancy a strong inclination for artistic pursuits, and received his first lessons from a sculptor at Innsbruck in 1860. Then he went to Munich, entered the School of Arts there, and continued his artistic studies under the direction of Piloty. In 1863 he proceeded to Paris, where he stayed two years, and then returned to Munich, where he painted a series of genre pieces representing the life of the people in his native country. Among his works may be mentioned: "The Last Return of the Forester"; "The Poachers"; "Joseph Speckbacher and his Son"; the "Zither Player," and the large painting "La Dernière Levée en 1809." In 1878 he sent the "Zither Player" to the Paris Exhibition and obtained a third prize. In 1883 the King of Bavaria raised this celebrated painter to noble rank, by bestowing on him the Bavarian Order of the Crown.

DE FREYCINET, Charles Louis de Saulces, French senator and engineer, was born at Foix, Nov. 14, 1828. He received his professional training in the Polytechnic School, was fourth in the examination for the Corps des Mines in 1848, and was employed by the Government in the same year on several important public works. Appointed engineer of the mines at Mont-de-Marsan, he was, in the regular course of promotion, transferred to Chartres in 1854, and to Bordeaux in 1855. In the latter year he was appointed chief engineer to the Compagnie du Chemin de Fer du Midi; and during the five years of his tenure of this important post, he gave to the Compagnie du Midi a typical organisation which the other French railway companies did not fail to imitate. M. de Freycinet was next employed by the Government in various scientific or industrial missions in France and in foreign countries. In 1864 he was nominated ordinary engineer of the first class, and he was likewise a member of the Conseil Général of the department of Tarn-et-Garonne, when the war of 1870 broke out. After the revolution of September 4, he was appointed Prefect of Tarn-et-Garonne. On the 10th October following, M. Gambetta having taken possession, in the provinces, of the office of Minister of War, chose M. de Freycinet as his delegate, and entrusted him with the supreme control of that department. On the conclusion of peace M. de Freycinet retired for a time from public life. He was elected a senator by the department of the Seine, Jan. 30, 1876, being placed first on the list of successful candidates; his term of office expired in 1882. When the Dufaure Ministry was formed in Dec. 1877, he accepted the portfolio of Public Works. On May 8, 1878, he was elected a member of the Academy of Sciences as successor to M. de Bussy. His former studies on water supply, sewage, and engineering won for him this distinction. M. de Freycinet continued in his office of Minister of Public Works in the Cabinet presided over by M. Waddington (Feb. 4, 1879), after M. Grévy had succeeded Marshal MacMahon as President of the Republic. At the close of that year (Dec. 27), he was appointed President of the Council in place of M. Waddington, and he took the portfolio of Foreign Affairs. He resigned Sept. 19, 1880, in consequence of the difficulties relative to the execution of the decrees against the unauthorised religious Orders; and M. Jules Ferry was then entrusted with the formation of a new Cabinet. In January 1882, M. Gambetta's Ministry was overthrown on the Scrutin de Liste proposal, by a majority in the Chamber of 305 to 110. M. de Freycinet was then recalled to power, and again held, with the Presidency of the Council, the portfolio of Foreign Affairs. His proposals for safeguarding the Suez Canal were rejected by a majority of 416 to 75 (July 29). The Ministry at once resigned, and, as the Chamber had declared in the plainest possible terms against intervention in Egypt, France became a passive spectator of England's action. After M. de Freycinet's resignation, President Grévy, after many difficulties, succeeded in forming a "Ministry of Affairs" under M. Duclerc. Then followed the second Government of M. Ferry, who in his turn was succeeded by M. Brisson; and he, after a short and feeble tenure of office, gave place to M. de Freycinet, who took the Presidency of the Council and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. He went out of office in December 1886, and was succeeded by M. Goblet. At the Presidential election of December 1887, he was one of the three candidates for the presidency, the other two being MM. Ferry and Floquet. But he retired from the contest in view of the improvised candidature of the late M. Carnot. In April 1888, he returned to power as Minister of War in the Floquet Cabinet. He was the first civilian to hold that position since the days of the Ancien Régime, but he retained his portfolio during successive ministries, and in March 1890 was for the fourth time Premier and Minister of War. In February 1892 he was defeated and succeeded by M. Loubet, in whose ministry he nevertheless retained the position of Minister of War. On the reconstruction of the Cabinet in January 1893, he had to resign his post, having been to some extent affected by the Panama scandals. As Minister of War M. de Freycinet has left his mark on the constitution of the French army. To him is owing the establishment of the three years' system of obligatory military service, and the extension of such obligatory service to students preparing for the priesthood, and to young men in the learned professions. He has created a Conseil Supérieur de la Guerre, and has instituted the post of a General Chief of Staff to whom in war time are to be entrusted plans of mobilisation and all kinds of military preparations. During the four years he was at the Ministry of War he increased the number of fortresses on the frontiers, greatly strengthened those already in existence, gave an immense extension to the annual French military manœuvres, which now involve the movements of armies, and applied several secret improvements to French arms and ammunition. These important secrets were partially revealed by the Turpin-Tripoin affair, which occurred in May and June of 1891. As President of Council, M. de Freycinet has frequently taken up a strong attitude, especially in matters affecting the clergy. In December 1891, he called for stern repressive legislation in the matter of clerical associations, and the discussion of the law in which these measures were embodied, led to the fall of the strong ministry over which he presided. M. de Freycinet was re-elected Senator of the Seine in January 1891. He has made his mark as an author, both scientific and literary, having published a "Traité de Mécanique rationnelle," 2 vols., 1858; "De l'Analyse infinitésimale," 1860; "Des Pentes économiques en Chemin de Fer," 1861; "Emploi des Eaux d'Égout en Agriculture," 1869; "Principes de l'Assainissement industriel," 1870; and "La Guerre en Province pendant le Siège de Paris," 1871; besides a series of literary Pensées Contemporaines. In May 1882, he was elected a member of the Academy of Sciences, and in 1890 he was chosen a member of the Academy in succession to Emile Augier. In 1898 he endeavoured to form a Coalition Ministry on the fall of the Méline Cabinet, but was unsuccessful.

DE HAAS, Maurits, F. H., marine painter, was born at Rotterdam, Dec. 12, 1832. He studied under J. Spoel and at the Academy of Fine Arts in his native city, and finished his artistic education under Louis Meyer at the Hague. In 1857 he was made artist to the Dutch Navy, and in 1859 he went to New York, where he has since lived. The subjects of his earlier pictures are chiefly from the English Channel and French Coast; and among them are: "Storm off the Isle of Jersey," "After the Wreck," "Seashore near Hastings," "Calm off Newport," "Wreck off St. Heliers," "Yacht Henrietta," "Clearing Up," "British Channel," "The Rescue," "The Old Wreck," and "Moonrise at Sunset." His best known American works are "The Rapids above Niagara Falls" and "Farragut passing the Forts at New Orleans." He was elected an Associate of the National Academy in 1863, and an Academician in 1867, and was one of the original members of the American Society of Painters in Water-Colours. Of late years he has painted most of his subjects on the New England coast.

DELAND, Margaretta Wade, née Campbell, an American writer, was born at Alleghany, Pennsylvania, Feb. 23, 1857. She was educated at Pelham Priory, New Rochelle, N.Y., then studied at Cooper Union (N.Y. City), and in 1878-79 taught industrial design in the Girls' Normal College, at New York. In 1880 she was married to Lorin F. Deland, of Boston, Massachusetts. She has published: "The Old Garden and other Verses," 1886; "John Ward, Preacher," 1888, a novel which has attracted very much attention; "Florida Days," 1889; "Sidney," 1890; "Philip and his Wife," 1894; "The Wisdom of Fools," 1897. In 1893 "The Old Garden and other Verses," was republished with decorations by Walter Crane.

DELCASSÉ, Théophile, French statesman, was born at Pamiers, March 1, 1852, and having passed his licence-ès-lettres, he took up journalism and became one of the staff of La République Française, where he dealt with questions of foreign politics. In 1889 he defeated the monarchist candidate in the arrondissement of Foix, and entered the Chamber. He defended the credits for the Soudan and Tonkin in the Budget of 1892 very warmly, pointing out the vital necessity of France keeping up with the other Great Powers in their work of colonisation. On May 30, 1894, he was appointed Colonial Minister in the Dupuy Cabinet, and, as such, was noted for his anti-English feeling. On M. Brisson (q.v.) taking office in June 1898, he succeeded M. Hanotaux as Minister of Foreign Affairs. In September 1898, the "Marchand" incident filled the journals of Europe, and for a time disturbed a continent. On the overthrow of M. Brisson's Ministry in October 1898, M. Delcassé was requested to continue the personal superintendence of his foreign policy, and, consequently, joined the new combination under the leadership of M. Charles Dupuy. The particular honour of this re-appointment becomes emphasised when it is recalled that M. Delcassé succeeded in office one of the most distinguished French statesmen of his generation, namely, M. Hanotaux (q.v.). Paris address: 11 Boulevard de Clichy.

DELOMBRE, Paul, French statesman, was born at Maubeuge in 1848. He studied for the law, and subsequently practised at the Paris Court of Appeal. He then, like many others, took to journalism, and, for a time, held the important position of financial editor of the Temps. He entered the Chamber in 1893 as Deputy for Barcelonnette, and, in October 1898, accepted office under M. Dupuy as Minister of Commerce, this being his first portfolio. M. Delombre is an economist of wide repute in France.

DENBIGH, Earl of, Rudolph Robert Basil Aloysius Augustine Fielding, son of the 8th Earl and Mary, daughter of Robert Berkeley, of Spetchley Park, Worcestershire, was born at Downing Hall, Holywell, North Wales, on May 26, 1859, and succeeded his father in 1892. He was educated at Oscott College, Birmingham, and at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich. He entered the army in December 1878, and, as a Captain of the Royal Artillery, saw service in Egypt in 1882, and was present at the battle of Tel-el-Kebir. In 1883 he was appointed to the Royal Horse Artillery, and served in India during 1886. The following year he went to Ireland as Aide-de-Camp to the Lord-Lieutenant, and shortly afterwards retired from the army. Lord Denbigh at one time intended to contest the Rugby Division of Warwickshire, and after three years' hard work, was unable to do so owing to the death of his father just before the general election. He moved the Address in the House of Lords in August 1892. In 1895 he was elected to the Warwickshire County Council, but resigned the seat on being elected to the London County Council in February 1896 as one of the four representatives of the City. He did not seek re-election in the City in 1898, but contested Battersea and was beaten. In 1897 he was appointed Lord-in-Waiting to the Queen. Lord Denbigh takes an active interest in politics, and has charge of the Irish Government business in the Upper House. He also took charge of the Infant Life Protection Bill, which became law in 1897. He is the Lieutenant-Colonel Commanding the Honourable Artillery Company. In 1884 he married the Hon. Cecilia Clifford, daughter of Lord Clifford of Chudleigh, and has issue. Lord Denbigh, besides possessing various Irish titles, is Count of Hapsburg of the Holy Roman Empire. Addresses: Newnham Paddox, Lutterworth; and Downing, Holywell, Flintshire.

DENMAN, George Lewis, LL.M., J.P., Metropolitan Police Magistrate, is the eldest son of the late Justice George Denman, and was born in London, May 5, 1854. He was educated at Rugby and Trinity College, Cambridge; was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1877, and was Recorder of Queenborough from 1882-85. He was appointed a Metropolitan Police Magistrate in 1890, and sits at Lambeth. He has edited the 2nd edit. of Broom's "Constitutional Law," 1885. Addresses: 8 Cranley Gardens, S.W.; and Athenæum.

DENMARK, King of. See CHRISTIAN IX.

DENMARK, The Crown Prince of, K.G., was born in Copenhagen in 1843. He was educated at an ordinary school, and then underwent a thorough military training in the Swedish army. He was married in 1869 to the Princess Louise of Sweden; his second son, Prince Charles, is married to the Princess Maud, third daughter of the Prince and Princess of Wales.

DENNING, William Frederick, F.R.A.S., was born at Braysdown, near Bath, Somerset, on Nov. 25, 1848. His father was Isaac Poyntz Denning (born in the East Indies in December 1819, and son of Isaac Denning, who served in the 53rd Regiment during the Indian war about a century ago), then manager of the Braysdown Collieries; but who in January 1850 removed to Bristol and became a public accountant. The son attended several private schools, and early evinced a love for natural history. In October 1865, when acting as clerk to a manufacturing firm at Bristol, he was attracted to the study of astronomy. He had probably inherited this taste from his mother, who had long been led to "consider the heavens," and had first aroused in him that love for the science which developed itself in his after life. Procuring some lenses he soon constructed a small telescope, and commenced that observational work which he pursued with so much diligence in later years. His father encouraged these initiatory efforts by presenting him with a 3-inch refracting telescope, and afterwards with one of 4½ inches. The latter was superseded by a 10-inch reflector by With and Browning in 1871, and this has since formed the chief working instrument of Mr. Denning. He has effected many planetary observations, and obtained some interesting results with regard to the varieties and motions of the spots on Jupiter. On the morning of Oct. 4, 1881, he discovered a periodical comet of 8½ years; on March 26, 1894, he detected another periodical comet, the computed time of which is 7½ years. Other comets were found by him on July 23, 1890, March 30, 1891, and March 18, 1892. Mr. Denning's chief work has, however, been effected in the field of meteoric astronomy. For many years he watched the fall of meteors and recorded their numbers and directions. A large quantity of materials was accumulated in this way, and in May 1890 a paper by Mr. Denning was published by the Royal Astronomical Society in which he gave the positions of 918 radiant points of meteoric showers deduced from observations of 12,083 meteors. No other observer has obtained such extensive results in this branch of astronomy. In 1877 he discovered that the August meteors (called "Perseids") present a radiant which changes its position, from night to night, amongst the fixed stars, and he subsequently detected many showers of long duration and stationary position. Mr. Denning has written about seventy-five papers which have been printed in the Monthly Notices of the Royal Astronomical Society, and he has been a very frequent contributor to English and foreign scientific journals. A large number of his papers have appeared in Nature, the Astronomical Register, the Observatory, the English Mechanic, Knowledge, and the Astronomische Nachrichten. He acted as President of the Liverpool Astronomical Society in 1877-78, and is the author of books entitled "Telescopic Work for Starlight Evenings" and "The Great Meteoric Shower of November." He became a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society in June 1877, and was elected an Hon. Member of the Liverpool Astronomical Society in 1882. In December 1895 he was awarded the "Valz" prize by the Academy of Sciences, Paris, for his observations and discoveries of meteoric showers and comets. In February 1898, at the anniversary meeting of the Fellows, he was awarded the Gold Medal of the Royal Astronomical Society in recognition of his labours in various departments of the science, and particularly in that of meteoric astronomy. Address: 102 City Road, Bristol.

DEPEW, Chauncey Mitchell, LL.D., American lawyer, was born at Peekskill, New York, April 23, 1834. He graduated at Yale College in 1856; studied law, and was admitted to the Bar. In 1861-62 he was a Member of the New York Assembly, and from 1863-65 was New York Secretary of State. He was also a tax-commissioner for New York City, and for a brief time Minister to Japan. In 1866 he became Attorney for the New York and Harlem Raised Railway Company, and on its consolidation in 1869 with the New York Central Railway Company he was appointed the general counsel of the united companies. The Legislature, in 1874, chose him a Regent of the State University, and he was also placed on the Commission for building the Capitol at Albany. In 1882 he became Second Vice-President of the New York Central Railway, and in 1885 its President. He was also President of the West Shore Railway, and of the Union League Club of New York, and for ten years of the Yale Alumni Association, and also of the Society of the Sons of the American Revolution. In 1888 he was a candidate before the Republican National Convention for President of the United States, receiving 100 votes. In the Convention of 1892 he led the forces of President Harrison. Mr. Depew is distinguished not only as an eminently successful railway manager and as a prominent leader of his political party, but also as one of the most popular speakers of his country, his orations on public occasions and his after-dinner addresses being in great demand. In 1887 the degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Yale College. A volume of his "Orations and After-dinner Speeches" was published in 1890.

DERBY, Bishop of. See WERE, THE RIGHT REV. EDWARD ASH.

DERBY, Earl, The Right Hon. Frederick Arthur Stanley, K.G., K.C.B., A.D.C., J.P., LL.D., younger son of the 14th and brother of the late Earl of Derby, by Emma, second daughter of the first Lord Skelmersdale, was born in London on Jan. 15, 1841, and received his education at Eton. He entered the Grenadier Guards in 1858, was appointed Lieutenant and Captain in 1862, and retired in 1865. He represented Preston in the House of Commons, in the Conservative interest, from July 1865 till December 1868, when he was elected for North Lancashire. He was a Lord of the Admiralty from August to December 1868, and Financial Secretary for War from February 1874 till August 1877, when he became Financial Secretary to the Treasury. On April 2, 1878, Colonel Stanley was appointed Secretary of State for War, in succession to Mr. Hardy, now Lord Cranbrook, and was sworn of the Privy Council. In the autumn recess of that year he and Mr. W. H. Smith, the First Lord of the Admiralty, with a numerous suite, visited the island of Cyprus. He went out of office with his party in April 1880. In Lord Salisbury's government he was Secretary of State for the Colonies from June 1885 till February 1886, and in the Cabinet of August 1886 was appointed President of the Board of Trade, and raised to the peerage with the title of Lord Stanley of Preston. In 1888 he became Governor-General of Canada, and was succeeded in 1893 by Lord Elgin. In the same year he succeeded to the title of the late Lord Derby. He was Mayor of Liverpool 1895-96, and since 1897 has been Lord-Lieutenant of Lancashire. He married, in 1864, Lady Constance, eldest daughter of the 4th Earl of Clarendon. Addresses: 33 St. James's Square, S.W.; Knowsley Park, Prescott, &c.

DERING, Sir Henry Nevill, Bart., Envoy Extraordinary to Mexico, was born Sept. 21, 1839, and is the fourth son of the 8th Baronet and a daughter of Lord Kensington. He was educated at Harrow, and entered the Diplomatic Service in 1859. From 1892 to 1894 he was Consul-General in Bulgaria, when he was appointed to his present post. He was made a C.B. in 1895, and in 1896 succeeded his father as 9th Baronet, the creation dating from 1626. In 1863 he married the daughter of J. Underwood, Esq. Address: Surrenden Dering, Ashford, Kent.

DÉROULEDE, Paul, French politician and journalist, was born at Paris on Sept. 2, 1846, and is the nephew of Émile Augier. He was educated at the Lycée Louis-le-Grand, and in 1867 had his first verses printed in the Revue Nationale. He travelled all over Europe, and in 1869, "Jean Strenner," his drama, was acted at the Théâtre Français. He was wounded at Sedan, and taken prisoner to Breslau, whence he escaped and fought in the Loire campaigns. As a result he issued two volumes of "Chants du Soldat" (1872 and 1875), which became popular all through France, and were crowned by the French Academy. His "Hetman" was played at the Odéon in 1877, and his "Moabite," although accepted by the Français, was forbidden by the Censor on account of its religious opinions. It was read to the press in the salon of Madame Adam (q.v.) in 1880. In 1882 he acquired great notoriety by founding the "Ligue des Patriotes," which was destined to unite all Frenchmen in a desire for revenge. He supported General Boulanger violently in 1884, and undertook an anti-German crusade in Russia in 1883, and in 1887, on the death of the famous journalist, Katkoff. In 1888 he was defeated at the elections of the Charente, but in 1889 he was successful at Angoulême, and became one of the most violent partisans of Boulanger after his flight. He was forcibly ejected from the Chamber on Jan. 20, 1890, and soon after returned to literary work. He has recently been extremely active as an anti-Dreyfusard, and was arrested and imprisoned for seditious behaviour on the occasion of M. Loubet's election to the Presidency of the French Republic early in 1899. He published "Histoire d'Amour" in the same year, and in 1895 wrote a play for the Ambigu, "Bertrand Duguesclin," which was violently patriotic and Anglophobe. He is the finest specimen of the French Chauvinist. He lives at 108 Avenue Kléber, Paris.

DERRY AND RAPHOE, Bishop of. See CHADWICK, THE RIGHT REV. G. A.

DE RUTZEN, Albert, B.A., J.P., was born in 1831, and was called to the bar at the Inner Temple in 1857. He occupies at present the position of Metropolitan Police Magistrate at Marlborough Street. Address: 90 St. George's Square, S.W.

DESART, Earl of, Hamilton John Agmondesham Cuffe, C.B., Solicitor to the Treasury, Director of Public Prosecutions, and Queen's Proctor, was born Aug. 30, 1848, and is the second son of the 3rd Earl of Desart and Lady Elizabeth Campbell. He was educated at Radley and Trinity College, Cambridge, and served in the Royal Navy from 1860-1863. He was called to the Bar in 1872. In 1878 he was appointed Assistant-Solicitor to the Treasury, and in 1894 was promoted to his present post. On Sept. 14, 1898, he succeeded to the earldom of Desart, on the death of his elder brother. In 1876 he married Margaret, daughter of the 4th Earl of Harewood. Address: 2 Rutland Gardens, S.W. Clubs: St. James', Travellers'.

DESCHANEL, Émile Martin, was born at Paris, Nov. 14, 1819, and, after a brilliant course of study at the Collège Louis-le-Grand, was appointed Professor of Rhetoric at the Collège of Bourges; shortly afterwards he returned in the same capacity to Paris. He wrote successively for the Revue Indépendante, the Revue des Deux Mondes, and the National, and several articles on literary criticism for La Liberté de Penser. To this last-named journal he contributed also a series of essays on politics and social philosophy, entitled "Catholicisme et Socialisme," and in consequence was cited to appear before the Council of Public Instruction, and, in spite of an eloquent appeal, was suspended from all his offices. He then gave his entire energies to the Republican press. On Dec. 2, 1851, he was arrested, imprisoned for some time, and subsequently banished. Until 1859 he resided in Brussels, when he returned to France and became one of the editors of the Journal des Débats. In 1869 he joined the staff of the National. At the general elections of February 1876, M. Deschanel was returned for the Seine, and after the act of May 16, 1877, he was one of the 363 deputies who refused a vote of confidence in the Broglie Ministry. He is the author of "Les Courtisanes de la Grèce," 1854; "Histoire de la Conversation," 1858; "La Vie des Comédiens," 1860; "Physiologie des Écrivains et des Artistes," 1864; "Études sur Aristophane," 1867; "À Bâtons rompus," 1868; "Les Conférences à Paris et en France," 1870; "La Question des Femmes et la Morale laïque," 1876; "Le Peuple et la Bourgeoisie," 1881; "Le Romantisme des Classiques," which is a carefully re-edited reprint of many of his lectures. He contributes to the Indépendance Belge under the signature of A.E.E. In June 1881 he was elected a Life Senator and Honorary Professor of French Literature at the Collège de France.

DESCHANEL, Paul Eugène Louis, President of the Chamber of Deputies, son of Émile Martin Deschanel, the eminent physicist, was born at Brussels, Feb. 13, 1859; educated at the Lycée Ste. Barbe and the Lycée Condorcet. In 1876 and 1877 he was secretary to Marcère and Jules Simon when Ministers of the Interior. In 1877 he was appointed Sous-préfet of Dreux, then of Brest and of Meaux. In 1881 he resigned his post to put up for Parliament, and failed to get in for Dreux, but succeeded in the department of the Eure-et-Loir, in 1885, as a moderate Republican. From the first he was distinguished as an orator. His maiden speech was in favour of duties on cereals, June 28, 1886. In 1888, after a speech on French interests in the East, the Sultan made him a Grand Cross of the Medjidie and Grand Officer of the Osmanieh. He also spoke on the Navy Estimates, and exposed the needs of the French fleet. In 1889 he was returned unopposed for Nogent-le-Rotrou. In the new Parliament his chief speeches were on the Liberty of the Press and the Customs. He was sent on an official mission to the United States in 1891. He has visited the Socialist leader, M. Jaurès, at Carmaux. He is a frequent contributor to the Débats and the Revue Politique, and has written the following works: "La Question du Tonkin," 1883; "La Politique Française en Océanie," 1884, with a preface by M. de Lesseps; "Orateurs et Hommes d'État," 1888, which was crowned by the Academy, as was his "Figures de Femmes" in 1889. These works prove his powers as a stylist. His last work is entitled "La République Nouvelle," and gives an account of his social and political theories. At the beginning of the new Parliament in May 1898, M. Deschanel was chosen by the Moderates to oppose M. Henri Brisson, the well-known Radical, for the Presidency of the Chamber. It was a bold move, even for one who had been Vice-President, for M. Brisson had held the office in the two preceding Parliaments, and when M. Deschanel was elected by a majority of four the confusion and scenes of violence were remarkable even for the French Chamber.

DESHUMBERT, Marius, born in Lyons in 1856, began public life as a teacher in the same town at the age of 18, and was visiting master for five years at the École de la Martinière, the École de Commerce, the École Centrale, and the École des Mines. He came to London in 1879, and prepared candidates almost exclusively for army examinations, and was appointed Professor of French at the Staff College in 1889, and Professor at the Royal Military College in 1897. By the decision of the Under Secretary of State for War these two posts may be held by the same Professor. The best known works of Prof. Deshumbert are: "A Dictionary of Difficulties met with in Reading, Writing, and Speaking French" (5th thousand), 1890; "A Public Examination French Hand-Book" (2nd thousand), 1892, to which have been added "Hints on the Study of the French Language"; "A French and English List of Military Terms" (4th thousand). Prof. Deshumbert's hobby is the Study of Ethics and he has written several pamphlets on the subject; among others, "First Principles of Common-Sense Ethics," 1894; "Life and Doctrines of Confucius," 1895; and has edited a "blank-page" journal called "Daily Record of my Physical, Moral, and Intellectual Development." He is also the editor of a new quarterly magazine for "the harmonious development of the faculties" called "Common-Sense Ethics." Address: Montclair, Camberley.

DE STAAL, Georges, entered the diplomatic service as Secretary of Embassy at Constantinople. He subsequently became Minister to the Court of Wurtemberg, and was thence transferred to London as Russian Ambassador in July 1884. He, with M. Lessar as special coadjutor, had the management of the delicate diplomatic negotiations that attended the despatch of the Afghan Frontier Commission, the "unfortunate incident" of Penjdeh, &c.; and those also which followed the various crises in Bulgarian affairs, 1885-86. Address: Chesham House, S.W.

DES VŒUX, Sir George William, G.C.M.G., is a younger son of the late Rev. Henry Des Vœux, and brother of the present baronet of that name. He was born at Baden-Baden on Sept. 22, 1834, and was educated at the Charterhouse and at Balliol College, Oxford. Intended for the Church, he preferred to seek his fortune in the Colonies. In 1862 he was called to the Bar of Ontario (then Canada West); and having passed his legal examinations with distinction, he was appointed in 1863 to be a special magistrate in British Guiana by the Duke of Newcastle, then Secretary of State for the Colonies. After five years' service in Demerara, his representations to the Home Government caused the appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into the treatment of the Coolie immigrants, and resulted in a large amelioration of their condition. In 1869 Mr. Des Vœux was appointed Administrator of St. Lucia, and on taking charge of that post he found the colony in a state of extreme depression, due largely to corruption in the administration of justice and other official misconduct. But the severe measures which he adopted quickly brought about improvement, and within three years the revenue nearly doubled. During his tenure of office in this island he initiated a great number of useful measures, and also, with the assistance of Chief-Justice Armstrong, prepared the code of law now in force, which, being based on the ancient law of the island (the Coutume de Paris), embodies with it improvements taken from the code of Quebec, the Code Napoleon, and the code of Louisiana, as well as many modifications required by modern and local conditions. This code, unlike other codes of a similar character, contains a chapter of definitions which was entirely the work of Mr. Des Vœux. In 1877 he was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of Trinidad, and though received there with coolness, owing to his views and action with reference to contract-labour, he, on leaving the colony after a year's administration, had won the regard of all classes—employers as well as employed. In 1878 he was appointed to act for Sir Arthur Gordon (now Lord Stanmore) in the government of Fiji, and during this administration her Majesty's Government recognised by special despatch his "energy and resource" as displayed in the protection of the colony under peculiarly difficult circumstances on the arrival of a ship containing six hundred coolies infected with cholera and smallpox. In May 1880 he was appointed Governor of the Bahamas; but when on the point of departure for that colony he, on the request of the Secretary of State, proceeded again to Fiji, being appointed Governor in succession to Sir A. Gordon, and arrived there in December of that year. In 1882, on the resignation by Sir Arthur Gordon of the government of New Zealand, Mr. Des Vœux, by virtue of a commission, until then dormant, assumed the functions of High Commissioner of the Western Pacific, an office which he retained until his departure from Fiji in 1885. In that capacity he attended the Australasian Convention held at Sydney in 1883, forming one of the committee which drafted the Federal Council Bill, and initiating some of the resolutions of the Convention with reference to New Guinea and the Western Pacific. Mr. (now become Sir G. William) Des Vœux returned to England in ill-health in the spring of 1885; and being in 1886 appointed Governor of Newfoundland, received on his departure for that colony a joint address from the Anti-Slavery and Aborigines Protection Societies, bearing testimony to his "prolonged and successful efforts in the cause of humanity and civilisation." Sir William arrived in Newfoundland at a time of great political and sectarian excitement (aroused by an appointment to the office of Governor, which had to be withdrawn and was superseded by his own), and at once set himself to bring about peace, with so much success that within a few months three Catholic members were taken into the Government, which had been formed as exclusively Protestant. When leaving the colony after a year's administration, Sir William received addresses of very unusual warmth from both Houses of the Legislature, while the leaders of the two most opposed sects (Catholics and Wesleyans) separately attributed to him a religious peace such as had not been known for many years. Appointed in 1887 Governor of Hong Kong, Sir William proceeded thither in October of that year, and when after an administration of little more than two years he was compelled by ill-health to seek a change of climate, he experienced on his departure for England a demonstration of respect on the part of all classes of the community, Europeans and Chinese alike, such as was said to have been unprecedented in the history of the Colony. Sir William returned to Hong Kong in December 1880, when, his health having again broken down, he felt compelled to resign his office, and returning to England via Japan and America, he for the fourth time during his service completed the circuit of the globe. Sir William was appointed C.M.G. in 1877, was promoted to K.C.M.G. in 1882, and in 1883 to G.C.M.G., in recognition of his "long and valuable services." Sir William's writings have been mostly of an official character, and except some articles in the Nineteenth Century, and letters in the Times, have been published exclusively in Blue-books. He was for the second time elected President of the China Association in 1898, and is a principal authority on the Far Eastern Question. He married in 1875 Marion Denison, daughter of Sir John Pender, G.C.M.G., M.P., and has four children living. Address: Victoria, Hong Kong.

DETAILLE, Jean Baptiste Edouard, French painter, was born in Paris, Oct. 5, 1848. He was one of Meissonnier's favourite pupils, but his first picture, "Coin d'Atelier," in the Salon, attracted little notice in 1867. In 1869 his "Repos pendant la Manœuvre" was one of the successes of the year. During the war of 1870 he was secretary to General Appert, and took advantage to study military life at close quarters. His most famous pictures have been "Le Régiment qui passe," 1875; "En Reconnaissance," 1876, which was much admired at the Guildhall Loan Collection in 1898; "Le Rêve," 1888, his masterpiece, in the Luxembourg Museum at Paris, together with his "Sortie de la garnison de Huningen en 1815," noted for its wondrous perspective. Monsieur Detaille is the most famous military painter in France, and his work is noted for its care and accuracy. He is a Commander of the Legion of Honour and a Member of the Académie des Beaux Arts.

DEUCHER, Adolph, was elected Vice-President of the Swiss Confederation for 1896, and in May 1 in that year opened the National Exhibition at Geneva, which aimed at presenting a complete illustration of Swiss trade and industry. He was elected President for 1897 on Dec. 17, 1896.

DE VERE, Aubrey Thomas, poet, third son of the late Sir Aubrey de Vere, Bart., of Curragh Chase, co. Limerick, was born in 1814, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin. His father, who died in 1846, was descended from Vere Hunt, a Cromwellian officer who settled in Curragh during the Commonwealth. He was himself a distinguished poet, whose sonnets were pronounced by Wordsworth to be the "most perfect of our age." Mr. Aubrey de Vere is also famous as a sonnet writer, and has published many volumes of verse, viz., "The Waldenses," 1842; "The Search after Proserpine," 1843; "Poems, Miscellaneous and Sacred," 1853; "May Carols," 1857; "The Sisters," 1861; "The Infant Bridal," 1864; "Irish Odes," 1869; "The Legends of St. Patrick," 1872; "Alexander the Great," 1874; "St. Thomas of Canterbury," 1876; "Legends of the Saxon Saints," 1879; "The Foray of Queen Meave, and other Legends of Ireland's Heroic Age," 1882; "Legends and Records of the Church and the Empire," 1887; "St. Peter's Chains," 1888. He is also a prolific writer of prose, and has published, among other works, "English Misrule and Irish Misdeeds," 1848; "Picturesque Sketches of Greece and Turkey," 1850; "Ireland's Church Property and the Right Use of It," 1867, and several other works on the Church of Ireland; "Constitutional and Unconstitutional Political Action," 1881; two volumes of essays on literary and ethical subjects; "Proteus and Amadeus," a selection of his own poems, 1890; "Religious Poems of the Nineteenth Century," 1893; "Mediæval Records and Sonnets," and an important and interesting account of his long life among the distinguished men of several generations, entitled "Recollections of Aubrey de Vere," 1897. Club: Athenæum.

DE VILLIERS, Right Hon. Sir John Henry, K.C.M.G., was born in 1842. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1865, and he served as Attorney-General of Cape Colony from 1872 to 1874. He is at present Chief-Justice at the Cape, and also occupies the position of President of the Legislative Council of that colony. On the occasion of the Queen's Diamond Jubilee, in June 1897, Sir John Villiers came to this country, accompanied by the Cape Premier, and was present at most of the important functions connected with the celebration. He was married in 1871 to Aletta, daughter of J. P. Jourdan, of Worcester, Cape of Good Hope. Address: Wynberg, Cape of Good Hope.

DEVONSHIRE, Duke of, The Right Hon. Spencer Compton Cavendish, K.G., D.C.L., LL.D., eldest surviving son of the late William, 7th Duke of Devonshire, by Lady Blanche Georgina Howard, daughter of George, 6th Earl of Carlisle, was born July 23, 1833, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1854, and was made LL.D. in 1862. He was attached to Earl Granville's special mission to Russia in 1856. In March 1857 he was returned to the House of Commons in the Liberal interest as one of the members for North Lancashire. At the opening of the new Parliament in 1859, he moved a vote of no confidence in Lord Derby's Government, and it was carried by 323 votes against 310. In March 1863 he was appointed a Lord of the Admiralty, and in April in the same year Under-Secretary for War. On the reconstruction of Lord Russell's second Administration, in February 1866, the Marquis of Hartington, as he then was, became Secretary for War, and retired with his colleagues in July of that year. At the general election of December 1868, he lost his seat for North Lancashire, but was immediately afterwards returned for the Radnor boroughs, having first received the office of Postmaster-General in Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet. He held that office till January 1871, when he succeeded Mr. Chichester Portescue as Chief Secretary for Ireland. His lordship went out of office with his party in February 1874. When Mr. Gladstone, shortly before the assembling of Parliament in 1875, announced his intention of abandoning the post of leader of the Liberal party, a meeting of the members of the Opposition was held at the Reform Club (February 3), under the presidency of Mr. John Bright. On the motion of Mr. Villiers, seconded by Mr. Samuel Morley, a resolution was unanimously passed to the effect that the Marquis of Hartington should be requested to undertake the leadership of the Liberal party in the House of Commons. His lordship accepted this responsible position, and became the acknowledged leader of the Opposition in the Lower House. He received the freedom of the city of Glasgow, Nov. 5, 1877; and was installed as Lord Rector of the University of Edinburgh, Jan. 31, 1879. At the general election of April 1880, he was elected M.P. for North-East Lancashire. On the resignation of the Conservative Government, the Marquis of Hartington was sent for by the Queen to form an Administration; but this task, having been declined by him and Earl Granville, eventually devolved on the former leader of the Liberal party, Mr. Gladstone, who constructed a Cabinet, in which the Marquis of Hartington occupied a seat as Secretary of State for India, from May 1880 till Dec. 16, 1882, when he was transferred to the War Office in succession to Mr. Childers, who had become Chancellor of the Exchequer. He resigned with the Government in June 1885, and was elected for the Rossendale division of Lancashire, December 1885. In 1886, on the formation of Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule Cabinet, Lord Hartington declined to join it; but, on the contrary, took up the position of leader of the Unionist Liberals. He moved the first resolution at the great Opera House meeting; and also, in the House of Commons, the rejection of the Bill at the debate on the second reading. His election for the Rossendale division in 1886 was looked upon with immense interest. He was returned by 5399 votes against 3949. When the new Government was formed, he declined to become a member of it, preferring to give Lord Salisbury an "outside support." After the secession of Lord Randolph Churchill, Lord Salisbury again endeavoured to induce Lord Hartington to join the Cabinet, but in vain. He has since allied himself closely with Lord Salisbury, and his antagonism to the policy of Home Rule has become more and more decided. In 1890 he was severely ill for some time. In April 1891 he was appointed Chairman of the Royal Commission on Labour. At the close of the same year he succeeded his father as Duke of Devonshire, and in January 1892 was inaugurated as Chancellor of Cambridge University in succession to the late Duke. His installation took place in June. In August he was married at Christ Church, Mayfair, to Louise, Duchess of Manchester, widow of the 7th Duke, who died in 1890. Shortly afterwards the Duke of Devonshire was invested with the Order of the Garter. In 1892 he was appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Derbyshire. On Sept. 5, 1893, he moved the rejection of the Home Rule Bill in the House of Lords. In 1895 he became Lord President of the Council. He is President of a Cabinet Committee of National and Imperial Defence, is Lord Lieutenant of co. Waterford, and was Mayor of Eastbourne in 1897-98. Of late years he has been prominently before the public in connection with the scheme for a Teaching University for London. Speaking on Aug. 15, 1895, for Lord Salisbury's Government, the Duke of Devonshire took the side of the majority of the Convocation of the existing University of London, who were then, as now, warmly opposed to the scheme for a Teaching University as recommended by Lord Cowper's Commission. In July 1897 he presented the London University Commission Bill, proposing the appointment of a new commission for the reconstitution of the University of London, in accordance with the well-known Gresham University scheme, but this Bill, though amended and sent down to the legislators of the Lower House, was withdrawn in August owing to the opposition of Convocation and others. The Duke is also keenly interested in technical education, and presided at the Fourth International Congress on Technical Education held at the rooms of the Society of Arts, London, in June 1897. Addresses: 78 Piccadilly, W.; Chatsworth, &c.; and Athenæum.

DEWAR, Professor James, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., was born on Sept. 20, 1842, at Kincardine-on-Forth, Scotland, and was educated at Dollar Academy and the University of Edinburgh. He was assistant to Sir Lyon Playfair, when Professor of Chemistry in the University of Edinburgh, from whom he received his chemical training. Subsequently he studied at Ghent, under the celebrated Professor Auguste Kekulé. He has been Lecturer on Chemistry at the Dick Veterinary College, Chemist to the Highland and Agricultural Society, and Examiner in the Universities of London and Edinburgh. At present he is Jacksonian Professor of "Natural Experimental Philosophy" in the University of Cambridge, and Fullerian Professor of Chemistry in the Royal Institution of Great Britain. He is M.A. and Fellow of St. Peter's College, Cambridge, and F.R.S. of London and Edinburgh. On March 31, 1897, Professor Dewar was elected President of the Chemical Society, Hon. LL.D. Glasgow, St. Andrews, and Edinburgh, and one of the Directors of the Davy-Faraday Research Laboratory of the Royal Institution. He is a Past President of the Society of Chemical Industry. Professor Dewar is the author of papers on organic and physical chemistry, viz., on "The Oxidation Products of Picoline," "Transformation of Chinoline into Aniline," "Physical Constants of Hydrogenium," "Specific Heat of Carbon at High Temperatures," "The Physiological Action of Light," "Spectroscopic Investigations," &c. The Professor has taken an active part in the conduct of recent Exhibitions, having occupied the respective positions of Chairman of the Heating and Lighting Jury of the Health Exhibition, and a member of the Executive Council of the Inventions Exhibition. He has several times given demonstrations at the Royal Institution to the Prince and Princess of Wales on the formation of liquid oxygen and air and the production of temperatures approaching that of the absolute zero, and during the past fourteen years he has been engaged on experimental researches at low temperatures, and has published numerous papers on liquid air and the behaviour of bodies at low temperature in the Proceedings of the Royal Institution, Proceedings of the Royal Society, &c. He was a member of the Government Committee on Explosives, and, in association with Sir Frederick Abel, has made inventions with regard to smokeless powders, and their application to military purposes. With Sir F. Abel he invented cordite. In 1897, in conjunction with M. Moissan, Professor Dewar succeeded in liquefying fluorine. He has delivered many Christmas courses of lectures to young people at the Royal Institution. Of late years, in conjunction with Professor Fleming, he has carried on researches on the electric and magnetic properties of metals and other bodies at low temperature. The Rumford medal of the Royal Society was awarded to Professor Dewar in 1894, in recognition of his investigations on the properties of matter at lowest temperatures. Professor Dewar's latest chemical triumph is the liquefaction of hydrogen, which he effected at the Royal Institution on May 10, 1898. The liquid was exhibited to Lord Rayleigh, who happened to be present. Subsequently, at a meeting of the Royal Society, Professor Dewar contributed a preliminary note on the liquefaction of hydrogen and helium. The feat is without precedent. "Liquid hydrogen," says a man of science writing to the Times, "in quantity is not only of enormous scientific interest in itself, but is also of immense importance as placing a new and potent instrument in the hands of investigators, who have hitherto found their progress barred by its absence." Helium is a rare gas, which has hitherto never been liquefied. Permanent address: Royal Institution, Albemarle Street, W. Club: Athenæum.

DEWEY, George, Rear-Admiral, American Navy, was born Dec. 26, 1838, in Vermont. He graduated from the United States Naval Academy in 1858. He became Passed Midshipman, Jan. 19, 1861; Master, Feb. 23, 1861; Lieutenant, April 19, 1861. He was with Farragut when the fleet forced an entrance to the Mississippi River and captured New Orleans in April 1862. He was on the warship Mississippi when she grounded in front of the batteries at Port Hudson, where she was torn to pieces by the shot from the guns of the Confederates, the crew being forced to hurry away in small boats. The Lieutenant shared in the attack on Fort Fisher, on the coast of North Carolina, in December 1864 and January 1865, and was promoted to Lieutenant Commander, March 3, 1865, serving in this capacity on the celebrated warship Kearsarge. Promoted to Commander, April 13, 1872, he was in command of the Narragansett, 1872-1876. Later he was a Member of the Lighthouse Board, and Sept. 27, 1884, he became a Captain. He commanded the Pensacola from 1885 to 1888, and became Commodore, Feb. 28, 1896. In January 1898, he was sent to the Asiatic station, and on the outbreak of the war with Spain he destroyed the Spanish fleet in a brilliant action in Manila Bay (May 1, 1898), without losing any of his own vessels. For this he was promoted to be Rear-Admiral, and was voted a sword of honour, together with the thanks of Congress and the American people. He also received the degree of LL.D. from the University of Pennsylvania.

DE WINDT, Harry, was born in Paris in April 1856, and was educated at Magdalene College, Cambridge. He served as A.D.C. to his brother-in-law, the Rajah Brooke of Sarawak, from 1876 to 1878, and in later years he has been known as a great traveller and explorer. In 1887 he made a journey by land from Peking to France, and in 1889 he travelled in the same way from Russia, through Persia, into India. He has visited the prisons of Western Siberia, and the mines and political prisons of Eastern Siberia, within recent years. Mr. De Windt nearly lost his life on the Behring Straits in 1895, when he was attempting to travel by land from New York to Paris; and during 1897 he was engaged in an exploration of the Klondyke gold-fields. He is the author of: "On the Equator," 1882; "From Peking to Calais by Land," 1887; "A Ride to India," 1890; "Siberia as it is," 1892; "The New Siberia," 1895; "Through the Gold-Fields of Alaska to Behring Straits," 1898; and a novel styled "A Queer Honeymoon." Address: 58 Jermyn Street, S.W.

DE WINTON, Major-General Sir Francis, G.C.M.G., K.C.M.G., LL.D., D.C.L., was born in 1835 at Maesllwch Castle, near Hay on the Wye, and is the son of Walter de Winton and Julia, third daughter of the Rev. John Collinson, Rector of Gateshead. He was educated at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and in 1854 entered the Royal Artillery, subsequently serving in the Crimean campaign, and as A.D.C. to Sir W. F. Williams in British North America, Nova Scotia, and at Gibraltar. From 1877-78 he was Military Attaché at Constantinople, and from 1878-80 and again from 1880-83 Secretary to the Marquis of Lorne in Canada. From 1884-85 he was Administrator-General of the Congo just before it was definitely raised to the rank of a State; was Adjutant Quartermaster General at Headquarters in 1888-89; Commissioner to Swazi-land in 1889; and since 1892 has been Comptroller and Treasurer of the Duke of York's household. He is on the retired list of the army. He married a Canadian lady in 1864. Addresses: York House, St. James's Palace, and Congham Lodge, Hillingdon, Norfolk.

DEYM, Count Francis, of Střitež, Ambassador of Austria-Hungary at the Court of St. James, was born Aug. 25, 1837, and began his diplomatic career at St. Petersburg in 1860. He was First Secretary at the Vatican in 1874, and in London in 1876. Having been elected a Member of the House of Representatives in 1879 by Bohemia, he left London and interrupted his diplomatic career for eight years. In 1887 he was appointed Minister to the Court of Bavaria, and in 1888 to his present post. In 1894 the Emperor of Austria conferred upon him the Grand Cross of the Order of St. Leopold. He is a perpetual Member of the Upper House of the Reichsrath, and a Knight of the Order of St. John of Malta. He married in 1870 Countess Anne of Lehlabrendorf, and his estates are near Arnau in Bohemia.

D'EYNCOURT, E. C. Tennyson, was born on Feb. 11, 1855, at Bryanston Square, W., his father being the late Louis Charles Tennyson D'Eyncourt, a Metropolitan Police Magistrate for forty years, and his mother being the youngest daughter of John Ashton Yates, formerly M.P. for Carlisle. He was educated on the foundation at Eton, and at University College, Oxford, where he took his degree in 1875. Called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in May 1881, he joined the South-Eastern Circuit, and became a member of the Kent Sessions. He was appointed a Metropolitan Police Magistrate for North London in January 1897, which post he now holds. He is also a J.P. for Lincolnshire. In 1892 he married Ruth, only child of A. F. Godson, M.P. Addresses: 31 Cornwall Gardens, S.W.; and Farmfield, Charlwood, Surrey.

DIAZ, General Porfirio, Mexican soldier and statesman, was born at Oaxaca, Sept. 15, 1830. He was educated in his native city, and began the study of law, but abandoned it to enter the National Guards when the Americans invaded Mexico in 1847. In 1854 he joined in the insurrection against Santa Anna, and from that time until his election to the Presidency in 1876 was actively engaged in the many attempts against the various governments which in rapid succession tried to rule Mexico. During this period he displayed great abilities as a leader and military commander; and as early as 1861, at the request of General Ortega, his superior officer, was made a General. Twice (1863 and 1865) he was taken prisoner, but each time effected his escape. His first administration as President was a stormy one, and much of his time was occupied in quelling revolts. At the end of his term (1880) he secured the election of General Gonzalez (his Secretary of War) as his successor; and he himself took charge of one of the departments of the Government, and was also appointed Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court, but never took his seat. When Gonzalez's term expired in 1884, Diaz was elected for a second term; and by successive re-elections has been continued in the presidential office to the present time. His administration on the whole has been a successful one. The country has been pacified, its trade increased, its resources developed, its education advanced, and its railroads and telegraphs extended. On Sept. 16, 1897, when he was attending the public celebrations of the anniversary of Mexican independence, an attempt was made to assassinate him, which was happily unsuccessful, the criminal being dragged from prison by the mob and lynched.

DIBBS, Sir George Richard, K.C.M.G., has for many years been representative of Murrumbidgee in the New South Wales Legislature. From 1883 to 1885 he was Colonial Treasurer under Sir Alexander Stuart, whom he succeeded in the Premiership. He was Colonial Secretary in 1886-87, and in 1889 was again Premier for a short period. On the defeat of Sir H. Parkes in 1891 he became Premier for the third time, and signalled his tenure of power by introducing a strong Protectionist tariff. In 1892 he received the honour of knighthood, having come to England to establish confidence in Australian, and more especially in New South Wales, Stock. In 1893 he became bankrupt, and resigned his seat in the Legislative Assembly whilst retaining the Premiership, but he was at once re-elected. He was defeated at the elections of 1894, and resigned office. Address: Riverside, Emu Plains, N. S. Wales.

DICEY, Professor Albert Venn, M.A., B.O.L., and Hon. LL.D. of Glasgow and Edinburgh, was born in 1835, and is a son of the late T. E. Dicey, Esq., of Claybrook Hall, Leicestershire. He was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, where he obtained a first class in Classical Moderations in 1866, and a first class in the Final School of Litt. Hum. in 1858. He eventually became a Fellow of his College, and a Fellow of Trinity College, and now holds a Fellowship at All Souls' College. Mr. Dicey gained the Arnold Essay Prize in 1860, his subject being "The Privy Council"; and in 1882 he was appointed Vinerian Professor of English Law in the University. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1863, and he acted as Public Examiner in the Final School of Jurisprudence from 1874 to 1875. He is the author of: "Treatise on Rules for Selection of Parties," 1870; "The Law of Domicil," 1879; "England's Case against Home Rule," 1886; and "The Privy Council" (Arnold Essay), 1860 and 1887; and an important work on "The Law of the Constitution," 1886. Mr. Dicey was appointed a Q.C. in 1890, and in 1899 succeeded Sir John Lubbock as principal of the Working Men's College, Great Ormond Street. Address: All Souls' College, Oxford.

DICEY, Edward, C.B., second son of the late T. E. Dicey, Esq., was born in 1832, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took honours both in the Mathematical and in the Classical Tripos. He has frequently contributed to the Nineteenth Century, Fortnightly Review, St. Paul's, and Macmillan's Magazine, and other periodicals, and was for some years a leader-writer on the staff of the Daily Telegraph, for which he has acted as special correspondent in different parts of the Continent. While travelling in the East, Mr. Dicey was asked to undertake the editorship of the Daily News. He held this post for about three months in 1870. Immediately on quitting the Daily News Mr. Dicey was offered and accepted the editorship of the Observer, a position which he held up to 1889. He is the author of: "A Memoir of Cavour"; "Rome in 1860"; "The Schleswig-Holstein War," 1864; "The Battlefields of 1866," published in 1866; "A Month in Russia during the Marriage of the Czarewicz," 1867; "The Morning Land," an account of three months' tour in the East, 1870; "Victor Emmanuel" in the New Plutarch Series, 1882; "England and Egypt," 1884; "Bulgaria, the Peasant State," 1895. Mr. Dicey is an authority on Egypt, and has been a strong advocate of a British annexation of that country. He was made a C.B. in 1885. Of late years he has taken much interest in South African affairs, and has paid a long visit to the Transvaal. He has also travelled in Bulgaria, and has published a work on the Bulgarian people and politics, mentioned above. His brother, Mr. Albert Dicey, is Vinerian Professor of English Law at Oxford. He married, in 1867, Anne Greene Chapman, an American lady, who died in 1878. Addresses: Piccadilly Mansions, W.; and Athenæum.

DICKENS, Henry Fielding, Q.C., is the son of the late Charles Dickens, of Gadshill Place, Higham, Kent, and was born on Jan. 16, 1849. He was educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1872, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in November 1873. He practises on the South-Eastern Circuit, was appointed Recorder of Deal in 1883, and became Recorder of Maidstone in 1892. Mr. Dickens acted as Revising Barrister for Mid-Kent and Greenwich in 1884, and was appointed a Q.C. in 1892. Address: 2 Paper Buildings, Temple, E.C.

DICKINSON, William Howship, M.D., F.R.C.P., J.P., was born June 9, 1832, at Brighton, and educated at Caius College, Cambridge, and St. George's Hospital, London. He is an Honorary Fellow of Caius College. After holding the offices of Medical Registrar and Curator of the Museum he became Assistant-Physician to St. George's, then Physician and Lecturer on Medicine, and finally Consulting Physician. He was also in succession Assistant-Physician, Physician, and Consulting Physician to the Hospital for Sick Children. Dr. Dickinson held at different times the offices of Examiner in Medicine to the Universities of Cambridge, London, and Durham, and the Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons. He was appointed in 1869 Secretary to the Pathological Society, and in 1889 President. In 1885 he became Censor to the College of Physicians. He has made researches in connection with pathology and other branches of medicine, of which the following are the more important: On the Action of Digitalis upon the Uterus, describing for the first time its contractile effect upon that organ (1885); on the Pathology of the Kidney, distinguishing disease of the intertubular structures from that of the tubes, and asserting the intertubular origin of granular degeneration (1859, 1860, 1861); on the Function of the Cerebellum, assigning to that organ an especial effect upon the lower limbs (1865); on the nature of the so-called Amyloid or Lardaceous Degeneration, pointing out its connection with Suppuration (1867); on the Nature of the enlargement of the Viscera, which occurs in rickets, showing the affection of those organs to be analogous to that of the bones (1869); on the Futility of Counter-irritation as a Method of Treatment; on the changes produced in the Nervous System by the Amputation of Limbs: on Chronic Hydrocephalus, pointing out the frequent origin of the disease in cranial relaxation; on Diabetes, showing the general presence of structural changes in the nervous system, and referring the symptoms to organic change, instead of, as hitherto, to functional derangement; on the Pathology of Tetanus and of Chorea, with reference to structural alterations in the nervous centres; on the Pathological Results of Alcohol; and on the Presystolic Murmur, falsely so called. Most of the preceding papers are published in the Transactions of the Medico-Chirurgical Society. Dr. Dickinson is also the author of works on Albuminuria, Diabetes, and Renal and Urinary Affections, of a course of Lumsden Lectures on "The Tongue as an Indication of Disease," and of a volume of "Occasional Papers on Medical Subjects." In 1891 he delivered the Harveian Oration. He married Laura, daughter of James Arthur Wilson, M.D. Addresses: 9 Chesterfield Street, Mayfair; and Athenæum.

DICKSEE, Frank, R.A., son of Thomas Francis Dicksee, was born Nov. 27, 1853, and received his first artistic instruction from his father. In 1870 he became a student of the Royal Academy, and in 1872 obtained a silver medal for a drawing from the antique. In 1876 he gained the gold medal for an historical painting, "Elijah confronting Ahab and Jezebel in Naboth's Vineyard," and in the following year exhibited the picture. At that time he worked also at drawings for book illustrations and made some designs for stained glass. In 1877 he exhibited "Harmony," which was purchased by the trustees of the Chantrey Bequest Fund; this was followed in 1879 by "Evangeline." He has since exhibited "The House-Builders," 1880; "Portraits of Sir William and the Hon. Lady Welby-Gregory," "The Symbol," 1881; "The Love Story," 1881; "The Foolish Virgins," 1883; "Romeo and Juliet," 1884; "Chivalry," 1885; and "Memories," 1886. In 1887 "Hesperia"; in 1888, "Within the Shadow of the Church"; in 1889, "The Passing of Arthur"; and in 1890, "The Redemption of Tannhäuser," were exhibited. In 1881 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy. In 1891 Mr. Dicksee was elected a Royal Academician, and in the same year exhibited the "Mountain of the Winds," and the "Crisis." In 1892 he exhibited "Leila" and "Startled," the latter being his diploma work; in 1893, "The Funeral of a Viking"; in 1894, "The Magic Crystal," and "A Summer Sea"; in 1895, "Paolo and Francesca," and "A Reverie"; in 1896, "The Confession," and "The Mirror"; in 1897, "Dawn and Meditation"; in 1898, "An Offering," and "The Infant Christ." Addresses: Greville House, 3 Greville Place, St. John's Wood, N.W., and Athenæum.

DICKSON, Sir Collingwood, R.A., ¶.C., G.C.B., was born in 1817, and is the son of the late Major-General Sir A. Dickson, G.C.B., K.C.B., and Eularia, daughter of Don Stephen Briones. He entered the army, and became Second Lieutenant, Dec. 18, 1835; First Lieutenant, Nov. 29, 1837; Captain, April 1, 1846; Brevet-Major, May 22, 1846; Brevet Lieut.-Colonel, June 20, 1854; Lieut.-Colonel, Feb. 23, 1856; Brevet Colonel, June 29, 1855; Colonel, April 5, 1866; Colonel-Commander, Nov. 17, 1875; Major-General, Aug. 24, 1866; Lieut.-General, June 8, 1876; General, Oct. 1, 1877. Sir Collingwood Dickson served on the staff of Lord Raglan during the Eastern Campaign, 1854-55, and was present at the affairs of Bulganac and M'Kenzie's Farm, the battles of Alma and Inkerman, the charge at Balaclava, the Expedition to Kertch, and the siege of Sebastopol (wounded Feb. 4, 1855). He commanded the right siege train, and was present at the bombardments of October 17, April 9, and June 17 (medal with four clasps, C.B., Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, and Colonel, Victoria Cross, Officer of the Legion of Honour, 2nd Class of the Medjidieh, and Turkish medal). He was awarded the ¶.C., "for having, on Oct. 17, 1854, when the batteries of the Right Attack had run short of powder, displayed the greatest coolness and contempt of danger in directing the unloading of several waggons of the field battery which were brought up from the trenches to supply the want, and having personally assisted in carrying the powder-barrels under a severe fire from the enemy." Sir Collingwood is also a Knight of Charles the Third; 1st class St. Fernando; and Knight of Isabella the Catholic. He has retired. Address: 79 Claverton Street, N.W.

DICKSON-POYNTER, Sir John Poynder, Bart., M.P., was born in 1866. He is the son of Admiral Dickson, C.B., grandson of Admiral Sir Archibald Dickson, and grand-nephew of General Sir Alexander Dickson, G.C.B. He was educated at Harrow, and Christ Church, Oxford, and in 1881 inherited estates in Wiltshire and in London from his uncle, Mr. William Poynder of Hilmarton Lodge, Calne, and Hartham Park, Corsham, Wiltshire. He was returned in the Conservative interest for the Chippenham Division of Wiltshire in 1892, and he still holds the seat. He represents Holborn in the London County Council, and is a Justice of the Peace for Wiltshire. He has travelled considerably in past years, especially in India, and along the North-West Frontier of India, and has written articles on the subject. He was at one time a Lieutenant in the Royal Scots Lothian Militia, and is now a Lieutenant in the Royal Wilts Yeomanry. He was married in 1896 to Anne, daughter of Henry Dundas, Esq. Address: Hartham Park, Corsham, Wilts, and 39 Hill Street, W., &c.

DIDON, Henri, a celebrated French Dominican preacher and author, was born at Touvet, Isère, on March 17, 1840. At an early age he came under the influence of Lacordaire, and became a novice in a Dominican convent, taking his vows in 1862 and being shortly afterwards sent to Rome to complete his studies. At the age of twenty-eight he made his first appearance as a preacher in Paris, and was thenceforward regarded as a disciple of Lacordaire, whose Liberal Catholicism he warmly espoused. In 1871 he preached the funeral sermon at Nancy on Monseigneur Darboy. He was subsequently appointed Prior of the Dominicans of the Rue St. Jean de Beauvais in Paris, and in their chapel began giving a series of addresses which made him famous. Science and faith chiefly occupied his attention. He was himself a student of physiology, and his friendship for Claude Bernard was well known. In 1879, however, he treated of divorce, and alarmed his clerical superiors, who forbade him to continue his lectures on that subject. He was summoned to Rome, and was sent into disciplinary seclusion in the Convent of Corbara in Corsica. At the end of eighteen months spent in study and retirement, he went into Germany and, as a student, followed courses of lectures on Greek, Hebrew, &c. He made a very thorough study of German opinion, manners, and customs, and on his return to France published an interesting work on that country, in which he pointed out that theory and practice, speculation and reality, have nothing in common in the Fatherland. Père Didon has published numerous volumes of sermons, of which the first, "What is a Monk?" appeared in 1868. His best known work is his "Vie de Jésus," in the writing of which he sought impressions in Palestine itself, as M. Renan had done before him. The work was published in 1890, and has had an immense circulation. At the beginning of that year Père Didon was appointed director of the College of Albert le Grand at Arcueil, and solemnly installed on March 27. In January 1891, he preached a notable sermon at the Madeleine in Paris, the subject of which was "The Church and the Papacy." In Lent, 1892, he preached in the same church, and he generally occupies that pulpit during the special periods of Lent and Advent. When M. Zola published his "Lourdes" in 1894, Pere Didon issued a reply to that author's disbelief in the miracles performed at the shrine. He has recently (1899) visited England to study educational methods.

DIGGLE, Joseph Robert, M.A., J.P., was born on May 12, 1849, in Lancashire, and is the youngest son of William Diggle, Park House, Astley. He was sent to Manchester Grammar School, and completed his education at Wadham College, Oxford, where he was placed in Class I. of the School of Modern History. He was ordained Priest in 1875, and was Curate of St. Mary's, Bryanston Square, till 1878. In 1879 he resigned his curacy in order to devote himself to a career of public usefulness. In 1879 he was elected a member of the London School Board for Marylebone, and in 1885 was chosen Chairman in place of Mr. Buxton, who was defeated. He was re-elected to the Chair in 1888, and again in 1892. He headed the clerical party in the School Board, and during 1894 was involved in the controversy with regard to religious education in the Board Schools of London. He was succeeded in the Chairmanship of the Board, towards the close of 1894, by Lord George Hamilton. He was member for the Marylebone Division of the London School Board to the end of 1897, when he shared in the defeat of the Moderate Party, after issuing (July 1897) in their behalf a weighty manifesto, in which he pointed out that the Moderate attitude as to the necessity of Christian teaching as a basis of popular education had been substantially the same from the day it was adopted by a majority of the first Board. Mr. Diggle took advantage of the Clerical Disabilities Act in 1889, thereby removing his ineligibility to sit in Parliament. In 1885 he had been nominated for West Marylebone to test the eligibility of clergymen to be nominated, and at the polls received a few votes. He has published "Pleas for Better Administration upon the London School Board." He is Mayor of Tenterden. In 1878 he married Jane Wrigley, daughter of T. W. Macrae, of Aigburth, Liverpool. Addresses: 19 Cornwall Terrace, N.W.; St. Michael's Hall, Tenterden, Kent.

DILKE, Mrs. Ashton. See COOK, MRS. RUSSELL.

DILKE, The Right Hon. Sir Charles Wentworth, Bart., LL.M., J.P., M.P., was born at Chelsea, Sept. 4, 1843, being the son of the late Sir Charles Wentworth Dilke, and grandson of Charles

Wentworth Dilke, the critic, who both were noticed in previous editions of this work. He received his academical education at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, of which he was a Mathematical Scholar, and where he graduated as senior legalist (head of Law Tripos) in January 1866. In the same year he was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple. At Cambridge he rowed "head of the river," and stroke of his college eight, and was twice Vice-President, and then twice President of the Union, a tenure of office without precedent before or since. In June 1866 he proceeded to Canada and the United States, where he travelled alone for some months. At the end of August 1866 he met at St. Louis Mr. Hepworth Dixon, with whom he crossed the Great Plains and Rocky Mountains, and visited the Mormon cities. Parting at Salt Lake City from Mr. Dixon, who returned to England, and shortly afterwards dedicated to him "New America," Mr. Dilke passed on to Nevada and California, and after a considerable stay at San Francisco, sailed for Panama, and thence to New Zealand, Tasmania, and Australia, where he visited all the Colonies, and gathered much information as to their political present and their prospects of a great commercial future. Visiting Ceylon on his way, Mr. Dilke passed from West Australia to Madras and Calcutta, whence he crossed Upper India to Lahore, and returned to England by the Indus, Kurra- chee, Bombay, and Egypt; thus completing the circuit of the globe. The result of these journeyings was the publication of "Greater Britain: a Record of Travel in English-speaking Countries during 1866-67," 2 vols., 1868—a work which, treating the new subject of the influence of race on government and of climatic conditions upon race, had perhaps the greatest success that ever attended the publication of an author's first work. It passed through four editions in a single year in England, and, having been republished by two firms in America, also passed through a still larger number of editions there. One of its results was the election, in 1868, of its author, who is in politics a Radical, to represent the new borough of Chelsea. He was returned at the head of the poll, and by a majority of nearly two to one over Dr. W. H. Russell, and was at that time the youngest man who ever represented a metropolitan constituency; in Parliament he chiefly spoke upon foreign, Indian, and Colonial affairs, but, in 1870, seconded the motion of Mr. Henry Richard for the rejection of Mr. W. E. Forster's Education Bill. Sir Charles Dilke succeeded his father and grandfather in the proprietorship of the Athenæum, and is understood to have at one time followed his grandfather's example in assuming the editorship himself. He is also the proprietor of Notes and Queries, and one of the proprietors of the Gardener's Chronicle. Having in 1871 been attacked for holding Republican opinions, he admitted publicly that he had always preferred a Republican form of Government to a Constitutional Monarchy. His re-election at Chelsea was in consequence violently opposed in February 1874, but he was again returned at the head of the poll. In the same year he published an anonymous satire, the authorship of which remained a secret for four months. It was called "The Fall of Prince Florestan of Monaco," and passed through three editions, and was translated into French. In 1875 he published the works of his grandfather, with a memoir, under the title of "Papers of a Critic." In the same year he again went round the world, and wrote on China and Japan in the monthly magazines. His chief legislative achievements before 1880 were the creation of School Boards directly elected by the ratepayers (in place of committees of boards of guardians, as proposed by Mr. W. E. Forster) by an amendment of the Education Bill; the conferring of the municipal franchise on women; the abolition of the barbarous penalty of drawing and quartering; and, in 1878, the extension of the hours of polling at parliamentary elections in the metropolis by the measure known as "Dilke's Act." On the formation of Mr. Gladstone's administration in May 1880 Sir Charles Dilke was appointed Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. In 1881-82 he was Chairman of the Royal Commission for the Negotiation of a Commercial Treaty with France, which sat for many months in conference with the French Government High Commissioners both in London and in Paris. In December 1882 he was made President of the Local Government Board (with a seat in the Cabinet), in succession to Mr. Dodson, who had been transferred to the Chancellorship of the Duchy of Lancaster. In 1883 Sir Charles Dilke had charge of the Unreformed Corporation Bill, which he carried. In 1884 he was appointed Chairman of the Royal Commission on the Housing of the Working Classes, of which the Prince of Wales, Lord Salisbury, and Cardinal Manning were other members. In 1885 he had charge of the Bill for the Redistribution of Seats. In the same year he carried the Diseases Prevention (Metropolis) Act. At the general election of 1885 he was again returned for Chelsea (reduced borough), but in 1886 was defeated by Mr. Whitmore, the Conservative candidate. In 1885 Sir Charles Dilke married Mrs. Mark Pattison, widow of the late Rector of Lincoln College, Oxford. In 1887 he published, through Chapman & Hall, "The Present Position of European Politics," which was translated into French under the title of "L'Europe en 1887," and published by Quantin of Paris. In 1888 he published, through Chapman & Hall, "The British Army"; and at the beginning of 1890, through Macmillan & Co., "Problems of Greater Britain," which has passed through several editions in England, the United States, and the Colonies. In 1891 Sir Charles Dilke wrote, with Mr. Spencer Wilkinson, a volume entitled "Imperial Defence," which was published by Macmillan & Co. In 1892 he was elected Member of Parliament for the Forest of Dean division of Gloucestershire, which he continues to represent. Addresses: 76 Sloane Street, S.W.; Dockett Eddy, Shepperton, R.S.O., Middlesex; and Pyrford, Maybury, Woking, the last-named being Lady Dilke's freehold, where she keeps her choice small collection of books.

DILKE, Lady Emilia Francis, daughter of the late Colonel Henry Strong, of the Madras army, born Sept. 2, 1840, married first, in 1862, the Rev. Mark Pattison (who died on July 30, 1884), Rector of Lincoln College, Oxford; and second, in October 1885, the Right Hon. Sir Charles Wentworth Dilke, Bart. Lady Dilke was long a writer in the Saturday and Westminster Reviews, and afterwards became, for some time, fine-art critic of the Academy. In 1879 Lady Dilke published, through Kegan Paul, Trench, and Co., a work in two volumes, illustrated by herself, and entitled "The Renaissance of Art in France." In 1884 she published, in French, through the Librairie de l'Art, a monograph on Claude. In 1886 she published, through Routledge & Sons, "The Shrine of Death," a volume of stories. In 1888 she published, through Chapman and Hall, "Art in the Modern State." In 1888-90 she contributed several archaic stories to the Universal Review, and wrote in the Fortnightly Review and the New Review on Trades Unions for Women, in which she takes a deep interest. Lady Dilke has since published, through Chapman & Hall, "The Shrine of Love," 1891. For many years Lady Dilke wrote the articles on Italy and France in the Annual Register. She has for some time been engaged on a history of the French art of the eighteenth century, for which she has worked at Berlin and Stockholm. Addresses: see under DILKE, SIR CHARLES.

DILLON, Viscount, Harold Arthur Lee-Dillon, 17th Viscount, Hon. M.A. of Oxford, President of the Society of Antiquaries and of the Royal Archaeological Institute, late Lieutenant Rifle Brigade, and Major 4th Oxon. Light Infantry, was born on Jan. 24, 1844, and succeeded his father, the 16th Viscount, in 1892. He was educated at Eltham in Kent, an old town full of interesting relics of the past, which may have imbued him with his love of antiquity. He is well known for his interest in antiquarianism and archaeology, has contributed frequently to the journals devoted to those subjects, and was elected P.S.A. in 1897. He is an ex-officio Trustee of the British Museum, has been a Trustee of the National Portrait Gallery since 1894, and is Curator of the Tower Armouries. He was elected to the Athenæum under Rule II. in February 1898. He married in 1870 Miss Julia Stanton, a Canadian. Address: Ditchley, Enstone, Oxfordshire.

DILLON, John, M.P., second son of the late Mr. John Blake Dillon (M.P. for Tipperary, and one of the rebels of 1848), was born in 1851, and educated at the Roman Catholic University of Dublin, where he was distinguished for his proficiency in mathematics. He afterwards studied medicine, and became a licentiate of the Royal College of Surgeons of Ireland. In 1880 he was returned as member for Tipperary, but in March 1883 was obliged to resign his seat on account of ill-health. During his parliamentary career he was one of Mr. Parnell's most active supporters, and on Feb. 2, 1881, was the first member "suspended" on the occasion of the suspension of the whole Parnellite party. He was twice imprisoned as a "suspect" under Mr. Forster. In 1885 he was returned unopposed for East Mayo; and in 1886 was re-elected, and continues to represent that constituency. Mr. Dillon was a chief agitator for the well-known "Plan of Campaign," in accordance with which he received the rents of tenants at Loughrea in November 1886. For this offence he was arrested, tried, but not convicted. In May 1888 he was, however, sentenced to six months' imprisonment for having taken part in "the criminal conspiracy" of the Plan of Campaign at Tullyallen. On appeal this sentence was confirmed. Imprisoned at Dundalk, he was liberated in September. In 1890 he collected large sums in Australia in aid of his party, and returning to Ireland, was arrested and tried on a political charge. Mr. Dillon, in company with Mr. W. O'Brien, having been liberated on bail, pending a further hearing in November 1890, forfeited the bail and escaped, first to Cherbourg and then to the United States, to fulfil a lecturing engagement there. In February 1891 he gave himself up to the authorities, and was imprisoned in Ireland. He was released on July 30 from Galway Gaol, and in a speech, delivered at Mallow on August 9, threw in his lot with the McCarthyites, as opposed to the Parnellites. At the beginning of the session of 1896 Mr. Dillon, who is certainly the most earnest and formidable of the Nationalist leaders, was elected Chairman of the Irish Party in succession to Mr. McCarthy, and was re-elected in 1897. He married in 1895 Elizabeth, daughter of the Hon. Sir James Mathew, and grand-niece of the famous Father Mathew. Address: 2 North Great George Street, Dublin.

DIMSDALE, Sir Joseph Cockfield, a managing director in the well-known banking house of Prescott, Dimsdale, Cave, Tugwell, & Co., Lim., 50 Cornhill, E.C., was born in 1849, and educated at Eton. He has been an Alderman of the City of London since 1891, and was Sheriff of London in 1894, when he received the honour of knighthood. He was elected a Member of the London County Council in 1898. In 1873 he married Beatrice, daughter of R. H. Holdsworthy. Address: 3 Lancaster Street, Hyde Park, W.

DIVERS, Edward, M.D., D.Sc., F.R.S., was born in London, Nov. 27, 1837, and was educated at the City of London School, the Royal College of Chemistry, and at the Queen's College, Galway, Ireland. He became Lecturer on Medical Jurisprudence at the Middlesex Hospital Medical School in 1870, but three years later he was appointed Professor of Chemistry in the Imperial College of Engineering, Japan; and in 1886 he succeeded to the Chair of Chemistry in the Imperial University of Japan. Professor Divers is a Knight Commander of the Order of the Rising Sun of Japan, and is the author of numerous articles on subjects connected with chemistry. He unfortunately lost the sight of his right eye through an explosion in 1885. Address: Hongo, Tokyo, Japan.

DIX, Morgan, D.D., American clergyman, was born at New York City, Nov. 1, 1827, and was graduated from Columbia College in that city in 1848. He studied at the Theological Seminary of the Protestant Episcopal Church (New York), and became a deacon in 1852 and priest in 1853. In 1855 he was appointed an assistant minister in Trinity Parish (the largest and most important in New York), of which he has been Rector since 1862. His principal publications are: "Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans," 1864; "Exposition of the Epistles to the Galatians and Colossians," 1865; "Lecture on the Pan-theistic Idea of an Impersonal-Substance Deity," 1865; "Essay on Christian Art," 1853; "Lectures on the Two Estates, that of Wedded in the Lord and that of Single for the Kingdom of Heaven's Sake," 1872; "Memoirs of John A. Dix," 1883; "The Gospel and Philosophy," 1866; "Harriet Starr Cannon, first Mother Superior of the Sisterhood of St. Mary," 1897; and some volumes of sermons and devotional manuals.

DIXON, Professor Harold Bailly, F.R.S., Professor of Chemistry, Owens College, Manchester, second son of the late William Hepworth Dixon, was born in London, Aug. 11, 1852. He was educated at Westminster School, where he was elected on the Foundation in 1867. In 1871 he obtained a Junior Studentship at Christ Church, Oxford. At Oxford he studied Chemistry under Mr. A. G. Vernon Harcourt in the Christ Church Laboratory. In 1874 he accompanied his father through the United States and Canada, visiting the mines of Nevada and California. At the end of 1875 he took a first class in the Natural Science School, and became assistant to Mr. Vernon Harcourt. In 1876 he began the researches on the reactions of pure gases, to which he has since devoted himself. In 1879 he was appointed Millard Lecturer at Trinity College, and in 1881 Bedford Lecturer at Balliol College, Oxford, of which College he was afterwards elected Fellow. In 1880-81 Mr. Dixon experimented for the Board of Trade on Standards of Light to be used in Photometry, and in 1884-85 he made photometric determinations of various illuminants at the experimental lighthouses erected at the South Foreland by the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House. In 1886 he was elected Fellow of the Royal Society, and in the same year was chosen to succeed Sir Henry Roscoe as Professor of Chemistry and Director of the Chemical Laboratories of the Owens College, Manchester. At the meeting of the British Association at Manchester in 1877 Professor Dixon gave, in a lecture in the Free Trade Hall, a popular account of his researches on the explosions of gases. Professor Dixon acted as Secretary of the General Board of Studies of the Victoria University in 1888-90. In 1890 he was elected Deputy Chairman of the Board, and in 1892 Chairman. In 1891 Mr. Dixon was appointed a Member of the Royal Commission to investigate the explosive action of dust in coal-mines. In carrying out this inquiry he visited the scenes of all the colliery explosions during three years, examining the air and analysing the dust of the mines. In 1893 he delivered the Bakerian Lecture of the Royal Society, "On the Rate of Explosion in Gases." In 1894 Professor Dixon was President of the Chemical Section of the British Association at the Oxford meeting; in his presidential address he pleaded for the recognition of research work as part of the University training in science. His chief papers are: "The Conditions of Chemical Change in Gases," Philosophical Transactions of Royal Society, 1884; "On the Combustion of Cyanogen," "On the Decomposition of Carbonic Acid by the Electric Spark," and "On the Combustion of Carbonic Oxide and Hydrogen," in the Journal of the Chemical Society; "On the Oxidation of Sulphurous Acid," and "On the Rate of Explosions in Gases," Philosophical Transactions, 1893; "On the Explosion of Cyanogen," and "On the mode of formation of Carbonic Acid in the burning of Carbon Compounds." Mr. Dixon married, in 1885, Olive Beechey Hopkins, daughter of the late Edward Martin Hopkins, of Montreal, and granddaughter of Admiral Beechey, F.R.S. Address: Birch Hall, Rusholme, Manchester.

DIXON, Canon Richard Watson, poet, is the son of Dr. Dixon the celebrated Wesleyan minister, and grandson of Richard Watson, the Wesleyan theologian. He was born in London, 1833, and educated at King Edward's School, Birmingham, where on the occasion of the Tercentenary he shared the prize for an essay on the Influence of the Reformation upon Literature with Sir Ed. Burne Jones and the late Dr. Hatch. At Oxford, where he entered at Pembroke College, he took a moderate class, but won the Arnold Prize for history and the Cramer Prize for poetry. At Oxford, in conjunction with Mr. (now Sir Ed.) Burne Jones and the late Mr. William Morris, he started the Oxford and Cambridge Magazine, advocating Pre-Raphaelitism, to which Rossetti and other leading men contributed. This periodical lasted a year. Mr. Dixon became curate of St. Mary the Less, Lambeth, under the present Dean Gregory, in 1858; Second Master of the High School of Carlisle in 1863; he was made Hon. Canon of Carlisle in 1874, accepted the Vicarage of Hayton in Cumberland in 1875, and of Warkworth in Northumberland in 1883. In 1861 he published "Christ's Company and other Poems," followed in 1863 by "Historical Odes." In 1873 he gained the second Peek Prize for an essay on the "Maintenance of the Church of England as an Established Church." In 1875 he published the "Life of James Dixon, D.D.," his father. He has since been engaged in writing a "History of the Church of England from the Abolition of the Roman Jurisdiction. This is a large work, based on original researches. Four volumes have hitherto appeared; the first of which was in 1877, the fourth in 1890. In 1883 Mr. Dixon published "Mano, a Poetical History in Four Books." In 1884, 1886, and 1888, at the private press of the Rev. Henry Daniel of Worcester College, Oxford, he published in succession, "Odes and Eclogues"; "Lyrical Poems"; and "The Story of Eudocia and her Brothers." In 1896 he published "Songs and Odes," in Mr. Elkin Mathew's "Shilling Garland" series. Mr. Dixon is Rural Dean of Alnwick, and Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Newcastle. Address: Warkworth Vicarage, Northumberland.

DIXON-HARTLAND, Sir Frederick Dixon, Bart., M.P., J.P., F.S.A., F.R.G.S., is the eldest son of the late Nathaniel Hartland, of the Oaklands, Charlton Kings, Gloucestershire, and was born in 1832, and educated at Cheltenham College and the Old Clapham Grammar School. He was elected as Conservative Member for Evesham in 1880, and in 1885 was elected, in the same interest, as Member for the Uxbridge Division of Middlesex, a constituency which he still continues to represent. He is a partner in the firm of Woodbridge, Lacy, Hartland and Co., and also a partner in the Uxbridge Old Bank. He is a County Alderman for Middlesex, a Lieutenant for the City of London, and has been Chairman of the Thames Conservancy since 1895. Sir F. Dixon-Hartland was one of the founders of the Primrose League, and is a Governor of Christ's Hospital. He is the author of: "Royal Genealogical and Chronological Chart of Royal Families of Europe"; "Chronological Dictionary of Royal Families of Europe." He was married in 1895 to Agnes Chichester, daughter of W. Langham Christie, of Glyndebourne, Sussex. Addresses: Ashley Manor, Cheltenham; and 14 Chesham Place, S.W.

DOBSON, Henry Austin, son of Mr. George Clarisse Dobson, civil engineer, was born at Plymouth, Jan. 18, 1840. At the age of eight or nine he was taken by his parents to Holyhead, in the island of Anglesea; he was educated at Beaumaris, at Coventry, and finally at Strassburg, whence he returned, at the age of sixteen, with the intention of becoming a civil engineer. It was decided, however, that he should enter the Civil Service, and accordingly, in December 1856, he was appointed to a clerkship in the Board of Trade, where he is now a Principal. When Mr. Anthony Trollope first started his magazine, St. Paul's, in 1868,

Mr. Dobson was one of his most frequent contributors. In 1873 Mr. Dobson first collected his scattered lyrics into a volume dedicated to Mr. Trollope, and entitled "Vignettes in Rhyme, and Vers de Société." It was followed by "Proverbs in Porcelain" in 1877. A selection from these two volumes was published at New York in 1880, and dedicated to Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes. This was reprinted in England in 1883, under the title of "Old World Idylls," which has since been succeeded by a companion volume, "At the Sign of the Lyre," 1885. Mr. Dobson is also the author of a "Life of Hogarth," in the Biographies of Great Artists, 1879; and of a chapter on "Illustrated Books," in the "Library" by Andrew Lang (Art at Home Series), 1881. For the Parchment Library, he has edited "Eighteenth-Century Essays," 1882; "Gay's Fables," 1882; and "The Vicar of Wakefield," 1883; for the Clarendon Press he has edited Beaumarchais' "Le Barbier de Séville," 1884; "Selections from Steele" and "Selections from Goldsmith," 1885. He was also one of the contributors to Ward's "English Poets," 1880; to which he supplied the critical sketches of Prior, Praed, Gay, and Hood. Mr. Dobson has also contributed to the Cornhill, Blackwood, Century, Scribner's, Longman's, Temple Bar, Contemporary, Good Words, and other magazines. He was one of the first to introduce the French forms of verse now so popular in England and America—i.e., rondeau, ballade, villanelle, and so forth, and he contributed a chapter on these forms to Mr. Davenport Adams' "Latter Day Lyrics." Mr. Dobson also wrote the "Life of Fielding" for Macmillan's English Men of Letters, the series edited by Mr. John Morley; and he has written a long study of Bewick, the artist and wood engraver, for the Century Magazine, which has since been republished under the title of "Thomas Bewick and his Pupils," 1884. He has written also a "Life of Steele" (English Worthies), 1886, and a "Life of Goldsmith" (Great Writers), 1888. Since 1888 Mr. Dobson's chief works have been a "Memoir of Horace Walpole," 1890, and an exhaustive expansion of his smaller life of Hogarth. This appeared in 1891, and again, much enlarged, in 1898. He has also issued, as volumes of essays, "Four Frenchwomen" (1890), and "Eighteenth-Century Vignettes" (1892), a second and third series of which latter appeared in 1894 and 1896 respectively; and he has edited "Goldsmith's Plays and Poems" (1889), and "Citizen of the World" (1891), for the Temple Library; "Prior's Selected Poems" (1889), for the Parchment Library; Fielding's "Journey to Lisbon" (1892), for the Chiswick Press

Reprints, and Holbein's "Dance of Death" (1892), and Dürer's "Little Passion" (1894), for the Ex-Libris Series. In 1897 his "Collected Poems" were issued in a single volume, with portrait. Mr. Dobson is on the Councils of the Royal Literary Fund and the Society of Authors, and is a member of the Athenæum Club, to which he was elected in 1891 under Rule II. He married Frances Mary, daughter of Nathaniel Beardmore, C.E. Address: 75 Eaton Rise, Ealing, W.

DODDS, Alfred Amédée, a French general, was born on Feb. 6, 1842, at Saint-Louis, in Senegal, where his father held an administrative post. He entered the Marine Infantry in 1864, and rose to the rank of General of Brigade in November 1892. He served in the Réunion campaign in 1869, and in the war of 1870 was taken prisoner by the Prussians at Sedan, but escaped and served in the campaigns of the Loire and the East. He was sent to Senegal in 1872, and remained there for twenty years, only leaving it in order to take part in the Cochinchina and Tonkin expeditions. During his long sojourn in Africa he suppressed numerous revolts against the French, notably that of the people of Fouta in 1891. In April 1892 Col. Dodds, who had returned to France and was in command of the 8th Regiment of Marine Infantry at Toulon, was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the expedition against King Behanzin of Dahomey, who had recently shown himself hostile to France. He hurried to the scene of action, conducted a difficult campaign, and by November 17 was master of the capital of Dahomey and had put Behanzin to flight. He returned to France to rest, and was enthusiastically received, but Behanzin's conduct rendered a second expedition necessary, which was again placed under his command and started from Marseilles on Aug. 10, 1893. On November 7 he occupied Atcharibe, where the Dahomeyans submitted, while the king fled to Djeja on the Douffo. On Jan. 5, 1894, General Dodds declared him deposed, on the 15th the king's successor was appointed, and acknowledged by the chiefs; and on the 25th Behanzin gave himself up and was transported to Martinique. After bringing this campaign to a successful issue, General Dodds was appointed Inspector-General of Marines, and set out to inspect the troops stationed in Réunion and New Caledonia. In December 1892 General Dodds was promoted Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour.

DODGE, Mary, nee Mapes, American authoress, was born at New York in 1838. Early in life she married Mr. William Dodge, a lawyer in New York, and on his death was left a widow with two sons to support. She took up literature, and for a number of years was one of the editors of Hearth and Home, assisting Harriet Beecher Stowe and Donald G. Mitchell ("Ik Marvel"). When in 1873 St. Nicholas, an illustrated monthly for children, was started by the owners of the Century Magazine, it was placed in charge of Mrs. Dodge, and under her able direction it has met with very great success. In addition to her editorial labours she has contributed to a number of English and American periodicals, and has published: "Irrington Stories," 1864; "Hans Brinker, or the Silver Skates," 1865, which has been translated into French, German, Dutch, and other European languages; "A Few Friends and How They Amused Themselves," 1869; "Rhymes and Jingles," 1874; "Theophilus and Others," 1876; "Along the Way," 1879, poems; "Donald and Dorothy," 1883; "The Land of Pluck," "When Life was Young," 1894; "A New Baby World," 1897. An amusing sketch by her called "Miss Malony on the Chinese Question," which appeared in Scribner's Monthly (now the Century) in 1870, attracted many readers at the time, and is included in "Theophilus and Others." So, likewise, is "The Insanity of Cain," which appeared originally in Scribner's Monthly.

DODS, Professor the Rev. Marcus, D.D., was born in 1834 at Belford, Northumberland, and is the youngest son of the Rev. Marcus Dods, of the Scotch Church, Belford. He was educated at the Edinburgh Academy and University, where he took his M.A. degree in 1854. He entered the Theological Training College of the Free Church in Edinburgh (New College), and after four years' curriculum was licensed in 1858. He was ordained in 1864 as minister of Renfield Free Church, Glasgow, where he remained until appointed Professor of New Testament Exegesis in New College, Edinburgh, in 1889. He received the honorary degree of D.D. from Edinburgh University in 1871. The following is a list of his published works: "The Prayer that Teaches to Pray," 1st edit., 1863, 6th edit., 1889; "The Epistle to the Seven Churches," 1865; "Israel's Iron Age," "Mohammed, Buddha, and Christ," "The Parables of Our Lord," 2 vols.; "The Book of Genesis, The First Epistle to the Corinthians, and the Gospel of St. John (4 vols. in "The Expositor's Bible.") He edited the English translation of Lange's "Life of Christ," 6 vols., Edin., 1864; and of Augustine's Works, 1872-1876; and Clark's "Series of Handbooks for Bible Classes"; contributed translations to Clark's Ante-

Nicene Christian Library, and articles to the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," to the Expositor, and other periodicals. He also edited the Gospel of St. John for Nicholl's "Expositor's Greek Testament," 1897. Address: 23 Great King Street, Edinburgh.

DOEHME, Madame, better known by her stage name of Madame (Lilian) Nordica, is the youngest of the six children of Edwin and Amanda Elvira Norton. She was born at Farmington, Maine, Dec. 12, 1859. Her parents were distinguished amateur musicians, and she received her early musical education at the Boston Conservatoire of Music, where she greatly distinguished herself. She afterwards proceeded to Italy to complete her training. Her chief triumph on the operatic stage has been her impersonation of the part of Marguerite in Gounod's "Faust." Gounod was said to regard her Marguerite as second only to that of Madame Patti. Mdlle. Nordica married (1) Mr. Gower, who is now deceased, and (2) Herr Doehme.

DOLE, Sanford Ballard, was born at Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, in 1844, where his father and mother had gone as missionaries in that year. He received his early education at Pubahan College on the island, choosing the profession of the law and then finishing his education at Williams College in America. He was admitted to the Bar at Boston, Mass., after which he returned to Hawaii, and practised his profession there, until in 1887 he was appointed to the Supreme Court of the Kingdom. In 1884 he was a member of the Legislature, taking a prominent part in the Reform movement which culminated in 1887. In 1889 he was again a member of the Legislature, and was on the Executive Committee of that body. He was made the head of the Provisional Government set up by the Revolution of January 1893, and was made President of the Republic, July 4, 1894. He was married in 1873 to Miss Anna P. Cate of Massachusetts.

DONNELLY, Major-General Sir John Fretcheville Dykes, K.C.B., was born in 1834, and was educated at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich. Entering the Royal Engineers in 1853, he was engaged in the Crimean War from 1854 to 1855. After retiring from the service, he was, in 1844, appointed Secretary of the Science and Art Department at South Kensington, a position which he continues to hold. Sir John Donnelly is a Knight of the Legion of Honour, and was created a K.C.B. in 1893. Address: 59 Onslow Gardens, S.W.; Falday, Dorking; and the Athenæum.

DOUDNEY, Sarah, youngest child of G. E. Doudney, was born in a suburb of Portsmouth, Hants, on Jan. 15, 1843. A great portion of her childhood, and nearly the whole of her girlhood, were spent in a remote village in Hampshire. She studied with Mrs. Kendall, of Southsea, and also at Madame Dowell's College at Southsea, a small establishment, chiefly for French girls. Sarah Doudney began to write verses and stories at an early age.

At eighteen she wrote two poems, which Charles Dickens commended, and published in All the Year Round. Some of her earliest verses, which attracted notice, appeared in the Churchman's Family Magazine, conducted by the Rev. F. Arnold. For this serial she wrote a story in verse, entitled "Sister Margaret," and in 1864 "The Lesson of the Water-Mill," which has since become one of the national songs of America. But it is as a writer of tales for girls that she is most widely known. The following is a list of her publications: "Under Grey Walls," 1871; "Monksbury College," 1872; "Faith Harrowby," 1872; "Wave upon Wave," 1873; "The Pilot's Daughters," 1874; "Miss Irving's Bible," "Marion's Three Crowns," "Loser and Gainer," "Oliver's Oath," 1877; "Archie's Old Desk," 1877; "The Great Salterns," "Old Anthony's Secret," "Janet Darney's Story," "Strangers Yet," 1880; "Stepping Stones," 1880; "Thy Heart's Desire," 1880; "When We Two Parted," 1880; "Michaelmas Daisy," 1882; "Stories of Girlhood," 1882; "Nothing but Leaves," 1882; "Anna Cavaye," 1882; "Nelly Channell," 1883; "What's in a Name," 1883; "A Woman's Glory," 1883; "When We Were Girls Together," 1884; "A Long Lane with a Turning," 1884; "The Strength of Her Youth," 1884; "Prudence Winterburn," 1886; "A Son of the Morning," 1887; "The Missing Rubies," 1888; "Miss Willowburn's Offer," 1888; "Under False Colours," 1889; "Where the Dew Falls in London," 1889; "Gatty Fenning," 1890; "A Romance of Lincoln's Inn," "Through Pain to Peace," 1892; also the following volumes of verses: "Psalms of Life," 1871; "Drifting Leaves," 1881; "Thistle Down," 1890; "Godiva Durlough" and "My Message," a poem, 1892, and "Violets for Faithfulness," 1893. (Novels) "Pilgrims of the Night," 1897; "A Cluster of Roses," "A Flower of Light," 1898. Sarah Doudney is the author of the well-known hymn, "Sleep on, Beloved," which was sung by order of the Queen at the Duchess of Teck's funeral. Address: Pioneer Club, 5 Grafton Street, W.

DOUGLAS, The Hon. and Right Rev. Arthur Gascoigne, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop of Aberdeen and Orkney, is the youngest son of George Sholto, late Earl of Morton, by Frances Theodora, eldest daughter of the late Right Hon. Sir George Henry Rose, G.C.B., of Sandhills, Hants. He was born Jan. 5, 1827, and graduated at University College, Durham, taking his B.A. degree in 1849, and proceeding M.A. in 1850, in which year he was ordained deacon by Dr. Maltby, Bishop of Durham. He was admitted into priest's orders by the Bishop of Worcester in 1851. Having held for a short time the curacy of Kidderminster, Mr. Douglas was appointed in 1855 to the rectory of St. Olave, Southwark, and in the following year was collated to the Rectory of Scaldwell, Northamptonshire, which living he held till 1872, when he accepted the vicarage of Shapwick, in the diocese of Salisbury. On May 1, 1883, he was consecrated, in the church of St. Andrew, Aberdeen, to the Scottish Bishopric of Aberdeen and Orkney, in succession to the late Bishop Suther. He married in 1855 Anna Maria Harriett, youngest daughter of the late Richard Richards, Esq., of Caernwch, M.P. for Merionethshire. Address: Bishop's Court, Aberdeen.

DOUGLAS, Robert Kennaway, was born Aug. 23, 1838, at Larkbear House, near Ottery St. Mary, Devon, and is the son of the Rev. Philip W. Douglas. He was educated at a private school at Bath, and at the Blandford Grammar School. He was appointed, by the Foreign Office, Student Interpreter in the China Consular Service in 1858; in 1860 he became Secretary to the Allied Commission for the Government of the City of Canton; was temporarily attached to her Britannic Majesty's Legation at Peking in 1861; was the same year appointed Interpreter on the staff of General Sir Charles Staveley, K.C.B.; and was appointed Acting Vice-Consul at Taku in 1862, which post he held until his return to England on leave in 1864. In the following year he resigned his appointment in the Consular Service in order to take up the post of Assistant of the Upper Section of the first class in the Library of the British Museum, with special charge of the Chinese and Japanese Libraries; he was promoted to the office of Assistant-Keeper in 1880, with the additional charge of the Sub-Department of Maps; and was made Keeper of the Department of Oriental Printed Books and MSS. in 1892. In 1873 he was appointed Professor of Chinese at King's College, London. DOWNER, The Hon. Sir John William, K.C.M.G., Q.C., was born in Adelaide, South Australia, July 6, 1844, and educated at St. Peter's College, Adelaide, and was a Scholar and Prize Essayist there. In 1862 he obtained the first prize at the Government Public Competition examinations, open to all the Colony of South Australia, and, at the same examination, special prizes for Greek, political economy, physiology, and zoology. He became Practitioner of the Supreme Court of South Australia in 1867; was made Queen's Counsel in 1878; and in the same year was elected member of the House of Assembly. From 1881-84 he was Attorney-General, during which time he caused some important law reforms to be effected; amongst others, persons accused of criminal offences were made competent witnesses on their own behalf. In 1883 he was one of the members of the Federal Convention held in Sydney, New South Wales. From 1885 to 1887 he was Premier, from 1892 to 1893 Chief Secretary and Premier, of South Australia, and from 1885 has been Attorney-General. In 1887 he was a member of the Colonial Conference in London, and was made a K.C.M.G. Since then he has introduced a bill for the amendment of the law of divorce, on lines similar to the bill since carried in Victoria. In 1890 he was elected by the Parliament of South Australia to be a member of the Federal Convention to be held in 1891. He is married to Elizabeth, daughter of the Rev. J. Henderson. Address: North Adelaide, South Australia.

DOWNING, Arthur Matthew Weld, D.Sc., F.R.S., F.R.G.S., born April 13, 1850, at Bagenalstown, co. Carlow, Ireland, is the younger son of the late Arthur Matthew Downing, of the Lodge, Bagenalstown, and 22 Waterloo Road, Dublin. He was educated at Nutgrove School, Rathfarnham, co. Dublin, and Trinity College, Dublin, where he won a Mathematical Scholarship in 1871, B.A. 1871, M.A. 1881, D.Sc. 1893. He was appointed Second-Class Assistant at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, in January 1873; promoted to be First-Class Assistant in August 1881. He is the author of between forty and fifty papers, contributed chiefly to the "Monthly Notices" of the Royal Astronomical Society from May 1877 to March 1898; and was elected a member of the Council of the Royal Astronomical Society in February 1882; Honorary Secretary of the Royal Astronomical Society in February 1889; Vice-President in February 1893; a member of the "Astronomische Gesellschaft," of Leipzig, in 1884; and a Fellow of the Royal Society in June 1896. He was President of the British Astronomical Association, 1892-94. Since 1892 he has been Superintendent of the "Nautical Almanac," and has edited the same since 1896. Address: 3 Verulam Buildings, Gray's Inn, W.C.

DOYLE, Arthur Conan, author, was born on May 22, 1859, and comes of a family of artists, being the eldest son of Charles Doyle, an artist, the nephew of the famous Dicky Doyle, and the grandson of the celebrated caricaturist H. B. (John Doyle). He was educated at Stonyhurst, in Germany, where he edited school magazines, and at Edinburgh University, where he studied medicine, graduating as M.B. and C.M. in 1881 and M.D. in 1885. His first literary venture, "The Mystery of the Sassassa Valley," appeared in Chambers in 1878. He practised his profession for some years at Southsea, during which period he began his very successful career as an author, publishing "A Study in Scarlet" in 1887; "Micah Clarke," 1888; "The Sign of Four," 1889; "The White Company," 1890. In the latter year the success of the last-named book led him to abandon practice, and in 1891 he sprang into fame with his creation, "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes," to which "The Memoirs of Sherlock Holmes" formed a supplement in 1893. Sherlock Holmes is the type of the almost superhuman detective. Other works of his are: "The Refugees," 1891; "The Great Shadow," 1892; "Round the Red Lamp," 1894; "The Stark Monro Letters," dealing with the struggles of a young medical man, 1895; "The Exploits of Brigadier Gerard," and "Rodney Stone," 1896; "Uncle Bernac," 1897; and "The Tragedy of the Korosko," 1898. In 1894 Mr. Conan Doyle achieved great success as a playwright with his delightful "Story of Waterloo," produced by Sir Henry Irving at the Lyceum, and now forming part of the great actor's repertoire. He has travelled in the Arctic regions and in Africa. Address: Hind Head, Surrey.

DRAGE, Geoffrey, M.P., was born in 1860, and is the second surviving son of Dr. Charles Drage. He was educated at Eton and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated after obtaining a first class in Classical Moderations and a second-class in Lit. Hum. (B.A., M.A.). He completed his academic training in Berlin and at various foreign universities, and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn. After leaving College he travelled much on the Continent, in the United States, and in the Colonies. He first came prominently into notice as Secretary to the Labour Commission, 1891-94. His services in this capacity were of the first importance, and he was sent by the Commission on missions to France, Germany, the United States, and other countries. In February 1895 he was returned as Conservative junior Member of Parliament for Derby, which he continues to represent. His profound knowledge of economics and social questions, especially of Poor Law Reform, has rendered him a valuable addition to the ranks of his party in the House of Commons. He was Vice-President of the International Congress on Accidents, held in Milan in 1894, and was a delegate at the International Congress on the Housing of the Working Classes, which sat at Brussels in 1897. Besides writing many pamphlets and widely-read letters in the Times on his own special subjects, he has published "The Criminal Code of the German Empire, with Prolegomena and Commentary," 1885; "Foreign Reports of the Royal Commission on Labour," "Eton and the Labour Question," and "The Unemployed," 1894; "The Aged Poor," 1895; and "The Labour Problem," 1896. A novel from his pen entitled "Cyril" has run through seven editions since its original date of publication in 1889. "Eton and the Empire" is another popular work from his pen. In March 1899 he was elected Chairman of the General Committee of the Imperial South African Association in succession to Mr. Wyndham, M.P., Under-Secretary for War. He is married to Ethel Sealby, daughter of T. H. Ismay, D.L. of Dawpool. Address: 15 Wilton Place, S.W.

war, and the author of a well-known manual on the preparation of troops for battle. He commanded the advanced guard at the passage of the Danube in 1877. He has strong French tendencies, and at the French manoeuvres of 1895 he was in close attendance on Generals Saussier and Boisdeffre.

DRAPER, William F., was born April 9, 1842, in Massachusetts. He enlisted in the war between the States, and soon distinguished himself by his valour. He was breveted Brigadier-General before the close of the war. He declined a nomination for Governor of Massachusetts, but served four years in Congress, from March 4, 1893. For many years in England and America the ancestors of General Draper have been engaged in textile manufacturing, and he has himself patented more than fifty different inventions, covering substantially the entire field of cotton machinery, but with special reference to spinning and weaving. He has been the head of the firm of George Draper's Sons, of Hopedale, Mass., for ten years. In 1897 he was sent as United States Minister to Italy.

DREYER, John Louis Emil, M.A. and Ph.D., Copenhagen University, Director of the Armagh Observatory, born Feb. 13, 1852, at Copenhagen, is the third son of Lieut.-General Dreyer, late Inspector-General, Royal Danish Engineers. He was appointed Astronomer at the Earl of Rosse's Observatory, Birr Castle, 1874; Assistant Astronomer at the Observatory of Trinity College, Dublin, 1878; Director of Armagh Observatory, 1882; and was Joint Editor of Copernicus: an International Journal of Astronomy, Vols. I.-III., 1881-84. He is the author of "Second Armagh Catalogue of 3300 Stars for 1875, from Observations made in the Years 1859-83 under the Direction of T. R. Robinson," 8vo, 1886; "A New General Catalogue of Nebulæ and Clusters of Stars," 4to, 1888 (Mem. R. Astr. Soc.); "Tycho Brahe: a Picture of Scientific Life and Work in the Sixteenth Century," 8vo, 1890 (German translation, Karlsruhe, 1894); and many papers in Proc. R. Irish Acad., Trans. R. I. Acad., Monthly Notices R. Astr. Soc., Copernicus, and in the "Encyclopædia Britannica," 9th edit. He married Katherine H., daughter of John Tuthill, formerly of Kilmore, co. Limerick. Address: The Observatory, Armagh.

DRIVER, Professor the Rev. Samuel Rolles, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew, Oxford, born in Southampton, Oct. 2, 1846, is the only son of Rolles Driver, Southampton, and Sarah, daughter of H. F. Smith, Darlington. He was educated at Winchester College and New College, Oxford, of which he was elected Scholar in 1865, and graduated with First-Class honours in Literæ Humaniores in 1869, was Fellow of New College from 1870 to 1882, and Tutor from 1875 to 1882. He applied himself early to the study of Hebrew and of other Semitic languages, and obtained the two University Hebrew Scholarships in 1866 and 1870 respectively; and in 1875 he was elected a member of the Old Testament Revision Company. In 1882, upon the death of Dr. Pusey, he was appointed to the Regius Professorship of Hebrew at Oxford (with a Canonry of Christ Church attached), a position which he still holds. Since 1884 he has also been Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Southwell. He is the author of "A Treatise on the Use of the Tenses in Hebrew, and some other Syntactical Questions," 1874, 3rd edit., 1892; of "Isaiah: his Life and Times, and the Writings which Bear his Name," 1888, 2nd edit., 1893 (in the series known as Men of the Bible); of "Notes on the Hebrew Text of the Books of Samuel, with an Introduction on Hebrew Palæography, &c.," 1890; of a Commentary on Deuteronomy (1895, 2nd edit., 1896) in the "International Critical Commentary"; of one on Joel and Amos (1897) in the "Cambridge Bible for Schools"; and of various articles relating to the Old Testament and Hebrew Philology, in the Philological Journal, the Expositor, the Contemporary Review, Hastings' "Dictionary of the Bible" (1898), &c. In 1891 he published an "Introduction to the Literature of the Old Testament," which attracted considerable attention (6th edit., 1897); and in 1892 a volume of Sermons on subjects connected with the Old Testament. In these works he claims to show that the modern critical view of the origin and structure of the Old Testament can be presented in a form compatible with a sincere belief in its inspiration and religious authority. In 1898 he designed and published, for the elucidation of the Prayer-Book Version of the Psalms, the "Parallel Psalter," being the Prayer-Book Psalter, together with a new version, arranged on opposite pages, and accompanied by brief explanatory notes. He is also the joint editor (with Professors Cheyne and Sanday) of "The Holy Bible (authorised version), with Various Renderings and Readings from the best Authorities," published by the Queen's Printers, 3rd edit., 1889; and joint translator (with Dr A. Neubauer) of a catena of Jewish commentaries on the 53rd chapter of Isaiah, called "The 53rd Chapter of Isaiah according to the Jewish Interpreters." He is at present engaged (with Professors C. A. Briggs and Francis Brown, of New York) upon a new Hebrew Lexicon, which is now in course of publication by the Clarendon Press. As a Hebraist and student of the Old Testament, he enjoys a reputation upon the Continent and America. He married, in 1891, Mabel, daughter of the late Edmund Burr, of Burghnext, Aylsham, Norfolk. Address: Christ Church, Oxford.

DRUMMOND, The Rev. Professor James, M.A., LL.D., D.Litt., Principal of Manchester College, Oxford, was born in Dublin on May 14, 1835, and is the son of the Rev. William Hamilton Drummond, D.D., M.R.I.A. He went to school at the Rev. D. Flynn's, Dublin, and entered Trinity College, Dublin, in 1851, passing the examination for the degree of B.A. in 1855, and obtaining the first gold medal in classics. Subsequently, in 1882, the University conferred on him the degree of LL.D., and in 1893, on the occasion of its tercentenary, added, honoris causa, the degree of D.Litt. In 1889 he incorporated at Oxford University, after the removal of Manchester New College to Oxford, and took the degree of M.A. In 1856 he went to Manchester New College, London, where he studied for the ministry under the Rev. J. J. Tayler and the Rev. James Martineau, and in 1859 he settled at Cross Street Chapel, Manchester, as colleague to the late Rev. William Gaskell. In 1869 he was appointed Professor of Theology at Manchester New College, London, and in 1885 succeeded Dr Martineau as Principal; a position which he retained on the removal of the College to Oxford in 1889, and which he still holds, the College having recently entered a new and commodious building, and changed its designation to Manchester College. His principal works are "Spiritual Religion: Sermons on Christian Faith and Life," 1870; "The Jewish Messiah: a Critical History of the Messianic Idea among the Jews from the Rise of the Maccabees to the Closing of the Talmud," 1877; "Introduction to the Study of Theology," 1884; "Philo Judæus; or, the Jewish-Alexandrian Philosophy in its Development and Completion," in 2 vols., 1888: the Hibbert Lectures for 1894, on "Christianity"; and three sermons on "The Pauline Benediction," 1897. He married Frances, daughter of John Classon, Dublin, in 1861. Address: 18 Rawlinson Road, Oxford.

DRUMMOND, Victor Arthur Wellington, is the son of Andrew Robert Drummond of Cadlands, Southampton, his mother being the eldest daughter of the 5th Duke of Rutland, and was born

June 4, 1833. Entering the diplomatic service he became an Attaché to the Embassy at Paris in 1852, Secretary of the Embassy at Paris in 1882, and Chargé d'Affaires at Munich in 1885. Mr Drummond was, in 1890, appointed Minister at the Courts of Munich and Stuttgart. He was married in 1884 to Elizabeth, daughter of Charles Lamson. Address: British Legation, Munich.

DUBLIN, Archbishop of. See PEACOCKE, THE MOST REV. J. FERGUSON.

DUBOIS, Paul, sculptor, was born at Nogent-sur-Seine, July 18, 1829. He was destined by his father for the legal profession, but his artistic tastes constrained him to devote himself to sculpture, and he went to Paris to become the pupil of the sculptor Toussaint, with whom he remained three years. In 1859 he went to Italy, and in 1860 executed at Florence the model for "St. John a Child," which was finished at Rome, exhibited at the Salon of 1863, and is now at the Luxembourg, together with "A Florentine Singer of the Fifteenth Century." This last is in silvered bronze, and through its many reproductions in smaller size has become very popular. Other works which may be cited are the tomb of General la Moricière, one of the masterpieces of modern statuary (1878), which is at Nantes; and busts of Bonnat, Cabanel, Paul Baudrey, Gounod, Pasteur (1890), and other celebrities. M. Dubois has also studied painting, and has executed fine portraits and beautiful copies of old masters, but has been a very irregular contributor to the Salon Exhibitions. In 1873 he was appointed Keeper of the Luxembourg Museum, and Director of the École des Beaux-Arts, May 30, 1878. Elected a member of the Académie des Beaux-Arts in 1876, he was one of the Jury of Admission for the selection of sculpture at the Exposition of 1878. He is a Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour (1889). Address: 14 Rue Bonaparte.

DUBUT DE LAFOREST, Jean Louis, French novelist, was born at Sainte Pardoux, July 24, 1853, and was educated at the Lycée Limoges, afterwards studying law at Bordeaux. He was legal adviser to the Préfet of the Oise from 1879 to 1882, when he abandoned law and became a contributor to the Figaro. His chief work has been the Conte, or short story, and he has been a consistent follower of Maupassant. In 1885 his novel "Le Gaga," on Parisian morals, was condemned by the Law Courts, and he spent two months in prison. His other works are: "Tête à L'Envers," 1882; "Mademoiselle de Marbeuf," 1888; and "Contes à la Lune," 1889.

DU CANE, Major-General Sir Edmund Frederick, K.C.B., son of Major Richard Du Cane, by Eliza, daughter of Thomas Ware, Esq., of Woodfort, near Mallow, co. Cork, was born at Colchester on March 23, 1830. He was educated at the Military Academy, Woolwich, and obtained his commission as second Lieutenant in the Royal Engineers, Dec. 19, 1848. In 1850 he was appointed to assist in preparing for the Great Exhibition of 1851, and he appears in the list of the Staff as Assistant-Secretary to the Jurors and Assistant-Superintendent of the foreign side. At that time Lord Grey was forming a convict establishment in Western Australia to carry out a system embodying all the improvements which nearly a century of experience had suggested, and a company of sappers, to which Lieutenant Du Cane was appointed, was sent out to assist in the operation. He was made a magistrate of the colony and a visiting magistrate of convict depots, and directed the labour of the convicts, who were employed in developing the communications of the colony. In July 1856 he was attached to the War Department for special service, and after being engaged for some time in connection with the design and sanitary arrangement of barracks, was employed on the design of the large works of defence undertaken under the auspices of Lord Palmerston. Among other works, the fortification of the western heights at Dover, and the long line of works, miles in extent, which protect the dockyard at Plymouth on the land side between the Tamar and the east side of Plymouth Sound, have been carried out on plans submitted by him to the Defence Committee. In February 1854 he had been promoted to be first Lieutenant, and on April 16, 1858, he became second Captain. In July 1863 he was appointed by Sir George Grey a Director of Convict Prisons when the Board was re-constructed after the death of Sir Joshua Jebb, and when the Report of the Royal Commission on Penal Servitude suggested considerable modifications in the convict system. He was at the same time appointed by Lord Ripon to be Inspector of Military Prisons. In 1869 Captain Du Cane was made Chairman of Directors of Convict Prisons, Surveyor-General of Prisons, and Inspector-General of Military Prisons. In July 1872 he was promoted to be Major, and on Dec. 11, 1873, to be Lieutenant-Colonel, having also in the same year been made a Companion of the Bath. The Emperor of Brazil conferred on him the Order of the Rose. In December 1878 he was promoted to be Colonel. In July 1877 he was created a K.C.B., and made Chairman of the Prison Commissioners, appointed by Royal Warrant under the Prisons Act, 1877, to undertake the difficult task of reorganising and administering the county and borough prisons, which from April 1, 1878, came under the control of the Government. In pursuance of this object the number of prisons has been reduced from 113 to 58, the rules have been made uniform, many important improvements introduced, and the cost has been very largely diminished. In December 1886 Colonel Du Cane retired from the effective list and was made a Major-General. He is the author of various articles in magazines, and also of a book on the "Punishment and Prevention of Crime" (1888), and his reports on military prisons are yearly issued as Parliamentary papers. In July 1855 he married Mary Dorothea, daughter of Lieut.-Col. J. Molloy, formerly of the Rifle Brigade. She died in 1881, and in 1883 he married Florence Victoria, daughter of Colonel and Lady Marie Saunderson, and widow of M. J. Grimston, Esq., of Kilnwick and Grimston Gaeltor, Yorkshire. Address: 10 Portman Square, W.; and Athenæum.

DU CHAILLU, Paul Belloni, was born in New Orleans, in Louisiana, July 31, 1835. His father was a trader on the west coast of Africa, whither Paul went at an early age, and where he acquired a knowledge of the languages and modes of life of the neighbouring tribes, also devoting much attention to natural history. In 1855, after a sojourn in New York, he returned to Africa, and spent about four years exploring the then unknown region lying two degrees on each side of the equator, penetrating to about longitude 14° 15' E. During this time he shot and stuffed a great number of birds and quadrupeds, among which were several gorillas, a species probably never before seen by any European. He returned to New York in 1859, taking with him a large collection of native arms and implements, and numerous specimens in natural history, which were publicly exhibited, and many of which were afterwards purchased by the British Museum. The history of this expedition was published under the title "Explorations and Adventures in Equatorial Africa," 1861; revised edition, 1871. A sharp controversy arose concerning the truthfulness of this book, and to vindicate himself Du Chaillu again visited Africa in 1863, where he remained until 1865. He published an account of this expedition under the title "A Journey to Ashango Land," 1867. During this journey he discovered the Pigmies. On his return to the States he lectured frequently and published a series of books for the young, comprising: "Stories of the Gorilla Country," 1868; "Wild Life under the Equator,"

1869; "Lost in the Jungle," 1869; "My Apingi Kingdom," 1870; and "The Country of the Dwarfs," 1871. More recently he has made an extended visit to Sweden, Norway, Lapland, and Finland, which he described in "The Land of the Midnight Sun," 1881, and "The Viking Age," 2 vols., 1889. Two of his earlier works he reissued in a condensed form in 1890 under the title of "Adventures in the Great Forest of Equatorial Africa and the Country of the Dwarfs." In 1893 he published "Ivor the Viking."

DUCHESNE, Jacques Charles René Achille, French general, born at Sens, March 3, 1837, passed out of the Military School of St. Cyr in 1857, and entered a line regiment. By successive promotions, he became a General of Division in 1893. He was wounded at Solferino, and decorated with the Legion of Honour at the age of 21 (1859). He was engaged in the Franco-Prussian War and sent out to Tonkin in command of the Foreign Legion. He was present at the capture of Bac-Ninh, and Hong-Hoa, and after being wounded he was about to return to France, when he received a telegram from Admiral Courbet to command the troops who were about to land in Formosa. He made over 8000 Chinese prisoners with hardly 800 men. On returning to France he commanded the 110th Regiment at Dunkerque, and, when general, the brigade at Châteauroux. He was in command at Belfort, when in November 1894 he was given the command of the expedition to Madagascar and started in April 1895.

DUCLIE, Earl of, The Right Hon. Henry John Reynolds-Moreton, F.R.S., was born June 26, 1827, and succeeded his father as 3rd Earl in 1853. He sat in the House of Commons as member for Stroud from 1852 to 1853, and he held the position of Captain of the Yeomen of the Guard from 1859 to 1866. Lord Duclic was appointed Lord Lieutenant of Gloucestershire in 1857; has been Lord Warden of the Stannaries in Cornwall, and Rider and Main Forester of Dartmoor since 1888; and he is a member of the Council of the Prince of Wales as Duke of Cornwall. He was married, in 1849, to his cousin Julia, daughter of James Haughton Langston, of Sarsden, Oxfordshire (she died in 1895). Addresses: 16 Portman Square, W.; Tortworth Court, Falfeld, Gloucestershire; and the Athenæum.

DUCKETT, Sir George Floyd, Bart., son of the late Sir George Duckett, Bart., F.R.S. (the translator from the German of Michaelis's "Burial and Resurrection of our Saviour," of Herder on the "Revela- tion of St. John," of "Luther's Preface to St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, &c."); born March 27, 1811, was educated at Harrow, and Christ Church, Oxford, and succeeded to the title on his father's death, June 15, 1856. Sir George, who was educated for the Foreign Office, entered the army instead, which he quitted in 1855 as Major in the 2nd Regiment of the Foreign Legion, devoting himself from that time to the prosecution of literary pursuits. He is the author of a "Technological Military Dictionary in German, English, and French," for which he has received the Great Gold Medal of Science from the Emperor of Austria; the gold medal of literary merit from the Emperor of the French; and another, the Great Gold Medal of Science and Art, from the late King of Prussia. Sir George is the author of a genealogical work entitled "Duchetiana," which forms a valuable and important addition to the county histories of Westmorland, Wiltshire, and Cambridgeshire. He has also edited the "Test Act and Penal Law Returns in 1687-88" for the entire counties of England and Wales; the "Monasticon Cluniacense Anglicanum"; "The Chapters-General and Visitations of the Order of Cluny in Alsace, Lorraine, Switzerland, Germany, and Poland, 1269-1529 (the era of the Reformation)," for which work he was allotted a Special Gold Medal of Honour for services rendered to Archaeology; "Visitations of English Cluniac Foundations in 1262, 1275, 1279, 1298, 1390, 1405"; "Naval Commissioners from the Restoration to George III."; "Charters relating to John, King of France, and the Treaty of Brétigny in 1360"; besides numerous contributions to the Antiquarian Societies of Westmorland, Yorkshire, Sussex, and Wilts. Of these his last in the "Sussex Antiquarian Collection" is supposed to settle the Gundreda Controversy; with another "Hastings v. Senlac" with similar success. Sir George Duckett obtained the highest literary honour which the French Government has to bestow, the Palme d'Or, as an Officer of Public Instruction in France. He is also a corresponding member of the Société d'Antiquaires des Normandies; and received a grant of £200 in 1890 from the Royal Bounty Fund for special literary services. Sir George Floyd Duckett was made a Knight of the Gold Cross of Merit of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha in 1890, and in 1893 received the first class of the Saxe-Ernestine Order for his literary services. He married in 1845 a daughter of Lieut.-General Sir Lionel Smith, Bart. Address: Travellers' Club.

DUCKHAM, Thomas, was born Sept. 26, 1816, at Shirehampton, near Bristol, and was educated at the village school, and afterwards at Hereford and Bristol. He began his agricultural career at Warham in 1849, when, on the severe depression following the repeal of the Corn Laws, he agreed for his farm upon a corn-rent regulated by the corn averages under the Tithe Commutation Act. Five years later he removed to Baysham Court, near Ross. Here he took an active interest in the game question, and frequently drew attention to the evils arising from excessive preservation. In 1857 he purchased the copyright of the "Hereford Herd Book," and was its editor for twenty years, at the end of which time he gave it up on account of ill-health. In 1866 he presided at the first two meetings in London for the formation of the Central and Associated Chambers of Agriculture; has been a Member of Council since their formation, and was President in 1884, and devoted so much time and labour to the interests of the agricultural classes that he was invited to stand for Herefordshire in 1880, when he was elected without any canvassing expenses, and again returned for North Herefordshire in 1885. Many of the reforms for which Mr. Duckham had long agitated became law in the Parliament of 1880, such as a better system for obtaining Corn Returns, the Ground Game Act, the Repeal of the Malt Tax, the amending of the Agricultural Holdings Act, the Law of Distress, the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, and Relief of Local Taxation. Mr. Duckham has been a Member of the Council of the Bath and West of England Association since 1863, is a Member of the Council of the Smithfield Club, and of the Council of the Royal Agricultural Benevolent Institution. At Hereford, in November 1895, he was presented with an address and purse of £453 for his services to agriculture, and especially for labouring to protect flocks and herds from contagious diseases. At the general election of 1886 he was defeated by Mr. Biddulph, Unionist-Liberal. He long agitated for a County Government Act, and repeatedly pressed upon the late Government his views thereon. Upon the Act coming into operation he was elected a senior Alderman. He is a J.P. for the county.

DUCKWORTH, Sir Dyce, M.D., LL.D., brother of the Rev. Canon Duckworth, D.D., and youngest son of the late Robinson Duckworth, Esq., of Liverpool. He was born in that city on Nov. 24, 1840, and educated at the Royal Institution School there, and at the University of Edinburgh, where he graduated M.D. (Gold Medallist) in 1863, also at St. Bartholomew's Hospital. He served as As-assistant-Surgeon in the Royal Navy, 1864-65; was elected Medical Tutor at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London, subsequently Assistant-Physician there in 1869, and full Physician and Lecturer on Clinical Medicine in 1883. He is Hon. Physician to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. He was made a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in 1870; is Hon. M.D. of the Medical College of Ohio, U.S.A., and M.D., honoris causâ, of the Royal University of Ireland. He was elected Hon. Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in Ireland in 1887; and is the representative of the Royal College of Physicians of London in the General Medical Council of the United Kingdom, and at the International Colonial Medical Congress at Amsterdam, 1883. He has been an Examiner in the Universities of Edinburgh and Durham, and on the Conjoint Board for England; and in the Victoria University. He is the author of a "Treatise on Gout," 8vo, 1889 (translated into German and French), and editor of Warburton Begbie's works, and is the author also of numerous contributions to clinical medicine. He received the honour of knighthood in 1886; was appointed treasurer of the Royal College of Physicians in 1884; and made an Hon. Member of the Royal Medical Society of Edinburgh in 1887, and Hon. LL.D. of Edinburgh in 1890. He was elected President of the Clinical Society of London in 1891. He is in practice as a Consulting Physician in London. In 1892 he received the honour of Knighthood in the Order of St. John of Jerusalem. He is married to Ada, youngest daughter of G. A. Fuller, of the Rookery, Dorking. Addresses: 11 Grafton Street, W.; and Athenæum.

DUCKWORTH, Canon Robinson, D.D., second son of the late Robinson Duckworth, Esq., of Liverpool, and Elizabeth Forbes, daughter of William Nicol, M.D. He was born in December 1834, elected to an open scholarship at University College, Oxford, in 1853, and graduated B.A. with first-class classical honours in 1857; he was afterwards elected a Fellow of Trinity, and was Assistant-Master at Marlborough College from 1858 to 1860, and Tutor of Trinity College from 1860 to 1866. In 1864 he was appointed Examining Chaplain to the late Bishop of Peterborough, and in 1866 was selected by her Majesty as instructor to his Royal Highness the late Prince Leopold. In 1867 he was appointed Governor to his Royal Highness, and held that post for three years. On his retirement in 1870 he was appointed Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen, and presented to the crown living of St. Mark's, Hamilton Terrace, N.W. He was appointed a Canon of Westminster in succession to the late Rev. Charles Kingsley in March 1875. In the same year he was appointed Honorary Chaplain to the Prince of Wales, and in that capacity accompanied his Royal Highness on his visit to India. He was appointed Rural Dean of St. Marylebone in 1891, and Chaplain of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem in 1892. In 1895 he was appointed Sub-Dean of Westminster. Permanent addresses: Little Cloisters, Westminster Abbey; 5 Abbey Road, N.W.; and Athenæum.

DUDLAY, Adeline Elie Françoise, French actress, was born at Brussels in 1859, and entered the Conservatoire of her native town to study music. From the age of fifteen she gave lessons in music, and thus obtained means to attend the dramatic classes. In 1874 she carried off the second prize for tragedy, and the first the next year. In 1874 she was admitted to the Comédie Française, and made her début in the rôle of Opimia in Parodi's "Rome Vaincue." Afterwards she played tragic parts in the classical works of Corneille and Racine, and, after the secession of Madame Bernhardt, she became the first tragédienne of the Comédie. One of her latest successes has been the part of Jeanne la Folle in "La Reine Juana" by M. Parodi (1893). When the Comédie visited London in 1893 she was very successful in "Athalie," "Le Cid," and in "Horace." Paris address: 2 Rue des Pyramides.

DUDLEY, Earl of, William Humble Ward, Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade, was born on May 25, 1866, and succeeded his father, the 1st Earl, in 1885. He was educated at Eton, and has travelled extensively. He is a Major in the Worcestershire Yeomanry Cavalry, was appointed High Steward of Kidderminster in 1888, and was Mayor of Dudley from 1895-97. He is Master of the Worcester Fox-Hounds, and patron of many livings. He married in 1891 Rachel, youngest daughter of Charles Gurney. Addresses: Witley Court, Stourport, Worcester; and 7 Carlton Gardens.

DUFF, The Right Hon. Sir Mountstuart Elphinstone Grant, G.C.S.I., M.A., F.R.S., P.R. Hist. Soc., D.L., son of the late James Cuninghame Grant Duff, Esq., of Eden, Aberdeenshire (formerly Resident at Sattara, and author of "The History of the Mahrattas"), by Jane Catharine, only child of the late Sir Whitelaw Ainslie, M.D. Sir M. E. Grant Duff was born in 1829, and educated at Edinburgh and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1850, and proceeded M.A. in 1853. He was called to the

Bar at the Inner Temple in 1854, having obtained a certificate of honour and a studentship in the preceding year. He entered the House of Commons in December 1857 as Member for the Elgin District of Burghs, and he continued to represent that constituency in the Liberal interest till July 1881. He was appointed Under-Secretary of State for India in December 1868, and he held that office till the downfall of Mr. Gladstone's administration in February 1874. On the formation of Mr. Gladstone's second administration in May 1880 he was appointed Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies and a Member of the Privy Council. He resigned office, together with his seat in Parliament, in July 1881, on being appointed Governor of Madras in the place of Mr. William Patrick Adam. During his successful administration of this great province, Sir M. E. Grant Duff made several tours from end to end of the Presidency in order to see with his own eyes what required to be done. In 1886 he resigned the Governorship, and was succeeded by Mr. Bourke. Sir M. E. Grant Duff was Lord Rector of the University of Aberdeen from 1866 to 1872, President of the R.G.S. from 1889-93, is a Member of the Senate of the University of London, and has been President of the Royal Historical Society from 1891. He is the author of "Studies in European Politics"; "Elgin Speeches"; "A Political Survey"; "Notes of an Indian Journey"; "Miscellanies Political and Literary"; "Memoir of Sir H. S. Maine," 1892; "Ernest Renan," 1893; "Notes from a Diary," 1851-1872 (2 vols.); "Notes from a Diary," 1872-1881 (2 vols.), 1897. He married in 1859 Anna Julia, only child of Mr. Edward Webster, of Ealing, Middlesex. Addresses: 11 Chelsea Embankment, S.W.; Lexdon Park, near Colchester; and Athenæum.

DUFFERIN and AVA, Marquis of, The Right Hon. Frederick Temple Blackwood, K.P., G.C.B., G.C.M.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., late British Ambassador at Paris, is the only son of Price, 4th Baron Dufferin, by Helen Selina, eldest daughter of the late Thomas Sheridan, Esq. (she re-married in 1862 the Earl of Gifford, and died in 1867). From Eton School his lordship was sent to Christ Church, Oxford, where he took his degree. He succeeded to his father's title, July 21, 1841, while still in his minority; and for some years he was a lord-in-waiting on the Queen under Lord John Russell's first administration, and again in 1854-58. Accompanied by a friend he went from Oxford to Ireland at the time of the famine in 1846-47, and on his return published an account of his experiences under the title of "Narrative of a Journey from Oxford to Skibbereen during the year of the Irish famine." In February 1855 he was specially attached to the mission undertaken by Lord John Russell to Vienna. In 1859 he made a yacht voyage to Iceland, a well-known narrative of which expedition he published in the following year under the title of "Letters from High Latitudes." He was sent to the East by Lord Palmerston in 1860, as British Commissioner in Syria, for the purpose of prosecuting inquiries into the massacre of the Christians there. For his services on that occasion he was nominated on his return a K.C.B. (civil division). He was Under-Secretary of State for India from 1864 to the early part of 1866, and Under-Secretary for War from the latter date to the following June. On the advent of Mr. Gladstone to power in December 1878, he was nominated Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and Paymaster-General, and he held that office till April 1872, when he was appointed Governor-General of the Dominion of Canada. In the summer of 1876 his lordship, who was accompanied by Lady Dufferin, made a very successful tour through British Columbia, where much discontent had prevailed in consequence of a belief that the conditions had been broken on which that remote province had joined the Dominion of Canada. He held the post of Governor-General of Canada till October 1879, when he was succeeded by the Marquis of Lorne. In May 1878 he was elected President of the Royal Geographical Society, and in the following month he attended the Harvard University Commemoration, when the honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Dublin also, Jan. 22, 1879, that of D.C.L. by the University of Oxford in the following June, and that of LL.D. by the University of Cambridge on June 16, 1891. In February 1879 he was appointed ambassador at St. Petersburg in succession to Lord Augustus Loftus. He was transferred to Constantinople as ambassador to the Ottoman Porte in May 1881. On Oct. 30, 1882, he was directed by her Majesty's Government to proceed from Constantinople to Cairo, there to assume the control of the whole body of our relations with Egypt, and the settlement of all questions growing out of Arabi's rebellion. He left Egypt in April 1883, and in November 1884 proceeded to India as Viceroy. In 1888 he was appointed British Ambassador at Rome, from whence he was transferred to the Embassy at Paris in December 1891. His success among the Parisians was notable; he retired from his post in 1896. His lordship was created an English baron in 1850; nominated a Knight of St. Patrick in 1863; appointed Lord Lieutenant of the county of Down in 1864; sworn a Privy Councillor, Dec. 12, 1868; was made an Earl of the United Kingdom in November 1871; and created a G.C.B. in 1883. In the same year he became Vice-Admiral of Ulster, and G.C.S.I. and G.C.I.E. in 1884. In 1888 he was created Marquis of Dufferin and Ava. From 1889 till 1892 he was Lord Rector of St. Andrews University. He was appointed Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports and Constable of Dover Castle in 1891, which office he held until 1895. In addition to the works already mentioned, Lord Dufferin is the author of "Irish Emigration and the Tenure of Land in Ireland"; "Mr. Mill's Plan for the Pacification of Ireland examined"; and "Contributions to an Inquiry into the State of Ireland"; and has edited a sumptuous collection of his mother's poems, 1894, many of which had long been separately popular. A collection of his "Speeches and Addresses" was published in 1882 under the editorship of Mr. Henry Milton, and his "Speeches in India," edited by Sir Donald Wallace, in 1890. In the autumn of 1894 he delivered the inaugural address to the Library Association Congress at Belfast. The Marquis married, in 1862, Harriot, eldest daughter of the late Captain Archibald Rowan Hamilton, of Killyleagh Castle, county Down. Address: Clandeboyne, co. Down.

DUFFY, The Hon. Sir Charles Gavan, K.C.M.G., was born in Monaghan on April 12, 1816, descended of a native family which produced eminent scholars and ecclesiastics. In his twentieth year Mr. Duffy became sub-editor of the Dublin Morning Register, and a little later editor of an influential journal in Belfast. He returned to Dublin in 1842, and established the Nation in conjunction with Thomas Davis and John Dillon. A remarkable literature sprang up in connection with the Nation, one of Mr. Duffy's contributions to which, the "Ballad Poetry of Ireland," has run through forty editions. In 1844 Mr. Duffy was tried and convicted of conspiracy along with O'Connell; the conviction, however, was set aside on appeal by the House of Lords. In 1846 O'Connell quarrelled with the Young Ireland Party, and they established the Irish Confederation, of which Mr. Duffy was one of the founders. He was tried with the other leaders of that body for treason-felony in 1848, but after four indictments it was found impossible to procure a conviction. He then revived the Nation, which had been suppressed, and opposed

Sir Thomas Redington, Under-Secretary for Ireland in the Government which had prosecuted him, and defeated that gentleman at New Ross, for which borough Mr. Duffy was elected member in July 1852. It should be mentioned that Mr. Duffy had been called to the Bar in 1846; but he practised for only a short period. He was one of the founders of the Tenant League; and in connection with Frederick Lucas and George Henry Moore, founder of the Independent Irish Party in the House of Commons, which sprang out of the League. The defection of a large section of that party induced him to resign his seat in Parliament in 1856, when he emigrated to Australia. He practised for some time at the Bar in Melbourne, but was finally drawn back to politics, and in 1857 became Minister of Public Works in the first administration under responsible government in Victoria. In the same year he was Chairman of a Select Committee in the Legislature to procure the federation of the Australian Colonies, and at a later period Chairman of a Royal Commission for the same purpose, and author of the reports of these bodies, on which the plan of federation has since been advocated. In 1858 he became Minister of Lands, which office he again accepted in a third administration in 1862. After a visit of two years to Europe, he re-entered Parliament in Victoria, and became Prime Minister in 1871. While he held this office he was Chairman of a Conference of all the Australian Governments to procure certain enlargements of their powers, which have since been conceded by the Imperial Parliament. In the following year he resigned office, and in 1873 was knighted. On his return to the colony in 1876, after two years' absence in Europe, he was chosen a member of the Legislative Assembly on the first vacancy occurring; and on the meeting of a new Parliament in May 1877 he was unanimously elected Speaker. In the same year he was created a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and George. Sir Gavan Duffy was Chairman of the Trustees of the National Gallery of Victoria, and has taken an active share in projects for encouraging art, literature, and industrial enterprise in that new country. He returned to Europe in 1880, and has since published "Young Ireland: a Fragment of Irish History, 1840-50," London, 1880; and "Four Years of Irish History, 1845-49," published in 1883, being a sequel to "Young Ireland"; and in 1892, "Conversations with Carlyle," which had a remarkable success. He has also published "The League of North and South," a "Life of Thomas Davis," and a "Bird's-Eye View of Irish History." He has written on Colonial and Irish questions in the Contemporary Review, Nineteenth Century, and National Review. In 1891 he became President of the newly-founded Irish Literary Society (London), and delivered its inaugural address. Since that period he has resided chiefly at Nice. In January 1898 he published his Memoirs, in two volumes. The first edition was sold in a month, and the provinces received it with great favour, and American and Australian editions have been welcomed by leading journals in both countries. Though he has commenced his eighty-third year, his health is fairly good, and he is able to pursue literary work without intermission. Address: 12 Boulevard Victor Hugo, Nice.

DUGDALE, John Stratford, Q.C., is the second son of W. S. Dugdale, of Merevale Hall, Warwickshire, and was born on July 30, 1835. He was educated at Eton and Merton College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1857, and was subsequently called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in June 1862. He practises on the Midland Circuit, was appointed Recorder of Grantham in 1874, and became Recorder of Birmingham in 1878. Mr. Dugdale is Chancellor of the diocese of Worcester, was appointed a Q.C. in 1882, and is the author of "Punishments and Conviction at Quarter Sessions." Address: 1 Paper Buildings, Temple, E.C.

DULEEP SINGH, Prince Victor Albert Jay, was born in London, July 10, 1866, and is the eldest son of the late Maharajah of Lahore. He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was gazetted to the 1st Dragoons in 1888, and until 1890 was honorary aide-de-camp to General Ross at Halifax, Nova Scotia. In January 1898 he married the second daughter of the Earl of Coventry. Club: Boodle's.

DÜMMLEB, Ernst Ludwig, a German historian, was born at Berlin, Jan. 2, 1830, studied at Bonn and Berlin, and settled in 1855 at Halle, where he was appointed Extraordinary Professor of History in 1858, and ordinary Professor in 1866. He is a Member of the Academy of Munich, and since 1871 he has been an ordinary Member of the Historical Commission of Munich, and of the central committee for the publication of Monumenta Germanica. He was elected a corresponding Member of the French Academy of Sciences, March 30, 1882. Among his works we may mention: "The Pilgrim of Passau, and the Archbishopric of Lorch," 1854; "On the Early History of the Slavs in Dalmatia," 1856; "The Formulary of Bishop Salomo III. of Constance," 1857; "History of the Kingdom of the Eastern Franks," 2 vols., 1862-65, his principal work, which was "crowned" with two prizes; "Auxilius and Bulgarius," 1866; "Anselm the Peripatetic," 1872; and "The Emperor Otho the Great," 1876.

DUNCAN, Sara Jeanette. See COTES, MRS. EVERARD.

DUNMORE, Earl of, Charles Adolphus Murray, was born March 24, 1841, and succeeded his father as 7th Earl in 1845. He was formerly Lord-Lieutenant of Stirlingshire, and served the office of Lord-in-Waiting from 1874 to 1880. Lord Dunmore was for a time in the army, and retired after reaching the rank of Captain in the Scots Guards. He is the author of "Pamirs, Kashmir, Western Tibet, &c.," 1893; and "Ormsdale," 1895. He was married in 1866 to the third daughter of the 2nd Earl of Leicester. Addresses: 61 Great Cumberland Place, W.; and Dunmore Park, Falkirk, Stirlingshire.

DUNN, James Nicol, journalist, editor of the Morning Post, eldest son of Joseph Dunn and Margaret Macleod, was born in Kincardineshire, N.B., on Oct. 12, 1856, and was educated at Aberdeen. During his student days he wrote for magazines and journals; and, after a brief period in a law office, he received a position on the staff of the Dundee Advertiser before he was twenty years of age. Shortly afterwards he obtained an appointment on the Scotsman, and he remained connected with that journal for many years, being finally transferred from Edinburgh to Glasgow, where he had charge of the West of Scotland staff. On several occasions he acted as the special correspondent of the Scotsman, notably in the crofter disturbances in the Hebrides. While in Glasgow he contributed to Quiz along with A. S. Boyd, William Canton, John Davidson, and others, and he assisted in launching Art and Literature and Pen and Pencil. In 1888 he became managing editor of the Scots Observer, and was associated along with William Ernest Henley in the direction of that journal after its title was changed to the National Observer and its place of publication was removed from Edinburgh to London. He joined the Pall Mall Gazette as news editor, under H. C. Cust, in 1893. From 1895 to 1897 he was editor of Black and White and the Ludgate. He entered on the editorship of the Morning Post on the 1st May 1897. Address: Morning Post Office, Strand, W.C.

DUNN, Sir William, Bart., was born at Paisley in 1833, and is the son of John Dunn and Isabella Chalmers. He was educated in his native town, for which he has been Member since 1891. He has spent most of his life in South Africa, and is the senior partner in Dunn & Co., of London, Durban, and Port Elizabeth. After his return to England he was made Honorary Consul-General for the Orange Free State. He is married to Sarah Elizabeth, daughter of James Howse, of Grahamstown. Address: 34 Philimore Gardens, Kensington, W., &c.

DUNRAVEN, Earl of, The Right Hon. Windham Thomas Wyndham-Quin, K.P., 4th Earl of Dunraven and Mount-Earl, only son of the 3rd Earl by his first wife, Augusta, daughter of Thomas Gould, Esq., was born at Adare Manor, on Feb. 1, 1841. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, and while there was appointed Lieutenant in the Oxford University Rifle Volunteers. He entered the 1st Life Guards in 1865, but retired two years after. During his service in the Household Brigade he won a good deal of popularity as a steeplechase rider. After leaving the army he went to Abyssinia as correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, in which capacity also for the same journal he followed the Franco-German war. In 1871 he succeeded to the title and estates. His lordship was Under-Secretary for the Colonies in Lord Salisbury's two administrations, but resigned in February 1887. In 1888 he was appointed Chairman of the House of Lords Committee on the Sweating System, and devoted much time and labour to that difficult question. Though unable to convert his colleagues to his views on the subject, the principles of his minority report have been accepted as the basis for much subsequent legislation. In 1889 he was offered, but declined, the Governorship of the Cape. Lord Dunraven was elected to the London County Council for the division of Wandsworth in 1895, and has devoted much attention to the financial affairs of the Council, and to the question of the Housing of the Working Classes. He was re-elected to the Council in 1898, in which year also he was appointed Chairman of the Irish Horse-Breeding Commission. Lord Dunraven has travelled much in America, and besides his well-known book "The Great Divide," has contributed many articles to the Nineteenth Century, recounting sporting experiences in the Far West. He has also been a copious writer on political and economic subjects. As a yachtsman he is now famous, his chief victories having been achieved with three successive Valkyries, and with a smart cutter, Audrey, which was built from his own design. He twice challenged for the America Cup, with Valkyrie II. in 1893, and Valkyrie III. in 1895, but was unsuccessful on both occasions. The latter race turned out a most vexatious affair. A yacht named Defender was specially built to oppose Valkyrie III., and the contest was to be the best three out of five races. The first race resulted in an easy victory for the Defender. In the second a collision occurred between the rival yachts, and although the Valkyrie finished first a protest was lodged against her, and the race was awarded to the Defender. The third and final race in the contest ended in a fiasco, Valkyrie withdrawing immediately after the yachts had crossed the starting line. A great deal of acrimonious discussion ensued, which ended in Lord Dunraven publishing a pamphlet in which he deals very seriously with the contest, and the way in which the yachts were hampered, owing to the dangerously crowded waters. He also speaks of the foul in the second race, and the curious behaviour of the mark tug-boat, and concludes with an appendix giving the whole of the correspondence on the subject. Lord Dunraven has long held a Board of Trade certificate as a master mariner, and in 1898 he succeeded in passing the examination for an extra master's certificate, being the first yachtsman to do so. In 1895 he was appointed Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of the county of Limerick, and also Lieutenant of the City of Limerick. He was created a Privy Councillor at the New Year, 1899. Lord Dunraven married in 1869 Florence, daughter of Lord Charles Lennox Kerr. The family seats are Dunraven Castle, Glamorgan; Adare Manor, co. Limerick; Garinish, co. Kerry; and Kenry House, Putney Vale.

DUNSTAN, Wyndham Rowland, M.A., F.R.S., is the eldest son of the late John Dunstan, Governor of Chester Castle (1810-1869), by his marriage with Emily Catherine, eldest daughter of Ciprian Potter, the well-known musician, who was Principal of the Royal Academy of Music from 1820 to 1865. He was born on May 24, 1861, and was educated at the Bedford Grammar School. On leaving school, where he had already acquired a strong interest in physical science, he came to London and devoted himself to the study of chemistry, in which subject he attended the principal lectures given in the metropolis. He also gave a considerable amount of time to the study of logic and mental philosophy, and in 1880 he took a leading part in founding the Aristotelian Society, which was the means of bringing together those who were interested in these subjects, particularly in their relation to physical science. Professor Dunstan was a Vice-President of the Society from 1882 to 1889, and when in 1890 the Society decided to publish a journal he became its first editor. In 1883 he was appointed Demonstrator of Chemistry in the University Laboratories, Oxford, and from that time forward he has devoted his attention almost exclusively to educational and scientific work in this subject. At Oxford he organised a systematic course of practical instruction in Organic Chemistry, which had not then attained the importance as a branch of chemical instruction which it now has. At this time the University had commenced to develop the scientific teaching of medicine, and Mr. Dunstan was entrusted by the Waynflete Professor of Chemistry with the organisation of the teaching of chemistry in its relations to medicine. For several years he was Lecturer in Organic Chemistry in its relations to physiology and medicine, and afterwards University Lecturer in Chemical Pharmacology, an appointment which he resigned in 1892 on becoming Lecturer on Chemistry at St. Thomas's Hospital. Mr. Dunstan was for some years Professor of Chemistry to the Pharmaceutical Society, in which capacity he initiated the work of a laboratory for scientific research, from which numerous contributions to chemistry and chemical pharmacology have been made by him and his pupils. Professor Dunstan took a prominent part in the movement in favour of reforming the methods of teaching elementary science in schools, which led in 1887 to the appointment by the British Association of a Committee which was charged to inquire into and report upon the methods of teaching then adopted. Of this Committee, which sat for three years, Professor Dunstan was the secretary, and he was largely concerned in drawing up the several reports which it made. The recommendations of the Committee have been widely adopted, and the improvement which has taken place during the last few years, both in the status and mode of teaching elementary science in schools, has been chiefly due to its action. In 1896 Professor Dunstan was requested by the Council of the Imperial Institute to undertake the Directorship of the Scientific and Technical Department of the Institute, which was brought into existence with the aid of the Royal Commissioners of the 1861 Exhibition. This Department is intended to serve as an Imperial Bureau of Scientific and Technical Advice. It includes a staff of skilled assistants and Scientific and Technical Referees and large Laboratories intended chiefly for the investigation of various Indian and Colonial natural products with a view to their commercial utilisation. It has already rendered important service to certain of the Colonies, and especially to the Government of India, in advising as to the utilisation of new or little-known products, including timbers, minerals, fibres, food materials, drugs, &c., and has demonstrated the practical value of science in its application to the development of the natural resources of India and the Colonies. In 1886 Professor Dunstan received the degree of Master of Arts, honoris causa, from the University of Oxford, and in 1893 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. He is also Senior Secretary of the Chemical Society, and an Examiner in the Universities of Oxford and London and to the Science and Art Department. He has been Examiner in the University of Cambridge, the Royal College of Physicians, and the Institute of Chemistry. He is also a Governor and Member of Council of the London School of Medicine for Women. Professor Dunstan is the author of numerous scientific contributions, which have appeared in the Philosophical Transactions and Proceedings of the Royal Society, the Transactions of the Chemical Society, and in other journals. In 1886 he married Emilie Fordyce, daughter of George Francis Maclean, Haremere Hall. She died in 1893. Addresses: Queen Anne's Mansions, St. James's Park, S.W.; and White Hill, Criss, Hants.

DU PLAT, Sir Charles Taylor, K.C.B., late Major-General in the Royal Artillery, and since 1893 Extra Equerry-in-Ordinary to the Queen, was born in 1822, and is the son of Brigadier-General G. C. D. Du Plat, R.E., K.H., and the late Pauline, Countess Hardenberg. After passing through Woolwich, he served in the Royal Artillery from 1841 to 1880, when he retired on full pay. From 1854 to 1861 he was Equerry to the Prince Consort, and from 1861 to 1893 he was Equerry-in-Ordinary to the Queen. Sir Charles Du Plat is decorated with the first class of the Prussian Order of the Red Eagle and the Grand Cross Ducal Saxon Order of Ernestine. He married (1), in 1855, Maria Christina, daughter of the late Sir William C. C. Dalryell, Bart. (she died in 1867), and (2), in 1897, Ann, eldest daughter of J. S. Forbes, of Chelsea. Addresses: 2 Carlisle Place, Victoria Street, S.W.; and Ashley, Winchfield, Hants.

DUPRÉ, August, Ph.D., F.R.S., F.I.C., &c., born at Mainz (Mayence), on Sept. 6, 1835, where his father, although a citizen of the then free city of Frankfurt, at that time resided. Both father and mother were descendants of Huguenot families who, after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, had immigrated into the Bavarian Palatinate. After passing through the polytechnic schools of Giessen and Darmstadt, he studied for three years at the Universities of Giessen and Heidelberg, under Bunsen, taking his degrees of M.A. and Ph.D. in 1855 at the latter university. In the same year he came to London, where he has remained ever since. In 1863 he was elected Lecturer on Chemistry to the Westminster Hospital Medical School (a post which he resigned in 1897). He has since that time been actively engaged as a scientific and consulting chemist. He has published many original papers on subjects connected with Chemistry, Physiology, Toxicology, Food Analysis, and Water, in the Philosophical Transactions, Proceedings of the Royal Society, Journal of the Chemical Society, Analyst, and in the Annual Reports of the Medical Officer to the Local Government Board, &c. In 1871 he was appointed Chemical Referee to the Medical Department of the Local Government Board; in 1872, Chemical Adviser to the Explosive Department of the Home Office; in 1873, Public Analyst for the Westminster District; and in 1888 he was appointed a member of the War Office Committee on Explosives, under the presidency of Sir F. Abel, C.B. (which post he now holds). In his connection with the Home Office his name came prominently before the public in relation to the various dynamite outrages. He has frequently been consulted by various Government Departments, viz., the Treasury, the Board of Trade, the Wreck Commissioners' Court, &c.; and also by the late Metropolitan Board of Works, especially with regard to the treatment and disposal of the metropolitan sewage. He has, in conjunction with Dr. Thudichum, published a book on "The Nature, Origin, and Use of Wine," 1872; and, in conjunction with Dr. H. Wilson Hake, "A Short Manual of Chemistry," 1886. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1875, and was President of the Society of Public Analysts in the years 1877-78; was one of the chief scientific witnesses on behalf of the Crown in the famous Dr. Lamson's poisoning case; and was President of Section III. of the British Sanitary Congress held at Bolton in 1887. In 1870 he was for some time attached to a field-hospital, established by the English Red Cross Society, for the treatment of both German and French wounded in the Franco-Prussian War. He married, in 1876, Florence M. Robberds, daughter of H. T. Robberds, of Manchester, by whom he has a family of four sons and one daughter. Address: 2 Edinburgh Mansions, Howich Place.

DUPUIS, Jean Baptiste Daniel, French sculptor and engraver, was born at Blois, Feb. 15, 1849, and entered the École des Beaux Arts, where he was a pupil of Cavalier. His first bust was seen in the Salon in 1869, and, in 1872, he carried off the Prix de Rome. His chief works have been: "Posterity crowning the Genius of the Arts," "The Union of Paris and the Republic on the Altar of the Native Land" (1880), which gained the prize in the competition of the Town of Paris. He has exhibited many medals and portrait medallions, and was decorated with the Legion d'Honneur in 1881.

DUPUY, Charles Alexandre, French statesman, was born at Le Puy on Nov. 5, 1851. His parents were in humble circumstances, his father having been an official at the local prefecture. M. Dupuy began life as a professor of philosophy at the colleges of Nantua and Aurillac, and at various Lycées. In 1880 he was appointed School Inspector at Mende, and afterwards inspected schools at Caen and at Ajaccio, where he was appointed Vice-Rector of the Corsican College. At the elections of 1885 he was returned to the Chamber of Deputies as Opportunist Republican Member for the Haute-Loire. In Parliament he has been particularly devoted to the interests of primary education, and in 1886 brought forward a proposal to transfer the nomination of schoolmasters from the prefects of departments to the rectors of academies, but he withdrew his proposition in face of the opposition it met with. He has been a member of various Public Instruction Committees. At the elections of September 1889 he was returned for the Puy by a large majority over his monarchist opponent. In December 1892 he took office, for the first time, under M. Ribot, and succeeded that statesman as Premier in March 1893. He was one of the candidates for the Presidency of the French Republic, his marked courage on the occasion of the bomb explosion in the Chamber having made a great impression in his favour. He went out of office at the beginning of 1895, and was succeeded by M. Ribot. In consequence of the Dreyfus inquiry, it has become known that M. Dupuy, by concealing the alleged dealings of that officer with Germany from the then President, M. Casimir-Périer, brought about the latter's resignation. On the fall of the Brisson Cabinet in October 1898, the President appealed to M. Dupuy to form its successor, which he did with little delay, retaining MM. Delcassé, Lockroy, Peytral, and Vigel, and obtaining the support of MM. de Freycinet and Leygues. He decided to allow the Dreyfus case to pass from the domain of politics to that of justice. Paris address : 18 Quai de Béthune.

DURAND, Alice Marie Céleste, French authoress (who writes under the name of Henri Gréville), was born in Paris. She was carefully educated at home, and when, at the age of fourteen, she accompanied her father, Professor Fleury, to St. Petersburg, she was familiar with several modern languages. She soon began to publish novels and stories on Russian life and character, and continued writing after her marriage with M. Durand, a French professor of law. In 1872 she returned to France, and began to write for the Revue des Deux Mondes, Figaro, Le Temps, and other periodicals and papers. Under the name of Henri Gréville she has published a large number of novels, amongst which may be mentioned, "Dosia," "L'Expiation de Savéli," 1876; "Nouvelles Russes," "Sonia," "La Maison de Maurice," "Autour d'un Phare," 1877; "Bonne Marie," "L'Amie," "Un Violon Russe," "Lucie Rodey," 1879; "Croquis," "Cité Menard," 1880; "Mme. de Dreux," "Perdue," 1881; "Le Fiancé de Sylve," "Rose Rozier," 1882; "Une Trahison," "Le Vœu de Nadier," "Louis Breuil," 1883; "Le Mors aux Dents," 1885; "Cleopâtre," 1886; "La Fille de Dosia," 1887; "Comédies de Paravent," 1888; "L'Avenir d'Aline," 1889; "Le Passé," and "Un Mystère," 1890; and "L'Héritière," 1891. One of her last works is "Un Peu de Marvie." Her Paris address is 174 Rue de Grenelle.

DURAND, Charles Auguste Emile, known as Carolus-Duran, French painter, was born at Lille, July 4, 1838. He received his early art education at the municipal school in his native town, and in 1855 went to Paris. He gained the Wicar travelling scholarship and went to Italy, and at Rome painted "La Prière du Soir," exhibited at the Salon in 1865. For "L'Assassiné," 1866, he was awarded his first medal. This picture was purchased by the Government for the Museum at Lille. M. Carolus-Duran resided for a year in Spain, and the influence of Velasquez is clearly seen in his "St. Francis of Assisi," exhibited at the Paris Salon in 1868. But the fame of Carolus-Duran rests principally on his portraits, which are very numerous. Among them may be mentioned that of Emile Girardin, those of his daughter, and the equestrian portrait of Mlle. Croizette, the well-known actress. In 1890 he joined the dissident party among French painters, who in that year opened the Champ-de-Mars exhibition in opposition to the old Salon. Here he exhibited five portraits of ladies. He is a Commander of the Legion of Honour, and of several foreign orders. He is represented at the Luxembourg Museum by his famous picture of "La Dame au Gant" and another portrait, "Lilia." His Paris address is 11 Passage Stanislas.

DURAND, Sir Henry Mortimer, K.C.S.I., K.C.I.E., is the second son of the late Major-General Sir Henry Marion Durand and Anna, daughter of Sir J. M'Caskill, K.C.B., and was born in 1850. Entering the diplomatic service he became Junior Attaché (Foreign Department) in 1874, and Assistant-Secretary in the same in 1877. In 1879 he was sent out on political duty with the Kabul field force. From 1880 to 1885 he was Under-Secretary in the Foreign Department of the Government of India, and subsequently became Secretary. In 1885 he was made C.I.E. and C.S.I. In 1893 he conducted an important diplomatic mission at Kabul, the object of which was to establish cordial relations between the Ameer's Government and our own. On his return from Afghanistan he was made K.C.S.I. and K.C.I.E. He was subsequently appointed British Minister Plenipotentiary to Persia, and started for the Shah's dominions on Oct. 2, 1894. Sir Mortimer Durand married in 1875 Ella, daughter of T. Sandys, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn. Addresses: Teheran; and Athenæum.

DUSE, Signora Eleonora, was born in Venice in 1861. Her father and grandfather were well-known actors, and she herself appeared on the stage before she was thirteen. She received her dramatic training in a company of strolling players, and found recognition at Naples. She learned the gospel of self-restraint at an early age, and has kept it. Her dramatic method is remarkable. "She does not 'make up' her face—she uses no cosmetics, no rouge, no powder. She does not make an artificially-prepared entry, but mingles with the crowd on the stage, glides silently among them, all unnoticed by the audience, but when she steps out of the ranks, and speaks . . . she throws herself into her work with so much spirit and feeling that the play seems an actuality." She won her first laurels in New York in 1893, and enjoyed an immense success at Boston. In 1893 and 1894 she played in London at the Lyric Theatre during the season, her répertoire including the best-known plays of Victorien Sardou and Dumas, Ibsen's "Doll's House," and the Italian dramatists. She had the honour of appearing before the Queen at Windsor in 1894, the comedy chosen for representation being "La Locandiera," by Goldoni. She again appeared in London during 1896 and 1897,

DVORÁK, Pan Antonin, Bohemian musician, was born on Sept. 8, 1841, at the village of Nelahozeves, near Prague, where his father was a butcher and innkeeper. As a child he showed great aptitude for the violin; but for a long time he was ignorant of the most elementary rules of music. After leaving school he earned his living by playing in a band of wandering village minstrels, and his first attempt at composition was a dance which the members of this band tried to play; but as the young composer was unaware that the music should have been written in different clefs for the different instruments, the result was terrible discord and utter failure. He then gave up composing, and went to Prague in 1857, where for the first time he heard the names of the great composers, and was present at the performance of an opera; here he was able to hire a piano and give lessons, and in 1874, a year after his marriage, he gained a competition scholarship at Vienna. In 1875 he gained £50, and in 1876 £60, but it was not until 1878 that his name became at all well known; at that time he published his "Moravian Duets" at Berlin, which were at once favourably received, and opened the way for further compositions. His dances, songs, and symphonies have all found favour with the best critics; but the "Stabat Mater" (performed at the Birmingham Festival) and "König und Köhler" (The King and the Charcoal Burners) are perhaps his most popular works. One of his later works is the oratorio "St. Ludmila," founded on the poem of the young Bohemian poet, Yaroslav Vrchlicky, the subject being the introduction of Christianity into Bohemia. This was performed with great success at the Leeds Musical Festival, October 1886, under the personal direction of Herr Dvorák. He has also composed several operas, which have been either performed or published in Germany. Of these "Le Paysan Mutin," may be mentioned. His most ambitious work is the Symphony in D, and a cantata, "The Spectre's Bride," produced at the Birmingham Festival in 1885. His opera "Jacobin" was favourably received in 1889. He left his post at the Conservatoire of Prague in 1892 to accept the Directorship of that of New York.

DWIGHT, Timothy, D.D., LL.D., was born at Norwich, Connecticut, Nov. 16, 1828. He graduated from Yale College in 1849, continued his studies at New Haven for two years, and then entered the Theological Seminary connected with Yale College, 1851-53, filling meanwhile a tutorship at the College, 1851-55. He was licensed to preach in 1855; spent 1856-58 in Europe; and on his return was appointed, 1858, Professor of Sacred Literature at Yale. On May 20, 1886, he was elected President of the College, to succeed Dr Noah Porter, resigned. President Dwight was an associate editor of the New Englander, and was an active member of the American Committee for the Revision of the English Version of the Bible from 1872 to 1885. He has published many articles on various topics, and has annotated the English translation of Meyer on Romans, and on other Epistles. In 1886 he translated (with notes) Godet on the Gospel of John.

DYKE, The Right Hon. Sir William Hart, Bart., M.P., J.P., D.L., second son of the late Sir Percyvall Hart Dyke, and Elizabeth, daughter of W. Wells, Bichley Park, Kent, was born at East Hall, St. Mary Cray, Kent, Aug. 7, 1837, and educated at Harrow and Christchurch, Oxford, where he took his degree in 1861. He represented West Kent in the Conservative interest from 1865 to 1867, and the Mid-Division of the same county until 1885, when he was returned for the NW. or Dartford Division. He was Whip of the Conservative party from 1868 to 1880; Patronage Secretary to the Treasury from 1874 to 1880, and Chief Secretary for Ireland in Lord Salisbury's Government from June 1885 to January 1886. At the general elections in 1886, 1892, and 1895, he was again returned for North-West Kent. From 1887 to 1892 he was Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education. He is a J.P. and D.L. for Kent. He married Emily, daughter of the 7th Earl of Sandwich, in 1870. Address: Lullingstone Castle, Dartford, Kent.

EADE, Sir Peter, M.D., F.R.C.P., J.P., the son of Peter Eade of Blofield, was born at Acle, Norfolk, in 1825, was educated at Yarmouth Grammar School and King's College, London. He has practised as a Physician in Norwich since 1856, and is now Consulting Physician to the Norfolk and Norwich Hospital. Sir Peter has, besides, interested himself in municipal matters, inasmuch as he has served the office of Sheriff of Norwich from 1880 to 1881, and he has been Mayor of that city on three separate occasions, viz., 1883-84, 1893-94, and 1895. He is a great advocate of temperance, and has also studied the question of providing fresh air, and suitable recreations, for the working classes. He is the author of: "Local Notes on Health and Archæology"; "Medical Notes on Diphtheria and Influenza"; "The Parish of St. Giles, Norwich," 1886. He was knighted in 1885. Address: 68 St. Giles's Street, Norwich.

EAMES, Madame Emma. See STORY, MADAME EMMA EAMES.

EARLE, The Right Rev. Alfred, D.D., Suffragan Bishop of Marlborough, is the son of Henry Earle, F.R.C.S., and was born in 1828. He was educated at Eton, and Hertford College, Oxford, where he was a scholar of his college, and graduated in 1854. Ordained in 1858, he became curate of St. Edmond's, Salisbury, and then held the rectory of Monkton-Farleigh, Wilts, from 1863 to 1865. In the latter year he was appointed Vicar of West Alvington, Devon; and during his tenure of that living, he became Rural Dean, Archdeacon of Totnes in 1872, and a Prebendary of Exeter Cathedral. He acted as Examining Chaplain to Bishops Temple and Bickersteth, and was installed a Canon Residentiary of Exeter Cathedral in 1886. Mr. Earle was, in 1888, appointed Suffragan Bishop of Marlborough, the west and north-west of London being under his charge; at the same time he was presented to the rectory of St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate, and became a Prebendary of St. Paul's Cathedral. He received the hon. degree of D.D. from his University. The Bishop is the author of various charges, which have been printed at the request of the clergy, the most important being upon "Church Reform"; "The Reform of Patronage"; "Reform of Episcopal Visitations"; "Our Duty to the Nonconformists"; "Our Duty to the Masses"; "Some Pressing Duties of Churchwardens and Clergy," 1874; "On Consecutive and Systematic Church Education," 1873; "Work in West and North-West London," 1897.

EARLE, Professor the Rev. J., of Swanswick Rectory, Bath, son of John Earle, landowner, was born Jan. 29, 1824, at Elston, in the parish of Churchstowe, near Kingsbridge, South Devon. He became a private pupil in the house of the Rev. Orlando Manley, then incumbent of Plymstock; and from Mr. Manley's he went to the Plymouth New Grammar School, where he stayed, until, the ancient Grammar School at Kingsbridge having been reconstituted, he was entered there for the last year before he went to Oxford. He began to reside in 1842. In 1845 he was in the first class of Litteræ Humaniores, and took his B.A. In 1848 he was elected Fellow of Oriel on a Devonshire foundation. In 1849 he took the degree of M.A., and was elected Professor of Anglo-Saxon, an office at that time tenable for only five years. In the same year he was ordained Deacon by Samuel Wilberforce, Bishop of Oxford. In 1852 he became College Tutor in succession to Mr. Buckle, now Canon of Wells. On March 5, 1856, in a game of racquets, he was struck in the left eye, which caused a permanent infirmity of sight. In 1857 he was presented by Oriel College to the rectory of Swanswick, near Bath. He was appointed by the Bishop of Bath and Wells (Lord Arthur Hervey), in 1871 to the prebend of Wanstrow in Wells Cathedral; and in 1873 to be Rural Dean of Bath, an office which he discharged until 1877. In 1876 he was re-elected Professor of Anglo-Saxon in the University of Oxford, the tenure of this Professorship having in the meantime been made permanent. The following is a list of his chief publications: "Gloucester Fragments (St. Swithun, &c.)," 1861; "Bath, Ancient and Modern," 1864; "Two of the Saxon Chronicles Parallel," 1865; "The Philology of the English Tongue," 1871 (5th edit., 1892); "A Book for the Beginner in Anglo-Saxon," 1877 (3rd edit., 1884); "English Plant Names from the Tenth to the Fifteenth Century," 1880; "Anglo-Saxon Literature," 1884; "A Hand-Book of the Land Charters and other Saxon Documents," 1888; "English Prose: its Elements, History, and Usage," 1890; "The Psalter of 1539: A Landmark in English Literature," 1894; "A Simple Grammar of English now in Use," 1898. He married Jane, daughter of the Rev. George Rolleston, of Maltby, West Riding, in 1863. Addresses: Swanswick Rectory, Bath; and 15 Norham Road, Oxford.

EASTLAKE, Charles Locke, a younger son of the late Mr. George Eastlake, Deputy Judge Advocate to the Fleet, was born at Plymouth and educated at Westminster School, where he gained a Queen's Scholarship. He is now a member of the Governing Body. At an early age he was closely associated with his uncle, Sir Charles Eastlake, then President of the Royal Academy, by whose advice he became a pupil of the well-known architect, Mr. Philip Hardwick, R.A., and afterwards passed through the Royal Academy Schools, obtaining the Silver Medal for Architectural Drawings in 1854. Mr. Eastlake subsequently travelled for three years on the Continent, sketching architecture in France, Italy, and Germany. During a protracted stay at Nuremberg he studied in the atelier of Kreling, and at that time was half inclined to adopt the profession of a painter. On his return to England, having but little practice as an architect, Mr. Eastlake turned his attention to design in those minor arts which had hitherto been scarcely recognised as a field for the exercise of educated taste, viz.: domestic furniture, textile fabrics, wall-papers, and metal-work. For some years he was largely consulted on such matters, and an illustrated book which he published under the title of "Hints on Household Taste" went through four editions, becoming especially popular in America. In 1867 Mr. Eastlake was elected Secretary of the Royal Institute of British Architects, an appointment which he held for eleven years, conducting the correspondence, editing the transactions, and managing the official work of that Society. While thus engaged, he published, in 1870, a "History of the Gothic Revival" in English architecture, a work of more than merely professional interest, and one which was extensively reviewed at the time. In 1878 Lord Beaconsfield (then Prime Minister) appointed Mr. Eastlake Keeper and Secretary of the National Gallery. The present building, of which the front portion was erected in 1832-8, had up to 1869 been partly tenanted by the Royal Academy. After the removal of that body to Burlington House, many rooms on the ground floor of the National Gallery long remained unoccupied. These were at length devoted to the exhibition of the Turner Water-Colour Collection, including several hundred drawings, previously unseen by the public. They were disposed on the walls and in cases under the personal superintendence of the Keeper. In the larger galleries on the upper floor, pictures had, for want of space, been hung with but little regard to method. An extension of the building in 1888 enabled Mr. Eastlake to re-arrange them, systematically classified under the several schools of painting to which they belong. They have also been protected by glass from the deleterious effect of London atmosphere, and compare favourably in point of preservation with many pictures abroad. Among other improvements effected during Mr. Eastlake's term of office is the additional accommodation provided for the work of art-students and copyists, who, in acknowledgment of the service, presented him with a testimonial on his retirement in 1898. He was at the same time thanked by the Trustees of the National Gallery for the efficient manner in which he had discharged his duties during his twenty years' tenure of office. In addition to the literary works above mentioned, Mr. Eastlake has recently published one on "Pictures at the National Gallery," illustrated in photogravure by Franz Hanfstaengl, as well as a series of social essays entitled "Our Square and Circle." He has also been an occasional contributor to several magazines and journals, including the Nineteenth Century, Fraser, the Cornhill, Scribner, Punch, the London Review, and the Building News. Addresses: 41 Leinster Square, Bayswater; and Athenæum.

ECHEGARAY, José, Spanish dramatist, was born at Madrid in 1835. Having finished his studies, he was appointed in 1858 Professor of Mathematics at the Engineering College in Madrid, and in consequence of his mathematical works on Analytical Geometry and Physics he was made a Member of the Academy of Sciences in 1866. It is, however, chiefly as a dramatist that Señor Echegaray is known. His first work was "La Esposa del Vendedor" (1874), which was a great success, and led him to continue in the same path. His other chief works have been: "La Ultima Noche," 1875; "El Gran Galeoto," 1881, which has been translated into most European languages; "Dos Fanatismos," 1887. His "Folly or Saintliness" was translated into English in 1895, and in the next year a performance of his "Mariana" was given at the Court Theatre by the Independent Theatre Society, in which Mr. H. B. Irving and Miss Elizabeth Robins much distinguished themselves.

EDEN, The Right Rev. George Rodney, Bishop of Wakefield, formerly Suffragan Bishop of Dover in succession to the late Bishop Parry, was born in Sunderland on Sept. 9, 1853, and is the third son of the late Canon Eden, Rector of Sedgfield. Educated at Pembroke College, Cambridge, of which he was a scholar, he took his B.A. in 1876, after being placed in the second class of the Classical Tripos. He was afterwards in the second class of the Theological Tripos, and obtained the Carus Greek Testament prize in 1878. He was ordained in 1878. He has been Assistant-Master at Aysgarth School, 1878-79; Domestic Chaplain to the Bishop of Durham, 1879-83; Vicar of Auckland St. Andrew with St. Anne and St. Philip, 1883-90; Rural Dean of Auckland, 1887-90; Canon and Archdeacon of Canterbury, 1890. He was consecrated Bishop of Dover in October 1890. In 1892 he was appointed Chaplain to the Cinque Ports, and was translated to the See of Wakefield on Nov. 4, 1897. In 1889 he married Constance, daughter of Canon Ellison. Address: Bishopgarth, Wakefield; and Athenæum.

EDEN, The Rev. Robert, M.A., son of the late Rev. Thomas Eden, born at Whitehall, near Bristol, was educated at a private school near that city. Having first entered at St. John's College, Oxford, as Bible Clerk, he became Scholar, and afterwards Fellow of Corpus Christi College, where he graduated B.A. in 1825, and M.A. in 1827. He was appointed an Examiner at Oxford in 1828-29, was successively Head-Master of Hackney and Camberwell Collegiate Schools between 1829 and 1838; and held the post of Examiner for the East India Civil Service from 1839 to 1856; was Chaplain to the Bishop of Norwich in 1849; Vicar of North Walsham in 1851; Honorary Canon of Norwich in 1852; and Vicar of Wymondham in 1854. Canon Eden is the author of the "Churchman's Theological Dictionary"; "The Examination and Writings of Archdeacon Philpot, with Biography," for the Parker Society; "Some Thoughts on the Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures," 1864; and "The Title Page of the Revised Version," 1887. He has also edited theological works for the Clarendon Press, and has published a volume of sermons. Address: Wymondham Vicarage, Norfolk.

EDGE, The Hon. Sir John, Q.C., was born in 1841, educated at Trinity College, Dublin, called to the Irish Bar in 1864, and to the English Bar at the Middle Temple in 1866. In 1886 he was appointed Chief-Justice of the High Court of Judicature of the North-Western Provinces of India. In March 1898 he was appointed Member of the Council of India in succession to Sir Charles Turner, K.C.I.E. Club: East India United Service.

EDINBURGH, Duke and Duchess of. See SAXE-COBURG AND GOTHA.

EDIS, Robert William, J.P., F.S.A., F.R.I.B.A., architect, born at Huntingdon in 1839, was educated at the Local Grammar School, and afterwards at the Brewers' Company's School at Aldenham. He became a member of the Architectural Association early in his professional life, and was elected President for two successive years; Associate of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1862, a Fellow in 1867, a member of Council in 1888, and Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries in 1870. He has travelled much in many countries, and in the early part of his career made a series of architectural sketches in France, Italy, and Germany, some of which were published in the Building News and other professional journals. He has written and lectured on domestic art and sanitation, and published various books on those subjects. He is one of the leaders of the modern revival of red brick and so-called "Queen Anne" architecture. In 1882 he went to America to advise as to the laying out of a new city in Kansas State. In 1888 he was invited by the Society of Arts to give a series of Cantor Lectures on the "Decoration and Furniture of Town Houses," since illustrated and published in book form. He wrote the article on "Internal Decoration from a Sanitary Point of View," in Our Homes; and the hand-book on "Healthy Furniture," for the Council of the International Health Exhibition. Amongst his principal and latest works are: the additions to the Inner Temple Library, the Constitutional Club in Northumberland Avenue, the Junior Constitutional Club in Piccadilly, enlargement of the London School Board offices (Victoria Embankment), various blocks of houses on the Duke of Westminster's estate in Green Street and other parts of London, ball-room and additions at Sandringham for H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, the Hotel Grand Central, Marylebone, mansion at Cheney Park, &c. In 1893 Mr. Edis acted as Honorary Architect to the Royal Commission for the Chicago Exhibition, and from his designs the "Victoria" House at the World's Fair was erected. He is also Honorary Architect to the Gordon Boys' Home, and has recently designed a new chapel and various other buildings for the Home. Mr. Edis joined the "Artists'" Corps at its formation in 1859, and is now Colonel of the regiment. He was Aide-de-Camp to Lord Bury in the French and German war under the General Convention; and was in Paris during the last days of the Commune, when he wrote, as the result of his observations, a paper on "Fireproof Materials," which was read before the Royal Institute of British Architects. He was elected a member of the London County Council for South St. Pancras. Colonel Edis is a Justice of the Peace for Norfolk (1897). Addresses: The Old Hall, Great Ormesby, Norfolk; and 14 Fitzroy Square.

EDISON, Thomas Alva, was born at Milan, Erie Co., Ohio, Feb. 11, 1847, being of Dutch descent on his father's side, and Scotch on his mother's. His father died at the age of ninety-one in February 1896. His early education was derived chiefly from his mother's lessons and from his omnivorous reading, his entire school attendance not exceeding two months. When about twelve he became a railway newsboy, conducting at the same time (with the help of boy associates) three small stores at Port Huron, Michigan.

Later he established an amateur paper, which he printed and sold on the train, and also improvised a laboratory in a baggage-car for chemical experiments. Having at great peril saved the life of the little son of a station-master, the father, out of gratitude, assisted him to learn telegraphy; and in a short time he acquired so much skill as an operator that he was successively employed at Port Huron, Stratford (Canada), Indianapolis (Indiana), Cincinnati (Ohio), Memphis (Tennessee), Boston, and at many other places. During the years he was thus engaged he was constantly experimenting in every direction. At Indianapolis he made his first essay towards an automatic telegraphic repeater, which he completed while at Memphis. His first patent was for a chemical vote-recording apparatus (for use in legislative bodies), and was taken out while he was at Boston. It was at Boston also that he began work upon duplex telegraphy, but it was not until 1872 that it was perfected. He went to New York in 1871, and shortly afterwards was appointed Superintendent of the Law Gold Indicator Co., which supplied gold and stock quotations to brokers' offices. From this point his career has been an uninterrupted success. He invented the gold and stock printing telegraph; the system for quadruplex and sextuplex telegraphic transmission; the carbon telephone transmitter; the microtasmeter for detection of small variations in temperature; the aërophone and megaphone for amplifying and magnifying sound; the electric pen; the electric railway, &c. One of his latest inventions is the kinetograph, an instrument for photographing or recording and then reproducing motion, which performs the same service for the eye that the phonograph does for the ear; it is designed for use in combination with the latter instrument, and when so combined effects simultaneously the duplex sensation of vision and sound. The total number of patents issued to him already exceeds 400, and is constantly increasing; one-fourth of them refer to telegraphy. But it is with the phonograph and electric lighting that his name is the most closely associated, and by which he is best known. He resigned his superintendency in 1876, to devote himself entirely to invention and research, and has a large laboratory at Orange, New Jersey, the most ample in the world for electrical experiment. Mr. Edison has devoted much time to the milling of ores poor in iron, which were afterwards concentrated by electricity, and made available for profitable smelting. Large mining and milling plants were erected in the northern part of the State of New Jersey to demonstrate his views.

EDLIN, Sir Peter Henry, Q.C., J.P., was born in 1819. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1847, and was appointed a Queen's Counsel in 1869. He became Recorder of Bridgwater in 1872, acted as Assistant-Judge of the Middlesex Sessions from 1874 to 1889, and was Chairman of the County of London Sessions from 1889 to 1896. He received the honour of Knighthood in 1888. Address: 64 Queensborough Terrace, W.; and Wentworth House, Clifton, Bristol.

EDMUNDS, The Hon. George Franklin, LL.D., American lawyer and statesman, was born at Richmond, Vermont, Feb. 1, 1828. He was educated at the common schools and by a private tutor, studied law at an early age, and began to practise in 1849. In 1851 he removed to Burlington, Vermont. From 1854 to 1859 he was a member of the lower branch of the State Legislature, serving as Speaker for three of those years. In 1861-62 he was a State Senator, acting as President pro tem. On the death of Mr. Foote in 1866 he was appointed to the vacancy in the U.S. Senate, which position he continued to fill by successive re-elections until his retirement from public life in 1891. He was one of the prominent Republican leaders of that body, a member and chairman of some of its most important committees, and was twice its President pro tem. He was a member of the Electoral Commission in 1876, which decided the Presidential controversy between Mr. Hayes and Mr. Tilden. At the Republican National Conventions in 1880 and 1884 he received some votes for the nomination to the Presidency. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him in 1887 by Trinity College, Hartford.

EDWARDS, The Right Rev. Alfred George, D.D., Bishop of St. Asaph, youngest son of the late Rev. William Edwards, Vicar of Llangollen, born Nov. 2, 1848, Scholar of Jesus College, Oxford, second class in Classical Moderations, 1872, third in the Final Classical School, was ordained Deacon in 1874, and Priest in 1875, by Dr. Basil Jones, D.D., Bishop of St. David's. He was appointed Warden and Headmaster of Llandovery College in 1875. During the ten years he was at Llandovery the school obtained a high position in University distinctions, and changes were made which have enabled the school to gain at the present time a foremost place amongst the public schools of England, and to lead the movement for Higher Education in Wales. In 1885 Dr. Edwards was appointed Vicar of Carmarthen and Private Secretary and Chaplain to the late Bishop of St. David's. During the three years that he was at Carmarthen he took an active part in the discussion of Welsh Disestablishment, a subject which was now being brought by the Tithe Agitation within the sphere of practical politics. In 1889 Dr. Edwards was appointed, upon the nomination of Lord Salisbury, to the vacant See of St. Asaph. A Welshman by birth, language, residence, and descent, he has been a consistent opponent of the cry "Wales for the Welsh." He was instrumental in securing the passing of the Tithe Act of 1891, which finally ended the Tithe wars in Wales. The opposition to the Welsh Disestablishment campaign fell largely into the hands of Dr. Edwards, and in recognition of his services in this cause a number of Churchmen, including the Duke of Westminster, Lord Powis, Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, and leading laymen in Wales presented the Bishop with his portrait and an address at the Diocesan Conference in 1897. He married (1) Caroline Elizabeth, daughter of E. Edwards, in 1875; and (2) Mary, daughter of W. J. Garland, of Lisbon and Worgrett, Dorsetshire, in 1885. Addresses: The Palace, St. Asaph; and Athenæum.

EDWARDS, Lieutenant-Colonel the Right Honourable Sir Fleetwood Isham, K.C.B., son of Thomas Edwards and Hester, daughter of the Rev. William Wilson, of Harrington Rectory, Northamptonshire, and Knole Hall, Warwickshire, was born April 21, 1842, at Thames Ditton, and was educated at Harrow. He entered the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich in 1861, became a Lieutenant in the Royal Engineers in 1863, Captain in 1877, Major in 1883, Lieutenant-Colonel in 1890, and retired in 1895. He held the appointments of A.D.C. to the Governor of Bermuda from 1867 to 1869, and to the Inspector-General of Fortifications, 1875-78, and was attached to the Special Embassy to the Congress at Berlin in 1878. He acted as Groom-in-Waiting to the Queen, 1880-95, and has been Extra Equerry since 1888. He was made a C.B. in 1882, a K.C.B. in 1887, and a Privy Councillor in 1895. Sir Fleetwood Edwards now holds the post of Keeper of Her Majesty's Privy Purse, to which he was appointed in 1895, and of Receiver-General of the Duchy of Lancaster. He is also Secretary of the Royal Victorian Order. He married, 1871 (1), Edith, daughter of Rev. Allan Smith Masters, of Camer, Kent (she died 1873), and (2) Mary, daughter of Major John R. Majendie, 92nd Highlanders. Addresses: St. James's Palace, S.W.; and Norman Tower, Windsor Castle.

EDWARDS, John Passmore, was born in Cornwall in 1824. He began life as a temperance lecturer and then went into trade. He came to London when eighteen years of age, and entered a publishing house. He bought the well-known London halfpenny evening paper the Echo for the sum of £18,000, eventually sold it for £75,000, or, according to some accounts, £50,000, and again bought it back. He is a newspaper proprietor on a large scale, owning the Building News, the English Mechanic, and the important Weekly Times. He has brought out many magazines of the second order. Posterity will probably best remember him as the munificent founder of some score of public institutions in Cornwall, and some thirty public institutions in the Metropolis, which include art galleries, reading-rooms, and free libraries. Mr. Passmore Edwards represented Salisbury in Parliament from 1880 to 1885. He has published "The War, a Blunder and a Crime," 1855; "The Triple Curse, or the Evils of the Opium Trade on India, China, and England," 1858. He married Eleanor, daughter of H. Humphreys. Address: 51 Bedford Square, W.C.

EGERTON, Sir Edwin Henry, K.C.B., Envoy Extraordinary to the King of the Hellenes, was born Nov. 8, 1841. He entered the Diplomatic Service in 1859, and, after being Secretary of Legation at Buenos Ayres and Athens, was appointed Consul-General in Egypt in 1884. In 1885 he was Secretary of Embassy at Constantinople and afterwards at Paris, whence he was appointed to his present post in 1892. In 1886 he was created C.B. and in 1897 K.C.B. He married in 1895 the widow of M. Michael Catkoff, the daughter of Prince Rostowski. Address: British Legation, Athens.

EGERTON, George. See CLAIR-MONTE, MRS.

EGERTON OF TATTON, Earl, Wilbraham Egerton, 2nd Baron, is the eldest son of the late Lord Egerton of Tatton, 1st Baron, and was born at Tatton Park, Knutsford, on Jan. 17, 1832. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, where in 1854 he was in Class II. of the Final School of Law and Modern History. In 1858 his Lordship (then Mr. Wilbraham Egerton) succeeded his father as M.P. for North Cheshire, which he continued to represent in the Conservative interest till 1868, when he was returned, at the head of the poll, for Mid-Cheshire. This constituency he represented until 1883, when he succeeded his father in his present title, being raised to the rank of Earl in 1897, and in the same year created Viscount Salford. Lord Egerton has always taken an active interest in matters relating to agriculture, education, and the Church, and has given evidence bearing on these subjects before committees of the House of Lords. In 1880 he was appointed an Ecclesiastical Commissioner by Lord Beaconsfield. He was Chairman of the Church Defence Institution from 1874 to 1896, is President of the Central Council of Diocesan Conferences, and has contributed many papers to Church Conferences and Congresses. He is Chairman of the Queen Victoria Clergy Fund. He has served on the Royal Commission on Noxious Vapours, was Chairman of the Royal Commission on the Education of the Blind, Deaf, &c., 1884-87, and has been President of the Royal Agricultural Society, the Shire Horse Society, &c. He is Knight of Justice of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem. From 1887 to 1894 he was prominently before the public as Chairman of the Manchester Ship Canal Company, with which he was actively connected from 1886, when he became a member of the Consultative Committee; he rendered material assistance to the undertaking in Parliament. He has written on the Manchester Ship Canal and on Agriculture in the Nineteenth Century, &c. In 1857 Lord Egerton married Lady Mary Sarah Amherst, daughter of Earl Amherst. She died in 1892. In 1894 he married the Duchess of Buckingham and Chandos. Addresses: 7 St. James's Square, S.W.; and Tatton Park, Knutsford.

EGGLESTON, Edward, S.T.D., L.H.D., was born at Vevay, Indiana, Dec. 10, 1837. After holding several posts as a Methodist minister, and acting as editor of two periodicals at Chicago, he removed, in 1870, to Brooklyn, New York, and became literary editor of the New York Independent, a religious weekly, of which he had previously been the western correspondent. A few months later he was made superintending editor, which position he resigned in July 1871, to take charge of Hearth and Home. His first two novels, contributed as serials to this latter paper, having opened a new and tempting path to him, he resigned the editorship of Hearth and Home about the end of 1872, and has not since acted as editor to any periodical. In 1874 he carried out a long-cherished plan of establishing an Independent Church without a creed. This "Church of Christian Endeavour" was located in the eastern district of Brooklyn, and was remarkably successful in its philanthropic work, carried out on original plans, many of which have been widely copied. He was obliged, in 1879, to resign this pastorate on account of the complete breaking-down of his health; and since his recovery he has wholly given up preaching, and has devoted himself entirely to literature. He has published in all seven novels, some of which have been translated into several European languages. They are: "The Hoosier Schoolmaster," 1871; "The End of the World," 1872; "Mystery of Metropolisville," 1873; "The Circuit Rider," 1874; "Roxy," 1878; "The Graysons," 1888; "The Faith Doctor," 1891. His other books are: "Schoolmasters' Stories for Boys and Girls," 1874; "The Hoosier Schoolboy," 1883; "Queer Stories for Boys and Girls," 1884; "A History of the United States and its Peoples for Schools," 1888; "The Household History of the United States," 1888; "A First Book in American History," 1889; a volume of short stories under the title "Duffels," 1893; "Stories of American Life and Adventure" and "Stories of Great Americans for Little Americans," 1895; and "The Beginners of a Nation," 1896. In connection with others he published, 1878-80, a series of books for young people under the title, "Famous American Indians." Mr Eggleston has been a contributor to the Century Magazine since the issue of its first number in 1870. To its pages he has contributed, besides works of fiction and essays of various sorts, a series of papers, published at intervals, 1882-90, on early American life and manners.

EIFFEL, Gustave, engineer of the Eiffel Tower, Paris, was born at Dijon, in the Côte d'Or, Dec. 15, 1832, and educated at the Central School of Arts and Manufactures, Paris. His professional reputation was established by his construction of the Bordeaux Bridge, the Garabit Viaduct, and other important works. He has introduced many improvements in the art of bridge-building upon arches, and the germ of his tower may be seen in the huge framework he erected for Bartholdi's statue of Liberty at New York. An elaborate description of the famous Tower, from a popular point of view, was given in the Times of April 30, 1889, when it was asserted that it was a M. Nougner, a young engineer in M. Eiffel's employment, who first conceived the idea, and worked it out with the aid of an architectural friend. M. Eiffel himself described the Tower in a paper read before the Society of Travail Professionnel in 1889, and since published with six plates. In April 1889 he was promoted to the rank of Officer of the Legion of Honour. He offered himself for election to the Senate in January 1891, and was returned in the Côte d'Or, but desisted from his candidature in favour of M. Joigneaux. In 1893 he was condemned to two years' imprisonment, and a fine of £800, for breach of trust in connection with the Panama Canal Works. His Paris address is 1 Rue Rabelais.

EISENLOHR, Professor August, Ph.D., Egyptologist, was born Oct. 6, 1832, at Mannheim, in the Grand-Duchy of Baden, where his father was a physician. After a preliminary training in the Lyceum of his native town he entered the University of Heidelberg in 1850, applying himself to the study of Protestant theology, which he continued at Göttingen till 1853, when he returned to Heidelberg, and entered the theological Seminary. Illness compelled him to avoid serious study for several years, and on his recovery he abandoned theology, and devoted his attention to the natural sciences, especially chemistry, under the instruction of Professors R. Bunsen and Erlenmeyer. He graduated Ph.D. in 1859, and afterwards established a chemical manufactory. By commercial intercourse with China he became acquainted with the Chinese language, and was thus led to the study of hieroglyphics, which he has prosecuted with great zeal since 1864, aided by the advice of MM. Chabas and Brugsch. On giving up commercial pursuits, he entered, after some years, the academical career as Privat-docent of the Egyptian language and Archæology by a dissertation "Die Analytische Erklärung des demotischen Theils der Rosettana," Theil i., Leipzig, 1869. In the same year, generously aided by the Grand-Duke of Baden, he undertook a scientific exploration of Egypt. Having been present at the inauguration of the Suez Canal, he sailed up the Nile to the second cataract of Wadi Halfa, studying, copying, and photographing the inscriptions. On this occasion he had the good fortune to be allowed to study the celebrated Harris Papyrus in the house of the late Consul Harris, at Alexandria. In March 1870 he left Egypt and returned home. Coming to this country in 1872, he assisted Miss Harris in selling to the British Museum for £3300 her valuable collection of Greek and Egyptian papyri. Of this collection, and especially of the great Harris Papyrus, he gave a description, translation, and commentary in a pamphlet "Der grosse Papyrus Harris. Ein wichtiger Beitrag zur Aegyptischen Geschichte, ein 3000 Jahr altes Zeugniß für die Mosaische Religion stiftung enthaltend," Leipzig, 1872. In December 1872, he was nominated a Professor Extraordinary in the University of Heidelberg, and was elected an Hon. Member of the Society of Biblical Archæology of London, and of the Society "El Charq" at Constantinople. In 1885 he became Hon. Professor at the University of Heidelberg.

ELGAR, Francis, LL.D., F.R.S., F.S.A., &c., was born at Portsmouth on April 24, 1845, and educated at the Royal School of Naval Architecture and Marine Engineering, South Kensington. He graduated in 1867, and was awarded the highest diploma as naval architect; was afterwards employed by the Admiralty in public and private shipbuilding yards and in the construction department till 1871. At the end of 1871 he became chief professional assistant to Sir E. J. Reed in London, and assisted him in the design and survey of numerous warships and mercantile vessels. He was manager of Earle's Shipbuilding and Engineering Company, Hull, of which Sir E. J. Reed was Chairman, from 1874 to 1876, and then returned to his former post in London. He went to Japan in 1879 to advise the Japanese Government upon Naval Construction, and there surveyed and reported upon the management of the Dockyards and the arrangements for keeping the ships of the navy in efficient working order. He returned to London in 1881, and practised there as a consulting naval architect, designing and surveying the building of vessels of all classes, and advising upon questions that arose from time to time in connection with the construction of, and accidents to ships. In 1883 he was appointed Professor of Naval Architecture in the University of Glasgow; and, in 1886, accepted the then newly-created appointment offered to him of Director of H.M. Dockyards at the Admiralty, in which post he had responsible charge, under the Controller of the Navy, of the arrangements for improving the working efficiency of the Dockyards, and reducing the cost of, and the time occupied in building ships in them. A description of the improvements made is given in a paper by Mr. Elgar in the thirty-sixth volume of Transactions of the Institution of Naval Architects on "The Cost of Warships." Retired from the Admiralty service late in 1891, he became a Director of and Naval Architect to the Fairfield Shipbuilding and Engineering Company of Glasgow, and has since been responsible in that capacity for the designs of numerous vessels of all classes, including the fast Cunard liners Campania and Lucania. He was a member of the Board of Trade Loadline Committee of 1884, which first framed successful rules for regulating the safe loading of ships, and of the Board of Trade Committee for Life-Saving Appliances in Ships. He was Vice-President of the Jury for the Marine Section at the International Exhibitions in Paris, 1889, and Chicago, 1893; President of the same Jury at Antwerp, 1894; and President of the British Jury Committee for the Brussels Exhibition, 1897. Mr. Elgar is an hon. LL.D. of Glasgow University, a Fellow of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh, the Society of Antiquaries, and the Royal School of Naval Architecture and Marine Engineering, Vice-President of the Institution of Naval Architects, Hon. Member of the Society of Engineers, Member of the Institution of Civil Engineers, the Royal Institution, the Royal United Service Institution, the Institution of Engineers and Shipbuilders in Scotland, the Association Technique Maritime of France and the Naval Institute of America; and he is a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour. He is a member of the technical committee of "Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping," and the author of an illustrated work entitled "Ships of the Royal Navy," and of papers on naval architecture and other subjects in the Transactions of the Royal Society, the Institution of Naval Architects, and other societies. He was President of the Sette of Odd Volumes in 1894-95. He married Ethel Annie Mitchell, daughter of John Howard Colls, in 1889. Addresses: 113 Cannon Street, E.C.; 18 York Terrace, Regent's Park, N.W.; and Doonbrae, Ayr, N.B.

ELGIN, Earl of, The Right Hon. Victor Alexander Bruce, 9th Earl of Elgin and Kincardine, late Governor-General of India, K.G., G.M.S.I., G.M.I.E., LL.D., was born at Montreal, Canada, May 16, 1849. He was educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford, and took his B.A. degree, with a second class in Lit. Hum. in 1873. He succeeded his father, who had also been Viceroy of India, in 1863. In 1866, in Mr. Gladstone's third administration, he was appointed Treasurer of the Household and First Commissioner of Works. Lord Elgin was appointed Governor-General of India in 1893, and assumed office as Viceroy in January of 1894. His term of office has been full of events, particularly in 1897: frontier wars, famine, earthquakes, plague, seditious agitations, and financial embarrassments. Lord Elgin, in order to relieve the misery produced by the famine, succeeded in raising a fund in India, to which was subscribed in three months 91 lakhs of rupees. This was in addition to the million pounds he received for distribution from all parts of the British Empire. He was sworn of the Privy Council in 1886, in which year also the University of St. Andrews conferred upon him their LL.D. degree. He is a University Commissioner for Scotland, and Lord-Lieutenant of Fife. By virtue of his late office as Viceroy, Lord Elgin was the Grand Master of the Order of the Star of India and the Order of the Indian Empire. He was succeeded in the Viceroyalty by Lord Curzon in 1898. In March 1899 he was created K.G. He married in 1876, Lady Constance, daughter of the 9th Earl of Southesk, and has issue. His eldest son and heir, Edward, Lord Bruce, was born in 1881. Addresses: 22 Eaton Square, S.W.; and Broomhall, Fife.

ELIOT, Charles William, LL.D., President of Harvard University, was born at Boston, Massachusetts, March 20, 1834. He was prepared for College at the Boston Public Latin School, and graduated (A.B.) at Harvard in 1853. He was Tutor in Mathematics at Harvard, 1854-58; Assistant-Professor of Mathematics and Chemistry, 1858-61; of Chemistry, 1861-63; Professor of Chemistry in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, 1865-69; and was chosen President of Harvard, May 1869. Since his appointment to this post, President Eliot has exercised very great influence over the course of education in the United States. Prior to his accession to the Presidency, he wrote, in conjunction with F. H. Storer, a "Manual of Inorganic Chemistry," 1866, and a "Manual of Qualitative Chemical Analysis," 1869, besides various contributions to scientific journals. Since 1869 his principal publications have been his successive Annual Reports as President of Harvard, and various addresses on educational topics. In 1896 he published "The Happy Life"; and, in 1897, "American Contributions to Civilisation, and other Essays and Addresses."

ELIOT, John, F.R.S., C.I.E., was born at Lamesley, Durham, in 1839, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he was bracketed second wrangler in 1869, and was also first Smith's Prize-man. He was elected Fellow of his College in the same year, and proceeded to India, where he held various important Professorships of Mathematics and Physics, and in 1887 was appointed to his present post of Meteorological Reporter to the Government of India. He has published "A Handbook of Cyclonic Storms in the Bay of Bengal," and has contributed largely to the scientific journals in India and at home on meteorological topics. Address: Simla.

ELIOT, Very Rev. Philip Frank, D.D., is the son of William Eliot, J.P., and was born at Weymouth, Dorset, on Dec. 21, 1835. He was educated at Bath School, and Trinity College, Oxford. At the University he was an exhibitor of his College, took a second class in Classical Moderations in 1855, and a second class in the Final School of Lit. Hum. in 1857. After being ordained, he was curate of St. Michael's, Winchester, from 1858 to 1860, and held another curacy at Walcot, Bath, from 1864 to 1867. He was presented, in 1867, to the vicarage of Holy Trinity, Bournemouth, and became an Hon. Canon of Winchester Cathedral in 1881, and was made a Canon of Windsor in 1886. Mr. Eliot was appointed to the Deanery of Windsor in 1891, and in the same year became Registrar of the Order of the Garter. He occupies the position of Domestic Chaplain to the Queen, and was married in 1883 to Mary Emma Pitt, daughter of the 4th Lord Rivers. Address: Deanery, Windsor.

ELIOT, Samuel, LL.D., was born in Boston, Dec. 22, 1821. He graduated at Harvard College in 1839; was for two years engaged in mercantile pursuits in Boston, and subsequently travelled and studied in Europe. His first school was a charity school to rescue children from the streets. In 1847 he published some "Passages from the History of Liberty," that were intended to form a part of a "History of Liberty," which he had meditated for several years. The first instalment appeared in 1849, under the title of "The Liberty of Rome," altered to that of "History of Liberty, Part I., the Ancient Romans"; followed in 1853 by Part II., "The Early Christians." In 1856 he published "A History of the United States from 1492 to 1850" (revised edition, to 1872); and in 1880 a selection of "Poetry for Children." Many addresses, reports, and articles have been printed by him in periodicals. He was Professor of History and Political Science in Trinity College, Hartford, from 1856 to 1864, and President of the College from 1860 to 1864. In 1871-73 he was University Lecturer at Harvard; from 1872-76 Headmaster of the Girls' High School in Boston; and from 1878 to 1880 Superintendent of the Boston Public Schools. He is at the head of several literary and charitable institutions in Boston.

ELIZABETH, Queen of Roumania, Pauline Elizabeth Ottilie Louise, daughter of the late Prince Hermann of Wied, by his marriage with the Princess

Maria of Nassau, was born at Neuwied, Germany, Dec. 29, 1843. In her parents' home she became acquainted with the chief writers, poets, scholars, and artists of the day, and early showed a great gift for poetical composition, writing verses with facility before the age of ten. As she grew older she showed remarkable intelligence in all branches of study, and became especially proficient in languages, both ancient and modern. The years 1863 to 1868 were spent chiefly in travel. In 1869 she married Prince Charles of Roumania, second son of Prince Anthony of Hohenzollern; and her great popularity in the land of her adoption dates from her first appearance among her people when, as a bride, she accompanied her husband to his capital. She began at once to enter with her characteristic energy into the life of the Roumanian people, to study their customs, and to endeavour to understand their thoughts and aspirations. In 1870, on the day after receiving from her brother the news of the battle of Sedan, in which he had fought with honour, her only child, a daughter, was born, whose death from diphtheria occurred in 1874. During the anxious days of the war of 1877, in which Prince Charles and his Roumanians so greatly distinguished themselves, the Princess worked day and night in the hospitals, sustaining by her presence the courage of the victims of battle, and setting an example which was followed by the Roumanian women in the most unselfish manner. When the victorious Roumanian army, headed by the Prince, entered Bucharest on their return from the campaign, the war-song which they sang, and which had inspired them in many battles, was composed by their own Princess, "the mother of her people." In March 1881 Roumania was declared a kingdom, and on May 22 of the same year the Princess was crowned Queen. In 1882 the Academy of Sciences of Bucharest received her among the number of its members. During 1890 she suffered from a long and serious illness in Venice. The same year she visited England, and was present at the Welsh Eisteddfod. Under the name of "Carmen Sylva," she has published several volumes of stories and poems, with translations of Roumanian poetry into German. Some of her most beautiful and touching poems are those written on the death of her only child in 1874. Her life has been written by the Baroness Stachelberg, and Pierre Loti has in recent years given interesting accounts of her surroundings and character. Her work, "Leidens Erdengang" (1882), has been translated into English by Helen Zimmern. A study of her work was written by Mrs. Roosevelt in 1891.

ELLERY, Robert Lewis John, C.M.E., F.R.A.S., late Government Astronomer and Director of the Observatory at Melbourne, has contributed largely on astronomical and meteorological topics to the Transactions of the Victorian Royal Society and to European scientific journals. He was elected President of the Royal Society of Victoria in 1883. Address: Melbourne.

ELLCOTT, The Right Rev. Charles John, D.D., Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, was born April 25, 1819, at Whitwell, near Stamford, of which parish his father, the Rev. Charles Spencer Ellicott, was rector. He received his early education at Oakham and Stamford schools, and then proceeded to Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. with honours in 1841, and was elected a Fellow of St. John's College. In 1842 he carried off the first Member's prize, and in the following year the Hulsean prize on "The History and Obligation of the Sabbath." In 1848 he was collated to the rectory of Pilton, in Rutlandshire, but he resigned this small living ten years later on being chosen to succeed Dr. Trench, the late Archbishop of Dublin, as Professor of Divinity in King's College, London. In 1859 he was appointed Hulsean Lecturer, and in the following year was elected Hulsean Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge. The Hulsean Lectures for 1860, "On the Life of Our Lord Jesus Christ," displayed profound theological erudition, and showed that their author possessed a critical knowledge of the Greek language. They attracted much attention even beyond the limits of the University, and it became obvious that Dr. Ellicott would be selected for high preferment in the Church. He was nominated by the Crown to the Deanery of Exeter in 1861, and in 1863 to the united sees of Gloucester and Bristol, which had been vacated by the translation of Bishop Thomson to York. A principal feature of Bishop Ellicott's episcopate is said to be his hearty sympathy with the clergy of different theological "schools of thought." To him the diocese of Gloucester and Bristol owes its Theological College, and the city of Bristol its Church Aid Society, and its Church Extension Fund for supplying spiritual help of a missionary kind to its overgrown parishes. He has also instituted a plan of issuing every year a Pastoral Letter, in which he comments on passing ecclesiastical events, without waiting to deal with them for the first time in a Triennial Charge. His lordship takes an active part in the deliberations of the Upper House of the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury. Besides his Hulsean Lectures, already referred to, which have reached a 5th edition (1869), Bishop Ellicott has published a "Treatise on Analytical Statics," 1851; "Critical and Grammatical Commentaries" on the Epistles to the Galatians (1854), and Ephesians (1855), Philippians, Colossians, Thessalonians, Philemon, and on the "Pastoral Epistles" (1858); an essay on the "Apocryphal Gospels" in "Cambridge Essays," 1856; "The Destiny of the Creature, and other sermons preached before the University of Cambridge," 1858; an article on "Scripture and its Interpretation" in Archbishop Thomson's "Aids to Faith," 1861; "The Broad Way and the Narrow Way," two sermons, 1863; "Considerations on the Revision of the English Version of the New Testament," 1870; "Six Addresses on Modern Scepticism," published by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, 1877; "Six Addresses on the Being of God," published by the same Society, 1879; "Present Dangers to the Church of England," 1881; "Are we to modify Fundamental Doctrines?" 1885; papers in the publications of the Christian Evidence Society; annual addresses to the clergy of his diocese, published under the title of "Diocesan Progress" (1879-1890); "Salutary Doctrine," 1890; and "Foundations of Sacred Study," 1893. The bishop was for eleven years the chairman of the company of the Revisers of the Authorised Version of the New Testament, published in 1881. He is also the editor of "A New Testament Commentary for English Readers, by various Writers," in 3 vols.; and of a "Commentary on the Old Testament," on a similar plan, in 4 vols. (1884). In 1893 Bishop Ellicott re-edited "Plain Introductions to the Books of the Bible" from his Commentaries. Addresses: 35 Great Cumberland Place, W., &c.; and Athenæum.

ELLIOT, Francis Edmund Hugh, Agent and Consul-General to Bulgaria, was born in 1852, and was educated at Balliol College, Oxford. He entered the diplomatic service in 1874, and served at Constantinople and Vienna. In 1881 he was Acting Chargé d'Affaires at Rio de Janeiro. In 1892 he was Chargé d'Affaires at Athens, and in 1895 he was appointed to his present post.

ELLIOT, The Right Hon. Sir Henry George, G.C.B., second surviving son of the second Earl of Minto, by Mary, eldest daughter of Patrick Brydone, Esq., was born on June 30, 1817. He was educated at Eton, and held the post of Secretary and Aide-de-Camp to Sir John Franklin in Tasmania from 1836 to 1839. He was appointed a précis writer in the Foreign Office in 1840; an attaché to the Embassy at St. Petersburg in 1841; Secretary of Legation at the Hague in 1848; transferred to Vienna in 1853; and nominated Envoy to Denmark, March 31, 1858. In 1859 he was sent on a special mission to the King of the Two Sicilies, and in 1862 to the King of Greece; was appointed Envoy to the King of Italy, Sept. 12, 1863, in succession to Sir James Hudson; and Ambassador to the Sublime Ottoman Porte in 1867. Shortly afterwards he was sworn of the Privy Council, and on Nov. 22, 1869, he was created a Knight Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath. He was associated with the Marquis of Salisbury as joint-plenipotentiary at the Conference of the representatives of the great Powers held at Constantinople in 1876-77 for the purpose of considering the critical position of affairs in the East. At the close of that conference the plenipotentiaries returned to England, and Sir Henry Elliot, who happened to be extremely unpopular among the section of the Liberal party who sympathised with Russia, was not sent back to Constantinople, but retained his post as Ambassador to the Sultan, the late Mr. Layard being named Ambassador "ad interim" till Dec. 31, 1877, when, on Sir Henry's nomination as Ambassador to Vienna, he received the permanent appointment. In 1883, Sir Henry resigned the Embassy at Vienna, and was succeeded by Sir Augustus Paget. He married Anne, daughter of the late Sir Edmund Antrobus, Bart. Addresses: 43 Wilton Crescent, S.W.; and Athenæum.

ELLIOTT, Edwin Bailey, M.A., F.R.S., F.R.A.S., is the eldest son of the late E. L. Elliott, and was born on June 1, 1851. He was educated at Magdalen College School, Magdalen College, Oxford, where he took first-class Honours, both in Mathematical Moderations in 1872, and in the Final Mathematical School in 1873. He was Senior Mathematical and Johnson University Scholar in 1875, and was elected a Fellow of Queen's College in 1877. Mr. Elliot was, in 1892, appointed Professor of Pure Mathematics in the University, becoming, at the same time, a Fellow of Magdalen College. He has contributed numerous papers to the various mathematical journals and societies. Address: 4 Bardwell Road, Oxford.

ELLIS, Professor Robinson, LL.D., son of James Ellis, Esq., born Sept. 5, 1834, at Barming, near Maidstone, was educated at Elizabeth College, Guernsey, and Rugby School, then at Balliol College, Oxford. He was elected a Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford, in 1868, and appointed Professor of Latin in University College, London, Jan. 8, 1870. In 1876 he returned to Oxford, where in 1883 he was appointed University Reader in Latin Literature, and in 1893 Corpus Professor of Latin. Professor Ellis published in 1867 a large and elaborate edition of the text of Catullus (2nd edition, 1878); and an English commentary on the poet in 1876 (2nd edition, 1889). In 1881 appeared his edition of the Ovidian or pseudo-Ovidian poem "Ibis"; in 1885 a contribution to the series known as "Anecdota Oxoniensia," containing various unedited materials drawn from MSS. in the Bodleian or other libraries; in 1887, "The Fables of Avianus," edited with prolegomena, critical apparatus, and commentary; in 1888, the Commonitorium of the Christian poet Orientius in Vol. XVI. of the Vienna Corpus Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Latinorum; in 1891, "Noctes Manilianæ," a series of dissertations on the astrological poem of Manilius; and in 1894 an "Inaugural Lecture on the Fables of Phædrus" (reprinted in 1897). Besides these works, he translated Catullus into English, retaining the metres of the original, in 1871. He is a contributor to the Cambridge Journal of Philology, the American Journal of Philology, Hermathena, the Academy, the Philologisches Rundschau, the Berlin Hermes, the Göttingen Philologus, the Rheinisches Museum, the Archiv für Lateinische Lexicographie, the American Nation, and the Classical Review. The University of Dublin conferred on him the honorary degree of LL.D. in July 1882, and the University of Königsberg of Ph.D. in 1894. Address: Corpus Christi College, Oxford.

ELLIS, William, F.R.S., F.R.A.S., entered the Greenwich Observatory in 1841, and, save for a short interval in 1853-54 when he superintended the University Observatory, Durham, remained at Greenwich until 1893, latterly either as Superintendent of the Chronometric and Electric Branch or as Head of the Magnetical and Meteorological Department. He has contributed articles on the Greenwich chronometers, and on barometric pressure, &c., to the Quarterly Journal of the Meteorological Society and to the Phil. Trans. He was elected F.R.S. in June 1893. Address: 12 Vanburgh Hill, Blackheath, S.E.

ELWIN, The Rev. Whitwell, M.A., a member of a good family in Norfolk, born Feb. 25, 1816, was educated at Caius College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1839. He held for some years the curacy of Hemington-with-Hardington, Somerset, and was appointed, in 1849, rector of Booton, Norfolk, a living in the patronage of his family. He became in July 1853 editor of the Quarterly Review in succession to Mr. Lockhart, and resigned the post in July 1860. He then began to prepare a new edition of "The Works of Alexander Pope," the eighth volume of which appeared in 1872. This work, however, he afterwards resigned. Address: Booton Rectory, Norwich.

ELY, Bishop of. See COMPTON, THE RIGHT REV. LORD ALWYNE SPENCER.

EMDEN, Walter, is the third son of W. S. Emden, Esq., formerly co-proprietor of the Olympic Theatre, and a play-writer. As a boy he showed great skill as a draughtsman, and was offered by Mark Lemon a post on the staff of Punch; he was, however, intended by his father for the career of an architect or a civil engineer. For two years he worked for Messrs. Maudslay, Son, & Field; for eighteen months with Mr. W. Kelly, a well-known church architect; then with the firm of Brassey, for whom he was employed on the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway, the Thames Embankment, and the Thames Tunnel line, in the course of which experiments in iron and concrete construction attracted his attention. After succeeding to the management of Mr. Charles Lawes's business for a time, he began business on his own account in 1870. Among his early commissions in theatrical work may be mentioned the reconstruction of the Globe, the alteration of the St. James's and Royalty, and the rebuilding of the Court theatres. Terry's theatre, which may be regarded as a fireproof structure, was a remarkable instance of Mr. Emden's skill; the original plans for the Garrick, the Trafalgar, and the Tivoli were his work; and the English Opera House, now known as the Palace Theatre, was reconstructed by him. He has lately completed the Royal York Palace of Varieties at Southampton, and has designed the new theatre for Ealing, also one for Folkestone, and the new variety theatre for Swansea. Romano's Restaurant was erected from his designs, as was also the Victoria Hotel at Newmarket; and the Financial Times newspaper offices, and the Hôtel de l'Europe in Leicester Square are being built according to his plans. Mr. Emden has been architect to the St. James's Hall Co., Ltd., for some twenty-eight years, is President of the Society of Architects, 1897-8, a member of the London County Council, Chairman of the Strand District Board, and ex-officio Justice of the Peace. Address: 105 and 106 Strand, W.C.

EMERY (Isabel) Winifred, (Mrs. Cyril Maude,) was born at Manchester

on Aug. 1, 1862. She is the only daughter of the late Sam Emery, comedian, who was famous in such parts as "Captain Cuttle," and the Carrier in the "Cricket on the Hearth." Her grandfather and great-grandfather were also distinguished comedians, and her husband, Mr. Cyril Maude, is one of the most artistic actors on the English stage. Miss Emery was educated in London, and went on the stage as a child-actress, making her début at Liverpool as the child in "Green Bushes." Her next appearance was in a pantomime at the Princess's. She subsequently went to school for five years, and then took an engagement under Mr. Wilson Barrett at the Court Theatre. During a tour in the country Mr. Barrett offered her the alternative of playing leading parts in the provinces or appearing in very small ones in London, and by her mother's advice Miss Emery decided to choose the latter course. She understudied Madame Modjeska as Juliet, and, though never called on to play the part, acknowledges her indebtedness to the great tragédienne's method and manner. Subsequently she played in "A Clerical Error," and then made her first success in "The Old Love and the New." Mr. Barrett's tenancy of the "Court" now expired, and Miss Emery entered upon an important phase in her career as understudy to Miss Ellen Terry at the Lyceum. Her connection with that theatre lasted from about 1881 to 1887, and during these years she often took Miss Terry's place in such plays as "Faust," and the "Vicar of Wakefield," and played on her own account in "Louis XI." and "The Bells." Since 1887 she has played at the Vaudeville as Lydia Languish, as Fanny in "Joseph's Sweetheart," and as Clarissa. Other important parts have been the Mother in "Little Lord Fauntleroy," Vashti Dethic in "Judah" at the Shaftesbury Theatre, Lady Windermere in "Lady Windermere's Fan" at the St. James's, Rosamond in "Sowing the Wind" at the Comedy, the Old-Fashioned Wife in "The New Woman," and as Lady Babbie in "The Little Minister" at the Haymarket, and Jane in the "Mancœuvres of Jane," &c., &c. She was married to Cyril Francis Maude in 1888. Address: 33 Egerton Crescent, S.W.

EMLYN, Viscount, Frederick Archibald Vaughan Campbell, is the eldest son of the present Earl of Cawdor, and was born on Feb. 13, 1847. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford. He sat in the House of Commons as Member for Carmarthenshire from 1874 to 1885. Lord Emlyn has been, since 1895, Chairman of the Great Western Railway, and he is Lord-Lieutenant of Pembrokeshire. He has been since 1880 an Ecclesiastical Commissioner, and is an Hon. Commissioner in Lunacy. He was married in 1868 to Edith, daughter of Christopher Turnor, of Stoke-Rochford, Lincolnshire. Addresses : 7 Prince's Gardens, S.W.; and Golden Grove, Carmarthen.

EMMA, Queen Regent of the Netherlands, Adelaide Emma Wilhelmina Thérèse, is the second daughter of the Duke of Waldeck Pyrmont, and consequently the sister of our Duchess of Albany. Queen Emma was born Aug. 2, 1858, at Arolsen, the capital of her father's state, Waldeck. Four daughters and one son formed the family circle. She was married to King William III. of Holland on Jan. 7, 1879, and her daughter was born in 1881. As years went on, and the King, who was in ill-health, became gradually insane, she shut herself up in the sick-room, and it was with difficulty the physicians prevailed upon her to take air and exercise. When in March 1889 Ministers proposed to convoke the States-General, and, with the consent of physicians, to declare the King incapable of reigning, and Queen Emma Regent until the Princess Wilhelmina had attained her majority, the Queen earnestly opposed the scheme. At the last moment she unwillingly accepted the offered Regency; and in a few days afterwards the King died (November 1890). Queen Wilhelmina I. nominally succeeded to the throne on her father's death. The Queen has watched with unceasing vigilance over the bringing-up of her child, and her maternal zeal has deepened the esteem felt for her by her subjects. On Sept. 6, 1898, Queen Wilhelmina came of age, and Queen Emma resigned her onerous charge. She figured with regal pomp at the coronation ceremonies at Amsterdam.

ERNE, Earl of, John Henry Orichton, K.P., was born in Dublin on Oct. 16, 1839, and succeeded his father as 4th Earl in 1885. He was educated at Eton, and Christ Church, Oxford. As Viscount Orichton he represented Enniskillen in the House of Commons from 1868 to 1880, and sat as member for Fermanagh from 1880 to 1885. He was a Lord of the Treasury from 1876 to 1880, and acted as Conservative Whip from 1876 to 1885. Lord Erne is Lord-Lieutenant of co. Fermanagh, and was married, in 1870, to Lady Florence Mary Cole, daughter of the 3rd Earl of Enniskillen. Address : Crom Castle, Newtown Butler, co. Fermanagh; and 12 St. George's Place, S.W.

ESCOMBE, The Right Hon. Harry, LL.D., D.Sc., Q.C., Ex-Prime Minister of Natal, was born at Notting Hill in 1838, and educated at St. Paul's School. Having emigrated to Natal, in 1872 he entered the Legislative Council as Member for Durban. In 1880 he was appointed to the Executive Council; from 1881 to 1894 he was Chairman of the Natal Harbour Board. When responsible government was granted in 1893, he became Attorney-General and in 1896 Prime Minister. He attended the Queen's Diamond Jubilee in 1897, on which occasion he was made a Privy Councillor and Hon. LL.D. of Cambridge. On returning to Natal, he resigned office and was succeeded by Mr. Aston Binns. Address : Bay View, Durban, Natal.

ESCOTT, Thomas Hay Sweet (who does not use the first of the two surnames), was born at Taunton, April 26, 1844, being the eldest son of the Rev. Hay Sweet-Escott, and member of a very old West Somerset family, whose seat is Hartrow Manor, near Taunton. He was educated at Oxford, where he graduated second class in the final examination in Litteris Humanioribus in June 1865. Mr. Escott was lecturer in logic at King's College, London, from 1868 till 1872, and during the year 1870 he acted as Professor Lonsdale's deputy as Professor of Classics. He adopted journalism as a profession immediately after he came up to London, in 1865, from Oxford, and he has been closely and actively connected with the London daily and weekly press ever since. He has also written much for the chief monthly magazines, for the most part anonymously. He edited the "Satires of Juvenal and Persius" in 1866, and "The Comedies of Plautus" in 1867. In 1879 he published "England, its People, Polity, and Pursuits," since translated into most European languages, and accepted as a standard work, followed by a sequel, bringing it up to date, viz., "Social Transformations of the Victorian Age," 1897. Mr. Escott was appointed Editor of the Fortnightly Review in October 1882, on the resignation of Mr. John Morley, but was obliged to resign in 1886 on account of a physical weakness, since nearly cured, brought on by the exhausting overwork of five-and-twenty years. In the autumn of 1894 Mr. Escott once more appeared before the literary public, contributing to the Contemporary Review, Blackwood's, and other leading reviews. Since then, though still out of

ESHER, Viscount, The Right Hon. William Baliol Brett, late Master of the Rolls, eldest surviving son of the Rev. Joseph George Brett, of Ranelagh, Chelsea, by Dora, daughter of the late George Best, Esq., of Chilston Park, Kent, was born Aug. 13, 1815. From Westminster School he was sent to Caius College, Cambridge (B.A. 1840; M.A. 1845). In 1846 he was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn. In March 1860 he obtained his silk gown, and at the same time he was made a Bencher of his Inn. His political career began in 1866, when, in view of a general election, he went down to Rochdale to oppose Mr. Cobden, and in this advanced Liberal borough declared himself to be, not merely a Conservative, but a Tory. Nevertheless he made so much progress among the constituents, that Mr. Cobden deemed it prudent to visit Rochdale personally, in order to defend his seat. Mr. Brett did not succeed in his bold attempt, and he failed in the contest against Mr. T. B. Potter. In July 1866 he stood for Helston, in Cornwall. This election became famous from the circumstance of there being a tie, and the Mayor assuming to give after four o'clock a casting vote. For doing this the Mayor was summoned before the House of Commons, and Mr. Brett was seated on petition. Mr. Brett represented Helston till 1868, being in February of that year appointed Solicitor-General, on which occasion he received the honour of knighthood. During the short period he remained in office he took a prominent part in passing, in 1868, the Registration Act, which enabled the general election to be taken in that year, and the Corrupt Practices Act, which is now in force. In August 1868, when it was known that the Conservative party had failed to gain the support of the country, he was appointed a Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, and by the operation of the Judicature Act he became a Judge of the High Court of Justice in 1876. In October 1876 he was made a Judge of the intermediate Court of Appeal, and added to the Privy Council. In April 1883 he was appointed Master of the Rolls, on the recommendation of Mr. Gladstone, in the place of the late Sir George Jessel. In 1885 he was raised to the peerage in recognition of his long and eminent services as a Judge. He retired from the Mastership of the Rolls in October 1897, and was succeeded by Lord Justice Lindley. He was created Viscount on his retirement. He married, in 1850, Eugénie, daughter of Louis Mayer, Esq., and step-daughter of the late Captain Gurwood, C.B. (editor of "The Duke of Wellington's Despatches"). Address: 6 Ennismore Gardens, S.W., &c.; and Athenæum.

ESMOND, Henry V., actor and dramatist, born at Hampton Court on Nov. 16, 1869, his father being Richard George Jack, a physician; was educated at home by tutors, but went for a year to the Grammar School at Pocklington, in Yorkshire. He determined to become an actor, and in January 1886 made his first appearance on the stage as a super under Mrs. Langtry's management at the Prince of Wales' Theatre. After three months spent thus, he went into the country to play parts, and to endeavour to learn his business. He remained in the country for three years, during which time he played thirty-six parts, ranging from Uriah Heep to Hamlet. On March 28, 1889, he made his reappearance in London at the Opéra Comique in the "Panel Picture"; but the play proving a failure, he went back to the country, returning on July 11 of the same year to play Rafael in the "Marquise" at a matinée at the Opéra Comique, which performance resulted in his engagement by E. S. Villard for his season at the Shaftesbury Theatre. Then followed engagements at the Lyric, Terry's, Comedy, Haymarket, Garrick, and St. James' Theatre. The principal parts he has played in London are: Algy in "Sweet Nancy," 1890; Howard Bomps in "The Times," 1892; Cayley Drummie in "Second Mrs. Tanqueray," 1894; Eddie Remon in "The Masqueraders"; Uncle Archie in "Bogey," 1895; Touchstone in "As You Like It," St. James' Theatre, 1896. Mr. Esmond began writing plays in 1891, his first play, entitled "Rest," being produced at the Avenue Theatre on June 10, 1892. Then followed "Bogey," at the St. James' Theatre, Sept. 10, 1895; "The Divided Way," St. James' Theatre, in November 1895; "The Courtship of Leonie," produced by Daniel Frohman in America, 1896; "One Summer's Day," produced by Charles Hawtrej at the Comedy Theatre, Sept. 15, 1897. He was married on Nov. 19, 1891, to Miss Eva Moore, herself an actress, now playing in Mr. Hawtrej's company. Address: 21 Whiteheads Grove, Chelsea.

ESMONDE, Sir Thomas Henry Grattan, Bart., M.P., J.P., is the son of the late Colonel Sir John Esmonde, M.P., and the great-grandson of Henry Grattan, through his mother Louisa, daughter of Henry Grattan, M.P. He was born at Pau on Sept. 21, 1862, and educated at Oscott. He entered Parliament in 1885, and represented co. Dublin, South, from that year to 1892, when he was returned for West Kerry, which he now represents. He is a leading Nationalist, and is whip to his party. He was Sheriff of co. Waterford in 1886-87, and from 1881 to 1886 was Lieutenant in the 6th Brigade (Militia) of the South Irish Division of the Royal Artillery. In October 1898 he was created by the Pope a Chamberlain in the Vatican household. He succeeded his father, the 10th Baronet, in 1876. He has travelled in all parts of the world, and has published a book on his travels. Lady Esmonde is a daughter of Patrick Donovan, of Frognore, Tralee. Address: Ballynastragh Gorey, co. Wexford.

ESSON, William, Professor, M.A., F.R.S., was educated at St. John's College, Oxford, and graduated with first-class honours in the Final School of Mathematics in 1859. He had obtained the Junior Mathematical Scholarship of the University in 1857, and he was in 1860 elected Senior Mathematical Scholar. He became a Fellow of Merton College in 1862. Mr. Esson was appointed Deputy Savilian Professor of Geometry in 1894, and three years later he succeeded to the chair, becoming at the same time a Fellow of New College. He has published several papers in the Transactions of the Royal Society on "The Laws of Connection between the Conditions of Chemical Change and its Amount"; and "Notes on Synthetic Geometry," in the Proceedings of the London Mathematical Society, 1897. Professor Esson is a Curator of the University Chest, and acts as Bursar of Merton College. Address: Merton College, Oxford.

EU, Comte d', Prince Louis Philippe Marie Ferdinand Gaston d'Orléans, born at the Château de Neuilly, in the department of the Seine, April 28, 1842, is the eldest son of the Duc de Nemours, and one of the grandsons of King Louis Philippe. Brought up in exile, he was educated in England, and entered the military service of Spain in 1859, serving in Morocco. Later he joined the Artillery College at Segovia, from which he graduated in 1863. In 1864 he married Isabella, the eldest daughter of Dom Pedro II. of Brazil. He was made a Field-Marshal in the Brazilian army in 1865, and in 1869 was appointed Commander-in-Chief of all the forces on land and sea, a position he retained until the war with Paraguay (begun in 1864) was ended in 1870 by the death of Lopez, Dictator of Paraguay. From 1865 to 1889 he held the post of Commander-General of the Brazilian Artillery, and was President of various Commissions. In the many absences of Dom Pedro from the empire during this period, the Comte d'Eu had the virtual direction of all Brazilian affairs. When the revolution of November 1889 occurred, establishing the Republic of Brazil, and deposing the Emperor, the Comte d'Eu, with his wife, accompanied Dom Pedro to Portugal, and he has since resided in Europe.

EUAN-SMITH, Sir Charles Bean, K.C.B., C.S.I., was born in 1842, and entered the Indian army in 1859, became Captain in 1870, Major in 1879, Lieutenant-Colonel in 1881, and Colonel in 1885. He retired in 1889. He served through the Abyssinian War of 1867, acted as Secretary to Sir Fred. Goldsmid's Persian Mission in 1870, was Military Attaché and Private Secretary to Sir Bartle Frere's Anti-Slave Trade Mission in 1872, and was appointed Consul-General at Zanzibar in 1875. In the year following he was Resident at Hyderabad, and in 1879 occupied the same position at Muscat. In the Afghan War of 1880 he was Chief Political Officer with the forces taking part in the flank march upon Candahar. During this campaign he was constantly mentioned in despatches, and, as a reward for his services, received the medal and clasp and the bronze star, being at the same time made Brevet Lieut.-Colonel. In 1891 he was appointed Her Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Tangier, this appointment being at the time held to be a suitable recognition of the services rendered by him at Zanzibar, where he represented British interests throughout a critical and trying period. He remained at Tangier until 1893, his period of office being disturbed by troubles with Morocco so acute that at one time a Moroccan Question seemed imminent. At the end of July 1898 his appointment to be Minister Resident at Bogota was gazetted, and in October 1898 he became Her Majesty's Minister Resident in the Republic of Colombia, and British Consul-General in the same republic. He retired Dec. 1896. K.C.B. 1890. In 1877 he married Edith, daughter of Col. Frederick Alexander, Royal Artillery. Address: 11 Draycott Place, Cadogan Gardens, S.W.

EUGÉNIE, ex-Empress of the French, Eugénie-Marie de Guzman, Countess of Téba, born May 5, 1826, is the daughter of Doña Maria Manuela Kirkpatrick, of Closeburn, Dumfriesshire, Countess-dowager de Montijos, whose father was English Consul at Malaga at the period of her marriage with the Count de Montijos, an officer in the Spanish army, connected, more or less closely, with the houses of the Duke de Frias, representative of the ancient admirals of Castile, of the Duke of Fyars, and others of the highest rank, including the descendants of the Kings of Aragon. On the death of the Count de Montijos, his widow was left with a fortune adequate to the maintenance of her position, and two daughters, one of whom married the Duke of Alba and Berwick, lineally descended from James II. and Miss Churchill. For Eugénie, the second, a still higher destiny was reserved. In 1851 the Countess Téba, accompanied by her mother, paid a lengthened visit to Paris, and was distinguished at the various entertainments given at the Tuileries by the dignity and elegance of her demeanour, and by great personal beauty—of the aristocratic English rather than the Spanish style. Her mental gifts were not less attractive, for her education, partly conducted in England, was very superior to that generally bestowed upon Spanish women, who seldom quit their native country. Shortly after the opposition of the higher Northern Powers had put an end to the idea of a union between the Emperor Napoleon III. and the Princess Carola Wasa of Sweden, he apprised the Council of Ministers of his intended marriage with the daughter of the Countess Montijos; a measure which excited some disapproval among them, and even led to their temporary withdrawal from office. During the short time which intervened between the public announcement of the approaching event and its realisation, the Countess Téba and her mother took up their abode in the palace of the Elysée. The marriage was celebrated with much magnificence on Jan. 29, 1853, at Notre Dame. The life of the Empress Eugénie after her marriage was comparatively uneventful, being passed chiefly in the ordinary routine of state etiquette; in visits to the various royal maisons de plaisance, varied by an extended progress through France in company with her husband; by an annual sojourn for the benefit of her health at Biarritz, her favourite summer resort in the days of her girlhood; by a journey in England and Scotland in the autumn of 1861, and in 1864 to some of the German baths. The Empress Eugénie, who became the mother of an heir to the house of Bonaparte, March 16, 1856, was a devoted supporter of the claims of the Holy See, and to her influence much of the policy of the Emperor towards Italy has been attributed. Accompanied by the Emperor, she visited the cholera hospitals in Paris in October 1865, and her conduct on that occasion was very highly commended. In July 1866 she made with the Prince Imperial an official tour in Lorraine, and was present at the fête held at Nancy in commemoration of the reunion of that province with France. On the occasion of the centenary of Napoleon I., in August 1869, she proceeded with the Prince Imperial to Corsica. In October of the same year, her Majesty made a voyage to the East on board the steam yacht l'Aigle. She went first to Venice, thence to Constantinople, next to Port Said, where she was present at the formal opening of the Suez Canal (November 17), visited the most interesting places in Turkey and Egypt, and returned to France at the end of November. On the outbreak of the war between France and Germany she was appointed Regent (July 27, 1870) during the absence of the Emperor. Immediately after the revolution in Paris, on September 4, she hurriedly left the Tuileries, and escaped from France. She landed at Ryde, in the Isle of Wight, Sept. 9, 1870, and shortly afterwards proceeded to join the Prince Imperial at Hastings. Camden House, Chislehurst, was subsequently selected as a residence by the Imperial exiles. In October 1871, the Empress went to Spain on a visit to her mother. The Emperor died at Chislehurst, Jan. 9, 1873; and in 1879 the Prince Imperial, who had accompanied the English army in the Zulu war, was killed. His body was brought to England and buried at Chislehurst, and the following year the Empress went to Zululand to visit the fatal spot on the anniversary of her son's death. At the beginning of the year 1881 the Empress removed from Camden House to the Farnborough estate in Hampshire, close to the borders of the county of Surrey. The estate, which was purchased for £50,000, consists of about 257 acres, with a picturesque mansion. Since 1870 the Empress has several times crossed France on her way south, and in 1883 and on other occasions she spent some days in Paris, but no political significance was attached to these sojourns. In the summer of 1894 the Emperor of Germany visited her during his stay at Aldershot. Address: Farnborough.

EUSTIS, Hon. James Biddle, American statesman, was born in New Orleans, Aug. 27, 1834. He graduated at Harvard Law School in 1854, and was admitted to the bar in 1856. He practised in his native city until the outbreak of the Civil War, when he entered the Confederate Army and served as Judge-Advocate until the close of the war. He was elected a member of the Louisiana Legislature prior to the passage of the Reconstruction Acts by Congress, and was one of the Commissioners sent to Washington to confer with President Johnson on the re-admission of Louisiana to the Union. From 1872 to 1874 he was a member of the lower branch of the Louisiana Legislature, and from 1874 to 1876 of the State Senate. In 1876 he was elected U.S. Senator. This position he retained until 1879, when he became Professor of Civil Law in the University of Louisiana. In 1885 he again entered the U.S. Senate, where he remained until 1891, when he resumed his law practice in New Orleans. At the beginning of Mr. Cleveland's second term as President (March 1893) Mr. Eustis was appointed American Minister to France, and a few weeks later was made Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the same country, a position which he retained till the close of Mr. Cleveland's administration (1897).

EVANS, Arthur John, M.A., F.S.A., eldest son of John Evans, D.C.L., F.R.S., &c., born in 1851 at Nash Mills, Hemel Hempstead, Herts, was educated at Harrow School and Brasenose College, Oxford, of which he is now an Hon. Fellow, taking a first class (in History) 1874, and continuing his historical studies at Göttingen University, under Dr. Pauli. At an early period he undertook a series of journeys having for their object antiquarian and ethnological researches through some of the least-known European regions. In the course of these he twice explored the Finnish and Lapp countries between the Arctic and Baltic Seas, in company with Mr. F. M. Balfour (afterwards Professor), and obtained interesting materials regarding the survival of heathen rites in those regions. In 1875 he travelled through the Slavonic parts of South-Eastern Europe, and after the insurrection broke out, took up his residence at Ragusa, in Dalmatia, and, while continuing to explore the antiquities and study the languages and ethnology of the Peninsula, followed the revolutionary movement with warm interest, and described the course of events from the camps of the insurgents. His correspondence, mostly communicated to the Manchester Guardian, and partly republished as "Illyrian Letters," afforded Parliamentary weapons to the enemies of Turkish dominion in Europe. He was also instrumental in calling attention to the state of the Bosnian refugees, and he gave active assistance to Miss Irby's Relief Fund. During the comparatively tranquil period that succeeded he was able to continue his explorations of the interior, the archaeological results of which have appeared in Archæologia, under the title of "Antiquarian Researches in Illyricum," and in accounts of new discoveries of Illyrian coins in the Numismatic Chronicle, &c. In 1882 a revolt broke out in the Crivoscian Highlands of South Dalmatia, consequent on the attempt of the Austrian Government (in violation of their agreement) to introduce military service into the country. The Austrian Government, highly irritated with Mr. Evans, had him arrested on a charge of complicity with the insurgents, and confined him in the prison at Ragusa. After seven weeks' solitary confinement he was released by Imperial orders, but expelled from the Austrian dominions. He then settled in Oxford, and continued his archaeological studies. In 1883 he was chosen as University Lecturer on the Ilchester Foundation, and delivered a course of Lectures "On the Slavonic Conquest of Illyricum." In 1884, on the death of Mr. J. H. Parker, he was made Keeper of the Ashmolean Museum, Oxford, with the re-organisation of which he has since been occupied. He has also been engaged in archaeological researches in Sicily and Great Greece, and in 1889 published "The Horsemen of Tarentum," a monograph on the coinage of that city, in 1892 "Syracusan Medallions and their Engravers," and in 1893-4 edited, with supplements, the fourth volume of Mr. Freeman's "Sicily," from his posthumous MSS. In 1895 he discovered in Crete the evidences of a "pre-Phœnician system of writing," upon which his continued researches in that island have now enabled him to publish two works. He has married a daughter of the late Prof. Freeman. Address: Taylorian Museum, Oxford.

EVANS, Sir John, K.C.B., Honorary D.C.L. Oxford, and Trinity University, Toronto, LL.D. Dublin and Toronto, and Sc.D. Cambridge, Treas. and V.P.R.S., V.P., S.A., For. Sec. G.S., &c., is son of the late Rev. A. D. Evans, D.D., who was Head-master of Market Bosworth Grammar School, Leicestershire. He was born on Nov. 17, 1823, and educated by his father. He has devoted much attention not only to archæology, but to geology and numismatics, as well as to other branches of science. For many years he was engaged in business as a paper manufacturer, and is the President of the Paper-Makers' Association. In 1864 he published "The Coins of the Ancient Britons," for which he received the Allier d'Hauteroche Prize from the French Academy. He brought out a supplement to this work in 1890. In 1872, "The Ancient Stone Implements, Weapons, and Ornaments of Great Britain," which was translated into French and published in Paris in 1875. "The Ancient Bronze Implements, Weapons, and Ornaments of Great Britain and Ireland," appeared in 1881, and a French translation of it in the following year. He has also written on the "Flint Implements in the Drift," in the Archæologia, vols. 38 and 39; and a variety of papers in the Archæologia, and in the Numismatic Chronicle, of which he is one of the editors. He was President of the Geological Society in 1875-76, and of the Anthropological Institute in 1878-79, and of the Society of Antiquaries from April 1885 to 1892, and has been President of the Numismatic Society since 1875. In 1891-92 he was President of the Society of Chemical Industry, and in 1897-98 of the British Association for the Advancement of Science. He is a Trustee of the British Museum, a correspondent of the French Institute (Académie des Inscriptions), and an honorary member of a large number of foreign learned societies; and his antiquarian and numismatic collections rank among the first in this country. He is a J.P. and D.L. for Hertfordshire, of which county he was High Sheriff in 1881-82. He is Chairman of Quarter Sessions for the St. Albans Division of Herts, and also Vice-Chairman of the Hertfordshire County Council. He married (1) Harriett Anne, daughter of John Dickinson, F.R.S.; (2) Frances, daughter of Joseph Phelps; and (3), in 1892, Maria, daughter of Charles C. Lathbury, Wimbledon. Addresses: Nash Mills, Hemel Hempstead; and Athenæum Club.

EVANS, Robley D., American naval officer, was born in Virginia in 1846, but was appointed to the United States Naval Academy from Utah in 1860, graduating there in 1863 as Acting Ensign. He was made Master in May 1866; Lieutenant in July 1866; Lieut.-Commander, March 1868; Commander in July 1878; and Captain in June 1893. He was in command of the U.S. battleship Iowa during the naval engagement of July 3, 1898, off the coast of Cuba, in which the Spanish fleet under Admiral Cervera was entirely destroyed. His nickname in the navy of "Fighting Bob Evans" arises from a belief in his ready bravery.

EVANS, Sebastian, M.A., LL.D., a distinguished member of a family eminent in literature, science, and art, was born on the 2nd of March 1830, at Market Bosworth, in Leicestershire. From his grandfather, the Rev. Lewis Evans, a well-known astronomer and Professor of Mathematics at the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, and from his father, the Rev. Arthur Evans, a professor, an artist, and a somewhat voluminous writer, he derived a literary and artistic training. He was educated by his father, and afterwards at Cambridge, where he gained a Scholarship at Emmanuel College. He graduated B.A. in 1853, M.A. in 1857, and LL.D. in 1868. On leaving Cambridge he became Secretary to the "India Reform Association," and was the first person in England to receive the news that the Mutiny had actually broken out in India. Retiring shortly afterwards to undertake the management of the artistic department in the celebrated glass works of Messrs. Chance Brothers & Co., near Birmingham, he not only designed innumerable stained-glass windows for various churches and cathedrals at home and abroad, but in 1862 he designed the "Robin Hood" window for the Great International Exhibition, a coloured lithograph of it being published in Mr. Waring's "Masterpieces of Industrial Art." In 1867, having previously begun to interest himself in politics, and sharing with Mr. Joseph Chamberlain a local celebrity—owing to the facility of speech and the freedom with which they both expressed their opinions in a Birmingham Debating Society called "The Tobacco Parliament,"—he undertook the editorship of the Birmingham Daily Gazette, and in 1868 he unsuccessfully contested Birmingham in the Conservative interest. After severing his connection with the Gazette he was called to the Bar, and in 1873 joined the Oxford Circuit, practising successfully for some years, and writing for many of the leading Conservative newspapers in London, his leading articles in the Observer specially attracting attention. He took an active part in the organisation of the Conservative party in connection with the National Union of Conservative Associations, and in 1878, in company with Earl Percy and Mr. W. H. Smith, he started The People newspaper in the interests of his party, editing it himself for nearly three years till its success was assured. He is the author of innumerable essays and papers, political, historical, and archæological. Many of his lectures on history and art have also been separately published, as have many translations and original short stories which have appeared in various periodicals and magazines, the most noteworthy being "King Solomon, Ben-David, and the Players at the Chess," and "The Cavern of the Great Death," both of which appeared in Longman's Magazine. In 1881 he wrote "The Dialect of Leicestershire, with a glossary of Leicestershire words, phrases, and proverbs," for the English Dialect Society, by whom it was published, and this was followed by "Contributions to a History of the Thames," which first appeared in parts in Notes and Queries. He is part author with his son of "The Upper Ten," a story of the very best society, founded on M. Pailleron's "Le Monde, ou l'on s'ennuie," and published by Messrs. Sampson, Low & Co., uniform with their early editions of Mr. Rudyard Kipling's Indian stories. He was one of the original founders of Macmillan's Magazine, and was at one time a contributor to Punch, the celebrated "Pictures from the Black Country" being from his pen and pencil. He is well known both as an artist and a poet. He has exhibited in oils and water-colours, as well as in black and white, at the Royal Academy and other galleries. He excels as a draughtsman, and his portraits in ivory, and his wood-carvings and engravings, are considered unique. Of his poems, some of the best known are to be found in his two volumes "Brother Fabian's Manuscript" and "In the Studio," published by Macmillan in 1865 and 1875. Selections from his poems have also been published in "The Poets and Poetry of the Century," and in "The Painter-Poets," as well as in other works. His sonnets on the Death of the Duke of Wellington, published while he was still at Cambridge, at once established his position in the world of letters. His Latin verse has a very high reputation. His translations in verse from the Greek, Latin, Italian, and French are all equally happy, among those most known being "An Italian Country House, A.D. 1490-1500," a description in verse translated from the Latin of Giambattista Spagnoli," which first appeared in Longman's, and another work translated from the same author, "John Baptist Spagnolo of Mantua, Carmelite, to John Crestoni of Piacenza, Carmelite, then going away for a time to Monte Caestano," which was separately published with an introduction; and an Envoi, also in verse, in 1884. In addition to these, many other poems and verses, of which several have been set to music, have appeared in various periodicals and magazines, and his political skits and parodies have gained a high reputation. He is a very eminent scholar and linguist, and his knowledge of early and mediæval history and art is considered unequalled. He was one of the first workers in the field of prehistoric research, and as early as 1859, after visiting with his brother, Sir John Evans, and the late Sir Joseph Prestwich, the wonderful collection of stone implements discovered in the river-drift of the river Somme by M. Boucher de Perthes, and being convinced that they were undoubted specimens of man's handiwork, he did much to rouse public interest in the importance of the discovery, and has ever since given valuable assistance to his brother in many of his brother's well-known works. Of his later publications, in 1898, his masterly translation of "The High History of the Holy Graal," from the French of the early 13th century, with an epilogue by himself, and illustrations by the late Sir Edward Burne-Jones, was published by Messrs. Dent in their Temple Classics. This was followed by his original work on the Graal, "In Quest of the Graal," also published by Messrs. Dent; and at the close of the year Messrs. Nutt announced the publication of "St. Francis of Assisi, The Mirror of Perfection, written by Brother Leo, edited by M. Paul Sabatier and translated by Sebastian Evans, from the mediæval Latin." Dr. Evans is a brother of Sir John Evans, K.C.B., D.C.L., LL.D., &c., and he married, in 1857, Miss Elizabeth Goldney, daughter of the late Mr. Francis Bennett Goldney, one of the founders and directors of the London Joint-Stock Bank. Address: Coombe Lea, Bickley, Kent.

EVARTS, Hon. William Maxwell, American statesman, LL.D., was born in Boston, Feb. 6, 1818. He graduated at Yale College in 1837, studied at the Harvard Law School, and in 1841 was admitted to the New York Bar, where he soon took a high position. From 1849 to 1853 he was Deputy U.S. District Attorney. In the impeachment trial of President Andrew Johnson, in the spring of 1868, Mr. Evarts was the leading counsel for the defendant, and from July 1868 to the close of Mr. Johnson's administration, he was Attorney-General of the United States. In 1872 he was counsel for the United States in the tribunal of arbitration on the Alabama claims at Geneva; and in the celebrated Tilton-Beecher case, in 1875, he was at the head of Mr. Beecher's counsel. He also argued the Republican side of the case before the Electoral Commission in 1877. Upon the accession, in March 1877, of Mr. Hayes to the Presidency, he was made Secretary of State, a position which he retained until the close of Mr. Hayes' term, 1881. From 1885 to 1891 he was U.S. Senator from New York. Although an accomplished scholar and able speaker, he has published only a few occasional discourses and addresses. Among these are the "Centennial Oration before the Linonian Society of Yale College," 1853; an "Address before the New England Society," 1854; a Eulogy on Chief-Justice Chase; the Centennial Oration at Philadelphia, and at the unveiling of the statues of Webster and Seward in New York.

EVE, Frederic S., F.R.C.S. Eng., received his medical training at St. Bartholomew's and Leipzig. He is a Fellow of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society, and member of various other medical societies. At St. Bartholomew's he was House Surgeon and Ophthalmic House Surgeon, Surgical Registrar, and Curator of the Museum, of which he published a "Pathological Catalogue" in 1882. He was Pathological Curator at the Royal College of Surgeons of England from 1881-90, and is co-editor of the "Pathological Catalogue of the Museum of the R.C.S.E.," 1885. In 1882-84 he was Erasmus Wilson Lecturer at the College, his subject being Tumours. He is Surgeon and Ophthalmic Surgeon and Lecturer on Pathology at the London Hospital, and Surgeon to the Evelina Hospital. He has contributed largely to Mr. Trever's "Manual of Surgery" and to the leading medical journals. Address: 125 Harley Street, W.

EVE, Henry Weston, M.A., Headmaster of University College School, is a son of the late Mr. H. W. Eve, of Maldon, Essex. He was born in 1838, and educated at Mill Hill, Rugby, and Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a Fellow in 1862, after graduating with both mathematical and classical honours. From 1860 to 1876 he was, with some intervals, a Master at Wellington College, and, for most of the time, at the head of the modern side, which educated a good many boys for the scientific branches of the army. In 1866 he acted as an Assistant-Commissioner to the School Inquiry Commission. In 1876 he succeeded the late Prof. Key in the Headmastership of University College School, an office which he still holds. Since 1883 he has been Dean of the College of Preceptors. He has published several books designed to promote the more scholarly study of French and German, including a French Grammar (jointly with F. de Baudiss, first edition, 1870), a German Grammar (first edition, 1880), and several editions of French classics (1892, &c.). Address: University College School, Gower Street, W.C.

EVERETT, Joseph David, M.A., D.C.L., D.Sc., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., was born Sept. 11, 1831, at Rushmere, near Ipswich, where his father was a yeoman farmer; was educated at a small school, and acquired some knowledge of advanced mathematics by private study. He was Mathematical Master from 1850 to 1854 in a school at Totteridge, Herts; and in 1854 he entered the University of Glasgow, where he took the degrees of B.A. and M.A. with honours in all the subjects of the curriculum. After successively occupying the posts of Secretary to the Meteorological Society of Scotland, Professor of Mathematics at King's College, Nova Scotia, and Assistant-Professor of Mathematics in the University of Glasgow, he was appointed in 1867 Professor of Natural Philosophy in Queen's College, Belfast, from which position he retired in the beginning of 1897. He was elected F.R.S. in 1879, and F.R.S.E. in 1862. He has been secretary to the Underground Temperature Committee of the British Association, from its appointment in 1867, and has directed the observations taken for determining the rate at which temperature increases downwards in the earth. His reports on this subject have appeared in the British Association volumes; the most notable being a "Summary" of principles, methods, and results in the volume for 1882. He moved in 1871 the appointment of a Committee of the British Association for the selection and naming of dynamical and electrical units, and, after two years' discussion, drafted for the meeting in 1873 a Report, the adoption of which originated the C.G.S. system now generally employed. The names "dyne," "erg," and "C.G.S. unit" were introduced at his suggestion, and a small volume of "Illustrations of the C.G.S. System," which he prepared, was published by the Physical Society in 1875, and has been enlarged for subsequent editions, besides being translated into French, German, Dutch, and Russian. His version of the "Traité élémentaire de Physique" of M. Privat Deschanel, published 1870-1872, has been so largely re-written, partly in the first and still more in succeeding editions, that it is in the main an original work. He has also published an Elementary Text Book of Physics in 1877; "Outlines of Natural Philosophy," intended as a school reading book, 1885; and "Vibratory Motion and Sound," 1882. He has contributed to the Greenwich Observations, and to the Royal Societies of Edinburgh and London, papers on Underground Temperature, on Atmospheric Electricity, and on Rigidity; to the Philosophical Magazine papers on Mirage, Atmospheric Circulation, Forced Vibrations, Brightness of Images, and Resultant Tones; and to the Messenger of Mathematics an application of Quaternions to Sir R. Ball's "Theory of Screws." His "Universal Proportion Table," published (and described in Philosophical Magazine) in 1866, was the first application of the parallel-column arrangement for obtaining a slide-rule with very open scale, it being printed from copper plates on two large cards, with one of them cut away like a gridiron. He is a skilled shorthand writer, on a system invented by himself in his youth (printed for private circulation in 1851 and published in 1877), which has numerous adherents both at home and in the colonies. It gives greater facility for vowel insertion than the older systems, and is constructed with a view to certainty of reading, and freedom of writing, rather than extreme brevity. The chief "Everett Shorthand" publications are: "Shorthand for General Use," 1877; "School Shorthand," 1883; "Shorthand Lessons," 1892; "Everett Leaflets," issued to members of the Everett Shorthand Society since 1884. He married in 1862 Jessie, daughter of the Rev. A. Fraser, Glasgow. Address: Queen's College, Belfast.

EWART, James Cossar, M.D., F.R.S., Regius Professor of Zoology at Edinburgh University, was born at Penicuik, Midlothian, Nov. 26, 1851. He is the youngest son of the late John Ewart, and was educated at Penicuik and at the University of Edinburgh, where, in 1874, he was appointed Demonstrator of Anatomy. In 1875 he was elected Conservator of the Museums of University College, London. While at University College, he completely reorganised the Museums and investigated the life-history of the bacillus of splenic fever and of other minute organisms. In 1878 he was appointed by the Crown to the Chair of Natural History in the University of Aberdeen, and in 1882 he was transferred to the corresponding chair in the University of Edinburgh—the most desirable post a naturalist can hold in this country. In the same year he was elected a member of the Fishery Board for Scotland. While in Aberdeen Professor Ewart introduced classes for the practical study of zoology, and organised a small marine laboratory. At this, the first marine laboratory started in Britain, Professor Ewart and the late Mr. Romanes made their investigations for their memoir on the Echinoderms, which the Royal Society constituted the Croonian lecture for 1881. Since returning to Edinburgh, Professor Ewart has devoted himself to developing the Natural History Department, and to creating a scientific department in connection with the Fishery Board; considerable progress has already been made in working out the natural history and development of the herring and other food fishes. In this work Professor Ewart has the use of three marine stations, and is assisted by a staff of three naturalists and several fishery officers; and the Government, in addition to voting grants for carrying on the scientific work, has provided boats for trawling and other operations. Of late years he has been endeavouring to discover improved methods for preserving fish, and to introduce the famous Loch Fyne herring to the Antarctic Ocean. In addition to the laborious work of his chair, Professor Ewart has found time to have two lectureships instituted in the University—one on "Embryology," and one on the "Philosophy of Natural History," and he has done much to obtain for the students a much wanted Union such as exists at Oxford and at Cambridge. He has published a number of works on general and marine zoology, among which mention may be made of "The Locomotor System of the Echinoderms," 1884, written in conjunction with the late Professor Romanes, with whom he studied the Sea-urchins; "The Cranial Nerves and Lateral Sense Organs of Elasmobranchs," 1889-91; "The Development of the Horse," 1894; "The Birth of a Zebra Hybrid," 1896, this being a subject in which he is now practically interested; "The Penicuik Experiments: I. Telephony and Reversion," 1897. Addresses: Edinburgh University; and the Bungalow, Penicuik.

EWING, Professor James Alfred, B.Sc. Edin., Hon. M.A. Cantab., F.R.S., M.Inst.C.E., Professor of Mechanism and Applied Mechanics in the University of Cambridge, son of the Rev. James Ewing, of Dundee, was born March 27, 1855, and was educated at the High School of Dundee, and at Edinburgh University, where he graduated in Science. He assisted Lord Kelvin (Sir William Thomson) and the late Professor Fleeming Jenkin for four years in their work as engineers, taking part in a number of telegraph cable expeditions on their behalf. In 1878 he was appointed by the Japanese Government Professor of Mechanical Engineering in the University of Tokio, which office he held till 1883, when he resigned his chair in Japan to become Professor of Engineering in University College, Dundee. In 1890 he was elected Professor of Mechanism at Cambridge, where he has organised an Engineering Laboratory, with teaching adapted to the new Tripos in Mechanical Science which was established by the Senate of the University in 1892. While in Japan he gave special attention to the study of earthquakes, and devised seismographs by which a complete analysis of the motion of the ground was obtained. His apparatus for earthquake measurement is now used in many observatories, and was the subject of a Friday evening discourse at the Royal Institution in 1888. He is the author of a treatise on "Earthquake Measurement," published by the University of Tokio, 1883, and of many papers on the same subject in the Transactions of the Seismological Society of Japan. He has given much attention to electricity and its applications, and especially to the study of Magnetism, and is the author of a treatise on "Magnetic Induction in Iron," 1890, and of many papers, containing the results of original research, on this and kindred subjects, of which the chief are: "Experimental Researches in Magnetism," Phil. Trans., 1885; "Effects of Stress and Magnetisation on the Thermo-electric Quality of Iron," Phil. Trans., 1886; "Magnetic Qualities of Nickel," Phil. Trans., 1888; "Magnetism of Iron in Strong Fields," Phil. Trans., 1889; "Time-Lag in the Magnetisation of Iron," Proc. Roy. Soc., 1889; "Contributions to the Molecular Theory of Magnetism," Proc. Roy. Soc., 1890; "Magnetic Qualities of Iron," Phil. Trans., 1893; "Magnetic Testing of Iron and Steel," Min. Proc. Inst. C.E., 1896. His "Magnetic Curve-Tracer," for exhibiting these qualities, was shown in an evening lecture at the Edinburgh Meeting of the British Association (1892), and his experiments in illustration of the molecular process in magnetic induction were shown at the Royal Institution in 1891. His "Hysteresis Tester" and "Permeability Bridge" are practical instruments of magnetic measurement which are now extensively used by steel-makers and electrical engineers. In 1895 he was awarded a Royal medal by the Royal Society for his researches in Magnetism. Professor Ewing is the author of a treatise on "The Steam-Engine and other Heat Engines" (2nd edit., 1897), and of several of the longer articles on engineering subjects in the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and is also a contributor to Chambers's Encyclopædia (articles, "Dynamo," "Electric Light," &c.). He is a member of the Institution of Civil, Mechanical, and Electrical Engineers, and was elected F.R.S. in 1888. He married, in 1879, Anne, daughter of the late T. B. Washington, Claymont, West Virginia. Address: Engineering Laboratory, Cambridge.

EXETER, Bishop of. See BICKERSTETH, THE RIGHT REV. EDWARD HENRY.

EYRE, The Most Rev. Charles, LL.D., Roman Catholic prelate, son of the late John Lewis Eyre, Esq. (Count Eyre, in the Papal dominions), and brother of the late Very Rev. Monsignor Eyre, of Hampstead, was born 1817, at Askam Bryan Hall, York, and educated at Ushaw College, Durham, and in Rome. He was appointed assistant-priest at St. Andrew's Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne, in 1843; removed to St. Mary's, Newcastle, in 1844; became senior priest at St. Mary's Cathedral, Newcastle, in 1847, and remained there, with a short interval, till Christmas, 1868. He was for many years Canon of the diocese of Hexham and Newcastle, and for some time was Vicar-General; was appointed Roman Catholic Archbishop for the Western District, and Delegate-Apostolic for Scotland in December 1868; and was consecrated in the church of St. Andrea della Valle, Rome, Jan. 13, 1869, by the title of Archbishop of Anazarba, in partibus infidelium. When the ancient hierarchy was restored in Scotland by Pope Leo XIII., on March 4, 1878, Mgr. Eyre was appointed Roman Catholic Archbishop of Glasgow. Archbishop Eyre is the author of a "History of St. Cuthbert," 1849 (3rd edit., 1889); "Children of the Bible," "Papers on the Old Cathedral of Glasgow." He is a "Grand Cross" of the Order of Isabella the Catholic, a chaplain of the Order of Malta, and a Knight of the Holy Sepulchre. Address: 6 Bowmont Gardens, Glasgow.

EYRE, Edward John, for some time Governor of Jamaica, son of the late Rev. Anthony Eyre, Vicar of Hornsea and Long Riston, in the East Riding of Yorkshire, and Sarah, daughter of Dr. Mapleton, Bath; lineal descendant of the Eyres of Hope, Derbyshire, temp. Henry II., was born on Aug. 5, 1815, and educated at the Louth and Sedbergh Grammar Schools. Finding he would have to wait nearly a year to obtain a commission in the army (for which the purchase-money was lodged) he elected, when only seventeen years of age, to accept the purchase-money (£450) and go out to Australia at once to try his fortune. He arrived in New South Wales early in 1833 with £400, engaged in sheep farming, and then in transporting stock overland from New South Wales to South Australia. In the latter colony he purchased property on the Lower Murray River, where he remained several years, having been appointed resident magistrate of his district, and protector of the aborigines. In a work entitled "Discoveries in Central Australia," published in 1845, he earnestly pleads the cause of the wandering native tribes. In the meantime he distinguished himself as an Australian explorer, opening out an extensive tract of previously unknown country to the north of Adelaide in South Australia, and traversing the whole distance from Spencer's Gulf in 138° east longitude to King George's Sound in 118° east longitude, thus proving the practicability of an overland route between the colonies of South Australia and West Australia, for which achievement he received the Founder's Medal of the Royal Geographical Society. In 1845 Mr. Eyre returned to England, and in 1846 received from Earl Grey, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, the appointment of Lieut.-Governor of New Zealand, as second to the Governor, Sir George Grey. Having served his full term as a colonial governor he returned to England in 1853, and about a twelvemonth afterwards was appointed Lieut.-Governor of the island of St. Vincent. This post he held for six years; and in the years 1859 and 1860 he was in the island of Antigua, filling the place of the Governor of the Leeward Islands, who was on leave of absence. In 1860, upon the termination of his Governorship of Antigua, Mr. Eyre returned to England to recruit his health; and in 1862 he was chosen by the late Duke of Newcastle, Secretary of State for the Colonies, to administer the Government-in-Chief of Jamaica and its dependencies during the absence of Governor Darling, who had returned to England on account of ill-health. In consequence of the non-return of Governor Darling, Mr. Eyre was appointed Captain-General and Governor, General-in-Chief and Vice-Admiral of the Island of Jamaica, July 15, 1864; and an insurrection having broken out in October 1865, he proclaimed martial law, and used very vigorous measures for its suppression. As a result, what was believed to be a dangerous insurrection was crushed. But his measures, more especially in the trial by court-martial and condemnation to death of George William Gordon, a mulatto of property, excited much resentment among certain sections at home, and a commission of inquiry was despatched to Jamaica, Governor Eyre being superseded, and Sir Henry Storks temporarily appointed in his place. The report of the committee, published in June 1866, exonerated Governor Eyre from the heavy charges brought against him, but he was recalled, and Sir P. Grant appointed his successor. As regards the nature and extent of the emergency Mr. Eyre had to cope with, the commissioners reported: "The disturbances had their origin in a planned resistance to lawful authority; and not a few had for their object the extirpation of the white inhabitants, and it spread with singular rapidity over a vast tract of country;" and Sir Peter Grant (Mr. Eyre's successor) reported in reference to certain evidence taken before a special commission of oyer and terminer held on and after Jan. 24, 1866: "It appears to me that, as far as it goes, this judicial evidence is even of greater value than any evidence which could be obtained by the Royal Commission in their admirably conducted inquiry. . . . Moreover, this trial, which was held according to all the rules of English law, and was presided over by a legal judge, was necessarily deliberate, regular, fair, and full. . . . The judicial evidence in this case proves that the march and attack upon the Court-house on the 11th October were premeditated as part of an intended insurrection. . . . That the murder of certain persons who were murdered on that occasion was predetermined, was openly spoken of the day before the occurrence amongst those engaged in the attack, and was boasted of afterwards by others so engaged. The evidence throws no light upon the cause which may have led to the conspiracy; but it proves that the assailants proclaimed, upon making their attack, their object to be war; that the war announced was a war of colour; and that they themselves understood, the day after the slaughter, that what they had undertaken was war." Mr. Eyre's health having suffered from long service in the tropics, he retired from the Public Service in 1874 upon pension as a retired Colonial Governor. Governor Eyre married, in 1850, Adelaide, daughter of Captain Ormonde, R.N. Address: Walreddon Manor, Tavistock, Devon.

EYTON, Canon Robert, M.A., was born, June 21, 1845, in Shropshire. His father was the Rev. R. W. Eyton, Rector of Ryton, Shropshire, author of "The Antiquities of Shropshire"—a well-known antiquary. He was educated at Shrewsbury Grammar School, under Dr. Kennedy, from 1859 to 1864, and at Christ Church, Oxford, from 1864 to 1868. He was ordained Deacon and Priest in 1870. He was Curate at St. Nicholas, Guildford, from September 1870 to April 1871, and then at St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, from 1871 to 1874, and was in charge of St. Mary's, Graham Street, from 1874 to 1884. He was appointed Sub-Almoner in 1883 by the Bishop of Ely; and Prebendary of St. Paul's Cathedral, in 1885, by Mr. Gladstone. He was Rector of Holy Trinity, Upper Chelsea, from 1884 to 1895, and was appointed Rector of St. Margaret's, and Canon of Westminster, in 1895, by the Earl of Rosebery. He is the author of: "The True Life," 1889; "The Apostles' Creed," 1890; "The Lord's Prayer," 1892; "The Search for God," 1893; "The Ten Commandments," 1894; "The Beatitudes," 1895; "The Temptation of Jesus," 1895; "The Glory of the Lord," 1897. Address: 17 Dean's Yard, Westminster, S.W.

FAED, John, R.S.A., artist, born in 1820, at Burley Mill, in the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright, where his father was an engineer and millwright, showed an early taste for art, and, encouraged by a successful painting, which he finished at the age of twelve, began to paint miniatures in his own neighbourhood. He repaired in 1841 to Edinburgh, where he exhibited in 1850 some pictures of humble life, which met with a ready sale. His principal works are: "Shakespeare and his Contemporaries"; and two series of drawings, illustrating "The Cottar's Saturday Night" and "The Soldier's Return." Since coming to London in 1864, Mr. Faed has painted: "The Wappenschaw, or Shooting Match"; "Catherine Sefton"; "The Old Style"; "Tam o' Shanter"; "Haddon Hall of Old"; "The Ballad"; "Old Age"; "The Stirrup Cup"; "The Old Crockery Man"; "John Anderson, my Jo"; "Parting of Evangeline and Gabriel"; "The Old Brocade"; "Auld Mare Maggie"; "Game-keeper's Daughter"; and "The Hiring Fair."

FAED, Thomas, R.A. (brother of Mr. John Faed), born at Burley Mill, in the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright, in 1826, lost his father in his boyhood, but, aided by his brother, who was working his way to reputation as an artist in Edinburgh, resolved to follow the bent of his genius. While a student at the School of Design in Edinburgh, where for a short period he was under the tuition of Sir W. Allan, he was annually successful for the competition for prizes in various departments. The earliest work of art he exhibited in public was a drawing in water colours from the "Old English Baron." He soon after took to oil painting, exercising his brush on such subjects as draught-players and shepherd boys. Mr. Faed became an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1849, settled permanently in London in 1852, and began to exhibit at the Royal Academy, generally choosing domestic and pathetic subjects, or subjects appealing to Scotch religious sentiment. In 1855 his "Mitherless Bairn" elicited very high praise. Other works by Mr. Faed are: "Home and the Homeless"; "The First Break in the Family"; "Sunday in the Backwoods"; "The Last o' the Clan"; "Hush! Let him Sleep"; "The Anxious Look Out"; "Highland Tramp crossing a Headland"; and "The Shepherd's Wife." He exhibited "The Rustic Bather" in the Royal Academy's Exhibition, 1893. Mr. Faed was made A.R.A. in 1859 and R.A. in 1864, and retired in 1893. He was elected an Honorary Member of the Vienna Royal Academy in January 1875. Addresses: 24A Cavendish Road, St. John's Wood, S.W.; and Athenæum.

FAIRBAIRN, Sir Andrew, D.Sc., J.P., D.L., born at Glasgow on March 5, 1828, is the only son of Peter Fairbairn, afterwards Mayor of Leeds, and knighted by the Queen. He was educated at Leeds, Geneva, and Glasgow, and in 1846 became a pensioner at Christ's College, Cambridge, but migrated to Peterhouse in January of the following year. He graduated B.A. in January 1850, and took his M.A. degree in 1853. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple on April 30, 1852, and attended the West Riding Sessions and Northern Circuit until 1856. He then relinquished practice, and in 1860 became a partner in the firm of his father, on whose death in 1861 he succeeded to the business. In 1866 he was elected Mayor of Leeds, and was re-elected to the same office in 1867. During the latter year he was a Commissioner of the Leeds Exhibition of Fine Arts, and was knighted (by patent) in 1868, during the Ministry of Mr. Disraeli. He resigned his mayoralty in September 1868, in order to stand as Liberal candidate for Leeds. He was unsuccessful, as also in 1874, when he contested Knaresborough. He became a director of the Great Northern Railway in 1878, and the same year he was appointed Royal Commissioner to the Paris Exhibition. In 1880 he was elected Member for the Eastern Division of the West Riding, and when the Division was split up into six sub-divisions in 1885 he was chosen as the first representative of the Otley Division. The same year he was appointed Vice-President of the Railway Congress at Brussels, and was made a Knight Commander of the Order of Leopold by the King of the Belgians. Having become a Liberal Unionist he successfully contested the Otley Division in 1886. He was President of the First Section of the International Railway Congress (Paris, 1889), when he was made a Commander of the Legion of Honour. He was High Sheriff of Yorkshire in 1892-93. In 1862 he married Clara, daughter of Sir John L. Loraine, Bart. Addresses: Askham Grange, York; 47 Brook Street, W., &c.

FAIRBAIRN, Andrew Martin, M.A., D.D., Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford, second son of John Fairbairn, born near Edinburgh, Nov. 4, 1838; was educated there, and studied in the Universities of Edinburgh and Berlin, and became minister of the Independent Church, Bathgate, West Lothian, in 1860. He was transferred to Aberdeen in 1872; appointed Principal of Airedale Independent College in 1877; and Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales in 1883; and became first Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford, in 1886. Is D.D. of the University of Edinburgh, 1878, and of Yale, 1889; is M.A. (by decree of Convocation) of the University of Oxford, 1896; was Muir Lecturer on the Philosophy and History of Religion in the University of Edinburgh, 1878-83; Lyman Bucher Lecturer in the University of Yale, 1891; and Gifford Lecturer in the University of Aberdeen, 1892-94. Dr. Fairbairn is the author of "Studies in the Philosophy of Religion and History," 1876; "Studies in the Life of Christ," 1880; "The City of God," 1882; "Religion in History and in Modern Life," 1884; enlarged edition, with Essay on "The Church and the Working Classes," 1894; "The Place of Christ in Modern Theology," 1893 (7th ed. 1896); "Christ in the Centuries" (sermons), 1893, and has been a frequent contributor to the Contemporary and other reviews. In 1883 he was Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, and in 1894-95 a Member of the Royal Commission on Secondary Education. He married the youngest daughter of the late John Shields, Byres, Bathgate, in 1868. Address: Mansfield College, Oxford.

FAIRBANKS, Charles Warren, United States Senator, was born in Union County, Ohio, May 11, 1852, and was educated in the schools of the neighbourhood and at Wesleyan University, Delaware, Ohio, graduating from that institution in 1872. He was admitted to the Bar in 1874, and removed to Indianapolis, Indiana, the same year, where he has practised his profession. He was elected a trustee of Wesleyan University, Ohio, in 1885; was Chairman of the Republican Convention of the State of Indiana in 1892, and was an unsuccessful candidate for election to the United States Senate in 1893. He was elected U.S. Senator in 1897, and took his seat March 4 in that year. In 1898 he was appointed on the Joint Commission to settle questions at issue between Canada and the United States.

FAIRFAX, Admiral Sir Henry, K.C.B., F.R.G.S., the son of Colonel Sir Henry Fairfax, Bart., was born in June 1837, and entered the navy in 1850. His first memorable service was in H.M.S. Amphitrite, which went two voyages to Behring Strait and the Arctic Sea, reaching a very high latitude. As Lieutenant in H.M.S. Ariel, on the south-east coast of Africa, he was constantly employed in boat service for the suppression of the slave-trade, and on several occasions performed distinguished service. He was specially promoted to the rank of Commander in 1862 for great gallantry exhibited in the capture of a piratical slaver. He was promoted Captain in 1868, and in 1872 accompanied Sir Bartle Frere as Naval Attaché on his special mission to the Sultan of Zanzibar. On his return, Sir Henry was appointed private secretary to the First Lord of the Admiralty. As captain of H.M.S. Volage he conveyed the astronomical expedition to Kerguelen for the purpose of observing the Transit of Venus in 1874, and in the following year he was appointed Senior Officer on the South-East Coast of America. In 1877 he took over the command of H.M.S. Britannia, and personally superintended the studies of Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales, who were then on board as cadets. For this service he received the C.B., Civil Division. In 1881 he became an Aide-de-camp to the Queen, and the year following was appointed to command H.M.S. Monarch. In this ship he took part in the bombardment of Alexandria, and at the finish of the operations, Captain Fairfax was appointed to command the naval and marine forces which were landed at Port Said in August 1882 for the preservation of order. He received a C.B. and the thanks of the Egyptian Government for these services, and also the Egyptian medal, bronze star, and the Osmanieh of the third class. Sir Henry was promoted Rear-Admiral in 1885, and was appointed Commander-in-Chief on the Australian Station in 1887. He returned to England in 1889, and became a Lord Commissioner of the Admiralty, and also a member of the Committee appointed to take evidence and to report upon the manning of the Navy. He commanded the Red Fleets in the naval manoeuvres of 1892 and 1893 with his flag in H.M.S. Royal Sovereign, and was also senior officer in command of the Channel Squadron from May 1892 to May 1894. Sir Henry was promoted K.C.B. in May 1896, and is a J.P. and a Deputy-Lieutenant of Roxburghshire. He married in 1872 Harriet, daughter of Sir David Kinloch, Bart. Addresses: Ravenswood, Melrose; and 5 Cranley Place, S.W.

FAITHFULL, Lilian, was born 12th March 1865, at Hoddesdon, Herts, and is the daughter of the late Mr. Francis Grantham Faithfull, for twenty years Clerk to the Merchant Taylors' Company. Her early education was conducted at home, and she was also privately coached by her uncle, the Rev. Charles Crittenden. In 1883 she entered Somerville College, Oxford, where she gained an Exhibition, and successively passed the 1st and 2nd Examinations for women in 1884 and 1885, achieving First Class Honours in the final school of English Literature in 1887. Throughout her career at Oxford she evinced great interest, not only in her studies, but in athletics and the various societies connected with college life. From 1887 to 1888 she remained at College as Secretary to the Principal, Miss Shaw Lefevre. Subsequently she was for a year a form mistress in the Oxford High School. She was appointed Lecturer on Modern History and English Literature at the Royal Holloway College in 1889, where she remained for five years preparing several successful students for the London B.A. degree. In 1896 the Council of King's College, London, appointed her Vice-Principal of the Ladies' Department, which is carried on at 13 Kensington Square, W., where she resides during each term. Miss Faithfull is a niece of the late Sir Monier Monier Williams, Sanscrit Professor at Oxford, and cousin to the late Miss Emily Faithfull, one of the pioneers of women's work. Since her appointment to King's College, she has become President of the All England Ladies' Hockey Association, and her interest in sports makes her specially popular with the students. Address: 13 Kensington Square, W.

FALGUIÈRE, Jean Alexandre Joseph, a French painter and sculptor, was born at Toulouse, Sept. 7, 1831. He was a pupil of Jouffroy, and at the École des Beaux Arts gained the Prix de Rome in 1859. In 1857 he sent to the Salon a plaster statue of the Infant Thesus, which was reproduced in marble and exhibited in 1865. Since then he has executed "A Christian Martyr," now in the Gallery of the Luxembourg, 1867; "Ophelia," 1869; "Vainqueur au Combat de Coq," 1870, also in the Luxembourg; "Pierre Corneille," 1872 (purchased by the Government); "Danseuse Égyptienne," 1873, for the Théâtre Français; "La Suisse accueillant l'Armée Française," 1874, presented to the town of Toulouse by the Federal Council; a bust of Lamartine, 1876, which was solemnly unveiled at Mâcon in August 1878; "Coquelin Cadet," 1886; "Diane," 1887; "La Musique," 1889; "La Femme au Paon," 1890; and many other busts and statues, including a monument of Admiral Courbet at Abbeville and a monument of Lafayette for Washington. M. Falguière is also well known as a painter. His first picture, "Près du Château," 1873, attracted much attention; "Les Lutteurs," 1875, was warmly praised, as were also "Cain and Abel," 1876; and "The Beheading of John the Baptist," 1877. Amongst more recent paintings may be mentioned: "Acis et Galatée," 1885; "Madeleine," 1887; "Nain Mendiant," 1888; and "Juno," 1889. At the Paris Exhibition of 1889 he was awarded a medal of the first class. He is a Commander of the Legion of Honour, and was elected a member of the Académie in succession to his master, Jouffroy, in 1882. His "Fan and Dagger," a revengeful Spanish beauty, is now in the Luxembourg. In 1898, when the Société des Gens de Lettres refused to accept M. Rodin's (q.v.) statue of Balzac, the commission was given to M. Falguière.

FALK, Dr. Paul Ludwig Adalbert, a German statesman, born at Metschkau, in Silesia, in 1827, is the son of a Lutheran minister, who was a "liberal theologian." He studied first in the Realschule of Landeshut, then at the Gymnasium in Breslau, and finally at the University of the latter city. In 1847 he began his legal career; in 1850 he became an assistant of the Public Prosecutor in Breslau; in 1853 chief of this office at Lyck; in 1861 he assumed the same functions before the Kammergericht or Superior Court, with duties in the Ministry of Justice; in 1862 he became Judge of the Court of Appeals at Glogau; and in 1868 he was permanently assigned as Privy Councillor, or Geheimrath, to the Ministry of Justice. He sat in the Prussian House of Deputies from 1858 to 1861; he was elected to the Constituent North German Reichstag in 1867; and he has been a member of the Imperial Parliament ever since its establishment. When Prince Bismarck resolved to weaken the influence of the Roman Catholic Church in Prussia, he caused Dr. Falk to be nominated Minister of Public Worship (Jan. 22, 1872), in succession to Dr. Von Mühler. During his tenure of office, Dr. Falk succeeded in passing various repressive laws directed against the hierarchy and the clergy, and his name has thus become known beyond the limits of the German Empire. He resigned the post of Minister of Public Worship, July 14, 1879, and was succeeded by Herr von Puttkamer. In January 1892 he was appointed President of the Higher Tribunal of Westphalia at Hamm, and retired from Parliamentary life. The Emperor has decorated him with the order of the Black Eagle.

FALMOUTH, Viscount, Major-General Evelyn E. T. Boscawen, C.B., 7th Viscount, was born July 24, 1847, and succeeded his father in 1889. He was educated at Eton, entered the army as Lieutenant in the Coldstream Guards in July 1866, and was promoted Captain in 1870. He was appointed Adjutant of his regiment in 1876, after having served as aide-de-camp to the Commander-in-Chief in Ireland. From March 1878 to September 1880 he acted as Assistant-Military Secretary at Headquarters, Ireland, and attained the command of a battalion of his regiment as Lieut-Colonel in November 1893. Lord Falmouth served with distinction in the Egyptian campaign of 1882, being present at the action of Mahuta and the battle of Tel-el-Kebir. He received a medal with clasp, the bronze star, and the Osmanieh of the fourth class. In the Soudan war of 1884 he served in the Nile Expedition, had command of the Guards' Camel Corps, and was present at the action of Abu Klea. He also had executive command at the action of El Gubat and the reconnaissance of Metameh. Lord Falmouth was several times mentioned in despatches, and received a C.B. In 1895 he was appointed Colonel of the Coldstream Guards, and of one of the Home Regimental Districts. He married in 1886 the Hon. Kathleen Douglas-Pennant, daughter of Lord Penrhyn, and has issue. He has a second title, Lord Boscawen-Rose, and in 1891 his lordship succeeded his mother in the Barony of Le-Despencer (creation 1264). He is a D.L. and J.P. of Kent. Addresses: 52 South Audley Street, S.W.; Tregothnan, Truro; and Mereworth Castle, Maidstone.

FANE, Sir Edmund Douglas Veitch, K.C.M.G., J.P., D.L., Minister at Copenhagen, was born May 6, 1837, and is the eldest son of Prebendary Fane. He was educated at Merton College, Oxford, and became Attaché at Teheran in 1858. He then was Secretary of Legation at Vienna, Copenhagen, Madrid, and Constantinople, where he was Minister Plenipotentiary ad interim in 1892. In 1893 he was appointed Envoy Extraordinary to the King of Serbia, which position he left for his present post in 1898. He is a J.P. and D.L. for Wiltshire, and was created K.C.M.G. at New Year, 1899. English address: Boyton Manor, Heytesbury, Wilts.

FANE, Violet. See CURRIE, LADY P. W.

FANTIN-LATOURE, Ignace Henri Jean Théodore, French painter, was born at Grenoble, Jan. 14, 1836, and is the son of a famous pastellist who died in 1875. He was educated by his father, by Lecoq de Boisbaudran, and Courbet. His first picture, "Studies from Nature," was exhibited in the Salon of 1861, and in 1864 his "Hommage à Delacroix," where the painter is surrounded by his principal disciples and defenders, created a great sensation. He repeated this in 1865 with "Le Toast," in which he grouped around the statue of Truth some of the artists and writers of that day. Since then his attention has been chiefly given to portraits and flower-painting. His chief works have been: "Portrait of Edouard Manet (the painter)," 1867; "Un Atelier aux Batignolles," 1870, now in the Luxembourg; "Coin de Table," 1872, in which he represented his friends Paul Verlaine, Jean Aicard, Arthur Rimbaud, Camille Pelletan, and others; "Souvenirs de Bayreuth," 1877; and "La Tentation de Sainte Antoine," 1891. M. Fantin-Latour has lived in London for some years past, and has been a continual exhibitor of flower-paintings at the Royal Academy and the Salon. He was decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1879, and in 1898 had three pictures exhibited at the loan collection at the Guildhall. Address: 26 Golden Square, W.

FARLEY, James Lewis, only son of the late Mr. Thomas Farley, of Meiltran, co. Cavan, was born at Dublin, Sept. 9, 1823. After the Crimean war and the peace of Paris in 1856, the attention of English capitalists was directed to Turkey, and the Ottoman Bank was formed. Mr. Farley accepted the post of Chief Accountant of the branch at Beyrout, which he assisted in successfully establishing. In 1860 he was appointed Accountant-General of the State Bank of Turkey at Constantinople, which subsequently became merged in the Imperial Ottoman Bank. He has been a frequent contributor to the newspaper press on questions relative to the trade and finances of Turkey, and was special correspondent for the Daily News during the Sultan's visit to Egypt in 1863, and during the Imperial and Royal visits to Constantinople in 1869. He is also the author of "Two Years in Syria," 1858; "The Druses and Maronites," 1861; "The Resources of Turkey," 1862; "Banking in Turkey," 1863; and "Turkey," 1866. In recognition of his literary services to the Turkish Empire, he was, in March 1870, appointed Consul at Bristol for his Imperial Majesty the Sultan. He is a Fellow of the Statistical Society of London, and a Corresponding Member of the Institut Egyptien, founded by the first Napoleon in Alexandria. Address: Bristol.

FARQUHAR, Lord, Horace Brand Townsend-Farquhar, J.P., is the son of Sir Walter M. Townsend-Farquhar, and was born in 1844. He sat in the House of Commons as Liberal Unionist Member for West Marylebone from 1895 to 1898, and he has represented East Marylebone on the London County Council since 1889. He was created a Baronet in 1892, and was raised to the Peerage in 1898. Lord Farquhar is President of the London Municipal Society, is a Director of the British South Africa Company, and is a Justice of the Peace for Middlesex and London. He was married in 1895 to Emily, daughter of Colonel H. Packe, Grenadier Guards, of Hurleston, Northamptonshire. Addresses: 7 Grosvenor Square, W.; and Castle Rising, Norfolk.

FARQUHARSON, Robert, M.P., LL.D. Aberdeen, M.D. Edinburgh, J.P., D.L., was born in Edinburgh in 1836, and is the second son of Francis Farquharson of Finzean. He was educated at the Edinburgh Academy and University, and received his medical training at Edinburgh, Paris, Berlin, and Vienna. He was formerly Assistant Surgeon to the Coldstreams, Physician to the Belgrave Hospital for Children, Assistant-Physician, Joint-Physician (Skin Department), and Lecturer on Materia Medica at St. Mary's Hospital. He has published several works on Therapeutics, notably "A Guide to Therapeutics," now in its fifth edition, and, as Medical Officer to Rugby School, was the author of "School Hygiene, the Diseases Incidental to School Life," and a work on the influence of athletics on health. He has contributed various papers to the leading medical journals. Dr. Farrar is an extensive landowner, and in 1880 he entered political life, and was elected Liberal Member for West Aberdeenshire, a constituency he continues to represent. London address: Migvie Lodge, Porchester Gardens, W.

FARRAR, The Very Rev. Frederic William, D.D., F.R.S., Dean of Canterbury, son of the Rev. C. P. Farrar, Rector of Sidcup, Kent, was born in Bombay Aug. 7, 1831. He received his education at King William's College, in the Isle of Man, and at King's College, London. He became a classical exhibitor of the University of London in 1850, graduated B.A. there, and was appointed a University scholar in 1852. Mr. Farrar was successively a Scholar and Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and in 1854 he took his Bachelor's degree in that University as fourth in the first class of the Classical Tripos, and a Junior Optime in Mathematics. He had already obtained the Chancellor's Prize for English Verse by his poem on "The Arctic Regions," and he subsequently gained the Le Bas Classical Prize, and became also Norrisian Prizeman. In 1854 he was ordained deacon by the Bishop of Salisbury, and in 1857 he was admitted into priest's orders by the Bishop of Ely. For many years he was one of the Assistant Masters at Harrow under Dr. Vaughan, and under his successor Dr. Butler; and he held, with great distinction, the Head-Mastership of Marlborough College from January 1871 till April 1876. Dr. Farrar was a select preacher before the University of Cambridge in 1868, and again in 1874-75, and often since, and he preached the Hulsean Lectures in 1870. He has frequently been appointed to preach before the University of Oxford, and was Bampton Lecturer in 1885. He was an Honorary Chaplain to the Queen from 1869 to 1873, when he was nominated one of her Majesty's Chaplains in Ordinary. In April 1876 he was appointed to a canonry in Westminster Abbey and the rectory of

St. Margaret's, vacant by the death of Canon Conway. He was appointed Archdeacon of Westminster, April 24, 1883; and has three times been elected by the clergy of Westminster as their Rural Dean. In 1890 Archdeacon Farrar was offered by the Speaker, and accepted, the Chaplaincy of the House of Commons, rendered vacant by the death of the Rev. Henry White. He was appointed Dean of Canterbury in 1895, and in the same year became Deputy Clerk of the Closet to the Queen. Dr. Farrar is the author of the following works of fiction: "Eric, or Little by Little," 1858; "Julian Home," 1859; and "St. Winifred's, or the World of School," 1863; "Darkness and Dawn," 1895; "Gathering Clouds," 1891; "Allegories," 1898. His philological works are: "The Origin of Language," 1860; "Chapters on Language," 1865; "Greek Grammar Rules," 6th edit., 1865; "Greek Syntax," 3rd edit., 1867; "Families of Speech," 1870; and "Language and Languages," being a revised edition of "Chapters on Language" and "Families of Speech," comprised in one volume, 1878. He has also published "A Lecture (before the Royal Institution) on Public School Education," with notes, 1867; and edited "Essays on a Liberal Education," 2nd edit., 1868. Both of these works contributed powerfully to enlarged ideas on the subject of Public School Education. His theological works are: "Seekers after God" (Sunday Library), 1869; "The Witness of History to Christ; being the Hulsean Lectures for 1870," 1871; "In the Days of thy Youth," sermons preached in the Chapel of Marlborough College, 1877; "The Life of Christ," 2 vols., 1874, which reached its twelfth edition in a single year; "Life of St. Paul," 1879; and "The Early Days of Christianity," 2 vols., 1882; besides several volumes of sermons; and notably that bold work, "Eternal Hope," 1880, in which Canon Farrar combats the doctrine of eternal torture in hell. In his work on "The Bible: its Meaning and Supremacy," he brought to a head and helped to perpetuate a very necessary change of view on the subject of inspiration. All Dr. Farrar's works have passed through many editions, and many of them have been translated into French, German, Dutch, Russian, Swedish, and Italian. Besides these works, Dr. Farrar has been a contributor to the Speaker's Commentary (Book of Wisdom) and Bishop Ellicott's Commentary (Book of Judges); to the Cambridge Bible for Schools he has contributed commentaries on St. Luke and the Epistle to the Hebrews, both in the Greek and in the English editions. To the "Expositor's Bible" he contributed commentaries on the First Book of Kings and the Book of

Daniel. He also furnished articles to Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible," Kitto's "Biblical Cyclopædia," the "Encyclopædia Britannica," &c. In 1883 he was appointed Rural Dean by the late Bishop of London, and was re-elected by the clergy to the same office in 1885. Archdeacon Farrar is Honorary Chaplain of the 2nd Volunteer Battalion Royal Fusiliers, and of the Church Lads' Brigade. In 1885 he was appointed Bampton Lecturer before the University of Oxford, and delivered a course (since published) on "The History of Interpretation." In 1885 he visited America, where he received a hearty welcome from all classes, and especially from the members of all religious denominations. He has taken a prominent part in temperance reform, in the Diocesan Council for the welfare of young men, in the Westminster Sanitary Aid Associations, in the Westminster Sunday School Association (of which he was the founder), in the formation of a seaside camp for London youths, in the support of brotherhoods, and in many other philanthropic works. As Dean of Canterbury he has already raised more than £18,000 for the restoration of the Cathedral. Addresses: The Deanery, Canterbury; and Athenæum.

FARREN, Ellen (Mrs. R. Soutar), best known as Nellie Farren, was born in Lancashire, and is the daughter of Henry Farren. She first appeared on the London stage at the Victoria Theatre in March, 1864, as Ninetta in "The Woman in Red." In the same year she joined the company at the Olympic. It is at the Gaiety Theatre, however, that her best triumphs have been won. She joined that theatre, on its opening under the management of Mr. John Hollingshead, in December 1868, appearing in the piece entitled "On the Cards." Her connection with the Gaiety, in its palmiest days, was a long one, and she took a leading part in most of the plays produced here. For twenty-five years, it will be remembered, she took the leading part in every burlesque, including the famous "Ruy Blas." She became the idol of the public at the Gaiety Theatre. Owing to illness, this gifted comédienne was latterly compelled to withdraw for a long period from the scene of her former triumphs. On March 17, 1898, the "Nellie Farren Benefit" proved one of the greatest events of the London theatrical year. Over £6000 was raised by the performance, the sale of programmes and photographs of Miss Farren realising £500. All the talent of the London stage contributed to the success of this unique entertainment, and the final scene of the performance showed Miss Nellie Farren in person, seated on a rostrum, and encircled by all the principal assistants in the success of the afternoon. It is understood that the large sum realised by the performance has purchased a respectable annuity for one who, in a gloomy age, has added materially to the gaiety of nations. This annuity the Messrs. Rothschild have very fittingly guaranteed to pay Miss Farren annually. Two-thirds of the total she will be allowed to dispose of by testament, while £1000 will be devoted to the establishment of a "Nellie Farren" cot in a children's hospital, and another £1000 will be equally divided between the two principal theatrical benevolent funds.

FARRER, Lord, Sir Thomas Henry Farrer, Bart., J.P., was born on June 24, 1819, and is the son of Thomas Farrer, of Lincoln's Inn. He was educated at Eton, and at Balliol College, Oxford, graduating as B.A. in 1841, became a barrister in 1844, and in 1850 was appointed Assistant-Secretary of the Marine Department of the Board of Trade. He was subsequently appointed Permanent Secretary of the Board of Trade, and resigned in 1886. He was formerly very active on the London County Council, was Vice-Chairman of the same, and was appointed Alderman (Progressive) in 1889, being reappointed recently until 1901, but he resigned in March 1898. He is a staunch and eloquent Free-Trader, and has published "Free Trade versus Fair Trade," and other works. As a politician he made a vigorous attack on the Sugar Convention Bill, and on the Civil Service Superannuation Bill, both which bills were withdrawn by Lord Salisbury's first Government. In 1883 he was made a Baronet, and in 1893 was raised to the Peerage for his long public services by the title of Lord Farrer of Abinger in Surrey. In Feb. 1899, he was appointed President of the Cobden Club, a new office. He married (2), in 1873, Katherine Euphemia, daughter of Hensleigh Wedgwood. Addresses: Abinger Hall, Dorking; and Athenæum.

FAUDEL-PHILLIPS, Sir George Fauvel, Bart., G.C.I.E., J.P., D.L., was born in 1840, and is the second son of Sir Benjamin Phillips, who was Lord Mayor of London in 1865-66. He was educated at University College School, and in Berlin and Paris, and is now famous among his friends as a book-collector. He was Sheriff of London and Middlesex, 1884-85; became Alderman of Ward of Farringdon Within, in succession to his father, in 1888; was High Sheriff of the County of London in 1895, and was Lord Mayor of London, 1896-97. In 1894 he was appointed a Governor of the Irish Society, which is the managing body of Irish Estates of the Corporation of the City of London. He is also Governor of St. Bartholomew's and other hospitals, and Chairman or President of many important bodies. During his Mayoralty he superintended the raising of the Indian Famine Fund of half-a-million pounds. He assumed the additional name of Faudel (his mother's maiden name) in 1895, and received the honour of a baronetcy and the G.C.I.E. at the time of the 1897 Jubilee, at which great function he received the Queen, in her progress through London, at Temple Bar. He has many Foreign Orders. He married, in 1867, Helen, sister of Sir Edward Lawson, the first Bart. Addresses: 52 Grosvenor Gardens, S.W., &c.; and Ball's Park, Hertford.

FAURE, Jean-Baptiste, a famous French baritone singer, born at Moulins, Jan. 15, 1830, was educated at the Conservatoire from 1843 to 1852, and made his début at the Opéra Comique in the latter year. M. Faure performed at the Opera House in Paris, in "Pierre de Medici," Oct. 14, 1861. In 1857 he was appointed Professor of Singing to the Conservatoire, in succession to M. Frédéric Pouchard, and appeared during several seasons at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden. For many years M. Faure was acknowledged head of the French lyric stage. He was nominated a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour in December 1881. He is the possessor of a fine collection of works of art.

FAWCETT, Edgar, American man of letters, was born at New York, May 26, 1847, and graduated at Columbia College in 1867. He has published "Short Poems for Short People," 1871; "Purple and Fine Linen," 1874; "Ellen Story," 1876; "Fantasy and Passion," poems, 1877; "A Hopeless Case," 1880; "A Gentleman of Leisure," 1881; "An Ambitious Woman," 1883; "Tinkling Cymbals," "Adventures of a Widow," "Song and Story, Later Poems," "Rutherford," and "The Bunting Ball," 1884; "Social Silhouettes," 1885; "Romance and Revery," 1886; "The Confessions of Claud," "The House at High Bridge," "Douglas Duane," and "The New King Arthur," 1887; "A Man's Will," "Olivia Delaplaine," and "Divided Lives," 1888; "A Demoralising Marriage," "Agnosticism and other Essays," "Miriam Balestier," and "Solariad," 1889; "The Evil that Men Do," "Fabian Dimitry," "A Daughter of Silence," and "How a Husband Forgave," 1890; "A Romance of Two Brothers," "A New York Family," "Loaded Dice," and "Songs of Doubt and Dream," 1891;

"Women must Weep," "An Heir to Millions," "American Push," and "The Adopted Daughter," 1892; "The New Nero," and "A Round Unvarnished Tale," 1893; "Outrageous Fortune," 1894; "Life's Fitful Fever," 1895; "A Romance of Old New York," 1896; "Two Daughters of One Race" (Lippincott's Magazine), 1897. London address: 109 Great Portland Street, W.

FAWCETT, Mrs. Millicent Garrett, born at Aldeburgh, in Suffolk, June 11, 1847, is sister to Mrs. Garrett Anderson, M.D. In 1867 she married the late Professor Fawcett, and soon after her marriage she began to take a part in the Women's Suffrage movement. She is also an urgent pleader on the subject of girls' education. In 1870 she published "Political Economy for Beginners"; "Tales in Political Economy," 1874; "Janet Doncaster," a novel, 1875; "Some Eminent Women of our Time," a series of twenty-four short biographical sketches, in 1889; a "Life of Queen Victoria," in 1895. In conjunction with her husband, Mrs. Fawcett wrote a volume of "Essays and Lectures," 1872; the article on "Communism" in the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica" is by her, as is also the article on Henry Fawcett in the 1888 edition of "Chambers's Encyclopædia." Mrs. Fawcett is the mother of the Miss Fawcett who, in the Mathematical Tripos at Cambridge in 1890, was declared "above the Senior Wrangler." Address: 2 Gower Street, W.C.

FAYE, Professor Hervé Auguste Etienne Albans, astronomer, was born at Saint Benoit du Sault (Indre), Oct. 1, 1814, and finished his studies at the Ecole Polytechnique. He afterwards went to Holland, and on returning to France, became, on the recommendation of M. Arago, a pupil in the Observatory. He discovered, Nov. 22, 1843, a new comet, to which his name was assigned, and received the Lalande prize from the Academy of Sciences, to which learned association he submitted in 1846 a paper, entitled "La Parallaxe d'une Étoile anonyme de la Grande Ourse." This was followed by a work entitled "Sur un Nouveau Collimateur zénithal et sur une Lunette zénithale nouvelle." He was elected a member of the section of Astronomy in place of Baron de Damoiseau, Jan. 18, 1847; a member of the Bureau of Longitudes, March 26, 1862; and was decorated with the Cross of the Legion of Honour in 1843. In 1864 he was appointed a member of the Imperial Council of Public Instruction, and was promoted to the rank of

Officer of the Legion of Honour. M. Faye was Professor of Geodesy at the Ecole Polytechnique from 1848 to 1854, and in the latter year he was appointed Rector of the University Academy of Nancy. He succeeded M. Delaunay as Professor of Astronomy in the Polytechnic School in 1873. In 1877 M. Faye was for a short time at the Ministry of Public Instruction, and from the end of that year until 1888 he was Inspector-General of Higher Education. In addition to the works already mentioned, M. Faye is the author of "Sur l'Anneau de Saturne," published in 1848; "Sur les Déclinaisons Absolues," in 1850; "Des Leçons de Cosmographie," in 1852; "Cours d'Astronomie nautique," 1880; "Cours d'Astronomie de l'École Polytechnique," 1881; and "Sur l'Origine du Monde," 1889. M. Faye was promoted to the rank of Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour in 1889.

FAYRER, Sir Joseph, Bart., K.C.S.I., LL.D., M.D., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., second son of the late R. J. Fayrer, Esq., Commander R.N., by Agnes, daughter of W. Wilkinson, Esq., of Westmorland, was born at Plymouth, Dec. 6, 1824. He was brought up under private tuition in Scotland, and afterwards continued his studies in London, in Edinburgh, and on the Continent. He took the degree of M.D. in the University of Edinburgh, and became a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of London, a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of London and Edinburgh, and a Fellow of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh, entered the medical service of the Navy, served in the military hospital of Palermo during the siege of that city (1847-48); and was also present at the siege of Rome (1848). In 1849 he entered the medical service of the army. In 1850 he entered the Bengal Medical Service, from which he retired in 1874. He served throughout the Burmese war of 1852, and the Indian Mutiny of 1857; also at the defence of Lucknow, where he was Political Assistant and Residency Surgeon. For these services he received medals and clasps and the brevet rank of Surgeon, and was allowed to count one year's service towards retirement. He was Professor of Surgery in the Medical College of Bengal from 1859 to 1874; was Fellow, Member of Senate, and during two years President of the Medical Faculty of the Calcutta University; and was successively Vice-President and President of the Asiatic Society of Bengal. He was created C.S.I. Dec. 22, 1868; and advanced to K.C.S.I. in March 1876, at an investiture of the Order held at Allahabad by the Prince of Wales, whom during his travels in India he accompanied as physician. In acknowledgment of this service he received a letter from the Queen. He had previously accompanied the Duke of Edinburgh in his visit to India in 1870. He was appointed Surgeon-General and President of the Medical Board of the India Office in December 1874. He is honorary physician to the Queen, the Prince of Wales, and physician to the Duke of Edinburgh. Sir J. Fayrer has written "Clinical Surgery in India"; a work on the poisonous snakes, "The Thanatophidia of India," which he presented to the Indian Government, from whom he received thanks, and by whom it was published in 1872; "Clinical and Pathological Observations in India"; "Lettsomian Lectures on Dysentery"; "Croonian Lectures on Climate and Fevers of India"; and many contributions to European and Indian journals, including papers on "Disease in India"; "European Child Life in Bengal"; "Malarial Splenic Cachexia of Tropical Climates"; "Bronchocele in India"; "Liver Abscess"; "Physiological Action of the Poison of Naja Tripudians" (in conjunction with Dr. Brunton); "Some of the Physical Conditions of the Country that Affect Life in India"; "Health in India"; "Rainfall and Climate of India"; "The Claws of Felidæ"; "Anatomy of the Rattlesnake"; articles on "Sunstroke," "Tropical Diarrhoea and Liver Abscess" in Davidson's "Hygiene and Diseases of Warm Climates"; and on "The Climate and Some of the Fevers of India," and "Sunstroke" in Clifford Allbutt's "System of Medicine." More recently he has published "On the Preservation of Health in India" (Macmillan); and "Sir Ranald Martin" (A. D. Innes & Co.), 1898. He has received the second class of the Order of the Conception from the King of Portugal, the third class of the Redeemer of Greece from the King of Greece, and the third class of the Medjidieh from the Khedive of Egypt. In August 1878 the hon. degree of LL.D. was conferred on him by the University of Edinburgh, and in April 1890 by the University of St. Andrews. He was Vice-President of the Zoological Society of London. In December 1892 he represented the Royal College of Physicians of London and the University of Edinburgh at the Tercentenary of Galileo at Padua, and was made Ph.D. of Padua. He is a Foreign Associate of the Académie de Médecine de Paris, a Foreign Corresponding Member of the Royal Academy of Sciences of Lisbon, and member of other foreign societies. He was created a Baronet in 1896, and has the Jubilee medal. In 1855 he married Bethia, daughter of Major-General Spens. Addresses: 16 Devonshire Street, Portland Place, W.; and Athenæum.

FEARON, Daniel Robert, M.A. Oxon. 1862, Barrister-at-Law, eldest son of the late Rev. Daniel Rose Fearon, successively Vicar of Assington, Suffolk, and St. Mary Church, Devon, by Frances Jane, daughter of the late Rev. Charles Andrewes, Rector of Flempton, Suffolk, was born at Assington, Dec. 1, 1835, and educated at Marlborough College and Balliol College, Oxford, where he took a First Class in Moderations and in the Final Schools. He entered as a student at Lincoln's Inn, Nov. 10, 1859, and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, Nov. 17, 1874. He was appointed, in 1860, one of H.M. Inspectors of Schools; and in 1865 an Assistant Commissioner to the Schools Inquiry Commission, and in that capacity reported on Secondary Education in London and the neighbourhood, and on the system of education in the Burgh Schools of Scotland. In 1869 he was appointed a Commissioner to inquire into the condition of elementary education in Manchester and Liverpool, in preparation for Mr. Forster's Elementary Education Act of 1870. In 1870 he was appointed an Assistant Commissioner to the Endowed Schools Commission, of which the late Lord Lyttelton was chairman. In 1873 he was commissioned by the Treasury, together with Mr. W. H. Gladstone, M.P., Sir Robert Hamilton, K.C.B., and Mr. Murray, to inquire into the Administration of the Irish Education Department. In 1875 he was appointed an Assistant Commissioner to the Charity Commission for England and Wales, on the transfer to that Commission of the administration of the Endowed Schools Acts. In 1883 he was appointed Acting Secretary to that Commission; and by Royal Warrant dated June 16, 1886, was appointed to be Secretary to the Charity Commission. Mr. Fearon is the author of a work on "School Inspection." He married, in 1861, Margaret, daughter of Professor Bonamy Price. Addresses: 142 Lexham Gardens, S.W.; and Athenæum.

FEARON, The Rev. William Andrewes, D.D., Head-master of Winchester College, is the third son of the Rev. D. R. Fearon, Vicar of Assington, Suffolk, afterwards of St. Mary Church, Devon. He was born at Assington, Feb. 4, 1841. His mother was Frances Jane, daughter of the Rev. Charles Andrewes, Rector of Flempton, Suffolk, a member of the same family as the celebrated Bishop Andrewes. He was educated at home till he entered Winchester College as a scholar in 1852. During his school career he twice obtained the Queen's Gold Medal, also the Goddard Scholarship for Classics, and the Duncan Mathematical Scholarship. In 1859 he gained a Scholarship at New College, Oxford. In 1863 he took a double first-class in the Final Schools of Lit. Hum. and Mathematics. In 1864 he was elected Fellow of New College, and also became Tutor of that College, retaining his post until 1867, when he was asked by Dr. Ridding to open a tutor's house at Winchester College, and to undertake the Junior Sixth Form. He was ordained deacon in 1867, priest in 1868. In 1882 he was elected Head-master of Durham School, and was appointed Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Newcastle, which offices he held till 1884, when he was elected to the Head-mastership of Winchester College. In the same year he took his D.D. degree, and in 1889 became Hon. Canon of Winchester Cathedral. Dr. Fearon married Mary, eldest daughter of the late Archdeacon Freeman, Exeter. Address: The College, Winchester.

FENN, George Manville, was born at Pimlico, on Jan. 3, 1831, and received his education at private schools. At twenty-one he entered one of the training colleges of the National Society, and, after the usual time of probation, obtained the mastership of a country school. His next step was to the post of private tutor; but the responsibilities of married life soon induced him to enter into business, printing offering itself as the most congenial. This led to small literary ventures—the production of a magazine in 1862, and a participation in the proprietorship of one of the provincial newspapers in 1864. Then followed the writing and offering of short sketches to the various magazines and periodicals. One of these, after endless disappointments, was sent to the late Charles Dickens for All the Year Round, and immediately accepted, others appearing subsequently in the same periodical. A busy pen soon produced sketches which were readily accepted by Mr. James Payn for Chambers's Journal, and by Mr. Edward Walford for Once a Week. About the same time—1866—Mr. Justin McCarthy, then editing the Star, was running a series of short papers through the evening edition, and willingly enlisted the services of the young writer. Hence, about thirty or forty working-life sketches appeared in the Readings by Starlight. These papers, and others of a similar class, were published in four volumes in 1867, the same year witnessing the production of Mr. Fenn's first boys' story, "Hollowdell Grange," and a natural history tale for children, "Featherland." From that period, in rapid succession, novel after novel appeared in magazine, newspaper, and volume form, the principal breaks to this production occurring when Mr. Fenn succeeded Mr. Haweis as editor of Cassell's Magazine in 1870, and when he afterwards became the purchaser of Once a Week from Mr. (now Sir Walter) Besant's partner, Mr. James Rice, in 1873. In this venture, however, no better success attended him than had befallen the previous owners of what may certainly be dubbed a most unlucky magazine, in spite of the long list of famous writers and artists who contributed to its pages. Mr. Fenn's principal novels are: "Bent, Not Broken," and "Webs in the Way," 1867; "Mad," 1868; "The Sapphire Cross," and "By Birth a Lady," 1871; "That Little Frenchman," 1874; "Thereby Hangs a Tale," 1876; "A Little World," 1877; "Pretty Polly," 1878; "The Parson of Dumford," 1879; "The Clerk of Portwick," 1880; "The Vicar's People," 1881; "Eli's Children," 1882; "The New Mistress," 1883; "The Rosery Folk," and "Sweet Mace," 1884; "Stained Pages," 1885; "Double Cunning," and "The Master of the Ceremonies," 1886; "One Maid's Mischief," and "This Man's Wife," 1887; "The Man with a Shadow," 1888; "The Lass that Loved a Soldier," and "Of High Descent," 1889; "A Fluttered Dovecot," "Lady Maud's Mania," and "A Double Knot," 1890; "Mahme Nousie," and "The Mynns Mystery," 1891; "King of the Castle," and "Nurse Elisia," 1892; "Witness to the Deed," "The Star Gazer," and "In an Alpine Valley," 1893; "The Tiger Lily," "A Life's Eclipse," "The White Virgin," 1894; "An Electric Spark," and "Smith's Weakness," 1895; "The Case of Ailsa Gray," 1896; "High Play," 1897; and "A Woman worth Winning," 1896. Mr. Fenn's boys' stories, which have attained to a world-wide circulation, have been mainly written during the past few years: "Off to the Wilds," 1881; "In the King's Name," "Middy and Ensign," and "Nat the Naturalist," 1883; "The Silver Cañon," and "The Golden Magnet," 1884; "Bunyip Land," and "Menhardoc," 1885; "Patience Wins," and "Brownsmith's Boy," 1886; "Yussuf the Guide," and "Devon Boys," 1887; "Mother Carey's Chicken," "Dick of the Fens," "Commodore Junk," and "Nolens Volens," 1888; "Quicksilver," "Crown and Sceptre," and "Three Boys," 1889; "Mass' George," "Cutlass and Oudgel," and "The Boy who would not go to Sea," 1890; "Burr, Junior," "The Rajah of Dah," and "The Crystal Hunters," 1891; "Gil the Gunner," "The Weathercock," "The Dingo Boys," and "The Grand Chaco," 1892; "The Black Bar," "Real Gold," "Sail Ho!" "Steve Young," and "Blue Jackets," 1893; "Fire Island," "The Vast Abyss," "First in the Field," and "Diamond Dyke," 1894; "The Queen's Scarlet," "The Cinnamon Garden," "Cormorant Crag," and "The Young Castellan," 1895; "In Honour's Cause," "Jack at Sea," and "The Black Tor," 1896; and "The Little Skipper," "Ydell Gwyn," "Vince the Rebel," and "Frank and Saxon," 1897. Many of the above books were reprinted and have obtained their share of popularity in the United States, where "The Fenn Books," as thus advertised, are well known. In addition to hundreds of short tales and sketches, written expressly for the popular magazines of the day, Mr. Fenn is also the author of many Christmas stories, notably "Ship Ahoy," and, wholly or in part, of several dramas and three-act farces, two of which, "The Barrister" and "The Balloon," were written in collaboration, and produced in 1888 and 1889. He married, in 1855, Susanna, daughter of John Leake. Address: Syon Lodge, Isleworth.

FENTON, Sir Myles, J.P., was born at Kendal on Sept. 5, 1830, and is the son of Myles Fenton, of Kendal. He was educated in his native town, and entered the service of the Kendal and Windermere Railway in 1845. He afterwards held posts under the East Lancashire, Eastern Counties, London and South-Western, Manchester, Sheffield, and Lancashire Railways, and Rochdale Canal. With this large knowledge of railway affairs, he became, in 1866, Secretary of the East Lancashire Railway, then Assistant-Manager of the Lancashire and Yorkshire, then General Manager of the Metropolitan Railway, a post which he held from 1863-1880, when appointed to the General Managership of the C.-E. Railway, the position in which he has been best known to the travelling public. In 1889 he received the honour of knighthood, and has, since 1896, been Consulting Director to the S.E.R. He married Mrs. Collins, née Oakes, in 1883. Address: Ridge Green, South Nutfield, Surrey.

FENWICK, Charles, M.P., was born on the 5th of May 1850, at Cramlington, in the county of Northumberland, a little village standing right in the centre of the constituency which for nearly thirteen years he has represented in the House of Commons. His parents belonged to the humbler class of the mining community, and his father began to work in the mine when a lad of only eight years of age. Subsequently a law was passed which prohibited the employment underground of boys under ten years of age, and a further amendment of the law, passed in 1887, fixed the age limit at twelve for underground employment. Young Fenwick accordingly, much against the wish of his parents, sought and obtained work on the pit banks. When only nine years old, and as soon as he reached his tenth birthday, he began to labour in the mine. His education up to this point was practically nil, but he then began to attend the village night-school, which was open three nights in the week during six months of the year, and during the other six months he was compelled to rely entirely upon his own energy and perseverance for the knowledge he was able to obtain. In 1862 the Northumberland Miners' Association, or trade union, was started, and though then a lad of only twelve years of age, he joined the Association as a half-member, and he has maintained his connection with the union up to the present time. The Assimilation of the County with the Borough Franchise in 1884 gave the miners of Northumberland the balance of political power in three out of the four county divisions, and accordingly they determined to nominate a labour candidate for the Wansbeck Division. A representative meeting was held in the city of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, for the purpose of selecting such a candidate; seven names, including his own, were submitted to the meeting, and, on the second vote, he obtained a clear majority over all the others, and was thereupon declared the candidate of the miners. It was then resolved that he should give up his employment as a working miner, and devote himself to the furtherance of his candidature. This, however, he refused to do until the annual meeting of the Liberal Association should have had an opportunity of considering the matter. The official Liberal meeting was held in the town of Morpeth, under the chairmanship of the late Sir Charles Trevelyan, Bart., and he was unanimously accepted as the Liberal and Labour candidate. Since that time he has gone through four contested elections, with an average majority of 3160 votes in his favour. In 1890 he succeeded Mr. Henry Broadhurst as Secretary to the Parliamentary Committee of the Trades' Union Congress, a position which he held for four years, being ultimately defeated by Mr. Sam Wood, in consequence of his opposition to the Mines Eight Hours Bill. Mr. Fenwick has served on two Royal Commissions, viz., the one of 1891, which was appointed to inquire into the effect of coal dust in originating or extending explosions in mines; also that of 1894, which considered the methods of establishing a well-organised system of secondary education. He is at present a member of the Northumberland Miners' Wage Committee, and has represented them at most of the national and international labour congresses during the last fifteen years. Addresses: 14 Tankerville Terrace, Newcastle-upon-Tyne; and 95 Vauxhall Bridge Road, S.W.

FENWICK, Edward Nicholas Fenwick, Metropolitan Police Magistrate, was born in 1847, and is the son of E. M. Fenwick, of Burrow Hall, Lancs. Called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1873, he was appointed Stipendiary Magistrate at Bradford, 1885. He was Metropolitan Police Magistrate at Hammersmith and Wandsworth, 1887-88; and at Greenwich and Woolwich, 1888-89. Since 1889 he has sat at the Southwark Borough High Street.

FERDINAND I., Prince of Bulgaria, Duke of Saxony, was born in Vienna in 1861, and is the youngest son of Prince Augustus of Saxe-Coburg and the Princess Clémentine of Bourbon-Orleans, a daughter of King Louis Philippe. The Prince served as an officer in the Austrian army, and possesses large estates in Hungary. After the deposition of Prince Alexander in 1886, followed by a Regency, Prince Ferdinand received a deputation from the Sobranje offering him the vacant throne. He accepted the offer, and, on the 14th of August 1887, took the oath to the Bulgarian constitution at Tirnova. His sovereignty, however, was not formally recognised by the Porte and the Powers until February 1896. His reception by the Bulgarian nation has been most enthusiastic, and in M. Stambuloff he had an admirable minister, as also in M. Stoiloff, his present Prime Minister. In April 1893 he married Princess Marie Louise of Parma, daughter of the Duke of Parma, of the house of Bourbon, and two sons have since been born, of whom the eldest, Prince Boris, was admitted to the Orthodox Greek Church, the State religion, in 1896, which occasioned much heartburning in Germany and Austria. Princess Marie Louise died in January 1899. In August 1897 Prince Ferdinand paid a personal visit to the Sultan, and it was understood that far more friendly relations had been established between them; but Prince Ferdinand is known to be ambitious, and in the general scramble which, sooner or later, must take place for the European dominions of the Ottoman Empire, he intends to make a bold move, and relies for success on the help of Russia. He visited the Czar in July 1898.

FERDINAND IV., Salvatore-Marie-Joseph-Jean-Baptiste-François-Louis-Gonzague-Raphael-Benier-Janvier, Archduke of Austria, ex-Grand-Duke of Tuscany, eldest son of Leopold II., grandson of Ferdinand III. and of Marie Antoinette Anne, daughter of Francis I., king of the Two Sicilies, the late grand-duke's second wife, was born June 10, 1835, succeeded to the grand-duchy on the abdication of his father, July 21, 1859, and reigned as Ferdinand IV.; but his career as a sovereign prince was brief, he having been obliged to quit his dominions on the consolidation of the kingdom of Italy under Victor Emmanuel in 1861. He married the Archduchess Anne Marie, daughter of the King of Saxony, Nov. 24, 1856. She died in 1859. In 1868 he married his second wife, Alice, Princess of Bourbon-Parma, by whom he has ten children. The grand-duke is Prince-Royal of Hungary and Bohemia, and a Colonel of Austrian Dragoons.

FERGUSON, Richard Saul, the eldest son of the late Mr. Joseph Ferguson, J.P. and D.L., was born at Carlisle, July 28, 1837, and was educated at Shrewsbury and St. John's College, Cambridge. He graduated B.A. as 27th wrangler in 1860, M.A. in 1863, and subsequently LL.M. Mr. Ferguson was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1862, and practised there as an equity draughtsman and conveyancer until his health failed in 1871. After travelling abroad for two years he settled at Carlisle. He is a J.P. for Carlisle and Cumberland; has been Chairman of Quarter Sessions for that county since 1886, and Chancellor of the diocese of Carlisle since 1887. He is also an alderman for Carlisle (Mayor 1881-82, 1882-83), and a County Councillor for Cumberland; President, since 1886, of the Cumberland and Westmorland Antiquarian and Archaeological Society; a Fellow of the Societies of Antiquaries of London and Scotland, and Vice-President of the Royal Archaeological Institute and Surtees Society, and a member of several other learned societies. He is the author of "Cumberland and Westmorland M.P.'s, from the Restoration to the Reform Bill," 1871; "Early Cumberland and Westmorland Friends," 1871; "Moss Gathered by a Rolling Stone," 1873; "A History of the Diocese of Carlisle," 1889; "A Popular History of Cumberland," 1890; and "A Popular History of Westmorland," 1894. He is the editor of "Old Church Plate in the Diocese of Carlisle," 1882; of "Bishop Nicolson's Miscellany Accounts of the Diocese of Carlisle in 1703," and "Some Municipal Records of Carlisle," 1887. He is also editor of the Transactions of the Cumberland and Westmorland Antiquarian and Archaeological Society; and author of several papers in transactions of various societies, including one "On an Astrolabe of Early English Make," and "An Archaeological Survey of Cumberland and Westmorland," both in the Archæologia. Addresses: 74 Lowther Street, Carlisle; and the Athenæum.

FERGUSON, The Right Hon. Sir James, M.P., G.C.S.I., K.C.M.G., D.C.L., LL.D., D.L., J.P., was born at Edinburgh in 1832, and is the son of the 5th Baronet, whom he succeeded in 1849, and Helen, daughter of the Right Hon. Lord Justice-General David Boyle. He was educated at Rugby and at University College, Oxford, of which University he was made an honorary D.C.L. in 1870. He served in the Grenadier Guards from 1851-55, and went through the Crimean campaign, being elected M.P. for Ayrshire during the war. He represented Ayrshire for two periods (1854-57 and 1859-68). In 1866-67 he was Under-Secretary of State for India, and from 1867-68 Under-Secretary for the Home Office. In 1868 he was appointed Governor of South Australia, and in 1873 was transferred from this governorship to that of New Zealand. He left New Zealand for the post of Governor of Bombay, which he held from 1880-85. Resuming political life at home in 1885, he was elected M.P. for North-East Manchester, his present constituency, and in the year following was appointed Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs in Lord Salisbury's administration, subsequently succeeding Mr. H. C. Raikes as Postmaster-General in September 1891. He married (3), in 1893, Mrs. C. H. Hoare. Addresses: Kilkerran, Ayrshire; and 80 Cornwall Gardens, S.W.

FERRERO, General Annibale, late Ambassador of Italy to the Court of St. James's, was born at Turin in 1839. In early life he became distinguished as a mathematician, but adopted the army as a career, into which he entered in 1857. During the war for the liberation of Italy, Ferrero served as Adjutant to General Menabrea, who, when Ambassador to this country, received in 1883 the degree of Honorary Doctor in Laws of the University of Cambridge. At the close of the campaign General Ferrero resumed his studies. In June 1898 the degree of Doctor in Laws was conferred upon him—he following thereby in the steps of his old chief, General Menabrea—by the University of Cambridge. The Public Orator (Dr. Sandys), in introducing this eminent Italian to the Vice-Chancellor, eulogised him as "distinguished in the arts of war and peace." Indeed, General Ferrero in himself combines the precision and daring of the soldier, the keenness and experience of the diplomatist, and the exactness and culture of the scholar. He resigned his post in August 1898 to take up duties at home.

FERRERS, Rev. Norman Macleod, D.D., F.R.S., Master of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, and formerly

Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge University, was born at Prinknash Park, Gloucestershire, Aug. 11, 1829, and educated at Eton. He is the eldest son of Thomas Bromfield Ferrers. He entered as a student at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, in 1847, and graduated in the Mathematical Tripos of 1851, when he attained the distinguished position of Senior Wrangler and first Smith's Prizeman. Mr. Ferrers was elected to a Fellowship, and, after filling various college offices, was appointed Tutor in 1865. For thirty-eight years he has been constantly occupied in collegiate and university work. As a lecturer in mathematics he obtained considerable distinction. He examined for the Mathematical Tripos no fewer than eleven times, and he was especially prominent as an advocate for the various important changes which were from time to time effected in the scheme of the Mathematical Tripos examinations. For a considerable period he was a member of the Council of the Senate, and he has been also a member of various syndicates and boards in the University. He was elected Master of Gonville and Caius College, in succession to Dr. Guest, Oct. 27, 1880. He is the author of an "Elementary Treatise on Trilinear Co-ordinates," 1861; and "Elementary Treatise on Spherical Harmonics," 1877. In 1871 he edited and published the mathematical writings of the late George Green. From 1855 he was, with Professor Sylvester, joint editor of the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics, and he has been a frequent contributor to its pages. In 1876 he was elected a governor of St. Paul's School (from which position he retired in 1891), in 1885 of Eton College (retired 1895), and in 1877 a Fellow of the Royal Society. In 1883 the University of Glasgow conferred upon him the degree of LL.D. For the years 1884 and 1885 he filled the office of Vice-Chancellor of the University of Cambridge. He married, in 1866, Emily, daughter of the Very Rev. John Lamb, D.D., Dean of Bristol and Master of Corpus, Cambridge. Addresses: Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge; and Heacham Lodge, Norfolk.

FERRIER, Professor David, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S., F.R.C.P., born at Aberdeen in 1843, was educated at the University of Aberdeen, where he graduated in Arts, with first-class Honours, in 1863. In the same year he gained the Fergusson Scholarship in Classics and Philosophy, open to competition by graduates of the four Scotch Universities. He has studied Philosophy in Germany, and Medicine in the University of Edinburgh, where he graduated as M.D. in 1870, with first-class Honours, and Gold Medal for his Thesis. He was appointed Professor of Forensic Medicine in King's College, London, in 1872. In 1889 he vacated this chair for that of Neuro-Pathology, specially founded for him by the authorities of King's College. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1876, and in 1890 received a Royal Medal for his researches on the Brain. He has also received the Baly Medal (Royal College of Physicians), the Marshall Hall Prize (Medico-Chirurgical Society), the Cameron Prize (Edinburgh University), and various other honours. He is a member of various learned societies at home and abroad. He is Physician to King's College Hospital, and to the National Hospital for the Paralysed and the Epileptic. Dr. Ferrier practises as a physician, and is the author of works on the "Functions of the Brain," 1876; "Cerebral Localisation," 1878, 1890; besides numerous papers relating to the functions and diseases of the brain and nervous system. He has incurred the special hostility of the extreme anti-vivisectionists by reason of the number and the extraordinary success of his experiments on animals. It may be said that Dr. Ferrier's researches have increased our knowledge of brain disease, epilepsy, &c., almost more than those of any other living man. He married, in 1874, Constance, daughter of the late Albert C. Waterlow. Addresses: 34 Cavendish Square; Sutmer's Court, Chalfont-St.-Giles; and Athenæum.

FERRY, Jules François Camille, French statesman, was born at Saint Dié, in the Vosges, April 5, 1832, and was called to the Bar of Paris in 1851. In 1865 he became one of the staff of Le Temps, writing political articles, and showing special knowledge of financial questions. Notably, in 1868, he directed a campaign against the unavowed deficit in the Budget of the town of Paris, and this was republished in a pamphlet, "Les Comptes fantastiques d'Hausmann." In 1869 he was elected to the Corps Législatif, and at once became one of the leaders of the anti-imperial opposition. He had a lively quarrel with M. Emile Ollivier (q.v.) on his proposal to dissolve the Chamber, as it did not represent the majority of the country. After the Revolution of Sept. 4, 1870, he was appointed a member of the Government of National Defence, which sat at the Hôtel de Ville. As Secretary of that body he established the communications between Paris and the forts around it, and founded a corps of stretcher-bearers. He was one of the mayors who regulated the rations of bread during the siege of Paris (Jan. 18, 1871). After the siege, he was elected a member of the National Assembly by his own department of the Vosges, and after filling temporarily the post of Préfet de la Seine, he was appointed Minister to Greece in 1872. After M. Thiers' defeat in 1873, he returned to France, and took a prominent part in the debates which determined whether France was to remain Republican or to return to Monarchy. On the final defeat of the Broglie Ministry (May 16, 1877), he protested against their illegal attempts to control the elections. He was chosen Chairman of the Committee to revise the Customs Duties. On MacMahon's resignation, in 1879, the new President (Grévy) gave him the portfolio of Minister of Public Instruction, in which capacity he made sweeping reforms. He separated the department of fine arts under a special secretary, he reorganised the national museums, founded a Pedagogic Museum, and did much for the status of the teacher. His bill of 1879 on the freeing of the public schools from the domination of the Church led to much acrimonious debate; and, during the recess, he made a tour of the chief provincial towns in its support. Although he spoke for two days in the Senate (March 5 and 6, 1880) on the introduction of the bill, it was defeated by 148 votes to 129. It was, however, re-introduced and passed in July 1881. To Jules Ferry must be awarded the credit of reorganising both the secondary and primary education of his country. At the end of 1879 he had become Prime Minister, although retaining the Ministry of Public Instruction. During his first Premiership occurred the occupation of Tunis, the scrutin de list quarrels, and the new treaties of commerce. On the assembly of Parliament in 1881 he was much attacked on the Tunisian question, and although Gambetta succeeded in passing a vote of confidence, it was evidently so personal a vote that M. Ferry resigned in Gambetta's favour (October 1881). After the failure of the so-called "Great Ministry," M. Ferry accepted the Ministry of Public Instruction in the Freycinet Cabinet of 1882, and continued his former brilliant policy. However, in February 1883 he became Premier for the second time, and it was during this Ministry that he earned his nickname of "Le Tonkinois." He was blamed for the disastrous results of the Tonkin expedition, begun with insufficient forces, continued with insufficient reinforcements, for which previous Ministers were in reality responsible. He took over the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in November 1883 from M. Challemeil-Lacour. The French can never bear defeat calmly, and the disastrous battles of Bac-Le and Lang-Son demanded in their eyes a scapegoat, whom they found in M. Ferry, and his Ministry was defeated on the day after the news of the latter battle had reached Paris (March 28, 1885). Not satisfied with his resignation, his enemies demanded a criminal prosecution, but in this they were defeated (June 1885). However, he was pursued in the press, in Parliament, and even in the streets, by outbursts of envious unpopularity, although he had done such good work, and increased the territory of France to such a degree. At the funeral of Hippolyte Carnot, the father of the late President, and biographer of Barère, he had to be rescued from a crowd of angry opponents (March 20, 1888). This unpopularity was increased by his opposition to General Boulanger (1888), whom he styled a "Saint Arnaud du café concert," in a speech at Epinal. In 1889 he was defeated in his candidature for the Chamber, but was elected to the Senate in 1891. There he supported Protection against the Free-Traders, Jules Simon and Challemeil-Lacour. Of late years he has been often spoken of as a possible Premier, but his opposition to Radicalism and his colonial policy have prevented his return to power. He is one of the few French statesmen left with truly imperial ideas, and it augurs ill for his country that they cannot rise to his ideals. He married, in 1876, Mdle. Rissler-Kestner.

FESTING, Edward Robert, F.R.S., Major-General, son of Richard Grindal Festing and Eliza Mammatt, was born at Frome, Aug. 10, 1839, and was educated at King's School, Bruton, at the Ordnance School, Carshalton, and the R.M. Academy, Woolwich. He received his commission in the Royal Engineers, April 20, 1855; went to India in 1857, and served in the Central India Field Force under Sir Hugh Rose and Sir Robert Napier, gaining the Indian Mutiny medal. He was appointed Assistant Director of the South Kensington Museum, July 1864, and made Fellow of the Royal Society in 1887. Since 1893 he has been Director of the Science Museum at South Kensington. In 1871 he married Frances Mary, daughter of the late Rev. Arthur Legrew. Addresses: 3 Residence, South Kensington Museum; and the Athe-

FESTING, The Right Rev. John Wogan, D.D., Bishop of St. Albans, is the eldest son of Richard Grindal Festing and Eliza, daughter of Edward Mammatt, and brother of Major-General Festing, late of the Royal Engineers, and was educated at Wells Theological College and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took his B.A. degree in 1860, M.A. in 1863, and D.D. in 1890. In 1860 he was ordained deacon, and in 1861 priest. He was curate of Christ Church, Westminster, from 1860 to 1873; was appointed vicar of St. Luke's, Berwick Street, in 1873, and vicar of Christ Church, Albany Street, 1878. The Bishop is Chairman of the Committee of the Universities' Mission to Central Africa. He was made rural dean of St. Pancras in 1887, Prebendary of St. Paul's in the following year, and Bishop of St. Albans in 1890. Among pamphlets from his pen may be mentioned, "Whose treatment of the Lord's Supper does St. Paul condemn?" 1866. Address: 21 Endsleigh Gardens, W.C.

FIELD, Henry Martyn, D.D., brother of the late Cyrus West Field, and Hon. Stephen J. Field, was born at Stockbridge, Massachusetts, April 3, 1822. He graduated at Williams College in 1838, studied theology, and in 1842 became pastor of a Presbyterian Church in St. Louis, Missouri. In 1847 he resigned his charge, and visited Europe, where he remained over a year. Returning to America he published "The Good and the Bad in the Roman Catholic Church" in 1848; and "The Irish Confederates, a History of the Rebellion of 1798," in 1851. The same year he became pastor of a church at West Springfield, Mass. In 1854 he removed to New York, and became one of the proprietors and editors of the Evangelist, a religious weekly newspaper, of which he has now been for twenty years the sole proprietor. In 1858 he made another European tour, which he has described in "Summer Pictures from Copenhagen to Venice." In 1866 he published the "History of the Atlantic Telegraph." In 1867 he again came to Europe, to visit the Paris Exhibition, and as delegate to the Free Church of Scotland and the Presbyterian Church of Ireland. In 1875-76 he made a tour round the world, which he described in two volumes, "From the Lakes of Killarney to the Golden Horn," and "From Egypt to Japan," which have passed through seventeen editions. In 1881-82 he made a second visit to the East, the result of which was three volumes in the three years following, viz., "On the Desert, a visit to Mount Sinai"; "Among the Holy Hills"; and "The Greek Islands and Turkey after the War." A still more recent visit to Southern Europe has been followed by "Old Spain and New Spain" and "Gibraltar." In 1890 appeared "Bright Skies and Dark Shadows," devoted principally to a discussion of the negro question.

FIELD, Hon. Stephen Johnson, LL.D., brother of the late Cyrus West Field and of Dr. Henry Martyn Field, was born at Haddam, Connecticut, Nov. 4, 1816, and graduated at Williams College, 1837. He studied law, with his brother David Dudley Field, at New York, and on his admission to the Bar entered into a partnership with him which lasted until 1848, when Stephen went to Europe. In 1849 he settled in California, where he resumed the practice of his profession. In 1851 he was a member of the Legislature, and in 1857 was chosen a Judge of the Supreme Court of the State, of which, in 1859, he became Chief-Justice. In 1863 he was appointed by President Lincoln a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. In 1873 he was nominated by the Governor of California one of a commission to examine the code of laws of the State, and to prepare amendments to it for the action of the legislature, and in 1877 he was chosen a member of the Electoral Commission to decide the disputed presidential contest between Mr. Hayes and Mr. Tilden. He received the degree of LL.D. from Williams College in 1864, and in 1869 was appointed Professor of Law in the University of California. In 1889 an attempt was made to assassinate him while on circuit duty in California by a disappointed litigant, Judge Terry (his predecessor in the Chief-Justiceship of California), but his life was saved by the prompt interposition of an accompanying court officer. He resigned from the bench in 1897.

FIELD, The Rev. Thomas, D.D., was born at Folkestone, Nov. 9, 1855, and was educated under Bishop Mitchinson, at the King's School, Canterbury, from 1867 to 1873. He was head of the school from the age of 14 to 17, and subsequently obtained an Open Mathematical Scholarship at Corpus Christi College, Oxford. At Oxford he was Proxime Accessit for the Stanhope Essay to Mr. Lodge, now Professor of History at Glasgow. He also obtained a first class in Classical Moderations in 1874, and in Mathematical Moderations in 1875. In 1877 he was placed in the first class in the Final Classical Schools, and was elected to a Fellowship at Magdalen College, being practically the last election held under the old statutes. After two terms' work as Sixth Form Master at Repton, he was appointed Composition Master at Harrow, where he remained eight years. Archbishop Tait ordained him deacon in 1879, and priest in 1880. In 1886 he returned to Canterbury as Head-master of his old school, the King's School, which has lately been shown by Mr. Leach to be the oldest school in the country. In January 1897 he was appointed Warden of St. Peter's College, Radley. He has been selected to preach before the University of Cambridge, and he preached the commemoration sermon at Oxford before the University. He has published several articles on educational matters, and sermons preached before the University of Oxford, entitled, "Seven Lamps of Ritual." He married a daughter of the Rev. C. M. Church, sub-Dean of Wells. Address: Radley College, Abingdon.

FIELD, Lord, The Right Hon. William Ventris Field, eldest son of Mr. Thomas Flint Field, of Fielden, Bedfordshire, was born Aug. 21, 1813. On leaving school he was at first articled to Messrs. Terrell, Barton, & Smale, solicitors, of Exeter, but was afterwards with Messrs. Price & Bolton, of Lincoln's Inn. He practised in that branch of the profession in London from 1840 to 1843, as one of the firm of Thompson, Debenham, & Field, of Salters' Hall Court; but from 1843, having entered himself as a member of the Inner Temple, and reading in the chambers of Mr. T. Kingdom, of the Western Circuit, he prepared for the Bar. He began in 1847 to practise under the Bar as a special pleader. In 1850 he was called to the Bar, and joined the Western circuit. This he afterwards exchanged for the Midland, where he gained a large practice, as well as in London, both in commercial cases at Guildhall and before the Privy Council. In 1864 Mr. Field was appointed a Queen's Counsel, and was elected a Bencher of the Inner Temple. He became leader of the Midland Circuit, besides practising largely before the Judicial Committee and Railway Commission, and other tribunals. Mr. Field was nominated a Justice of the Queen's Bench Division in the High Court of Judicature in February 1875, and shortly afterwards he received the honour of knighthood. On his retirement from the Bench in February 1890, he was created a peer. Addresses: Bakeham, Englefield Green, Staines, &c.; and Athenæum.

FIFE, Duke of, The Right Hon. Alexander William George Duff, K.T., was born on Nov. 10, 1849, succeeded his father as 6th Earl of Fife in 1879, was created Duke of Fife in 1889, on his marriage with H.R.H. the Princess Louise Victoria Alexandra Dagmar, the eldest daughter of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. The Duke was educated at Eton; is Lord-Lieutenant of Elginshire; a Deputy-Lieutenant of the counties of Aberdeen and Banff; Hon. Colonel of the Banffshire Artillery Volunteers; a member of the Council of the Duchy of Lancaster; and a partner in the metropolitan banking firm of Sir Samuel Scott & Co. He was well known as Vice-President of the British South Africa Company having held that position from the formation of the Company some nine years before, until the spring of 1898, when he severed his connection with the Company on the ground, as stated by him in a speech at the annual dinner of the Royal Colonial Institute in March, that "a board of gentlemen sitting in London, however able and honest they might be, could not exercise the same control as the Imperial authority." In the same speech he welcomed the scheme formed by Mr. Chamberlain for the future government of the Chartered Company's territory, and pointed out that the Jameson Raid, of which plot he and his co-directors were demonstrably ignorant, could never have been carried out by individuals "who felt themselves under the direct control of the British Government." The Duke sat as M.P. for Elgin and Nairn, in the Liberal interest, in 1874-79; was Captain and Gold Stick of the Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms, 1880-85; went on a special mission to the King of Saxony in 1882; and received the first Order of Saxony. The Duke and Duchess of Fife have two daughters, of whom the elder, Lady Alexandra Alberta Edwina Louise, was born at East Sheen Lodge on May 17, 1891. The second, Lady Maude Alexandra Victoria Georgia Bertha, was born there on April 3, 1893. Addresses: 15 Portman Square, W.; Duff House, Banffshire; East Sheen Lodge, Surrey; Mar Lodge, Aberdeenshire (burnt and rebuilt in recent years).

FIFE, Her Royal Highness the Duchess of, Princess Louise Victoria Alexandra Dagmar of Wales, eldest daughter of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, was born at Marlborough House on Feb. 20, 1867, and married at Buckingham Palace on July 27, 1889, to Alexander William George Duff, first Duke of Fife. The Duchess of Fife is President of the Edinburgh School of Medicine for Women, which is the first school where a medical education has been afforded to women in Scotland. See FIFE, DUKE OF.

FILDES, Luke, R.A., was born in Liverpool, Oct. 18, 1844, educated at a private school, and studied art at the South Kensington Art School, where he held an Exhibition, and the Royal Academy Schools. After completing his artistic education he worked for some time in black and white, illustrating books and magazines, and drawing for the Illustrated London News and other papers. His first Academy picture was exhibited in 1872, and is entitled "Fair, Quiet, and Sweet Rest." Other notable pictures are: "The Casual Ward," 1874; "The Widower," 1876; "The Return of the Penitent," 1879; "The Village Wedding," "A School-girl," "Phyllis," the two well-known Venetian studies; "The Al Fresco Toilette," and "Venetian Life," and the famous painting of "The Doctor," 1892, in which the medical man is said to be a portrait of an eminent contemporary surgeon. It is as a portrait-painter that Mr. Luke Fildes has become famous. In 1892 he had four portraits in the Academy, in 1893 one. The portraits of the Duke and Duchess of York were painted for the Graphic in 1893, and his portrait of the Princess of Wales has formed a Graphic supplement. He also painted a posthumous portrait of the late Duke of Clarence. In 1895 he exhibited at the Royal Academy portraits of Mrs. Johnson-Ferguson, Mrs. Arthur James, Mr. Yerburgh, M.P., and Mr. Frank Bibby; in 1896 portraits of Mrs. Stuart Samuel as a Shepherdess, Mrs. Frank Bibby, Mr. Frederick Treves, F.R.C.S. (a presentation portrait), Mrs. Frank Brace, and Dr. Thomas Buzzard; in 1897 portraits of Mrs. Donaldson, Jack (son of Mr. Elmer Speed), Mrs. Maple, Mrs. Lever, and Sir Myles Fenton; and in 1898, Douglas (son of Mr. Elmer Speed), Miss Irene Blair, and Mr. John Aird. He became R.A. in 1887. Addresses: 11 Melbury Road, Kensington, W., &c.; and Athenæum.

FILON, Pierre Marie Augustin, French littérateur, was born at Paris, Nov. 28, 1841, and is the second son of the historian Auguste Filon, who died in 1875. In 1861 he was admitted to the Ecole Normale, and having obtained his degree of Agrégé des Lettres, he became Professor at the Lycée of Grenoble. In 1867 he was appointed tutor to the young Prince Imperial, whom he followed into exile in 1870, and continued to teach until 1875. Since then M. Filon has been engaged in critical and journalistic work in England, but he has recently returned to his native land. His chief works have been: "Les Mariages de Londres," a collection of short stories, 1875; "Histoire de la Littérature Anglaise jusqu'à nos jours," a work crowned by the French Academy in 1884; and "Contes du Centenaire," 1889. Since 1891 M. Filon has been the literary editor of the Revue Bleue. He has lately attracted much attention by his two books on the English and French contemporary drama, which were first contributed to the Fortnightly Review, and since published in book form, 1897 and 1898. His eldest son, Louis Napoléon Filon, obtained the Gold Medal at London University in Mathematics.

FINLAY, Sir Robert Bannatyne, Q.C., M.P., Solicitor-General, M.D., LL.D., D.L., son of Dr. William Finlay, of Edinburgh, was born on July 11, 1842, and educated at the Edinburgh Academy and at Edinburgh University, where he studied medicine and took his doctor's degree in 1863. Two years later he gave up medical practice and began to study for the English Bar. He was called in 1867, at the Middle Temple. He joined the South-Eastern Circuit, and was made a Queen's Counsel in 1882. In the following year Mr. Finlay contested Haddingtonshire against Lord Elcho at a by-election, but was unsuccessful. At the General Election of 1885 he succeeded in gaining a seat for Inverness Burghs, and in 1886 he was again returned for the same constituency as a Unionist Liberal, defeating Sir Robert Peel (Gladstonian) by 273 votes. Up to the election of 1885 and the rise of the Home Rule question, Mr. Finlay had made no great mark in the House, but during the first debates on Mr. Gladstone's Government of Ireland Bill he rose into a very important position as a Liberal Unionist. Since that time Mr. Finlay has been before the public in several capacities. He was counsel for the late Lord Colin Campbell in the celebrated lawsuit brought by him for the dissolution of his marriage. In 1892 and 1895 he was not re-elected to Parliament. He is married to Mary, youngest daughter of the late Colin Innes, of Edinburgh. Addresses: 31 Phillimore Gardens, W.; and Newton, Nairn.

FISHER, Professor Ernest Kuno Berthold, was born July 23, 1824, at Sandewald, in Silesia, and educated at the Universities of Leipzig and Halle, where he devoted himself to the study of Philosophy, Theology, and Philology. In 1850 he began to lecture at Heidelberg, and in 1856 was appointed Professor of Philosophy at the University of Jena, where he remained until called to fill a similar chair at Heidelberg in 1872. His chief works are: "Diotima, the Idea of the Beautiful," 1849; "History of Modern Philosophy," 1852-72; "Logic and Metaphysics," 1865; "Life of Kant and the Principles of his Teachings"; "Life and Character of Spinoza"; "The Confessions of Schiller"; "Lord Bacon"; "Goethe's Faust"; and "Lessing as the Reformer of German Literature," 1881. He is one of the most brilliant modern representatives of Hegelianism.

FISHER, Frederic Henry, was born in London, April 13, 1849, and is the eldest son of the late Rev. F. W. Fisher. He graduated B.A., London University, 1867, and passed into the Indian Civil Service, 1868, afterwards serving in the North-Western Provinces. He retired and was called to the Bar of the Middle Temple in 1885. He is author of several works, chiefly on Indian subjects, namely, "Afghanistan and the Central Asian Question," "North-Western Provinces Gazetteer" (several volumes), "Cyprus: our New Colony and What we Know about it," and has edited the well-known Literary World since 1883. Address: Highfield, Westcliff-on-Sea, Essex.

FISHER, Vice-Admiral Sir John Arbuthnot, K.C.B., was born in January 1841, and entered the Navy in June 1854. He first saw active service in the Baltic during the Russian War. In 1859 he went to China, serving as Midshipman in H.M.S. Highflyer, Chesapeake, and Furious, and was present at the capture of Canton, and the Peiho forts. He was awarded the China medal with two clasps. He was promoted Lieutenant in 1860, and taking gunnery as his specialty, made his mark as an organiser and administrator before he became a Commander, which rank he reached in 1869. Sir John was promoted Captain in 1874, and was appointed President of a Committee for revising "The Gunnery Manual of the Fleet." It fell to him to command H.M.S. Inflexible, at that time the most powerful warship in the world, at the bombardment of Alexandria, and after the fight, to command the Naval Brigade landed to occupy the city. He also devised and adapted the "Ironclad Train," and commanded in the various skirmishes with the enemy. For these services he received the C.B., the Egyptian medal, Khedive's star, and the Osmanieh of the Third Class. He was appointed Director of Naval Ordnance and Torpedoes in 1886, and the year following Naval Aide-de-Camp to the Queen. Sir John was promoted to the rank of Rear-Admiral in 1890, and shortly afterwards went to Portsmouth Dockyard as Admiral-Superintendent. That appointment he gave up in 1892, having been selected a Lord Commissioner of the Admiralty and Controller of the Navy. He was created a K.C.B. in 1894, and in 1897 was selected as Commander-in-Chief on the North American and West Indian station, with his flag in H.M.S. Renown. He also holds the Beaufort Testimonial. He has been appointed Commander-in-Chief in the Mediterranean. He has also been chosen as a delegate to represent British naval interests at the Czar's Peace Conference. Sir John is married to Katharine, a daughter of the Rev. T. Delves, Broughton. Addresses: 18 Somerset Street, Portman Square, W.; and Admiralty, S.W.1

FISHER, William Hayes, M.P., a Lord of the Treasury, was born in 1853, and is the eldest son of the Rev. R. Fisher, Rector of Downham, Cambridgeshire. He was educated at Haileybury, and at University College, Oxford, where he took a second class in Jurisprudence in 1876 (B.A.). He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1879, went the Oxford Circuit, and eventually became Senior Conveyancing Counsel to the Court of Chancery. He was elected M.P. for Fulham in 1885, and still represents that constituency. He was Hon. Private Secretary to Sir Michael Hicks-Beach in 1886-87, and to the Right Hon. A. J. Balfour from 1887 to 1892. In 1895 he was appointed a Junior Lord of the Treasury, and is a Ministerial Whip. Address: 13 Buckingham Palace Gardens, S.W.

FITCH, Sir Joshua Girling, son of Thomas Fitch of Colchester, was born in 1824; was educated at University College, London, and is M.A. and Fellow of the University of London. He was from 1852 to 1856 Vice-Principal, and afterwards Principal, of the Training College of the British and Foreign School Society. In 1863 he was appointed one of her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools, but has since been repeatedly detached for special services, first in 1865 as Assistant-Commissioner to the Schools Inquiry Commission, afterwards, in 1869, as one of two Special Parliamentary Commissioners to investigate the educational condition of four great towns, with a view to the framing of the Education Act of 1870; and subsequently as Assistant-Commissioner under the Endowed Schools Act from 1870 to 1877. In that year he returned to the service of the Education Department, and in 1881 became Chief Inspector of the Eastern Division, and afterwards Inspector of Training Colleges until 1894, when he retired from the public service. He was Examiner in the English Language, Literature, and History in the University of London during ten years, and was appointed a Fellow of the University by the Crown, on the nomination of Convocation. He has acted during many years as one of the special Examiners employed by the Civil Service Commission for the Indian and other higher branches of the Civil Service. In 1880 he delivered before the University of Cambridge a course of "Lectures on Teaching," since published by the Cambridge Press in a volume which has been largely used by teachers in England and America, and translated into several foreign languages. He is author of "Thomas and Matthew Arnold, and their Influence on Education," and also of numerous articles on literary and academic topics in the Nineteenth Century, the Quarterly, and other reviews.

He has written a work on "The Science of Arithmetic," and the article "Education" in Chambers's Encyclopedia. The University of St. Andrews in 1885 conferred on him the hon. degree of LL.D., and he has received from the French Government the Cross of a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour, in recognition of services rendered to the Professors of French Normal Colleges who have visited England to study educational institutions and methods. In 1888 he visited America, and wrote for the English Education Department "Notes on American Schools and Colleges," which were afterwards reprinted, with additions, in England and in the United States. He also prepared for the Department in 1890, in view of the proposals of the Government to abolish fees in elementary schools, a Parliamentary paper on the "Working of the Free School System in France and other Countries," which was reproduced in the Annual Report of the Committee of Council in 1891. He was knighted for public services in 1896. He served for the year 1898-99 as Chairman of Council of the Charity Organisation Society. He is a member of the governing bodies of St. Paul's School, Girton College (Cambridge), and Cheltenham Ladies' College, and an Hon. Fellow of the Scottish and American Educational Institutes. Since his retirement he has, at the request of the Government, served on several special Committees of inquiry in reference to Admiralty and to Poor-Law Schools. In 1856 he married Emma, daughter of Joseph Barber Wilks, Treasurer of the Hon. East India Company. Addresses: 13 Leinster Square, W.; and Athenæum.

FITZGEORGE, Colonel Augustus Charles Frederick, C.B. (Civil Division), was born on June 12, 1847. He is the third son of H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge and of Mrs. FitzGeorge. He was educated in Belgium and at Sandhurst. He joined the 1st Rifle Brigade, then stationed in Canada, in 1865, and has been A.D.C. to Lord Napier of Magdala when in India (1870-75), and to the Prince of Wales on his Indian tour, and Extra Equerry to Sir Archibald Alison at Aldershot. In 1878 he was transferred to the 11th Hussars, and is now on the half-pay list. Since 1886 he has been Equerry to his father. Address: Gloucester House, Park Lane, W.

FITZGERALD, Edward Arthur, F.R.G.S., F.L.S., F.Z.S., is the son of William John Fitzgerald, a British subject, and Mary, daughter of Eli White, of New York, and was born at Connecticut, U.S.A., on May 10, 1871. He was educated privately and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He has devoted his time largely to mountain-climbing, beginning by traversing the Alps from end to end in the company of Sir Martin Conway. In 1894 he visited the New Zealand Alps, and discovered the "Fitzgerald Pass." He afterwards organised an expedition which proceeded to South America, and there climbed the Aconcagua and Tupungata. He is the author of "Climbs in the New Zealand Alps," 1896. Mr. Fitzgerald was married in 1892 to Jeanne Marie, daughter of Baron de Rothercob, of Rouen. She died in 1893. Address: 22 Down Street, Piccadilly, W.

FITZGERALD, George Francis, F.R.S., was born on Aug. 3, 1851, in Lower Mount Street, Dublin. His father was William Fitzgerald, sometime Bishop of Cork, and afterwards Bishop of Killaloe. Mr. G. F. Fitzgerald was educated at home by a private tutor, Charles J. Hooper, and at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took the degree of B.A. in 1871, and M.A. in 1874. He was elected a Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin, in 1877, Erasmus Smith Professor of Natural and Experimental Philosophy in the University of Dublin, Hon. Secretary of the Royal Dublin Society, 1881 till 1889; Fellow of the Royal Society, 1883; head of the Dublin Univ. School of Engineering, 1886; President of Section A, British Association, Bath, 1888; and Examiner for London University in Experimental Science, 1888. The following is a list of his principal works: "On the Rotation of the Plane of Polarisation of Light by Reflection from the Pole of a Magnet," Proc. R. S., No. 176, 1876; "On the Electro-magnetic Theory of the Reflection and Refraction of Light," Trans. R. S., Part II., 1880; "On the Possibility of originating Wave Disturbances in the Ether by means of Electric Forces," Trans. R. D. S., Vol. I.; "On the Superficial Tension of Fluids and its Possible Relation to Muscular Contractions," Trans. R. D. S., Vol. I.; "On the Energy transferred to the Ether by a variable Current," Trans. R. D. S., Vol. III.; "On an Analogy between Electric and Thermal Phenomena," Proc. R. D. S., 1884; "On a Model illustrating some Properties of the Ether," Proc. R. D. S., 1885; "On the Structure of Mechanical Models illustrating some of the Properties of the Ether," Phys. Soc. Proc. and Phil. Mag., 1885; "Note on the Specific Heat of the Ether," Proc. R. D. S., 1885; "On the Limits to the Velocity of Motion in the working parts of Engines," Proc. R. D. S., 1886; and "On the Thermodynamic Properties of a Substance whose Intrinsic Equation is a Linear Function of the Pressure and Temperature," Proc. R. S., 1887. Address: 40 Trinity College, Dublin.

FITZGERALD, Sir Gerald, K.C.M.G., youngest son of the late Francis FitzGerald, of Galway, was born Jan. 1, 1833, at Galway, and educated at St. Mary's College, Galway, and in France. He was appointed Junior Clerk, War Office, 1856; was Estimate Clerk, 1861-63; selected in 1863 to proceed to India as Assistant-Commissioner for the Reorganisation of Indian Accounts; Deputy-Comptroller-General of Military Accounts, 1864-66; Accountant-General of Madras, 1871; of British Burmah, 1872; and was Deputy-Comptroller-General of India, 1872-76. He was allowed to accept temporary service under the Egyptian Government in 1876; and was Director-General of Accounts in Egypt, 1879-85; and was appointed Accountant-General of the Navy and Assistant Financial Secretary, June 1, 1885; retired 1896. During his tenure of office as Accountant-General many important changes were carried out in his department; the Navy Estimates were remodelled, and the difficulties presented by the Naval Defence Act successfully surmounted. He is a Commissioner of the Royal Patriotic Fund and Member of Pensions Commutation Board. Sir G. FitzGerald was created C.M.G., 1880; K.C.M.G., 1885; and has received First Class of the Medjidieh; Third Class of the Osmanieh; and Egyptian War Medal and Bronze Star. He married Amicia, eldest daughter of the late Lord Houghton, in 1881. Address: 18 Cadogan Gardens, S.W.

FITZGERALD, Percy Hetherington, M.A., F.S.A., son of the late Thomas FitzGerald, M.P., born in 1834 at Fane Valley, co. Louth, Ireland, was educated at Stoneyhurst College, Lancashire, and at Trinity College, Dublin, after which he was called to the Irish Bar, and appointed a Crown Prosecutor on the North-Eastern Circuit. He is the author of many works of fiction, most of which originally appeared in All the Year Round and Once a Week: "Never Forgotten," "Bella Donna," "Second Mrs. Tillotson," "Dear Girl," "Diana Gay," Novels of "Young Cœlebs," "The Lady of Brantome," "The Night Mail," and many others. Also the following biographies, &c.: "Croker's Boswell"; "The Life of Wilkes"; "Lives of the Sheridans"; "Lives of Dukes and Princesses"; "Life of Mrs. Clive"; "King Theodore of Corsica"; "Life of William IV.," 2 vols.; "Life of George IV.," 2 vols.; "The Life of Sterne," 2 vols.; "Life of Garrick," 2 vols.; "Charles Townshend"; "A Famous Forgery," being the life of

Dr. Dodd; "Charles Lamb"; "Principles of Comedy"; "The Romance of the English Stage"; two editions of "Boswell's Life of Johnson," in 3 vols.; an edition of Charles Lamb's Works, in 6 vols.; "Recreations of a Literary Man," 2 vols.; "The World behind the Scenes," 1 vol.; "A New History of the English Stage," 2 vols., 1882; "Kings and Queens of an Hour: Records of Love, Romance, Oddity, and Adventure," 2 vols., 1883; "Chronicles of Bow Street"; "Henry Irving, or Twenty Years at the Lyceum"; "Picturesque London," and other works, together with several light pieces performed at the London theatres. He was also the joint author, with Mr. W. G. Wills, of "Vanderdecken," produced by Mr. Irving at the Lyceum.

FITZGIBBON, The Right Hon. Gerald, LL.D., is the eldest son of the late Gerald FitzGibbon, Master in Chancery, and was born Aug. 28, 1837; educated at Trinity College, Dublin, of which he was a scholar, and where he gained the Berkeley Gold Medal (Greek) and many other high honours; called to the Bar, Ireland, 1860; England (Lincoln's Inn), 1861. Appointed Q.C. 1872, Law Adviser, Dublin Castle, 1876; Solicitor-General, 1877; Lord Justice of Appeal, Ireland, 1878; Privy Councillor, Ireland, 1879; Commissioner of National Education, 1884-96; Judicial Commissioner Educational Endowments, 1885; Chancellor of the United Dioceses of Dublin, Glendalough, and Kildare, 1896. He married, in 1864, Margaret Ann, second daughter of the Hon. Baron FitzGerald. Addresses: 10 Merrion Square, Dublin; and Howth, co. Dublin.

FITZMAURICE, Lord Edmund George Petty, M.A., M.P., second son of the 4th Marquis of Lansdowne, by his second wife, Emilie, eldest daughter of the Comte de Flahault and Madame de Flahault, Lady Keith, was born in London on June 19, 1846, and educated at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he gained a scholarship and a prize for an English Essay, and graduated, as a first-class in Classics, in 1868. In December of the last-named year he entered the House of Commons as member for Calne, which he continued to represent in the Liberal interest until 1885. He was Private Secretary to the Right Hon. R. Lowe at the Home Office in 1872-73; appointed, 1881, H.M. Commissioner for reorganising the European Provinces of Turkey under Art. XXIII. of the Treaty of Berlin; and second Plenipotentiary at the London Conference on the Navigation of the Danube in 1883; and was appointed Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs in December 1882, in succession to Sir Charles Dilke, who had been advanced to the Presidency of the Local Government Board. At the General Election of 1885 Lord Edmund was prevented by ill-health from offering himself as a candidate. In 1886 he was appointed one of the Boundary Commissioners under the Local Government Act (1887); is Vice-Chairman of the Court of Quarter Sessions, and since 1896 Chairman of the County Council of Wilts; and is a trustee of the National Portrait Gallery, and one of the Commissioners on Historical Manuscripts. He is the author of a "Life of Lord Shelburne," the statesman, and in 1895 published a "Life of Sir William Petty," the political economist, and has been a frequent contributor to the press, and to periodical literature, on questions of foreign policy and local government. In 1898, at a by-election, he was elected M.P. for North Wilts. Address: Leigh House, Bradford-on-Avon, Wilts.

FITZPATRICK, Sir Dennis, K.C.S.I., was born in 1837, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin. He went to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1872, and then entered upon a diplomatic career, becoming successively Resident at Hyderabad, Secretary to the Government of India, Chief Commissioner of Assam, Acting Resident at the Court of the Maharajah of Mysore, and in 1892 Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab and Officiating Judge of the Chancery Court. He held this position until in 1897 he was appointed a Member of the Council of the Secretary of State for India. In 1866 he married Mary, daughter of Colonel Buller. Club: East India United Service, St. James's Square, S.W.

FITZWILLIAM, Earl of, William Thomas Spencer Wentworth-Fitz-William, K.G., D.C.L., D.L., was born on Oct. 12, 1815, is the son of the fifth Earl and the fourth daughter of the first Lord Dundas, and succeeded to the title in 1857. He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took his M.A. degree in 1837. As Viscount Milton he entered Parliament as Liberal member for Malton in 1837, and represented that constituency until 1841, and again from 1846-47, when he was returned for Wicklow, which he represented for ten years. He was Lord-Lieutenant of the West Riding from 1857-92, and A.D.C. to the Queen from 1884-94. He was made a K.G. in 1862, and married, in 1838, Lady Frances Harriet Douglas, daughter of the nineteenth Earl of Morton. This lady died in 1895. Ad-resses: 4 Grosvenor Square, W.; and Wentworth Woodhouse, Rotherham, &c.

FITZWYGRAM, General Sir Frederick Wellington John, Bart., M.P., was born on Aug. 29, 1823; and succeeded his brother as fourth Baronet in 1873. He was educated at Eton, and obtained a commission in the 6th Dragoons in 1843, serving with the latter through the Crimean campaign. He exchanged into the 15th Hussars in 1860, became a Major-General in 1869, and acted as Inspector-General of Cavalry, and Commander of the Cavalry Brigade at Aldershot, from 1879 to 1884. Promoted to be Lieutenant-General 1883, he retired from the army in 1889. Sir F. Fitzwygram was elected as Conservative member for South Hampshire in 1884, and he has, since 1885, represented the Fareham Division of Hampshire in the same interest. He is a Member of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons, and was the President of that institution from 1875 to 1877. He is a Justice of the Peace, and a County Alderman for Hampshire. He is the author of "Horses and Stables"; "Notes on Shoeing"; "Utilisation of Cottage Sewage"; "Parochial Life Incumbencies." He was married, in 1882, to Angela, daughter of T. Nugent Vaughan. Address: Leigh Park, Havant.

FLAMMARION, Camille, a French astronomer, born at Montigny-le-Roi (Haute Marne), Feb. 25, 1842, received his education in the ecclesiastical seminary of Langres and in Paris, was a student in the Imperial Observatory from 1858 till 1868, when he became editor of the Cosmos, and was appointed scientific editor of the Siecle in 1865. At that period he obtained, by a series of lectures on astronomy, a distinct reputation, which was subsequently increased by his giving in his adhesion to "spiritualism." In 1868 he made several balloon ascents, in order to study the condition of the atmosphere at great altitudes. M. Flammarion is the author of "La Pluralité des Mondes Habités," 1862 (15th edit., 1869); "Les Mondes Imaginaires et les Mondes Réels," 1864; "Les Merveilles Célestes," 1865; "Dieu dans la Nature," 1866; "Histoire du Ciel," 1867; "Contemplations Scientifiques," 1868; "Voyages Aériens," 1868; "L'Atmosphère," 1872; "Lumen," 1872 (40th edit., 1890); "Histoire d'un Planète," 1873; and "Les Terres du Ciel," 1876. In June 1880, the French Academy awarded the Monthyon prize to M. Flammarion for his work, "L'Astronomie Populaire," and in 1881 he was decorated with the Legion of Honour. Among his most recent publications may be cited "Urania," 1889, and a number of maps, globes, and planispheres. He founded, in 1882, the monthly review, L'Astronomie. His works "Urania" and "Popular Astronomy" have been translated into English. Paris address: 16 Rue Cassini. His observatory is at Juvisy in the Seine-et-Oise.

FLEMING, George, C.B., LL.D., F.R.C.V.S., Principal Veterinary Surgeon of the Army (retired), was born in Glasgow, March 11, 1833, and studied Veterinary Medicine and Surgery in Edinburgh. While a student he obtained medals for competitions in Chemistry, Materia Medica, Essays, Anatomy, Best General Examination, and Fitzwygram Prize for Practical Knowledge. He entered the army as Veterinary Surgeon towards the end of 1855, and served in the Crimea until the withdrawal of the British army in 1856. He volunteered to serve in the expedition to North China in 1859, and was present at the capture of the Taku Forts, the engagements at Sinho and Tangku, actions near Tangchow, and the surrender of Peking, remaining in that country until the end of 1861. He served in Syria and Egypt in 1867. He has served also in the Military Train, 3rd (King's Own) Hussars, Royal Engineers, and 2nd Regiment of Life Guards, and was appointed Inspecting Veterinary Surgeon at the War Office in 1879, and Principal Veterinary Surgeon to the army in 1883. During his tenure of office the War Office Veterinary Department has been put to the severest test by the various campaigns in Egypt and Africa. He was placed on retired pay, June 28, 1890, and made Companion of the Bath (Civil Division) on June 22, 1887. While at the War Office he suggested the establishment of the Army Veterinary School at Aldershot, and directed it during the period he was Principal Veterinary Surgeon. This institution has been of great benefit to the army, as well as to veterinary officers. It is owing to Dr. Fleming's representations and efforts that steps were first taken to establish a Civil Veterinary Department in India, that the health of army horses has been much improved, and that army horse-shoeing has been greatly simplified. Indeed, he has been uniformly on the side of humanity to animals. He has effected an immense improvement in the position and quality of veterinary officers, and has made it his chief object to raise the veterinary profession both socially and scientifically. In 1881, at his own cost, and after much anxiety and trouble, he succeeded in obtaining from Parliament the Veterinary Surgeons Act, which put the profession in a recognised and well-established position, and endowed it with similar privileges to those possessed by the Faculties of Medicine and Surgery. He has contributed largely to veterinary literature, and these contributions have had an important influence in increasing professional knowledge in this country and in English-speaking countries; several of these works have been translated into foreign languages. He is founder and editor of the "Veterinary Journal and Annals of Comp. Pathology." He has represented the veterinary profession of the United Kingdom at several International Congresses, was appointed a Member of the General Committee, of the Sub-Committee (Chemistry and Physiology of Food), and a Juror of the International Health Exhibition of 1884, for which he received the Diploma of Honour; was one of the officials of the International Congress of Hygiene and Demography held in London in 1891, at which he read a paper on Rabies; was elected a Vice-President of the International Congress of Hygiene and Demography held at Buda-Pesth in 1894; was appointed a Member of the Royal Commission to report on Pasteur's Method of Protective Inoculation for Rabies, in 1886-87, and was examined by House of Lords' Committee on Rabies in Dogs in 1887. He has been elected Honorary Member of nearly every Veterinary Medical Association and of many scientific societies in Europe and America, and has received two valuable testimonials from the veterinary profession in the United Kingdom in recognition of his efforts to raise veterinary medicine and improve its literature. Address: Higher Leigh, Combe Martin, North Devon.

FLEMING, Rev. James, B.D., Vicar of St. Michael's, Chester Square, London, and Canon of York, Hon. Chaplain to the Queen from 1876 to 1880, was born on July 26, 1830. He was educated at Shrewsbury, and at Magdalene College, Cambridge. Whilst Vicar of All Saints', Bath, he was one of the first to popularise the once-popular entertainments known as "Penny Readings." The collections at his London church in aid of the Hospital Sunday Fund are remarkably large. On the second Sunday after the death of the Duke of Clarence, in January 1892, he preached at Sandringham, and his sermon "Recognition in Eternity," had afterwards a very large sale. His publishers divided over £1400 of the profits therefrom accruing between the Gordon Boys' Home and the British Home for Incurables. He has taken a prominent part, on the Protestant side, in the controversy upon "Lawlessness in the Church of England," which was for some time carried on in the Times in 1898. He has published "Select Readings from the Poets and Prose Writers of every Country," &c. Address: St. Michael's Vicarage, Ebury Square, S.W.

FLEMING, John Ambrose, M.A. Cantab., D.Sc. Lond., F.R.S., Professor of Electrical Engineering in University College, London, was born at Lancaster on Nov. 29, 1849, his father being the Rev. James Fleming, D.D. He received his first school education at University College School, London, which he entered at the age of fourteen, during the head-mastership of Mr. T. H. Key. He was subsequently entered as a student in University College, with the object of preparing for the engineering profession, for which, during boyhood, he had shown great aptitude. After two years spent under such teachers as Professors De Morgan, Hirst, and Williamson, and a further interval filled up with private study, he graduated in 1870 as Bachelor of Science at the University of London. Circumstances then led him to take up science teaching as a pursuit, and he became a student at the Normal School of Science at South Kensington. Here, under Professors Frankland, Guthrie, and others, he spent some time, and was finally appointed a Demonstrator in the Chemical Laboratories and private assistant to Dr. Frankland. During this period the late Professor Guthrie was engaged in founding the Physical Society of London, and the first paper read before this society was one on the "New Contact Theory of the Galvanic Cell," by Mr. Fleming. In 1874 he became Science Master in the Military Department of Cheltenham College, but resigned in order that he might go to Cambridge to work under Professor Clerk Maxwell. Entering St. John's College as an Exhibitioner in Science in 1877, he studied hard under Mr. W. H. Besant in mathematics, and worked in the Cavendish Physical Laboratory under Professor Clerk Maxwell. His scientific training enabled him to obtain a high position in his College, and he was elected successively Exhibitioner in Natural Science, Hare Exhibitioner, Wright's Prizeman, Foundation Scholar of his College, and Hughes Prizeman. During this time he carried out several investigations under the guidance of Professor Clerk Maxwell, the most important being an elaborate comparison of the British Association "Standards of Resistance." At the end of his third year at Cambridge he took the Degree of Doctor of Science in the University of London, and that of Bachelor of Arts at Cambridge, this last being gained by a first class with special distinction in the Natural Science Tripos. In 1880 he was appointed University Demonstrator in Applied Mechanics under Professor James Stuart, and assisted him in the construction and design of the Cambridge Engineering Laboratories. When University College, Nottingham, was opened, Dr. Fleming was selected out of a large number of candidates as the first occupant of the Chair of Mathematics and Physics in that institution. In 1881 electric lighting began to attract public attention, and, after a short residence at Nottingham, Dr. Fleming resigned his post there and removed to London. When the Edison Electric Lighting Company was first formed, he was appointed their electrical engineer, and in that capacity he was largely connected with the first introduction of incandescent electric lighting into England. In 1882 he was elected a Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, a Fellow of University College, London, and Member of the Institution of Electrical Engineers. Besides concerning himself with the practical work of electrical engineering, he found time to carry on much original work, and published, amongst others, papers on "Problems of Electric Flow in Networks of Conductors," "Molecular Shadows in Incandescent Lamps," and "The Use of Daniel's Cell as a Standard of Electromotive Force." In 1885 Dr. Fleming was appointed Professor of Electrical Engineering in University College, London, and whilst retaining his position as Electrical Adviser to the Edison and Swan Electric Light Company and to other corporations, he threw himself once more into the work of teaching. Finding the accommodation at University College for such engineering education entirely inadequate, he began to set on foot a demand for increased facilities, which finally was instrumental in inducing the Council to erect the present engineering and electrical laboratories at University College. The arrangements of the part of those laboratories intended for electrical engineering were suggested and designed by Dr. Fleming, who organised and carried out, during his tenure of the chair, a complete course of instruction in electrical engineering. In addition to this work his advice was much sought after as an expert in electrical matters; as adviser and consulting engineer he was connected with a large number of electric lighting companies and corporations. His attention was always particularly attracted to the subject of electrical measurements. In 1885 he read a paper before the Institution of Electrical Engineers urging the necessity for a National Standardising Laboratory for Testing Electrical Instruments. This paper is freely acknowledged to have given the first impulse to a movement which ended in the establishment, at Richmond Terrace, of the Board of Trade Electrical Laboratory. As a lecturer and author Dr. Fleming has been much before the public. He has given numerous courses of lectures before the Society of Arts and Royal Institution, and has been successively Cantor and Gilchrist Lecturer. For his paper on "Electromagnetic Repulsion" he was awarded the silver medal of the Society of Arts. He has published "Short Lectures to Electrical Artisans," and "Electric Lamps and Electric Lighting," a reprint of a course of Royal Institution Lectures; "Magnets and Electric Currents," a textbook for students, 1897; and his treatise on the "Alternate Current Transformer," which is a standard work, appeared in 1889. His minor publications in scientific journals form a long list, and more than forty scientific papers are recorded under his name in the transactions of various societies. Dr. Fleming's interest in popular education has always been very great, and he may be said to have originated the movement which resulted in the establishment of Morley College, Waterloo Bridge Road, London. He was elected a F.R.S. in 1892, and served for many years on the Council of the Institution of Electrical Engineers. He is also a Member of the Physical Society and of the Royal Institution of Great Britain. He lectured to children at the Royal Institution in the winter of 1894-95 on "The Work of an Electric Current." Address: 2 Langland Place, Finchley Road, N.W.; and University College, Gower Street, W.C.

FLEMING, Sandford, C.E., LL.D., C.M.G., Canadian engineer, was born at Kirkcaldy, Fifeshire, Scotland, Jan. 7, 1827. He removed to Canada in 1845, and in 1852 was employed on the engineering staff of the Northern Railway, and was afterwards one of the chief promoters of the railway from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The first link in this chain was formed by the Inter-Colonial Railway, undertaken by Mr. Fleming at the request of the Governments of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, in conjunction with the Imperial authorities. The 1st of July 1876 saw the completion of this great work, an historical account of which Mr. Fleming published in the same year. While the "Inter-Colonial" was being constructed Mr. Fleming was ordered to survey and locate the line for the Pacific Railway, a task which he partly accomplished in 1872. For the next seven years he actively prosecuted that enterprise, and for his services was rewarded (1877) by being made a Companion of the Order of SS. Michael and George. In 1880, owing to some difficulty with the Government of the day, he resigned his office. The same year he was elected Chancellor of Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario, a position to which he has thrice been re-elected since, and which he still holds. In 1881 he represented the Canadian Institute at the International Geographical Congress at Venice, and in 1844 the Dominion at the International Prime Meridian Conference at Washington. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by St. Andrews University in 1884, and by Columbia College and the University of N. Y. in 1887. In addition to engineering reports and contributions to periodicals and to the transactions of learned societies, he has published "England and Canada," 1884. He was made K.C.M.G. in 1897.

FLETCHER, Alfred Ewen, editor of the New Age, and late editor of the London Daily Chronicle, was born at Long Sutton in 1841, and received his education at Owens College, Manchester, and Edinburgh University. He began life as a teacher, but early devoted himself to journalism, contributing to various periodicals. In 1872 he was appointed editor of the Barrow-in-Furness Vulcan. In 1876 he became London correspondent of the Barrow Daily Times, and afterwards joined the staff of the Educational Times, and acted as sub-editor of the Pictorial World. He was leader writer for the Weekly Dispatch, under the editorship of Dr. Hunter, M.P. In 1885 he became connected with the Daily Chronicle, and on the death of Mr. Boyle in 1889 succeeded to the editorship. Under his guidance the Daily Chronicle became the leading independent Radical morning paper, to which Labour and Literature owe their somewhat tardy journalistic recognition. Mr. Fletcher has edited the "Cyclopædia of Education." He retired from the editorship of the Daily Chronicle in 1895. Mr. Fletcher was first President of the Birmingham Ruskin Society (1897). He contested Greenock as an advanced Radical against Sir Thomas Sutherland, M.P., in 1895. He is greatly in demand as a public lecturer. Address: 7 De Crespigny Park, Denmark Hill.

FLETCHER, Banister, J.P., F.R.I.B.A., D.L., the second son of the late Thomas Fletcher, was born in 1833, and was educated privately. He is an architect and surveyor, and now holds the positions of Professor of Architecture and Building Construction at King's College, London, of which institution he is moreover a Fellow; District Surveyor of West Newington and part of Lambeth, having been appointed in 1875; one of the Surveyors to the Board of Trade. He is, besides, Chairman of the Trades Training School Committee, Chairman of the Building Trades Exhibition, and Chairman of the forthcoming Art Metal Exhibition. At the International Congress of Hygiene and Demography held at Buda-Pesth in 1894, he represented the city of London; he has of late years been Chairman of the Sanitary Committee of the city of London; was one of the Presidents of the late Congress of the British Institute of Public Health; and represented North-West Wiltshire in Parliament in 1885-86. He was one of the first to introduce faience work in street architecture, and he has written the following publications: "Model Houses for the Industrial Classes," 1871; "Sanitary Hints"; "Valuations and Compensations"; "Light and Air"; "Arbitrations"; "History of Architecture" (in conjunction with Mr. B. F. Fletcher); "Dilapidations"; "London Building Act," 1894. Professor Fletcher has travelled in Italy, Spain, Greece, Turkey, France, Denmark, Austria-Hungary, &c. He is Colonel of the Tower Hamlets Rifle Brigade, and received the Queen's decoration in 1892. He married, in 1864, the only daughter of the late Charles Phillips. Addresses: Anglebay, West Hampstead; and Brunswick Terrace, Windsor.

FLETCHER, Lazarus, F.R.S., &c., born March 3, 1854, in Salford, Lancashire, is the eldest son of Stewart and Elizabeth Fletcher. He was educated at the Manchester Grammar School and Balliol College, Oxford, and is a Master of Arts (Oxon.). In 1871 he was elected Natural Science Scholar, Balliol College, Oxford; First Class in Mathematical Moderations, 1873; "Highly Distinguished" for the University Junior Mathematical Scholarship, 1874; First Class in Mathematical Finals, 1875; elected to the Senior University Mathematical Scholarship, and First Class in Natural Science Finals, 1876; and in the same year was appointed Junior Demonstrator, Clarendon Laboratory, Oxford, and Millard Lecturer, Trinity College, Oxford. In 1877 he was elected Fellow of University College, Oxford, and was First Class Assistant, Mineral Department, British Museum, 1878; appointed Keeper of Minerals, British Museum of Natural History, and Public Examiner at Oxford, 1880; and in 1883, Public Examiner at Cambridge. In 1888 he was elected to the Fellowship of the Royal Society. He was President of the Geological Section of the British Association at the Oxford Meeting in 1894.

He is likewise Fellow of the Geological Society; Fellow of the Chemical Society; Past President of the Mineralogical Society, and Fellow of the Physical Society, and is the author of "An Introduction to the Study of Meteorites" (1881); "An Introduction to the Study of Minerals" (1884); "An Introduction to the Study of Rocks" (1895); "The Optical Indicatrix and the Transmission of Light in Crystals" (1892); and of various technical papers relative to crystals and meteorites. He married Agnes, daughter of the late Rev. Thomas Holme. Address: 36 Woodville Road, Ealing, W.

FLOWER, Sir William Henry, K.C.B., LL.D., D.C.L., Sc.D., F.R.S., F.R.C.S., F.L.S., F.G.S., second son of E. F. Flower, Esq., of Stratford-on-Avon, born at that place Nov. 30, 1831, was educated for the medical profession at University College, London, and the Middlesex Hospital. He entered the army as assistant-surgeon in April 1854, served in the Crimean war, was present at the battles of Alma, Balaklava, and Inkermann, and the siege of Sebastopol, for which he received the English war medal with four clasps, and the Turkish medal. Settling afterwards in London, he was appointed Assistant-Surgeon and Demonstrator of Anatomy at the Middlesex Hospital. Relinquishing henceforth surgical practice and devoting himself entirely to scientific pursuits, he was in 1861 elected Conservator of the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons, and in 1869 Hunterian Professor of Comparative Anatomy and Physiology, which offices he resigned in 1884 on being appointed Director of the Natural History Departments of the British Museum, at that time just removed to the new building erected for them in the Cromwell Road, South Kensington. He was President of the section of Biology at the meeting of the British Association in Dublin, in August 1878, and President of the section of Anatomy at the International Medical Congress, held in London in 1881. In 1879 he succeeded the late Marquis of Tweeddale as President of the Zoological Society of London, which office he still holds, and from 1883 to 1885 was President of the Anthropological Institute. The Royal Society awarded to him, in November 1882, one of its royal medals for his valuable contributions to the morphology and classification of the mammalia, and to anthropology, and he has received the honorary degrees of LL.D. from the Universities of Edinburgh, Dublin, and St. Andrews, D.C.L. from those of Oxford and Durham, Sc.D. from Cambridge, and Ph.D. from Utrecht. He was made a C.B. in 1887, and K.C.B. in 1892, and in

1889 was President of the British Association at the meeting held at Newcastle-on-Tyne. In 1895 he was elected a Correspondent of the Institute of France (Académie des Sciences), and is an Honorary Member of the Royal Academy of Sciences of Sweden and Belgium, and of many other British and foreign scientific societies. The Emperor of Germany conferred upon him the Royal Prussian Order pour le mérite in May 1898. Sir William Flower is the author of numerous memoirs on subjects connected with anatomy and zoology in the Transactions of the Royal, Zoological, and other learned societies; also of "An Introduction to the Osteology of the Mammalia," 3rd edit. 1885; "Diagrams of the Nerves of the Human Body," 2nd edit. 1872; "An Introduction to the Study of Mammals, Living or Extinct" (written in collaboration with Mr. Lydekker), 1891; and "The Horse, a Study in Natural History," 1892; "Essays on Museums and other subjects connected with Natural History," 1898; and various Catalogues of the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons, and articles on scientific subjects in the ninth edit. of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." Sir Wm. Flower retired from the Directorship of the South Kensington Museum in 1898, and is succeeded by Professor Ray Lankester (q.v.). The Standing Committee of the Trustees of the British Museum sent him in July 1898 the following letter, which was signed by their Chairman, Lord Dillon:—"Dear Sir William Flower,—With profound regret the Trustees accept the resignation of the directorship of the Natural History Museum, which, owing to failure of health, you have been unhappily compelled to submit to them. They had hoped that the remaining term of years which you might have spent in their service would have enabled you to perfect the arrangements of the collections so admirably planned and so systematically developed by you during your fourteen years of office, and they cannot but regard your retirement at this moment as a real misfortune to the Museum. They wish to record their high appreciation of your services. The rare combination of wide scientific knowledge with marked administrative ability and a sympathetic appreciation of the requirements of the uninstructed public has carried you through a most difficult task. Under your hands the natural history collections of the British Museum have fallen into the lines of an orderly and instructive arrangement, which no one, whether man of science or ordinary visitor, can examine without admiration. To you, as a worthy successor of Sir Richard Owen, will attach the honour of having organised a museum of natural history which now occupies a pre-eminent position among all the museums of the civilised world. For these devoted services the Trustees thank you. In your retirement you carry with you their lasting gratitude and their sincere good wishes." He married in 1858 the youngest daughter of Admiral W. H. Smyth, D.C.L., F.R.S. Address: Athenæum Club.

FOERSTER, Professor Dr. Wilhelm, Director of the Royal Observatory, and Professor at the University of Berlin, was born, Dec. 16, 1832, at Grünberg, Silesia. He studied at Berlin and Bonn from 1850 to 1854; was promoted as Doctor Philosophiæ at Bonn in August 1854; appointed as second Assistant of the Royal Observatory of Berlin, Oct. 1, 1855, first Assistant April 1, 1860; began to give astronomical lectures as "Privat-Dozent" at the University of Berlin in the spring of the year 1857. On Oct. 31, 1863, he became Professor Extraordinarius, and, April 10, 1875, Professor Ordinarius at the University of Berlin. On March 11, 1865, he was appointed as Director of the Royal Observatory. From 1869 to 1886 he was Director of the Weights and Measures Department of the German Empire, without leaving his position at the Observatory. Dr. Foerster has published his astronomical investigations in the "Berliner Astronomisches Jahrbuch," and in the "Astronomische Nachrichten," besides in a separate volume "Studien zur Astronomie." He has published a considerable number of popular and historical essays and speeches, collected in three volumes under the title of "Sammlung von Vorträgen und Abhandlungen," Berlin, 1876, 1887, and 1890.

FOLKESTONE, Viscount, Jacob Pleydell-Bouverie, M.P., is the eldest son of the present Earl of Radnor, by his wife Helen, sister of the Right Hon. Henry Chaplin, and was born on July 8, 1868. He was educated at Harrow, and Trinity College, Cambridge. He acted as Assistant Private Secretary to the Right Hon. H. Chaplin, M.P., from 1890 to 1892, and in the latter year was elected as Conservative member for the Wilton Division of Wiltshire, a constituency which he continues to represent. In 1897 Lord Folkestone was chosen to move the Address to the Throne in the House of Commons. He is a Major in the Wilts Volunteers. He was married in 1891 to a daughter of Charles Balfour, of Newton Don. Addresses: 2 Balfour Place, Park Lane, W.; The Manor House, Folkestone, &c.

FONVIELLE, Wilfrid de, a French aeronaut and popular writer on scientific subjects, born in Paris, July 26, 1826, was educated at Ste. Barbe, and was originally a teacher of mathematics, but first became known to the public as a journalist, and as a popular exponent of scientific knowledge. His family is from Toulouse; his grandfather was Chevalier de Fonvielle, and his great-uncle was Barras, the President of the Directoire Exécutif of the French Republic. He was a student in Paris when the 1848 Revolution broke out, and was one of the leaders of the insurrection in the Quartier Latin and of the column which caused the flight of the Duchess of Orleans and her son. M. de Fonvielle was arrested with others on June 13, 1849, but released then for want of proof. However, he was, in 1851, transported to Algiers, and afterwards banished. He subsequently resided for several years in England; but returned to Algiers in 1859, for the purpose of editing Algérie Nouvelle with his brother Arthur and Clement Duvernois, who ultimately seceded from Republicanism and turned Cabinet Minister under Napoleon III. The paper was suppressed by imperial decree after a duel fought by Arthur de Fonvielle and Youssef; and Wilfrid became the scientific editor of La Liberté under Girardin. Besides advocating rational republicanism, M. de Fonvielle has devoted much of his time to science, particularly to physics, and has invented several electrical instruments, and discovered "rotary magnetic fields": the Schallenger measurer of energy, and others similar, are applications of this principle. During the siege of Paris he escaped from the city in a balloon, and, proceeding to London, gave a series of lectures, in which he expatiated on the benefits of a republican form of government. Of late years he has made numerous balloon ascents, in order to carry on scientific experiments at great altitudes. His principal scientific works are: "L'Homme Fossil," 1865; "Les Merveilles du Monde Invisible," 1866; "Éclairs et Tonnerres," 1867 (translated into English by T. L. Phipson, under the title of "Thunder and Lightning"); and "L'Astronomie Moderne," 1868, &c. An account of the balloon ascents made by M. de Fonvielle, Mr. Glaisher, and others, appeared in French in 1870, and an English translation was published in 1871, under the title of "Travels in the Air." His more recent popular scientific books are a description of the Greely Expedition of 1886; a history of the moon; "Le Pétrole," 1887; a study of modern fasting-men, 1887; "Le Pôle End," 1888; and a work on celebrated ships, 1890. In addition to the above, M. de Fonvielle has written several political pamphlets; his latest being "How Republics Perish": an attack on Radicalism and Boulangism. In 1879 he published "Comment se font les Miracles en dehors de l'Eglise," a work in which he refutes, from a common sense standpoint, the pretensions of mediums. A more recent work of his deals with hypnotism, &c. He is one of the editors of La Nature, Petit Journal, and Lumière Electrique. His younger brother, Uric, an artist, was fired at by Prince Pierre Bonaparte when the Prince murdered Uric's companion, Victor Noir. Uric de Fonvielle was the only witness for the unwilling prosecution in the celebrated process called "Drame d'Auteuil."

FORAIN, Jean Louis, French artist, was born at Reims, Oct. 13, 1852, and was a pupil of Jaquesson de la Chevreuse. His first appearances at the Salon were unremarked, as for instance, "Au Buffet," 1884, and "Le Veuf," 1885. But his reputation has been acquired as a black-and-white artist, especially in caricature and in bitingly sarcastic, even brutal, comments on the political and social life of modern Paris. He has contributed to a host of newspapers, including the Figaro, La Cravache, Le Monde Parisien (1879), Le Courrier Français, La Vie Parisienne, and Le Journal. He is represented at every exhibition of the Salon by several of the original drawings which have appeared in these newspapers. He has illustrated "Les Croquis Parisiens" of J. K. Huysmans (q.v.). His chief caricatures have been collected in albums, which have been published under the titles, "La Comédie Parisienne," 1892; "Les Temps Difficiles," 1893, a scathing commentary on Panama; "Nous, Vous, Eux," 1893; "Album de Forain," and others. M. Forain was decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1893. He is a master of line (see the Studio, August 1898), and may be styled the French Phil May.

FORBES, Archibald, journalist, eldest son of the Rev. L. W. Forbes, D.D., born in 1838, is a native of Morayshire, Scotland. After studying at the University of Aberdeen, he served for several years in the Royal Dragoons, and his knowledge of the practical details of military affairs stood him in good stead when, accepting a journalistic career as special correspondent for the Daily News, he accompanied the German army from the beginning to the end of the Franco-German war. Later, in the same capacity, he witnessed the close of the Commune, visited India during the famine of 1874, saw fighting in Spain, at one time with Carlists, at another with Republicans, at a third with Alfonsists. In the capacity of representative of the Daily News, he accompanied the Prince of Wales in the tour of his Royal Highness through India in 1875-76. In the summer and autumn of 1876, he was in Serbia, and was present at all the important fights of that campaign. He followed the Russo-Turkish campaign in the summer and autumn of 1877, attached to the Russian army, and was present at the crossing of the Danube, the capture of Bjela, the advance of the Cesarewitch's army towards Rustchuk, the disastrous battle of Plevna on July 3rd, the severest fighting in the Shipka Pass, and the five days' attack by the Russians on Plevna, in September, remaining continuously in the field until attacked by fever in the middle of September. In 1878 he proceeded to Cyprus as special correspondent of the Daily News. In the autumn of the same year he went to India, and in the winter accompanied the Khyber Pass force to Jellalabad, having been present at the attack on and reduction of Ali Musjid, and in several expeditions against the hill tribes, on one of which expeditions he was mentioned in the General's despatch for attending to the wounded and saving a wounded soldier's life under a close and heavy fire. From Afghanistan he proceeded to Mandalay, the capital of King Theebaw, where he had some interesting interviews with that potentate. When at Mandalay, he was summoned by telegraph to hurry to South Africa, where, after the catastrophe of Isandlwana, a British force was gathering for the invasion of Zululand. He accompanied Lord Chelmsford's army through the interior of that region, and was present at the battle of Ulundi. Starting from the camp on the evening of the battle, he rode through a trackless country 120 miles to the telegraph wire at Landsmanns Drift on the Natal front, whence he wired the tidings of the victory to Sir Garnet Wolseley, who was travelling to Port Durnford, and to Sir Bartle Frere, the Governor of the Cape, from both of whom he received warm thanks and congratulations. The curt telegram to Sir Bartle, transmitted by him to the Government at home, was read amidst acclamations by her Majesty's Ministers in both Houses of Parliament as being the only intelligence received up to date. Afterwards Mr. Forbes lectured on his experiences to large audiences in Great Britain, America, and Australia. The severe strain of his work as a correspondent had begun to tell upon his health, and he was not able to be present during the Egyptian and Soudan campaigns. Among his works are: "Drawn from Life," a military novel; "My Experiences of the War between France and Germany"; "Glimpses through the Cannon Smoke," 1880; "Soldiering and Scribbling: a Series of Sketches," 1882; "Life of Chinese Gordon," 1884; "Souvenirs of Some Continents," 1885; "Life of the Emperor William of Germany," 1889; "Havelock," 1890; "Barracks, Bivouacs, and Battles," 1891; and "The Afghan Wars," 1892; "Tzar and Sultan," 1894; "The Black Watch," "Memories and Studies of War and Peace," "Camps, Quarters, and Casual Places," 1896; and "Life of Napoleon III.," 1898. He contributed to the Men of Action series in 1895, "Colin Campbell, Lord Clyde." He married Louisa, daughter of the late General M. C. Meigs, U.S.A. Address: 1 Clarence Terrace, Regent's Park, N.W.

FORBES, J. Staats, Chairman of the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway, was born in 1825, and as a youth became connected with the Great Western Railway on its construction. He was put upon the staff of the line when it was first laid, having received a training as an engineering draughtsman under Brunel. Some years later he was promoted to the managership of the Dutch-Rhenish line, which he converted from a struggling into a successful concern. In 1861 he accepted the managership of the London, Chatham, and Dover line, then newly formed as the result of an amalgamation. In 1873 he was chosen as the successor of Mr. Grosvenor Hodgkinson, and became Chairman of the Company.

FORBES, Stanhope Alexander, A.R.A., was born in Dublin on Nov. 18, 1857, and is the son of William Forbes, at one time Manager of the Great Western Railway of Ireland, and a nephew of the well-known Chairman of the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway. He was educated at Dulwich College, and studied art at Lambeth, the Royal Academy Schools, and under Bonnat in Paris. He settled some years ago at Newlyn, in Cornwall, and is now one of the leading representatives of the Newlyn school. His best-known pictures in the Royal Academy Exhibitions have been: "A Street in Brittany," "Off to the Fishing Ground," "The Fish Sale," "Their Ever-shifting Home," "The Health of the Bride," "By Order of the Court," "The Village Philharmonic," "The Quarry Team," "The Salvation Army," "Forging the Anchor" (perhaps his finest work), "The Smithy," 1895. In the same year he exhibited portraits of G. J. Johnson, Esq., and of Wilson Noble, Esq., M.P.; in 1896, portraits of T. Bedford Bolitho, Esq., M.P., Richard F. Bolitho, Esq., and Sir Peter Eade, M.D. (presentation portrait). In the same Exhibition appeared his characteristic picture, "The New Calf," which, like his work

"Forging the Anchor," is a marvellous study in strong contrasts of light and shade. "Across the Stream" appeared in 1897, as also the noteworthy picture "Christmas Eve" and "A Red Room in Holland." In 1898 he exhibited "October" and "The Letter." Mr. Stanhope Forbes is the painter of the romance of Cornwall, and his vivid and powerful method is suggestive of the best French traditions. His fresco in the Royal Exchange, illustrative of the Great Fire of London, was finished in 1899. London address: 134 Elgin Avenue, W.

FORBES-ROBERTSON, John, art critic and journalist, is lineally descended from the Forbeses of Tolquhon. He is the son of John Robertson, merchant in Aberdeen, and was born there Jan. 30, 1822. He was educated at the Grammar School and at the Marischal College and University of his native city, and became sub-editor of one of the local papers (under the late Joseph Robertson, the eminent historian and antiquary), and contributor to the "Poet's Corner" of another, while still a student, making dramatic and musical criticism his special care. Early in 1844 he came to London, the year afterwards he visited France, and subsequently the United States of America. On his return he aided materially in opening up the salmon resources of Norway, and carried on a correspondence with the French authorities, especially Baron Haussmann of the Seine, on the artificial propagation of the fish, long before any practical results of the knowledge obtained became visible in England. Mr. Forbes-Robertson has since then written much art-criticism. He was editor for several years of Art, Pictorial and Industrial, art editor of the Pictorial World, and has been on the staff of those London journals which make art a feature. For ten years he was chief art-critic on the Art Journal, and contributed reviews of Continental exhibitions to the Illustrated London News, the Magazine of Art, &c. He is the author of several brochures of special art-criticism, and in 1877 he published a large quarto volume entitled "The Great Painters of Christendom," which was favourably received both in this country and in America. He is the author also of Memoirs of "Rosa Bonheur," "Gustave Doré," of a "Life of George Jameson, the Scottish Painter," and, in conjunction with Wm. May Phelps, of a "Life of Samuel Phelps, Player." Mr. Forbes-Robertson is well known in London and elsewhere as a successful lecturer on the History of Art. His eldest son, Johnston Forbes-Robertson (q.v.), is the well-known actor and manager, and his younger sons, Ian and Norman Forbes-Robertson, have both achieved for themselves recognised positions as London actors. His youngest daughter, Miss Frances Forbes-Robertson, is the author of "The Potentate, a Romance," as well as of several other volumes of tales and sketches. Address: 22 Bedford Square, W.C.

FORBES-ROBERTSON, Johnston, actor, eldest son of John Forbes-Robertson (q.v.), was born in London on Jan. 16, 1853. He was educated at the Charterhouse School and at a school in Rouen, after leaving which he was for three years a student in the Royal Academy Schools, and exhibited at the Royal Academy before he was twenty. One of his first pictures was a portrait of Miss Ellen Terry; another was an admirable likeness of Madame Modjeska. The large painting from his brush of the church scene in "Much Ado about Nothing" is well known as an engraving. He has also painted Sir Henry Irving. Mr. Forbes-Robertson has, however, become famous as an actor rather than as a painter. He made his first appearance on the stage at the age of twenty-one, underwent a severe training in the provinces, and was for a time the pupil of Phelps, for whose methods he has publicly expressed the highest admiration. He has rarely been out of an engagement, and early became one of the leading actors, first at the Lyceum, under Sir Henry Irving, of whom he has been thought to be an imitator, and afterwards at Sir Squire Bancroft's and Mr. Hare's theatres. His repertoire is a very large one, and includes more than a hundred characters. He has created the parts of Dunstan Renshaw (chief rôle) in "The Profligate," Claud Glynn in "The Parvenu," Count Orloff in "Diplomacy," Sir George Orman in "Peril," Maurice de Saxe in an English version of "Adrienne Lecouvreur," and Sir Horace Welby in "Forget-me-not." In Shakespearian drama he has given the public distinguished impersonations of Romeo, Claudio, the Duke of Buckingham, Leontes, &c. In the provinces he has been supported by Miss Marion Terry, and together with her achieved a triumph in Manchester in "Dr. and Mrs. Neill," and as Geoffrey Wynniard in "Dan'l Druce." Later, he won laurels at the Lyceum as Lancelot in "King Arthur." With Mrs. Patrick Campbell he has perhaps achieved his greatest successes, playing Lucas Cleve in "The Notorious Mrs. Ebbsmith," whilst she impersonated the title-rôle (Garrick, 1895). Towards the close of that year he took over the management of the Lyceum, and played Romeo to her Juliet. At the same theatre he played the leading part of a clergyman in "Michael and his Lost Angel," a play which met with ill-deserved ill-success (1896). In "For the Crown," produced in February 1896, he played Constantine, a part which showed him at his high-water mark as a romantic actor. The play is in blank verse, being a translation by Mr. John Davidson from the French of Coppée, and Mr. Forbes-Robertson's delivery of his lines at once proclaimed him one of the very few actors who value the literature and rhythm of the dramatist. He excels in parts requiring the impassioned or the graceful delineation of sentiment. Since 1896 he has appeared as Professor Heffterdingk in "Magda," and as Joseph in a revival of the "School for Scandal." A lecture on his dramatic reminiscences and admirations, delivered at the Crystal Palace in 1897, proved intensely interesting to his many admirers. Address: 22 Bedford Square, W.C.

FORD, E. Onslow, R.A., sculptor, was born in London, July 27, 1862, and as a boy had a great desire to become an artist. In 1870 he went to Antwerp and entered the School, working his way up to the Antique School, where he studied under M. Buffeau. In 1871 he went to Munich and joined the Academy, still studying painting; but shortly before leaving he gave up painting and took to sculpture. In 1874 he returned to England, where he has since resided. His principal statues are "Sir Rowland Hill, K.C.B.," 1882; "The Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M.P.," 1883; "Henry Irving, Esq., as Hamlet," 1883; and "Linus," 1884. Besides these he has executed a number of busts, amongst which may be mentioned: "Sir John Brown," 1881; "Sir Charles Reid" and "Rev. John Rogers," 1882; "The Archbishop of York," 1884; and "Lieut.-General Sir Andrew Clarke," 1886. In 1885 he exhibited a relief, "In Memoriam," and his statuette, "Folly," was purchased by the Royal Academy under the terms of the Chantrey Bequest. Among his most recent works are a bronze statue of "Applause," and a statue of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, and bronze busts of Mr. Arthur Hacker, A.R.A., Mr. Walter Armstrong, the late Sir John Millais, and Messrs. Orchardson, Briton, Rivière, and Herkomer, as well as the following statues: General Gordon on Camel at Chatham; the Shelley Memorial, University College, Oxford; the equestrian statue of Lord Strathnairn, Knightsbridge, London; Sir James Gordon, Mysore, India; Sir William Pearce, Glasgow; Dr. Dale, Birmingham. In 1895 he was elected R.A. He married in Munich, in 1872, the second daughter of B. Franz von Kretzser. Address: 62 Acacia Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

FORDHAM, Edward Snow, M.A., D.M., Metropolitan Police Magistrate, is the eldest son of Edward King Fordham, of the Bury, Ashwell, Herts, and was born on Jan. 15, 1858. He was educated at Caius College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1880. Subsequently entering as a student at the Inner Temple, he was called to the Bar in November 1883, and became a member of the Midland Circuit. Mr. Fordham was, in 1898, appointed a Metropolitan Police Magistrate, and sits at the North London Police Court. He was married, in 1880, to Annie, daughter of the late Thos. Carr-Jackson, F.R.C.S.

FORESTIER-WALKER, Lieut.-General Sir Frederick William Edward, K.C.B., C.M.G., eldest son of the late General Sir E. W. Forestier-Walker, by a daughter of the 6th Earl of Seafield, was born in April 1844, and educated at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst. He entered the army as a Lieutenant of the Scots Guards in September 1862 and was promoted Captain in July 1865, and in that rank acted as Aide-de-Camp to the Major-General in command at Mauritius. From 1869 to 1873 he was Adjutant to his regiment, after which he was appointed Assistant Military Secretary to Sir Bartle Frere, Commander-in-Chief at the Cape. In 1895 he accompanied the expedition into Griqua Land West. He also saw considerable war service in the Zulu campaign, and was present at the battle of Inyezane and the occupation of Etshowe. He was mentioned in despatches, and received a C.B., a medal with clasp, and was promoted to a brevet Colonelcy. In 1882 he was appointed Assistant Adjutant-General in the Home District, and shortly afterwards went to South Africa in the same capacity and took part in the Bechuanaland expedition, being honourably mentioned for his services, and awarded a C.M.G. He became a Brigadier-General in charge of the Infantry Brigade at Aldershot in 1889, and Major-General in Command of the English troops in Egypt in 1890. In November 1895 he was appointed to the command of the Western District, with Headquarters at Devonport. Lieut.-General Sir F. Forestier-Walker married, in 1887, Mabel, a daughter of Lieut.-Colonel A. E. Ross. Address: Devonport.

FORMAN, Mrs. Alfred. See MURRAY, ALMA.

FORMAN, Harry Buxton, C.B., born in London, July 11, 1842, was educated at Teignmouth, and was appointed in 1860 to a Junior Clerkship in the Secretary's Department of the General Post Office, where he is now Assistant-Secretary and Controller of Packet Services. He has for many years attended the Congresses of the Postal Union as British Delegate, and has been frequently sent on special foreign missions connected with this department of the public service. He is the author of "Our Living Poets; an Essay in Criticism," 1871; "The Shelley Library; an Essay in Bibliography," 1886, and several Essays on Shelley, published by the Shelley Society; also editor of the Library Edition of "The Poetical Works of Percy Bysshe Shelley," 4 vols., 1876-77 (reprinted 1882); "The Prose Works of Percy Bysshe Shelley," 4 vols., 1880; an unannotated edition of Shelley's Poetry, in 2 vols., 1882 (reprinted 1886 and 1892); the Aldine edition, with a Memoir, 5 vols., 1892; separate editions of Shelley's tragedy, "The Cenci," 1886, and his eclogue, "Rosalind and Helen," 1888; Charles Wells's "Joseph and his Brethren," 1876; "Letters of John Keats to Fanny Brawne," 1878 (reissued 1889); the Library Edition of "The Works of John Keats in Verse and Prose," 4 vols., 1882 (reissued with additions, 1889); an unannotated edition of Keats's poetry, 1884 (of which there are five reissues, the last in 1898); "Poetry and Prose by John Keats," 1890; an enlarged edition of all Keats's Letters, 1895; "Gold, a Dialogue," by John Ruskin, 1891; "A Few Words about the late Sir Arthur Blackwood," 1894; "Elizabeth Barrett Browning and her Scarcer Books, a Biobibliographical Note," 1896; and "The Books of William Morris described, with some Account of his Doings in Literature and the Allied Crafts," 1897. Mr. Forman was for some time engaged upon a large edition of Byron's poetry, to be published by Mr. Murray, but was obliged by pressure of public work to abandon it. He has been a contributor of critical articles, mainly of a serious kind, to the Fortnightly Review, the Fine Arts Quarterly Review, the Athenæum, the Contemporary Review, Macmillan's Magazine, the Gentleman's Magazine, the Manhattan, the Saturday Review, the Illustrated London News, the Sketch, the London Quarterly Review, and Cosmopolis; and is one of the authors who assisted in the production of Mr. Lloyd Sanders's Biographical and Critical Dictionary, "Celebrities of the Century," of Mr. Miles's ten-volume anthology, "The Poets and Poetry of the Century," and of the "Literary Anecdotes of the Nineteenth Century." He married Laura, daughter of W. C. Gelle, in 1869. Permanent address: 46 Marlborough Hill, St. John's Wood, N.W.

FORREST, The Right Hon. Sir John, Premier and Treasurer of West

Australia, K.C.M.G., LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.G.S., F.G.S., F.L.S., Honorary Fellow of the Royal Geographical Societies of Italy, Vienna, and St. Petersburg, Knight of the Italian Crown, was born in Western Australia on Aug. 22, 1847, and is the third son of William Forrest, of Leschenault, near Bunbury. He was educated at the Bishops' School, Perth, and entered the Survey Department of Western Australia, 1865, and in 1869 commanded an exploring expedition into the interior in search of Dr. Leichhardt and party. In 1870 he commanded an exploring expedition from Perth to Adelaide along the South Coast, and proved the practicability of the country for a telegraph line, which was erected in 1876. In 1874 he commanded an exploring expedition from Champion Bay on the West Coast of Australia to the overland telegraph line between Adelaide and Port Darwin without the aid of camels, with horses only, a journey of nearly 2000 miles. For these services he received the thanks of the Governor and the Legislative Council, and was awarded the gold medal of the Royal Geographical Society of London, May 22, 1876, and was also presented by the Imperial Government with a grant in fee of 5000 acres of land. In 1876 he was appointed Deputy Surveyor-General of Western Australia. In 1878 and 1882 he conducted the Trigonometrical Surveys of the Nickol Bay District and the Gascoyne and Lyons District in North-Western Australia. From September 1878 to January 1879 he acted as Commissioner of Crown Lands and Surveyor-General, with a seat in the Executive Council of the Colony. In 1880-81 he acted as Comptroller of the Imperial Establishments and Expenditure in Western Australia. He is a Justice of the Peace for the Colony. In 1882 he was made a Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. In 1883 he was appointed Commissioner of Crown Lands and Surveyor-General, and in the same year, and again in 1886, proceeded to Kimberley District, North-West Australia, to report on it to the Government. He filled this post till 1890. In the December of that year he was sent to form the first Ministry under a responsible Government in Western Australia, and became its Premier and Treasurer. He had previously been a Member of the Executive and Legislative Councils of the Colony. During his tenure of office he introduced the system by which squatters, willing to remain in the country and to make certain specified improvements, are given grants of 160 acres of land. He has also established an agricultural credit and manhood suffrage, and has introduced other reforms tending to modernise his colony. In 1897 he was President of the Federal Council of Australasia, and was sworn of the Privy Council. He represented Western Australia at the Colonial Conference in London, 1887. He has published "Explorations in Australia," 1876; "Notes on Western Australia," 1883, 1884, and 1885. He married in 1876 Margaret Elvire, eldest daughter of Edward Hamersley, J.P., of Pyrron, near Guildford, W. Australia. Address: Perth, W. Australia.

FORREST, Very Rev. Robert William, D.D., Dean of Worcester, was born in co. Cork, and is the son of the late Rev. Thomas Forrest, M.A., Rector of Rostellan, co. Cork. He graduated at the University of Dublin in 1854, and received his degree of D.D. in 1877. He entered the Irish Church in 1855, and was successively Curate of Holy Trinity and Perpetual Curate of St. Andrew's, Liverpool. He was appointed Vicar of St. Jude's, Kensington, in 1870, and in 1887 became a Prebendary of St. Paul's Cathedral. In June 1891 he was appointed Dean of Worcester in succession to Dr. Gott. In 1889 he was appointed Hon. Chaplain to the Queen. He is an eloquent and impressive preacher, and has been Select Preacher at Cambridge and Dublin Universities in 1889 and 1893 respectively. His publications are: "Lectures on Revelation ii. and iii.," 1870; "Lectures on the Book of Amos," 1876; and on "The Letters to the Seven Churches." Address: The Deanery, Worcester.

FORSYTH, Professor Andrew Russell, M.A., Sc.D., F.R.S., F.R.A.S., son of the late John Forsyth, was born in Glasgow on June 18, 1858. He was educated at the Liverpool College under the late Dr. (afterwards Canon) George Butler, and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He graduated in 1881 as Senior Wrangler and First Smith's Prizeman, and was elected a Fellow of his College in the same year; and in 1890 he proceeded to the degree of Doctor in Science. He was appointed Professor of Mathematics at the new University College, Liverpool, in 1882, a post which he resigned in 1884 on his appointment as Lecturer in Mathematics at Trinity College, Cambridge. On the death of Professor Cayley in 1895, he was appointed Sadlerian Professor of Pure Mathematics, and has been a Member of the Council of the Senate of the University of Cambridge since 1890. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1886, has served on its Council, and was awarded one of the Royal Medals in 1897 for his contributions to the progress of Pure Mathematics. He is the author of a "Treatise on Differential Equations," "Theory of Differential Equations," of which only Part I. has yet been published; "Theory of Functions of a complex variable," and of mathematical papers (relating chiefly to differential equations, theory of functions, and theory of invariantive forms) published in the Transactions of the Royal Society, Transactions of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, and in various mathematical journals; and after Professor Cayley's death he acted as editor of Cayley's "Collected Mathematical Papers." Address: Trinity College, Cambridge.

FORSYTH, William, Q.C., LL.D., son of the late Thomas Forsyth, of Liverpool, was born at Greenock, Oct. 25, 1812, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1834. He was third in the first class of the Classical Tripos, and second Senior Optime, was Chancellor's Medallist, and Fellow of Trinity, and proceeded M.A. in 1837. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1839, went the Northern Circuit, became a Queen's Counsel in 1857, and a Benchler of the Inner Temple. He was standing counsel to the Secretary of State in Council of India, and is Commissary of the University of Cambridge. He is the author of "On the Law of Composition with Creditors," published in 1841; "Hortensius; or, the Duty and Office of an Advocate," in 1849; "On the Law relating to the Custody of Infants," in 1850; "The History of Trial by Jury," in 1852; "Napoleon at St. Helena and Sir Hudson Lowe," in 1853; "The Life of Cicero," in 1864; "Cases and Opinions in Constitutional Law," in 1869; "The Novels and Novelists of the Eighteenth Century, in illustration of the Manners and Morals of the Age," in 1871; "Hannibal in Italy; an Historical Drama," in 1872; "Essays Critical and Narrative," in 1874; "The Slavonic Provinces South of the Danube," in 1876; and has contributed to the Quarterly and Edinburgh Reviews and Blackwood's Magazine. Having been elected member for the borough of Cambridge in the Conservative interest in July 1865 he was unseated, on petition, on the ground that the office he held of standing counsel to the Secretary of State for India was one of profit under the Crown, and disqualified him from sitting in Parliament. He was an unsuccessful candidate for the representation of Bath in October 1873, but was returned to the House of Commons by the borough of Marylebone at the general election of February 1874, and he continued to represent that constituency till 1880. Addresses: 61 Rutland Gate; and Athenæum.

FORTESCUE, Earl, The Right Hon. Hugh Fortescue, the eldest son of the late Earl (who was Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland in 1839-41), was born April 4, 1818, and educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1841, whilst Viscount Ebrington, he entered Parliament as member for Plymouth, which he represented in the Liberal interest until 1852, when he unsuccessfully contested Barnstaple, but on petition unseated both the successful candidates for bribery. In December 1854 he was elected for Marylebone, for which he resigned his seat, and was called to the Upper House in his father's barony of Fortescue, Dec. 5, 1859, and succeeded as 3rd Earl, Sept. 14, 1861. His Lordship was a Lord of the Treasury from 1846 to 1847, and Secretary of the Poor-Law Board from 1847 to 1851. In 1847 he was besides appointed along with some very distinguished colleagues, Lord Morpeth, Sir J. Burgoyne, Mr. Chadwick, Mr. R. Stephenson, and others, a member of the first consolidated Metropolitan Commission of Sewers, and also in 1849 of the second, both unpaid but hard-working bodies of which he latterly became Chairman. He resigned before the appointment of the third Commission, which was afterwards superseded by the Metropolitan Board of Works. In May 1856, while visiting a military hospital with a view to the motion which he carried afterwards in 1858, in favour of sanitary reform in the army, he caught ophthalmia, which deprived him of one eye, permanently impaired the other, and so much injured his health as to compel him, in Jan. 1859, to retire from the House of Commons. His lordship is the author of pamphlets upon "The Health of Towns," 1844; "Official Salaries," 1852; "Representative Self-government for the Metropolis," 1854; "Parliamentary Reform," 1859 and 1884; a work on "Public Schools for the Middle Classes," 1864; and "Our Next Leap in the Dark," 1884. He married, March 11, 1847, the eldest daughter of the late Right Hon. Col. G. Dawson Damer. She died in 1866, leaving him a large family. Addresses: 48 Grosvenor Gardens, S.W.; Castlehill, North Devon, &c.

FOSTER, Sir (Balthazar) Walter, M.P., M.D., D.C.L., LL.D., was born on July 17, 1840, and is the son of the late Mr. B. Foster, of Drogheda and Beaulieu. He was educated at Drogheda, at Trinity College, Dublin, and on the Continent, and graduated at the Royal College of Surgeons of Ireland. He is also M.D. of Erlangen, F.R.C.P. Lond. At one time he was Professor of Anatomy, and afterwards of Medicine, at Queen's College, and is now Emeritus Professor. He is Consulting Physician to the Birmingham General Hospital and other hospitals of that locality, Vice-President of the British Medical Association, which presented him with its Gold Medal for Distinguished Merit in 1897, and of which he was President of Council (1884-87), Fellow of the Royal Med. and Chir. Soc., Ex-President of the Irish Sch. and Grad. Association, &c., &c. His works on medical topics are numerous. We may mention: "Method and Medicine," 1870; "The Prince's Illness, its Lessons," 1872; "Clinical Medicine," 1874; "On the Comparative Mortality of Birmingham and other Large Towns," 1875; "On the Political Powerlessness of the Medical Profession," 1883; and "The Public Aspects of Medicine," 1890. He has also contributed important articles to Quain's "Dictionary of Medicine," &c. It is as a politician that Sir Walter Foster has latterly been best known to the public. Feeling, as the title of one of his works bears witness, that the medical profession deserve, in the public interest, a share of political power, he stood for Parliament, and was returned for Chester City, which he represented from 1885-86. In 1887 he was elected for the Ilkeston Division of Derbyshire, which he continues to represent. Sir Walter Foster is President of the Allotments Association, and from 1892 to 1895 was Secretary of the Local Government Board, where he did important work. He was Chairman of the National Liberal Federation from 1886 to 1890. Lady Foster is a daughter of W. L. Sargant, of Edgbaston. Addresses: 30 Grosvenor Road, S.W.; and Temple Row, Birmingham.

FOSTER, Clement Le Neve, B.A., F.R.S., D.Sc., A.R.S.M., F.G.S., was born at Camberwell on March 23, 1841, and is the second son of the late Peter Le Neve Foster, for many years secretary of the Society of Arts. At the age of 12, he was sent to the Collège Communal at Boulogne, where he studied on the Science or Modern side, and whence he proceeded to take his B.-ès.-Sc. degree at Amiens. In 1857 he entered the Royal School of Mines, and completed the three years' course in two years, took the Duke of Cornwall Scholarship, and otherwise distinguished himself. He was next sent, on Prof. Huxley's advice, to the great mining college at Freiberg, and whilst there was appointed by Sir R. Murchison to the Geological Survey of Great Britain (1860). For three years he was engaged mapping the Wealden Beds in Kent and Sussex, and in 1864 he was transferred to Derbyshire and Yorkshire. During these years he spent his leisure in sedulous preparation for the London degrees, which he passed brilliantly, eventually becoming D.Sc. in 1865. In the May of that year he left the Survey and obtained the appointment of lecturer

to the Miners' Association of Cornwall and Devon. He now spent much time in the mines, and subsequently, at the request of the Royal Cornish Polytechnic Society, visited the Continent in order to report upon the Bergström and Döring boring machines. He resigned his Cornish appointment in 1867, and spent some time making mining explorations in the Sinai Peninsula. In 1868 he visited Venezuela, and from 1869 to 1872 held an appointment near Monte Rosa under the Pestarena Gold Mining Co. In 1872 he was appointed an inspector under the new Metaliferous Mines Regulation Act. The field of his operations lay in Cornwall and Devon, and for long he had to contend against very great opposition on the part of the mine managers, who clung to their traditional haphazard methods of work. He had to resort to prosecutions before he could get his notices attended to. "It is worthy of note," says a writer in the Mining Journal for December 1889, "that the average death-rate from mine accidents in Dr. Le Neve Foster's district was reduced from 2 per thousand during the first three years of his Inspectorship, to 1·3 per thousand the last five." In the spring of 1880, Dr. Le Neve Foster was transferred from the Cornish to the North Wales District, where he still remains. He issues annual reports, from which it appears that he is strongly in favour of a still more stringent Act being passed for the regulation of mines not included in the Coal Mines Act. In 1867 and 1878 Dr. Le Neve Foster acted as assistant-juror to Sir Warrington W. Smyth, at the Paris Exhibition, and as juror in 1889, for which he received the Cross of Chevalier of the Legion of Honour. In December 1890 he was appointed Professor of Mining at the Royal School of Mines, London, as successor to Sir Warrington Smyth. In 1892 he was elected F.R.S., and appointed one of the Royal Commissioners of the Chicago Exhibition, where he subsequently served as a judge in mining. In 1894 he was made Editor of the "Mineral Statistics" published by the Home Office, and has brought out three Annual General Reports upon the Mineral Industry of the United Kingdom. He has been a frequent contributor to scientific periodical literature, has translated (with Mr. Galloway) Callon's "Lectures on Mining," and is the author of "Ore and Stone Mining." He married, in 1872, Sophia, second daughter of the late Arthur F. Thompson, of Belton, Suffolk, and has a son and two daughters. Address: Llandudno.

FOSTER, Professor George Carey, F.R.S., Professor of Physics, University College, London, born 20th October 1835, at Sabden, Lancashire, is the only son of George Foster, of Sabden, a Justice of the Peace for the county of Lancaster, and West Riding of Yorkshire. He was educated at private schools, and at University College, London, and graduated as B.A. of the University of London in 1855; afterwards, from 1859 to 1861, he studied chemistry at Ghent, Paris, and Heidelberg, under Kekulé, Wurtz, and Bunsen respectively. He was appointed in 1862 Professor of Natural Philosophy in Anderson's College (then called Anderson's University), Glasgow. In 1865, on the resignation by Professor Potter of the Chair of Natural Philosophy and Astronomy in University College, London, which he had held with two years' interval since 1840, Mr. Foster was appointed to succeed him as Professor of Physics, and held this appointment till June 1898. He contributed to the great "Dictionary of Chemistry and the Allied Branches of other Sciences," edited by the late Henry Watts, many articles on points of general chemical theory as well as on some parts of Physics, those on "Heat" and on "Thermodynamics" being among the most considerable of his writings. In 1896 he published, in conjunction with Dr. E. Atkinson, an "Elementary Treatise on Electricity and Magnetism," founded on M. Joubert's work with a similar title, several chapters of which he re-wrote. Since his appointment at University College, his thought and attention have been chiefly devoted to the teaching of Physics. The Physical Laboratory of University College, opened at his instigation in 1867, was the first in London in which practical instruction in Physics was offered to students. He has devised some useful new methods, or modifications of methods, of physical measurement, some of which, especially a method of comparing electrical resistances, have been frequently adopted. He was elected a Fellow of the Chemical Society in 1856; Fellow of University College, London, 1867; Fellow of the Royal Society, 1869; and has four times served on the Council. He was one of the founders of the Physical Society of London, and was President of that Society, 1877-79; President of the Mathematical and Physical Section of the British Association, 1877 (Plymouth meeting); President of the Society of Telegraph Engineers (now Institute of Electrical Engineers), 1881; and was appointed, on the nomination of the Convocation of the University, a Member of the Senate of the University of London, 1885, and elected (without ballot) a member of the Athenæum Club, 1888. He married, in 1868, Mary Anne Frances, elder daughter of the late Andrew Muir, of Greenock, and has four sons and four daughters. Addresses: 18 Daleham Gardens, South Hampstead, N.W.; and Athenæum.

FOSTER, John Watson, American soldier and statesman, born in Pike County, Indiana, March 2, 1836, graduated at the Indiana State University in 1855, studied Law and was admitted to the Bar at Evansville, Indiana, and began practice there. He entered the army as Major of the 25th Indiana Regiment in 1861, became Lieut.-Colonel, and later was Colonel of the 136th Indiana Regiment. At the close of the war between the States he became editor of the Evansville Daily Journal, and in 1869 was appointed postmaster of that town. He was Minister to Mexico in 1873, and re-appointed in 1880. In March 1880 he was transferred to Russia, and held that mission till November 1881. On his return to America he established himself as counsel in Washington for foreign legations. He was Minister to Spain, 1883-85, and has been employed frequently since then in negotiating treaties, &c. In 1893 he was for a short time Secretary of State for the United States, and in 1894 he aided the Chinese Government in negotiating for peace with Japan. In 1898 he was appointed one of the Joint Commissioners for the settlement of matters in dispute between Canada and the United States.

FOSTER, Joseph, Hon. M.A. Oxon., antiquary, was born in Sunderland, co. Durham, March 9, 1844 (son of another of the same names, a woollen-draper of that town, and an elder brother of the late Birket Foster), and is a cadet of a family belonging to the Quakerocracy of the north since the early days of its apostle, George Fox, and originally seated at Cold Hesledon and Hawthorne, on the east coast of the Palatinate. His great-grandfather was the friend of Wordsworth and Southey. Mr. Joseph Foster, who was educated in private schools in North Shields, Sunderland, and Newcastle-upon-Tyne, inherited his genealogical faculty from his grandfather, Myles Birket Foster, and completed, as early as his eighteenth year, his first genealogical brochure, entitled "The Pedigree of the Fosters of Cold Hesledon in the County Palatine of Durham" (see also Virtue's "Art Annual," 1890). Henceforth his life was spent among books, and all his leisure was devoted to increasing and arranging his genealogical collections. Having issued a larger edition of his family narrative, he was accidentally led, by the omission of the pedigrees from the 1870 edition of Baines' "History of Lancashire" (Routledge), to commence his series of Pedigrees of county families with those of that county (see "Herald and Genealogist," viii. 55, 169), and this volume was followed by three others for Yorkshire, which Mr. John Gough Nichols described as "marvels of elaborate and of accurate work" ("Herald and Genealogist," viii. 501). Mr. Foster, following Sir William Dugdale, transcribed the admission register of the four Inns of Court, the earliest commencing 1 Hen. VI., 1422, together with a unique list of calls to the Bar. But still, before he could hope to grapple effectually with so arduous a task as the annotation of the earlier "Alumni Oxonienses," it was necessary that all the bishops' certificates of institutions to livings (since the Reformation), now deposited in the Public Record Office, should be laid under contribution, with the result that these 150,000 institutions, &c., were utilised in the preparation of his great Oxford work, that happy hunting-ground of the biographer, which involved ten years' unremitting and unremunerative toil, and have now been made available for the projected companion work, "Alumni Cantabrigienses." In recognition of Mr. Foster's splendid achievement, the "Alumni Oxonienses" (see Clark's "Life and Times of Wood," vol. iv. 135), the University very properly conferred upon him (1892) the degree of M.A. honoris causa. With a view to the compilation of an armoury of authenticated coats only, Mr. Foster has devoted much time to the arrangement of grantees of arms which occur in the MSS. of the British Museum, not only alphabetically but also chronologically, under the respective kings of arms. Mr. Foster's best-known critical work was undoubtedly "Chaos," under which category he classed, for the first time, all known "soi-disant baronets." "Chaos" formed a minor portion of the "Peerage, Baronetage, and Knightage," compiled and edited by Mr. Foster, 1880-84, and elaborately illustrated by Fr. Anselm and many others (the Quarterly Review, No. 354, October 1893, Art. IV., "The Peerage," pp. 386-415). This industrious worker has also issued the majority of the Herald's Visitations of the North, viz., Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmorland, Durham, and Yorkshire, and also of Middlesex in the South, whilst he has also published "Men at the Bar"; "Scottish Members of Parliament, 1357-1882"; "Gray's Inn Admission Register, 1521-1889"; "Our Noble and Gentle Families of Royal Descent," and several minor family histories, e.g., those of Fox, Harris, Wilson, Pease, and Pennington. His elder son, Mr. Sandys Birket Foster, of Rochester, N.Y., edited a second edition of the Wilson family history, 1890. His latest works are: "Oxford Men and their Colleges," 1893, and a brochure entitled, "Concerning the Beginnings, the Etiquette, and the Practice of Heraldry." Address: 21 Boundary Road, Finchley Road, N.W.

FOSTER, Professor Michael, F.R.S., D.Sc., D.C.L., LL.D., is the son of Michael Foster, F.R.C.S., and was born at Huntingdon on March 8, 1836. He was educated at Huntingdon Grammar School, at University College School, and University College, London. After practising as a surgeon at Huntingdon from 1860 to 1866, he became Demonstrator of Practical Physiology in University College, London, in 1867, and, two years later, was appointed Professor. In 1870 he went to Cambridge as Prælector of Physiology at Trinity College, and he was, in 1883, elected Professor of Physiology in the University of Cambridge. He was appointed a Commissioner under the London University Act in October 1898. Professor Foster is one of the secretaries of the Royal Society, and is the author of a well-known and widely read text-book of physiology, which is now in its sixth edition. He has also contributed numerous articles on matters of physiological interest to various scientific journals. Address: Ninewells, Great Shelford, Cambridge-shire.

FOSTER, Vere Henry Louis, was born at Copenhagen in 1819, his father, Sir Augustus Foster, Bart., being at that time British Minister in Denmark. He was educated at Eton and at Christ Church, Oxford, and was afterwards attached for some years to the diplomatic missions of Sir Henry Ellis at Rio de Janeiro, and of Sir William Ouseley at Monte Video. On his return from South America in 1847, he paid a visit to Ireland in the company of his eldest brother, Sir Frederick Foster. The famine consequent upon the failure of the potato crop was raging at the time, and the two brothers set to work at once to relieve the starving poor. Mr. Foster himself made three voyages to America as a steerage passenger in emigrant ships, and was so impressed by the badness of the accommodation, that he attracted the attention of Parliament to the matter, and soon had the satisfaction of seeing the emigration laws in force, which rendered the miseries he had witnessed and endured thenceforth impossible in a British emigrant vessel. The outbreak of the civil war in America (1861) checked for a time the stream of emigration, and Mr. Foster turned his attention to the improvement of education in Ireland—by the substitution of boarded floors for damp earthen floors in about 1300 National schools, by the supply of furniture and apparatus to nearly 1500 others, and by grants in aid of building several hundred new school-houses. On the recurrence of exceptional distress in Ireland in the year 1879, Mr. Foster resumed his scheme of assisted female emigration to the United States and the British Colonies, with the co-operation of all the clergy of every denomination in the West of Ireland. The number of young women thus assisted during the last fifty years, partly by means of subscriptions, but chiefly at Mr. Foster's own cost, has been nearly 25,000. Mr. Foster is compiler of various series of Writing, Lettering, Drawing, and Painting Books, which are in general use throughout the United Kingdom, and is editor of a volume entitled "The Two Duchesses," consisting of correspondences between eminent persons and relating chiefly to memorable events between the years 1777 and 1846.

FOSTER, Sir Walter. See FOSTER, SIR (BALTHAZAR) WALTER.

FOUQUIER, Jacques François Henri, French journalist, was born at Marseilles, Sept. 1, 1838. The son of a solicitor, he studied law and medicine, and travelled in Spain and Italy. In 1861 he came to Paris and wrote for many papers, L'Avenir National, La Presse, and was correspondent of Le Progrès du Nord. In 1867 he was special correspondent with Garibaldi for L'Indépendance Belge. After the proclamation of the Republic in 1870, M. Fouquier was entrusted with a mission to Marseilles, and founded there La Vraie République, which he conducted till his appointment as Secretary of the Department. He took the place of the Prefect in the Commune outbreaks in March 1871. Until 1873 he was censor of the press at the Ministry of the Interior. After contributing to the Événement, he started Le Petit Parisien, a halfpenny rival of Le Petit Journal. In 1878 he left to write for the Dix-Neuvième Siècle a daily article and the dramatic criticism. He wrote under several pseudonyms, especially that of Columbine in the Gil Blas, which was the reason of a law-suit with the editor of that paper as to the ownership of the pseudonym. The judges decided that it belonged to the paper as other contributors had written over that signature (1889). At the death of Albert Wolff in 1891 he succeeded him as dramatic critic of the Figaro. His ordinary articles are written under the pseudonym of Nestor. In 1889 he entered the Chamber as Deputy for the Basses-Alpes, and sits with the Moderate Republicans. In 1876 he married the widow of Ernest Feydeau, and in 1881 was made an officer of the Legion of Honour. Address: 12 Avenue de l'Alma.

FOWLER, The Right Hon. Sir Henry Hartley, G.C.S.I., D.L., M.P., son of the Rev. Joseph Fowler, Wesleyan minister, secretary of the Wesleyan Conference, 1848, was born at Sunderland in 1830, educated at Woodhouse Grove School, and St. Saviour's School, Southwark. He was Mayor of Wolverhampton in 1863, and first chairman of the Wolverhampton School Board. From 1880 to 1885 he sat as a Liberal for the undivided borough of Wolverhampton, and after the Redistribution Act was returned for the East Division, which he now represents. In December 1884 he was appointed Under-Secretary for the Home Department, and in Mr. Gladstone's Ministry of 1886, he held the post of Financial Secretary to the Treasury. He was a member of the Royal Commission to inquire into the Civil Service, of the Labour Commission, and of other Commissions. He was created a Privy Councillor in June 1886, and was appointed President of the Local Government Board, with a seat in the Cabinet, in 1892. He introduced and carried the Parish Councils Bill in Parliament. When the Cabinet was partially reconstructed in March 1894, he became Secretary of State for India, retiring with his Government the following year. He was knighted in 1895. He married, in 1857, Ellen, the youngest daughter of the late G. B. Thornycroft, Esq., of Wolverhampton and Hadley Park, Salop. Addresses: 105 Pall Mall, S.W., &c.; and Athenæum.

FOWLER, The Rev. Thomas, D.D., LL.D., F.S.A., was born at Burton-Stather, Lincolnshire, Sept. 1, 1832, and is the eldest son of William Henry Fowler and Mary Anne Welch. He was educated at King William's College, Isle of Man, and at Merton College, Oxford, where he graduated as a double first-class man in 1854. He was elected to a Fellowship at Lincoln College in 1855, and appointed to a Tutorship in the same year. He was Junior Proctor of the University in 1862-63, Select Preacher in 1872-74, Professor of Logic from 1873 to 1889, and has frequently acted as Public Examiner in the School of Literæ Humaniores. Dr. Fowler is now a member of the Visitation Board, as also a Delegate of the Press and of the Common University Fund, and President of Corpus Christi College, to which he was elected Dec. 23, 1881. For many years he was also a Member of the Hebdomadal Council, for which he was first elected in 1869, and a Delegate of the Museum, but was obliged to retire from these offices as incompatible with his other duties. He has resided in the University continuously since the age of seventeen, and has taken a prominent part in several University movements, especially those connected with the removal of religious disabilities and the organisation of academical studies. In 1882 he received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the University of Edinburgh. He is the author of the "Elements of Deductive Logic," 1867 (10th edit., 1892); the "Elements of Inductive Logic," 1870 (6th edit., 1892); both which works were published by the Clarendon Press, which has also published an elaborate edition of Bacon's "Novum Organum," by Dr. Fowler, with an Introduction and Notes, 1878 (2nd edit., 1889), as well as an edition by him of Locke's "Conduct of the Understanding," 1881 (3rd edit., 1890). In addition to these works, Dr. Fowler is the author of "Locke" in the series of "English Men of Letters," and of "Bacon," and "Shaftesbury and Hutcheson," in the series of English Philosophers. Besides the last-named work, he has written also the following ethical treatises: "Progressive Morality: an Essay in Ethics," 1884 (2nd edit., 1895); "The Principles of Morals" (introductory chapters), 1886; "The Principles of Morals" (Part II., being the body of the work), 1887. Part I. of the last mentioned work was written in conjunction with his predecessor in the Presidentship of Corpus, Professor J. M. Wilson; Part II., though it also contains some contributions by Professor Wilson, was mainly written by Dr. Fowler, and has been published under his name only, as he is solely responsible for it in its final form. Both parts were reissued in one volume in 1894. Dr. Fowler's most recent work is a "History of Corpus Christi College," published by the Oxford Historical Society in 1893, containing many curious illustrations of academical, social, and ecclesiastical history during the 16th, 17th, 18th, and early part of the 19th centuries. He has also contributed articles to the Saturday Review, during its earlier period, the Spectator, the Academy, Mind, Macmillan's Magazine, the Fortnightly Review, the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and the "Dictionary of National Biography." In politics he is a Liberal Unionist, and his theological convictions are those of a Broad Churchman. He has travelled extensively. Addresses: Corpus Christi College, Oxford; and Athenæum.

FOX, Sir (Charles) Douglas, Vice-President of the Institution of Civil Engineers, was born in Warwickshire, May 14, 1840, and is the son of the late Sir Charles Fox. He was educated at Cholmondeley School and in the well-known Engineering Department of King's College, London, of which College he is a Fellow. He is a distinguished engineer, and has been in practice in his profession since 1861, first with his father, the late Sir Charles Fox, and afterwards with his brother and son. He has been joint-engineer to the Mersey Tunnel and to the Hawarden Bridge, and engineer to the Liverpool Overhead, the South Indian, and the Central Argentine Railways, &c. &c. He has also been joint-engineer with Sir Charles Metcalfe to the Bechuanaland Railway. He is also well known as an inventor, having patented a safety guard, which has been adopted on several Swiss lines and on the Snowdon Mountain line. As one of the Mersey Tunnel engineers he was knighted in 1886. He married, in 1863, a daughter of Francis Wright of Osmaston Manor, Derby. He is a Justice of the Peace for Surrey, and the County of London. Address: Coombe Springs, Kingston-on-Thames.

FRAMPTON, George J., A.R.A., sculptor, was born in 1860, early determined to take up the career of art, and began its study under Mr. Frith of Lambeth, who taught him sculpture, and Professor Brown, who taught him drawing. In 1882 he joined the Academy Schools, where he won prize after prize until 1887, when he went out with the Gold Medal and £200. He was thus enabled to proceed to Paris, where he studied sculpture under Dagnan-Bouveret and Mercié. In the Salon of 1889 he exhibited his first successful work, the "Ange de la Mort," for which he obtained a medal. Other well-known works of his are "The Captive," and "St. Christina." He has been a frequent exhibitor at the Royal Academy. In 1895 he exhibited "Mother and Child," a group in bronze; "Music and Dancing," low-relief panels in silver; and the "Gold Medal for Glasgow University;" in 1896, a panel for a door, the subject of which was "Seven Heroines out of Mort d'Arthur;" in 1897 a portrait medallion in bronze of the late Charles Keene, and a statue in bronze and marble of Dame Alice Owen for Owen's School; in 1898 a bronze memorial, an enamel, and a bronze bust of John Passmore Edwards, Esq., for the Leighton Memorial Museum and School at Camberwell. He has done much fine decorative work, notably the terra-cottas in the Constitutional Club. He was made A.R.A. in 1896. Address: 32 Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

FRANCE, Jacques Anatole Thibault, Member of the French Academy, French author, was born in Paris, April 16, 1844. He was the son of a bookseller, who educated him at the Collège Stanislas, and, in 1876, he obtained a post in the Library of the Senate. He collaborated in several papers, La Globe, Les Débats, and Le Temps, in the columns of which last, he replaced Jules Claretie in the production of a weekly literary letter which attracted great attention. His first work was a biographical study of Alfred de Vigny (1868); in 1873 and 1876 he published two volumes of poems. He is chiefly known as a novelist, and is, perhaps, the best French stylist now living. One of his first novels was "Le Crime de Sylvestre Bonnard," which was crowned by the Académie in 1881. His masterpiece is, undoubtedly, "La Rôtisserie de la Reine Pédauque," one of the most extraordinary reconstitutions of mediæval Paris ever evolved. A later work that has caused some stir is "Le Lys Rouge" in which he lays the scene in the literary colony of Florence. Other well-known works of his are: "L'Étui de Nacre," "Balthazar," 1889; "Thaïs," 1890; and two volumes of "La Vie Littéraire," reprinted from Le Temps, 1890. He was decorated with the Legion d'Honneur in 1884, and lives in Paris close to the Bois de Boulogne.

FRANCE, President of the Republic. See LOUBET, PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS FERDINAND of AUSTRIA, Archduke, heir to the Austrian throne, is the son of the late Archduke Karl Ludwig, who died on May 19, 1896, by his second wife, the Princess Maria Annonciata, daughter of Ferdinand II., King of the Two Sicilies, and was born at Gratz in 1863. A few years ago he inherited the large fortune of his relative, the Grand-Duke of Modena, and in so doing took the name of Este. On the suicide of the Emperor's son, the Crown Prince Rudolph, on Jan. 28, 1889, the Emperor's brother, the Archduke Charles Louis, became heir to the throne; but he renounced his rights of succession in favour of his son, the Archduke Francis Ferdinand; and he, on becoming heir to the throne, renounced his fortune and name of Este to his brother, the Archduke Otho, who was born in 1865, and who married, in 1886, Maria Josepha, daughter of Prince George of Saxony. In December 1892 he began a journey round the world, and was warmly received in India. He is of retiring habits, and has never been prominent in society.

FRANÇOIS-JOSEPH I., Francis-Joseph-Charles, Emperor of Austria, King of Hungary and Bohemia, &c., whose life has, with those of Queen Victoria and a very few others, been included in editions of this work since its inception nearly half a century ago, was born Aug. 18, 1830, and ascended the throne of Austria, Dec. 2, 1849, on the abdication of his uncle, Ferdinand I. He is the eldest son of the late Archduke Francis-Charles (who stood next to the late Emperor in the legal order of succession, and who died March 8, 1878) and of the Princess Sophia. On ascending the throne he found the empire shaken by internal dissensions; and his first step was to promise a free and constitutional government to the country. The course of events compelled him to close the National Assembly, and to assume absolute power. At the same time he abrogated the Constitution of Hungary, the people being in rebellion against him, and only brought to subjection by the armed intervention of Russia, while he owed his hold on Italy to the skill of his veteran General Radetsky. Having at last obtained internal peace and freedom for governmental and legislative action, he promulgated the edict of Schönbrunn, Sept. 26, 1851, in which he declared the Government "responsible to no political authority other than the throne." Assisted by Prince Schwarzenberg, and after his death by Count Buol and Baron Bach, he centralised the government of his heterogeneous nationalities at Vienna, and, aided by Herr von Brück, inaugurated a series of fiscal and commercial reforms favourable to the interests of the middle classes. In 1853-4 the Emperor endeavoured, though in vain, to induce the Czar Nicholas to abandon his ambitious designs against Turkey, and further excited that autocrat's displeasure by refusing to assist Russia against the Western Powers, whose rulers also felt aggrieved because he resolved to remain neutral, and not to throw the weight of his name into their scale. The policy of Austria on this occasion will, however, be more fairly estimated by posterity. Her unwillingness to make common cause with the Western Powers has been severely punished, for had she joined the alliance against Russia in 1854, in all probability Louis Napoleon would not have crossed the Alps and dictated the peace of Villafranca. It is, therefore, more than probable that her reluctance to act against Russia in that war was the cause of her losing Lombardy three years later. The Emperor, who was then a handsome man of commanding presence, fought at Solferino, where he gave proof of bravery almost amounting to rashness. The Reichsrath was enlarged by Imperial patent, March 5, 1860, and the Emperor sanctioned the principle of the responsibility of ministers, May 1, 1862. The Convention of Gastein, signed Aug. 14, 1865, which transferred the government of Schleswig to Prussia, and that of Holstein to Austria, was a few days afterwards confirmed by the Emperor and the King of Prussia at Salzburg. The Emperor issued an important manifesto to his people, Sept. 20, in which he expressed very conciliatory intentions towards the people of Hungary and Croatia. In March 1866, the armaments against Prussia began, and councils of war were established in the circles of Prague, Pisek, Tabor, and Pilsen. An imperial order was issued May 6, placing the whole army on a war footing, and concentrating the Army of the North on the frontiers of Bohemia and Silesia. The Emperor published a manifesto relating to the impending contest, June 17, the Prussian minister having received his passports, June 12. The Emperor showed much devotion in the struggle which ensued, and the fortunes of war having been adverse, at once made peace and applied his energies to the difficult task of reconstructing the empire. In this work he was powerfully aided by Count Beust, the late Prime Minister of Saxony, whom he summoned to his councils in Oct. 1866, and who remained in office as his principal minister until Nov. 1870, when he resigned, and was succeeded by Count Andrássy. One of the principal results of the policy pursued by Count Beust was the coronation of the Emperor in Pesth, as King of Hungary, June 8, 1867. In 1878 the Congress of Berlin sanctioned the occupation by Austria of the provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina, which had formerly belonged to Turkey. In April 1854 he married the late Princess Elizabeth Amalie Eugénie, daughter of the Duke Maximilian-Joseph, and cousin on her mother's side to the King of Bavaria, a lady who often visited England and Ireland for hunting, who built the wonderful Achilleion Villa in Corfu, and met with a tragic death at the hand of an anarchist workman, at Geneva, Sept. 10, 1898. In 1857 the Emperor and Empress paid a visit to their Italian and Hungarian dominions, and granted an amnesty to political offenders. In July 1890, their daughter, the Archduchess Valérie, was married to the Archduke Francis Salvator. The Emperor's only son, the Crown Prince Rudolph, having committed suicide on Jan. 28, 1889, the Emperor's brother, the Archduke Charles Louis, became heir, but he relinquished his rights of succession in favour of his son, the Archduke Francis Ferdinand, who therefore is Heir Apparent. Preparations were being made throughout Austria for the Emperor's jubilee when the news of his consort's untoward fate reached him. The august mourner is said to have borne this last and most fearful blow with singular heroism. His jubilee was quietly celebrated on Dec. 2, 1898, and his reign was then described in the Times as having meant to his nation a continuous deliverance from mischievous traditions, and a constant advance in European importance.

FRANKLAND, Sir Edward, K.C.B., M.D., D.C.L., LL.D., Ph.D., F.R.S., J.P., born at Churchtown, near Lancaster, Jan. 18, 1825, received his education at the Grammar School, Lancaster, the Museum of Practical Geology, London, and the Universities of Marburg and Giessen. He was appointed Professor of Chemistry in Owens College, Manchester, in 1851; in St. Bartholomew's Hospital in 1857; in the Royal Institution of Great Britain in 1863; in the Royal College of Chemistry (Royal School of Mines) in 1865; and in the Normal School of Science, South Kensington Museum, in 1881. He resigned this Professorship in 1885. Dr. Frankland was elected in 1853 a Fellow of the Royal Society; in 1866 a corresponding Member of the French Academy of Sciences; in 1869 a Foreign Member of the Royal Academy of Sciences in Bavaria, and subsequently of the Academies of Sciences of Berlin, St. Petersburg, Upsala, America, and Bohemia. In 1884 he was made corresponding Member of the Vienna Academy of Sciences. He was nominated one of Her Majesty's Commissioners for inquiring into the pollution of rivers in 1868, elected President of the Chemical Society in 1871, and President of the Institute of Chemistry in 1877. He received the honorary degree of LL.D. of Edinburgh in 1884. He is also Honorary Fellow of the Royal Medico-Chirurgical Society of London. He is the author of "Researches on the Isolation of the Radicals of Organic Compounds, and other Researches in Organic Chemistry," for which he received, in 1857, a gold medal from the Royal Society; also of "Researches on the Manufacture and Purification of Coal-Gas," on the "Influence of Atmospheric Pressure on the Light of Gas, Candle, and other Flames," on "Winter Sanitariums in the Alps and elsewhere," on "The Purification of Town Drainage and other Polluting Liquids," and on the "Composition and Qualities of Water used for Drinking and other Purposes." He is also the joint author, with Mr. J. Norman Lockyer, of "Researches connected with the Atmosphere of the Sun." In February 1882 he delivered a Friday evening discourse "On Climate in Town and Country," at the Royal Institution of Great Britain, in which he suggested means for artificially producing a genial outdoor climate in England. In 1883, and again in 1889, he published in the Proceedings of the Royal Society, "The Chemistry of Electrical Storage Batteries"; and in 1885, in the Journal of the Chemical Society, "On Chemical Changes in their relation to Micro-Organisms." For a period of twenty-five years he has made monthly analyses of the water supplied to London by the various water companies, and has reported thereon to the Local Government Board and the Registrar-General. A check has thus been brought to bear upon the operations of the London water companies, beneficial alike to the companies and the public, the result being that the purity of the water has very materially improved. In 1887 he reported to the International Congress of Hygiene at Vienna on the present state, in England, of the purification of sewage, with special reference to the prevention of river pollution. In the same year he was appointed a Justice of the Peace for the county of Surrey, and, in 1889, for the county of London. His various investigations have been collected in one volume, entitled, "Researches in Pure, Applied, and Physical Chemistry." He has published also "Lecture Notes for Chemical Students," 2 vols., and "Water Analysis for Sanitary Purposes," 2nd edition, 1890. In 1894 he was awarded the Copley Medal of the Royal Society. He is Foreign Secretary to the Royal Society since 1895. In 1895 he was elected one of the eight Foreign Associates of the Institut de France. In 1897 he was created a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath (Civil Division). He married (1) Sophie, daughter of F. W. Fick, Cassel, Hesse Cassel; and (2) Ellen, eldest daughter of C. K. Grenside, of the Inner Temple. Permanent address: The Yews, Reigate Hill, Surrey. Club: Athe-

FRANKLAND, Professor Percy Faraday, Ph.D., B.Sc. Lond., A.R.S.M., F.R.S., F.I.C., F.C.S., is the second son of Sir Edward Frankland, K.C.B., F.R.S., by his first wife, Sophie Fick, a lady whose three brothers were German professors of note. He was born at South Hampstead, on Oct. 3, 1858, and his second name was given to him with the consent of the late Michael Faraday. In 1869 he entered University College School, whence he proceeded in 1875 to the Royal School of Mines, South Kensington, now known as the Royal College of Science. Here he obtained, on leaving the school in 1878, the Associateship of the Royal School of Mines (A.R.S.M.), gaining in addition the Forbes Medal and Prize. In 1877 he became an undergraduate of the London University, standing fifth in the Honours Division at the Matriculation Examination. In 1878 he obtained the Brackenbury Entrance Scholarship at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, but on abandoning his intention of joining the medical profession, he subsequently relinquished it, and went to study chemistry at the University of Würzburg, where he took the degree of Doctor of Philosophy (Ph.D.), with the highest honours, in 1880, whilst in the following year he graduated as B.Sc. at the London University. In the year 1880 he was appointed Demonstrator of Chemistry at the Royal School of Mines, subsequently becoming Lecturer and Senior Demonstrator in Chemistry at that school. In 1889 he was appointed Professor of Chemistry in University College, Dundee, which has since become an integral part of the University of St. Andrews, and he has on two occasions been elected a member of the University Court of this University. Professor Frankland is the author of more than seventy papers, which have been published chiefly in the Philosophical Transactions and in the Proceedings of the Royal Society, and the Journal of the Chemical Society, and has principally identified himself with the chemical and hygienic applications of bacteriology. He was the first to demonstrate in this country, in the year 1885, the value of sand filtration in the purification of water, the results of his investigations being embodied in a paper entitled "Water Purification; its Biological and Chemical Basis," which was published by the Institution of Civil Engineers. He initiated, and at the request of the Local Government Board, furnished monthly reports on the microbial condition of the London water supply, before and after treatment by the companies. He has devoted a large amount of attention to the subject of fermentation and the chemical changes effected by micro-organisms. Some of his more important work in this direction has had reference to nitrification and denitrification, as well as to the preparation of optically active substances by means of bacterial life, and he has published a number of investigations on the connection between optical activity and chemical constitution. He is a well-known public lecturer. Amongst the discourses which he has given may be mentioned "Micro-organisms in their Relation to Chemical Change," delivered at the Royal Institution; one of the evening discourses at the Ipswich British Association Meeting, in 1895; the opening address at the Mason College, Birmingham, in 1895; the Pasteur Memorial Lecture at the Chemical Society, London, in 1897. Some of his lectures connected with the subject of micro-organisms are brought together in a small volume, "Our Secret Friends and Foes," published by the S.P.C.K. in their Romance of Science Series, and now in its third edition. "Micro-organisms in Water" is the title of a large work published in 1894, in conjunction with Mrs. Percy Frankland, by Messrs. Longmans. The life of Pasteur by the same authors was published in 1898 by Messrs. Cassell in their Century Science Series. Professor Percy Frankland is also the author of the obituary notice of Pasteur which appeared in the Proceedings of the Royal Society. In 1896 he acted as Secretary to the British Section of the Pasteur International Memorial Fund. In 1892 he delivered a course of Cantor Lectures at the Society of Arts on "Recent Contributions to the Chemistry and Bacteriology of the Fermentation Industries." He is also the author of the articles "Fermentation and Water," which appeared in Professor Thorpe's Dictionary of Technical Chemistry. He has contributed various articles to the Nineteenth Century, National Review, Nature, and similar papers. In 1891 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and he is also a Fellow and late member of Council of the Chemical Society, a Fellow and late member of Council of the Institute of Chemistry, Honorary Member of the North of England Institute of Brewing, and a member of the Society of Chemical Industry. In 1891 he was requested by a special committee of the Royal Society to conduct, in conjunction with Professor Marshall Ward, an extensive experimental investigation on the behaviour of pathogenic bacteria in potable waters. Amongst the subjects studied in this connection by Prof. Frankland may be mentioned an extensive series of investigations on the vitality of the typhoid bacillus in waters of various kinds. In September 1894 he was appointed to succeed Professor Tilden in the Chair of Chemistry at Mason College. He married in 1882, Grace, youngest daughter of the aurist, Joseph Toynbee, F.R.S. Address: 1 Greenfield Crescent, Birmingham.

FRANZOS, Karl Emil, a German author, son of a Jewish doctor, was born Oct. 25, 1848, on the Russo-Austrian frontier. He was brought up in the Polish-Jewish town of Czortkow, and received his early education in the school of the Dominican monastery there. Then he proceeded to the German Gymnasium at Czernowicz, where, from the year 1862, he was wholly dependent on his own exertions for a livelihood. A proof of the ardour and success with which he devoted himself to the study of the classical languages is his translation of the Eclogues of Virgil into the Doric of Theocritus. Being a Jew, and therefore having no hope of obtaining an appointment, he abandoned philology for jurisprudence. In 1868 he represented, as deputy, the students of Vienna at the Berlin "Kartellkongress" of the German "Burschenschaften," and he established, in 1869, the German annual in Bukowina, "Buchenblätter," a sort of almanac. In 1871 he was concerned in a trial in consequence of an appeal to the students of Gratz, being indicted as a rebel. After this affair he passed with distinction his examination for the Government Juridical Service, and practised for a time at the Bar with success, but ultimately he resolved to adopt the career of a professional author. At the outset he took to journalism, first at Vienna and afterwards (1872-73) at Pesth; then he performed long journeys, mostly in the east of Europe, until he was enabled, in 1876, to find his means of subsistence by writing books. His chief power as a writer is found in ethnographical description, especially in the form of romance. Among his works are: "Semi-Asiatic Life: Pictures of Civilisation in Galicia, the Bukowina, South Russia, and Roumania," 3rd edit., 2 vols., 1869; "From the Don to the Danube: New Pictures of Semi-Asiatic Life," 2 vols., 2nd edit., 1889; "From the Great Plain, New Scenes from Western Asia," 2 vols., 1888; "Young Love," three stories, 4th edit., 1884; "The Jews of Barnow," tales, 4th edit., 1886; "Moschko of Parma, the story of a Jewish soldier," 2nd edit., 1885; "Quiet Stories," 3rd edit., 1886; "A Fight for the Right," a novel, 2 vols., 3rd edit., 1884; "My Francis," a novel, in verse, 1882; "The Journey after Fate," a story, 2nd edit., 1885; "Tragic Novels," 1886; "The Shadow," a story, 2nd edit., 1889; "Judith Trachtenberg," a novel, 1891; "Der Gott des alten Doctors," and "Die Suggestion und die Dichtung," 1892; and "Der Wahrheitsucher," 1894. His novel "Der Präsident" was translated in Heinemann's International Library in 1890, under the title of "The Chief-Justice." Franzos resided at Vienna until 1883; passed the winter, 1883-84, at Berlin; was recalled to Vienna, and conducted the Neue Illustrierte Zeitung, 1884-86; since 1887 he resides at Berlin, as editor of the periodical Deutsche Dichtung. His works have been translated into almost every European language. The translations of "The Jews of Barnow," "A Fight for the Right," and "The Chief-Justice," have attracted special attention in England.

FRASER, Alexander, R.S.A., was born in 1827, at Woodcockdale, near Linlithgow. He got his education in a scrambling manner in Dunoon, Greenock, Glasgow, Hamilton, and Lanark, in the Grammar School of which latter place he got the bulk of it, where, too, he made his first step in art, stippling the background in the works of an itinerant portrait painter in water colours. Early showing a taste for art, he received his first instruction from his father, who was an able amateur. On leaving school he was sent to Edinburgh to draw in the Gallery of Arts. Shortly afterwards he was admitted to the School of Designs, where he learned to draw. At the same time he learned to paint by copying pictures in the National Gallery. His first appearance in the Academy Exhibition was with a figure picture, "A Gipsy Girl in Prison." But he soon abandoned the figure for landscape. He has made many sketches, and painted many pictures. Generally his works are painted in the open air, though to this there are important exceptions. Mr. Fraser was elected R.S.A. in 1862. His best work has been done in the Valley of the Conway, North Wales, and in the neighbourhood of Hamilton. Address: 16 Eskside, Musselburgh.

FRASER, Alexander Campbell, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S.E., Emeritus Professor of Logic and Metaphysics in the University of Edinburgh, was born on 3rd September 1819 at the Manse of Ardchattan, co. Argyll, of which parish his father, the Rev. Hugh Fraser, a collateral descendant of the Frasers of Strichen, was minister. His mother was a daughter of Campbell of Barcaldine, a family of long standing in Argyllshire. His first fourteen years were years of home education exclusively. A winter at Glasgow College, in 1833, was followed by the customary course in the Faculty of Arts in Edinburgh, where he graduated in 1838, and for four years more studied metaphysics and theology. At the University, especially after 1838, his dominant bent was to the metaphysical problems which underlie human life. In 1842, at the close of his academic course, he obtained the University Prize, open to all matriculated students, for an essay on "Toleration." Then, after a short interval of ecclesiastical work, he devoted his life to religious thought and philosophy. Recommended by Sir William Hamilton and Dr. Chalmers, and by an essay on "Leibnitz," which he contributed in 1846 to the North British Review, he was in that year made Professor of Logic in the New College at Edinburgh. From 1850 to 1856 he edited the North British Review, broadening its basis, and enlisting distinguished contributors of wide sympathies. In 1856 he was placed in the Chair of Logic and Metaphysics in the University of Edinburgh, as successor to Sir William Hamilton, an office which he held for thirty-five years. From 1859 till 1891 he was also Dean of the Faculty of Arts, active in academical administration throughout the thirty years inaugurated by the reforming Commission of 1858, and closed by the reforming Commission of 1889. In 1871 he was one of the examiners in Moral Science of the University of Cambridge, was made a member of the Metaphysical Society of London, and received from the University of Glasgow its honorary Doctorate of Laws. In 1872 and many following years he examined in the Moral Sciences for the Indian Civil Service. In 1877 he was chosen, as successor of Sir Robert Christison, to represent the Senatus Academicus in the Supreme Court of the University of Edinburgh, an office which he held till 1891. In 1882 he was, without ballot, elected a member of the Athenæum Club, London, for eminence in literature and philosophy. At Commemoration in June 1883, he was created an honorary Doctor of Civil Law of the University of Oxford. In 1891 he retired from the Edinburgh Chair of Logic and Metaphysics, and on his retirement received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from the University. Between 1846 and 1866 Professor Campbell Fraser contributed numerous articles, biographical, historical, and philosophical, to encyclopædias and reviews, six of which appeared in 1856 in a small volume of "Essays in Philosophy." In 1871 he made his first considerable contribution to philosophical literature—"A Collected Edition of the Works of Bishop Berkeley, with Annotations and Dissertations," in 4 vols., published by the Clarendon Press, under the auspices of the University of Oxford. It was followed in 1874 by an annotated volume of "Selections from Berkeley," a biography of "Berkeley" in 1880, and one of "Locke" in 1890—the last two for Blackwood's Philosophical Classics, which have passed through several editions. The monograph on Locke was supplemented in 1894 by "An Annotated Edition of Locke's Essay on the Human Understanding, with Prolegomena, Critical and Historical," in 2 vols., published by the Oxford Clarendon Press. In the same year he was made Gifford Lecturer on Natural Theology by the University of Edinburgh, in succession to Professor Pfleiderer of Berlin, who held that office in the two preceding years. The substance of Professor Fraser's Gifford Lectures appeared in 1896, in 2 vols., on the "Philosophy of Theism," which contain some of his matured thoughts on the foundations of religion and human knowledge. This was followed in 1898 by a biography of "Thomas Reid," in the Famous Scots Series, in which, along with some fresh biographical material, Reid's philosophy is treated critically, in its relation to present-day thought. Professor Fraser's work as a philosophical author is concerned with the three great problems of philosophical interest, viz.: The material world, man and human understanding, and God—these as mutually related; the first discussed in connection with Berkeley, the second with Locke, and the third in the "Philosophy of Theism," and the inspired common-sense of Reid. In this philosophy external nature is the intelligible issue of continuous divine agency or providence; man, as free, is a supernatural agent in all issues for which he is morally responsible; while external nature and free agents receive their final explanation in God, infinitely incognisable, yet revealed in human relations. According to the Quarterly Review, Professor Fraser is a leading representative of "the Spiritual tradition in British philosophy, as that is found in Locke and Berkeley, no less than in Coleridge, Reid, and Sir W. Hamilton, and as one who approaches the ultimate questions in an independent and characteristic way." The ideal of his philosophy is a progressively intelligent practical faith in the divine order of the incompletely interpretable universe, as the true via media between an agnosticism which would incoherently reduce human knowledge to mere phenomena of sense, and an omniscient idealism which is bound to eliminate all mystery from experience, in an exhaustive rational articulation of the actual universe of natural things and moral agents. Its sheet-anchor is, final trust in the perfect goodness of the Supreme Reason and imminent Power, as the fundamental philosophical postulate of man's interpretation of any data of experience, because the necessary alternative to sceptical paralysis of all his faculties. He married in 1850 Jemima, daughter of Dr. William Dyce, Cuttlehill, Aberdeen. Address: Gorton, Hawthornden, Midlothian, N.B.

FRASER, Professor Thomas Richard, M.D., F.R.C.P.E., and LL.D. Aberdeen, F.R.S., was born at Calcutta, on Feb. 5, 1841, and was educated at Public Schools in Scotland and in the University of Edinburgh, where he graduated as M.D. in 1862. In the following year he was appointed Assistant to the Professor of Materia Medica in the University of Edinburgh. In 1869 he became Assistant-Physician to the Royal Infirmary, and, in 1870, extra-academical Lecturer on Materia Medica in Edinburgh, and Examiner in this subject in the
